In 1885, however, both papers passed into the hands of a stock company which united them under one management. The new journal took its name from each of the old publications, being called the Goldendale Sentinel, and under that name it is still issued. This stock company was made up of business men of the town and county and was incorporated with a capital stock of $3,500, divided into thirty-five shares. Two directors were elected annually by the shareholders, and one of their number was to be selected as manager to take full charge of the company's affairs. The first annual meeting of the stockholders was held the first Monday in August, 1885, at which R. O. Dunbar and J. T. Eshelman were elected directors. Mr.

Dunbar was then chosen as the new company's first manager and editor, although he had been acting in that capacity since the merger went into effect, May 21, 1885.

The original shareholders together with the respective number of shares each held, were: W. H. Boyd, 1; William Cumming, 1; W. R. Dunbar, 5; J. T. Eshelman, 5; J. M. Hess, 2; Ophelia Cram, 1; T. L. Masters, 1; Joseph Nesbitt, 1; C. S. Reinhart, 6; E. B. Wise, 2; R. O. Dunbar, 4; William VanVactor, 1; Frederick Eshelman, 1; G. W. Stapleton, 1; J. M. Luark, 1; W. J. Story, 1.

The shareholders of the company at the time of organization were drawn from the ranks of both parties, with the understanding that the Sentinel was to be published as an independent paper. To publish a neutral paper is, however, almost an impossibility, as it is extremely difficult to find a person to take charge who is entirely non-partisan. For a while the Sentinel maintained its attitude of strict neutrality, but in a few years it became Republican in its sympathies and has ever since been unwavering in its fidelity to that party.

The Sentinel is still under the control of the stock company, but most of the stock has now passed into the hands of the present editor and business manager. Mr. Byars, a man of long and successful experience in the newspaper business, has been associated with the Sentinel at intervals for eleven years, and for the last five years the management of the business has been exclusively in his hands.

The columns of the Sentinel are filled each week with city, county and state news, interestingly written; its editorial columns have always borne a high reputation. It has always devoted itself unsparsingly to the advertisement of the county's resources and the advancement of its best interests, with the result that the Sentinel has been no small factor in the region's growth. Its popularity is attested by a circulation of over 1,000 paid up subscriptions. It is a six-page seven-column paper.

It is a task that would hardly give adequate results for the time expended, to compile a complete list of the editors and managers who have served the Sentinel. The changes in those departments have been extremely frequent. But to show that the Sentinel has been ably managed and edited it is only necessary to mention some of the men who were from time to time associated with it. Among the names we find the following, who have achieved eminent success and are known throughout the state of Washington: R. O. Dunbar, associate justice of the supreme court of the state; W. R. Dunbar, formerly register at the Vancouver land office; C. S. Reinhart, clerk of the state supreme court; H. C. Phillips, present register of the United States land office at Vancouver; State Senator George H. Baker, Honorable Joseph Nesbitt (deceased), and others.

The old office of the Sentinel was destroyed by fire in 1888 and with the building almost the entire plant, entailing a great loss to the company. Recently the company erected an exceptionally fine, commodious building on Court street, which is occupied exclusively by the Sentinel Publishing Company. The equipment for both newspaper publishing and job printing is also very complete.

THE KLICKITAT COUNTY AGRICULTURIST

was established in 1893 by W. J. Story, its present editor and proprietor, and step by step has grown in force and influence until it has become one of the leading journals of Klickitat county and has attained to a prominent place among the strong newspapers of the state. Politically, it is Republican. In size the Agriculturist varies from six to eight pages, six columns wide. It is printed upon an unusually good grade of paper and typographically is creditable to its mechanical department. Its equipment is among the best to be found in the country offices of the state. The circulation at present exceeds 1,000. Editor Story and his paper have ever stood for progress and for more than a decade have been in the forefront in advertising the rich and varied advantages of Goldendale and the great county of which it is the county seat. Due credit is cheerfully given by Klickitat's citizens for the good work done. The office of the Agriculturist is located on Main street in the city of Goldendale.

BICKLETON NEWS.

Less than two years have elapsed since S. G. Dorris, an Oregonian, installed a plant at Bickleton and began the publication of the News, but even in that short period eastern Klickitat has experienced a wonderful development and the News has kept pace with this rapid progress. The first issue of the News appeared August 2, 1902, and consisted of only two small pages; today four pages of five columns each, all printed at home, are published weekly. The equipment of the News office consists of a 14 by 20-inch Peerless jobber, a Fairbanks-Morse gasoline engine with electric attachment; paper cutter, and several hundred dollars' worth of new modern type. The paper occupies its own building, erected by Mr. Dorris for that special purpose. It is a staunch supporter of Republican doctrines and a vigorous advocate of the interests of its town and the surrounding country.

CENTERVILLE JOURNAL.

The Centerville Journal is a ten-page, four-column weekly published by the Journal Publishing Company, Klickitat county. It is independent politically. The Journal has been edited and managed by Kelley Loe since it made its appearance, August 8, 1902. Mr. Loe has had some former experience in editorial work, having published a newspaper in the state of Missouri. The Journal is a meritorious publication, neatly printed, and always filled with interesting matter, and it is constantly enlarging the circle of its influence in the community.

THE ENTERPRISE,

published as a weekly at White Salmon, Klickitat county, by Thomas Harlan, editor and proprietor, is the county's youngest newspaper, having come into existence May 8, 1903. It is a six-column folio, meritorious in mechanical execution and in its editorial and news columns. The plant is small but new and complete and the paper is Republican in politics.

KLICKITAT LEADER.

The year 1890 seems to have been propitious for the beginning of newspaper enterprises in Klickitat county. July 19th of that year there appeared the first issue of the Klickitat Leader, published in Centerville. It was under the management of Frank Lee and announced itself as "principally owned and controlled by farmers, edited by a farmer and run in the interests of farmers; down on all rings, monopolies and tricksters." It was issued by a joint stock company, capitalized at $4,000, known as the Farmers' Publishing Company. For a few years the Leader struggled to exist, but finally expired June 6, 1893.

GOLDENDALE COURIER.

Beginning March 7, 1890, a weekly newspaper, known as the Goldendale Courier, was published at Goldendale for several years. The first manager of the paper was J. M. Cummings, who made the following announcement to the public: "After examining the field thoroughly we feel convinced that the people of Klickitat county stand in need of a people's advocate, a paper that will at all times advocate the interests of the people, and this the Courier will ever be ready to do." The Courier started, as did most of the publications of the county, as an independent sheet, but afterward became identified with the People's party. About 1896, the Courier ceased publication.

THE YAKIMA REPUBLIC

is one of the oldest papers in central Washington. It was established in 1879 in Yakima City, but when the new town of North Yakima was started it was moved to that place, where it has since been published. The publication was known as the Record until it came into the hands of Captain Charles M. Holton, who changed the name to the Yakima Republican. Again, in 1880, it experienced a change of name, becoming the Yakima Republic. The paper has always supported the principles advocated by the Republican party. In October, 1903, a daily edition was added which has been very successful and has given North Yakima its first permanent daily. It is a six-column folio, and, being a member of the Associated Press, receives reports from that standard service. The Republic office is supplied with up-to-date equipments, including a Mergenthaler typesetting machine, Babcock news press, folder, etc.

Both the Daily and Weekly Republic are published by the Republic Publishing Company. W. W. Robertson, who owns practically all the stock in the company, is the editor of the two papers. Mr. Robertson has been conducting the Republic since 1898. He is recognized as a newspaper man of ability and has gained for the Republic an honored place among the state's journals.

THE YAKIMA HERALD.

The Herald, after fifteen years of successful existence, having been established in February, 1889, still remains one of North Yakima's strongest journals. As is usually the case with newspaper ventures, it came "to fill a long felt want," but contrary to the usual experience of such enterprises, it sprang at once into popularity and has been liberally patronized ever since its initial issue appeared, February 2, 1889. The original publishers of the paper were E. M. Reed and James R. Coe, the latter of whom had started the Democrat in the fall of 1888. In 1892 Mr. Coe sold his interest in the paper to his partner, and Mr. Reed continued the publication, with the exception of a few months in 1893, when it was leased to Watson & Coe, until September, 1897, when Charles F. Bailey and George N. Tuesley acquired control of the journal. A year later Robert McComb purchased an interest and Mr. Tuesley assumed the active management of the enterprise. February 1, 1904, L. E. Boardman bought a half interest in the Herald and with George N. Tuesley is now publishing the paper, the former being its editor and the latter its business manager. Such in brief is the history of the business career of the Herald, though, as is stated in its issue of January 6, 1904: "An interesting story could be written of its trials and triumphs."

"The hard times from 1894 to 1898," says the article referred to, "could tell a tragic tale of the struggle for existence, not only of the paper, but of numerous of its loyal patrons in business circles here, all of whom fortunately stemmed the tide of adversity and came out of the blasting effects of financial depression in living shape, but visibly racked by the contact.

"From its first issue the Herald has had the confidence and support of the people, not only of this city, but of the entire county; and from its files can be gleaned all the important history of the section. The material advancements and disappointments; the joys and sorrows of the people; marriages, births and deaths, all, if told in chronological order, would tell the complete story of the growth of this modern little city from a dull, dwarfed sagebrush village, tell of the development of thousands of acres of apparently worthless, idle and unprofitable arid lands to the most productive and valuable in the inland empire, tell of the increase in population of from less than a thousand in 1888 to 7,000 or 8,000 in 1904, and a correspondingly large increase throughout the county, and of the growth in values multiplied by the number of years since the time that enterprise and development joined hands in the valley."

The facilities of the Herald are among the best in central Washington. It has a fine cylinder book press, two jobbers and a stitcher, all operated by gasoline power. Its job business is an extensive one and many neat and attractive pieces of work, which would have been considered a credit to offices of greater pretensions, have been turned out.

THE YAKIMA DEMOCRAT.

The Yakima Democrat is a weekly publication, of which J. D. Medill is editor and proprietor, issued every Saturday at North Yakima. The Democrat is a six-column, eight-page paper, with an extensive circulation throughout Yakima county and central Washington. It is now in its eleventh volume, having been established in 1893, its first number appearing September 26th of that year, bearing the name of the Weekly Epigram. J. T. Harsell was the publisher of the little sheet, which was issued from a job press. It was diminutive in size, being but little larger than a handbill, but what it lacked in quantity it made up in the quality and sprightliness of its news items.

Mr. Harsell continued to issue the paper as an adjunct of his job office until September, 1897, when J. D. Medill, who owned the plant of the defunct Daily Times, purchased the Epigram office, consolidating the two and placing Mr. Harsell in charge. This arrangement remained in force until May, 1898, when Mr. Medill himself assumed charge of the paper and he has since continued to edit and publish it.

January 1, 1899, Mr. Medill changed the name of the publication to the Yakima Democrat and its policy from independent to Democratic. Under his management the paper gradually grew to its present size. The Democrat is now the only Democratic journal published in central Washington, and is one of the most influential weekly papers in the state. January 1, 1904, the publishers of the Democrat purchased the plant and good will of the Yakima Washingtonian and consolidated the two under the name of the former, by this means largely increasing its circulation. The Democrat is the city's official paper and stands in high repute among its contemporary newspapers.

NORTHWEST FARM AND HOME.

A paper of entirely different character from the other publications of North Yakima is the Northwest Farm and Home, owned by the Washington Farmer Publishing Company and edited by Leigh R. Freeman, Mrs. Freeman being associate editor. This paper was established in 1847, near Fort Kearney, Nebraska, by Joseph E. Johnson, who sold the plant and business to Mr. Freeman in 1859. Mr. Freeman then moved westward and published the paper in twenty-five places before he finally settled in North Yakima. He reached Yakima county in 1884, where he absorbed the Yakima Record and later the Pacific Coast Dairyman. In addition to being a farm and stock paper, the Farm and Home is a descriptive magazine and advertises the west in the east, where many papers are sold.

The Northwest Farm and Home maintains branch offices at Seattle, Portland and Vancouver and is widely circulated throughout the United States.

THE SUNNYSIDE SUN.

In April, 1901, William Hitchcock made a preliminary canvass in Sunnyside to see what the prospects were for a venture in the newspaper business. As a result of his efforts, he secured 200 subscribers, not a very promising number, but he nevertheless went ahead and purchased a small outfit. The first issue of the Sun appeared May 24, 1901. Many well disposed people thought the undertaking unwise, but the editor lacked neither the necessary courage nor force to succeed and the auxiliary country promised well for future growth.

When the paper was started the office was fitted out with one small press and a few fonts of type; now it is one of the best equipped offices in the county, being fitted with a Monona cylinder job and book press, gasoline engine, eight by twelve Chandler & Price gordon press, paper cutter, stapling machine and up-to-date type, body and display. The very excellent special edition published in February of this year is a good sample of the class of work done in that office. From that issue we quote the following paragraph:

"There is probably not another paper in the Northwest, published in a town no larger than Sunnyside, that would attempt such a thing. Four thousand copies of this issue will be circulated. They will go into hundreds of homes in the middle west and will, no doubt, influence many people to come to Sunnyside. To such, the Sun extends its cordial welcome."

THE PROSSER RECORD.

Among the representative papers of Yakima county is the Prosser Record, published at Prosser, by G. E. Boomer. The Record is a well edited, neatly printed journal devoted to the interests of Prosser and the surrounding country. It came into existence about four years ago as the successor of the American, which had been established in Prosser as early as 1894, but had ceased publication in 1896. The first owner of the Record was A. W. Maxwell, who sold out to August & Brownlow, after conducting the paper a year. The present owner, Mr. G. E. Boomer, obtained possession of the paper only a few months ago, but in that short time has made himself a force in this section. The Record is an eight-page, six column weekly, Socialistic in politics. In connection with the paper, a well equipped job office is operated.

made its bow to the public at Kennewick in 1892, its publisher then being E. P. Green. It was a four-page, four-column paper, using a patent inside. There were at that time not half a dozen families in Kennewick and vicinity. The size of the paper was increased three different times until it became a twelve-page sheet. It was purchased March 2, 1903, by C. O. Anderson, the present owner and editor. A well equipped jobbing office is maintained in connection. The Courier is a creditable little paper, devoted to Kennewick and the surrounding country.

THE MABTON CHRONICLE,

a six-page paper, was established by Bernard J. Pacius, March 12, 1904, in the thriving little village of Mabton, as an independent weekly. The property is owned by the Chronicle Publishing Company, of which Mr. Pacius is a stockholder. At this writing (June, 1904), Mabton is about to secure another paper, the Enterprise.

A comprehensive history of all the publications of the past in Yakima county would include mention of a number that have long found repose in the journalistic graveyard. It would be an almost impossible task to fully treat of the history of the numerous publications which have failed to survive the storms of time. Among the pioneer newspapers which flourished for a time and then passed into oblivion may be mentioned: The Yakima Signal, started in Yakima City in 1883 and published for a number of years; the Yakima Sun, a short-lived paper which made its first appearance in Yakima City in 1885, ostensibly for the purpose of fighting "New Yakima," as North Yakima was then called; the Yakima Argus, first published in 1884; the Times, which made its bow to the public the following year; the Prosser Falls American; and numerous others.

THE ELLENSBURG LOCALIZER.

The oldest newspaper published in Kittitas county is the Ellensburg Localizer, formerly known as the Kittitas Localizer, established in 1883 by David J. Schnebly, one of the veteran newspaper men of the Pacific Northwest. This pioneer of pioneer editors many years later said regarding his experience in journalism:

"Today (February 6, 1893) the editor and proprietor of this paper (The Localizer) begins his seventy-fifth year. It is forty-seven years since he entered the field of journalism in Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, and he has been in the business the major part of the time since. He was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, February 6, 1818, went to Peoria, Illinois, in 1835, but soon thereafter took up his abode in Mercersburg, where he went through Marshall's College. While in Mercersburg he bought the Visitor, now the Journal, but in 1848 returned to Peoria and worked on the Transcript. Having immigrated to Oregon in 1850, he took charge of the Oregon Spectator, the only paper in Oregon at that time, and indeed the only one in the Northwest. This paper was established at Oregon City, in 1845, by the missionaries, Rev. Jason Lee being the prime mover in its establishment. It was conducted for five years with different editors—Col. William T. Nault, Judge Aaron E. Wait, Gen. George L. Curry and the Rev. Wilson Blain. The latter handed the editorial shears over to us. The plant became the property of Hon. Robert Moore, who employed us to manage it for him one year. At the end of the year we purchased it. In 1854 the plant was sold to Dr. William L. Adams, who changed its name to the Argus. The old press, a Washington, is still in Oregon. The Spectator had a fine time clipping the news from exchanges, which came around the Horn and arrived here twice a year. There was no editorial piracy charged against the editor of the Spectator. The papers came by sailing vessels. The New York Tribune and Herald were among our exchanges. After we got through with them they were loaned to anxious parties who wanted to get the news."

To narrate a little more of his life story: Mr. Schnebly, after leaving the Spectator, removed to a donation claim eight miles from Oregon City and there lived until 1861, when he removed to Walla Walla. In the meantime he had married Margaretta Ann Painter, a daughter of Col. and Mrs. W. C. Painter, among Walla Walla's best known pioneers. During the next decade Mr. Schnebly was engaged in newspaper work on the Walla Walla Union and Statesman, built a toll bridge across the Spokane river above the falls, erected the Eureka mills on that river, farmed and raised stock. In 1871 he came with his sons, Henry and Charles, to the Kittitas Valley and followed husbandry until 1883, at which time he founded the Localizer.

The first number of this journal made its appearance Thursday, July 12, 1883. It was a four-page sheet, with "patent" outside, presented a neat, tidy appearance and as might be expected, achieved success and reputation immediately. Even at that time its editor was approaching the allotted three score and ten years. At that time the agitation over a division of Yakima county was at its height and, judging from the tenor of the editorials, the Localizer considered the movement premature though inevitable. The plant suffered a serious disaster July 4, 1889, the great fire of that date almost completely destroying the office and contents. As some one expressed it "everything from shears to files was swept away." Notwithstanding, the energetic publisher and editor immediately contracted for the erection of a new office, ordered new equipment and in a short time had the business running as smoothly as before the fire. Not a number was missed, though for a time the Localizer appeared considerably reduced in size. At this time Editor Schnebly changed its name from the Kittitas to the Ellensburg Localizer and instituted various other changes and reforms, all of which bettered the paper's condition. The paper was installed after the fire in a commodious brick block situated on the west side of Main street between Third and Fourth streets, where it is still published.

During the strenuous campaign of 1896, J. M. Cummins, who had been for some time past an attache of the office, temporarily assumed the business and editorial management of the paper, which became at this time a silver instead of a gold advocate. While the venerable owner was making brave attempts to personally manage the business, he realized that the burdens of old age were upon him and that the enterprise required more strength and attention than he could possibly give to it, so April 9, 1898, the plant passed into the hands of his cousin, F. Dorsey Schnebly, also a '71 pioneer of Kittitas. In his valedictory, the aged editor, says:

"Looking back through the years that are past, I can but note the many changes of the last half century. Forests have been leveled, cities grown up, political parties risen and fallen, and wars changed the geography of the world. All these have been noted in their turn and now on account of failing eyesight and declining years, I take leave of the Localizer. I have labored to benefit Ellensburg and our county and I hope have been successful. Having attained four score years and two months, I now lay down my pen and leave the work to younger hands."

Not many more years did he, whom the Tacoma Ledger termed "the patriarch of journalism in the Pacific Northwest," live, for early in January, 1901, he was stricken with la grippe and never rallied from the shock, his death occurring January 5th. Only a few days before his death he did some work in the Localizer office and after his retirement in 1898 often contributed to its columns and aided the force. His demise removed one of the last of the old school of Northwestern editors, an able, aggressive writer, and one skilled in all branches of his work and devoted to his profession.

Under the ownership and management of F. D. Schnebly the Localizer continued to maintain its high standing and success. However, he, too, soon turned over the business to still younger hands, the property passing into possession of the Cascade Printing & Publishing Company, April 15, 1903. This firm is composed of Amasa S. and U. M. Randall, the former being manager. Besides conducting the Localizer, it also owns and conducts the Cascade Miner at Roslyn. The company has spent several hundred dollars during the past year for new equipment. Randall Brothers changed the politics of the Localizer from Democratic, which it had been since 1898, to independent. The paper was Republican from 1883 to 1896, when it became Silver Republican. The Localizer occupies commodious quarters in the Schnebly block on Main street. This neatly printed and well edited eight-page journal is still issued once a week, Saturdays, and, with its contemporaries, is energetically and persistently engaged in upbuilding and reflecting the life of the community.

THE ELLENSBURG CAPITAL,

A. H. Stulfauth, editor and proprietor, is now in its seventeenth year. It is Kittitas county's second oldest paper, having been founded Thursday, October 11, 1887, by A. N. Hamilton, an experienced newspaper man who now resides in western Washington. The Capital has been a credit to its publisher and the thriving little city from the beginning. The newspaper's first home was in the Capital block, corner of Pearl and Fifth streets, where it remained until October, 1890, when the plant was installed in the Bath block, its present location. At the time of its establishment, Ellensburg was a very prominent candidate for the location of the state's capital; hence the significant name adopted by Publisher Hamilton for his paper.

In June, 1889, A. H. Stulfauth, formerly telegraph editor of the Evening Post, and connected with the Chronicle and Examiner of San Francisco, was so strongly attracted by the advantages of Ellensburg that he purchased a half interest in the Capital and removed to the Kittitas valley. A few months later, October 10, 1889, he assumed full charge of the business, editorial and mechanical departments and by skillful, conscientious work soon brought the Capital into prominence. Ten years later Mr. Stulfauth obtained full control of the business and he has since continued sole proprietor and editor of the publication, which ranks among the most successful and best country weeklies in eastern Washington. Originally the Capital was an independent sheet, but under Mr. Stulfauth's management, it became in 1892 a staunch supporter of Republican principles. Its political faith remains unaltered.

The Capital plant is modern and quite complete, including besides full lines of type, a news press, two jobbers, an Advance paper cutter, etc. The presses are operated by water power. It is comfortably located in the Bath brick block on Fourth street between Pearl and Pine streets, opposite the Hotel Vanderbilt. The mechanical force is under foreman H. W. Rodman. The Capital is a neat seven-column, four page paper.

THE ELLENSBURG DAWN.

Third in point of age among Ellensburg's representatives of journalism, though second to none in the qualities that go to make a first-class newspaper, is the Dawn, now in its eleventh year. From a little six-page monthly magazine, six by nine inches in size, first issued in November, 1893, it has steadily grown and improved.

The Reformers' Dawn, as it was first called, was established by Robert A. Turner, who had been connected with reform work since 1876, to advocate the principles of the People's party as promulgated at Omaha, July 4, 1892. The paper was offered to the reading public for the insignificant sum of twenty-five cents a year. At that time the Populistic movement was sweeping westward with wonderful strength and had just reached Kittitas county in force. The result was that the little reform paper was so cordially received that after the fourth issue, the size of the paper was doubled, and in May, 1894, 1,250 subscribers were claimed by its publisher. The following August it was again enlarged and with the campaign of that year really obtained its permanent footing as a newspaper. The publication of the weekly Dawn was begun in August. It was eleven by fifteen inches in size and contained only four pages. Much skill and energy were required to pilot the journalistic craft safely by the shoals and reefs of the hard times, but the feat was accomplished and when prosperity again came the paper forged ahead rapidly.

To enumerate all the changes and improvements made in the course of the Dawn's growth would be an endless task and not of general interest. At present the Dawn occupies quarters in the Albany block, in the very heart of the city, into which the plant was recently moved from its old location on Main street. Previous to that the office was in the Geddis annex, from 1897 to August, 1902. The first office was in the Cadwell block, but this becoming too small, the paper was removed in 1895 to the Geddis block and thence to the annex. The Dawn was printed for the first two years on an old fashioned Cottage hand press. Then a Rose hand cylinder was installed, but this, too, was insufficient and too old fashioned, so in the spring of 1902, the present fine Challenge cylinder book and news press was purchased. This has a capacity of about 1,500 per hour and is an up to date machine in every respect. Other mechanical equipment has been added from time to time until the Dawn printing office has become one of the most complete in the county. The mechanical department is in charge of J. Mark Martin, a thoroughly competent workman.

Politically, the Dawn is strictly independent, though at one time it was an ardent champion of Populism. Since the passing of the People's party, however, Editor Turner has devoted himself rigidly to the task of promoting the general welfare regardless of party doctrine, and if there is one thing more than another that the Dawn is noted for, it is this independence. The columns are well filled with news and editorial matter, carefully and accurately written, and the presence of a goodly local advertising patronage indicates the popularity of the Dawn as an advertising medium.

THE CASCADE MINER.

The Miner alone, of half a dozen newspapers established in the city of Roslyn, has survived and today it is the sole representative of journalism in the Roslyn district, with the one exception of the Echo, published at Cle-Elum. The Roslyn Miner, as it was originally called, was established by the Republicans in 1896 as a campaign paper, John B. Armstrong becoming its first editor and publisher. The first number appeared September 14th. The paper's first home was on First street between Pennsylvania and Dakota avenues. The plant was originally a small, inexpensive one, costing but a few hundred dollars, and for a time only a four column folio was published, but this was soon changed to a seven-column folio with "patent" inside. Before going to Roslyn, Mr. Armstrong had been connected with a newspaper in Ellensburg and being an experienced, capable man he issued a good paper.

Amasa S. Randall, also a former Ellensburg newspaper man, purchased the Miner, December 26, 1898, taking charge the first of the new year. The following April he associated with himself as a full partner, his brother, Urellis M. Randall, and together they organized the present Cascade Printing & Publishing Company. The next May they purchased a portion of the defunct Ellensburg Register plant, and in December, 1899, installed a Cottrell cylinder, the largest press ever brought to Roslyn. The press complete weighs six thousand five hundred pounds, occupies ninety-six square feet of floor space, and stands over six feet high. The big cylinder alone weighs over a ton. Upon assuming charge of the Miner, the new proprietors changed its name to the Cascade Miner, the name which it now bears. Amasa S. Randall continues to act as manager of the company. The firm added the Cle-Elum Echo to its holdings in 1902, and in the spring of 1903 bought the Ellensburg Localizer. At present only the Localizer and the Miner are owned by the company, the Echo having been sold.

The Miner now has a well equipped plant occupying apartments on First street and in connection is run an excellent jobbing department. The machinery is operated by water power. As the city's official paper, a well edited, cleanly printed and public-spirited journal, the Miner enjoys the esteem of the community and a position of credit among the weeklies of the state. U. M. Randall, assisted by L. L. Warner, is in charge. The paper continues to be an ardent advocate of Republican doctrine. In size, it is now an eight-page, six-column sheet.

THE CLE-ELUM ECHO.

Cle-Elum is fortunate in possessing such a wide-awake, able weekly as the Echo. The paper is much above the average and cannot help but aid materially in strengthening and upbuilding the community around it. Between the years 1891 and 1902 Cle-Elum was without a newspaper, but in January of the latter year, Randall Brothers, of Roslyn, determined to enter the unoccupied field and began preparations for the publication of a paper. A very good small equipment was at once installed and a six-column folio commenced telling the local news. Charles S. Freeman first had charge of the business, but was later succeeded by Charles S. Fell. The latter purchased a half interest in the business in November, 1903, from Randall Brothers; the balance is owned by Walter J. Reed. The Echo is printed in a convenient office on Pennsylvania avenue. It is now a seven-column folio, all home print; politically, it is Republican.

THE TEANAWAY BUGLE.

Among Kittitas county's pioneer journals that have long since become a memory was the Teanaway Bugle, published by G. W. and Fred Seaton, who dabbled in journalism as amateurs. Beginning some time in 1884, the little sheet, four pages nine by twelve inches in size, appeared at irregular intervals for about a year. Fred Seaton was the practical printer of the firm. Of this unique publication, the Cle-Elum Tribune, in 1891, gives the following interesting description:

"One of the earliest enterprises in Kittitas county that partook of the character of a newspaper was a little two-column folio which bore the title of The Teanaway Bugle. Its editor was Fred O. Seaton, and the office of the publication was a little old shack, located on the west bank of the beautiful Teanaway. In its initial number, an editorial announcement appears to the effect that the sheet would appear quarterly, but from a careful perusal of the files of the paper, it was made manifest that its editor, with conscious disregard, had twisted the 'quarterly' into broader 'periodically,' and made the periods conform to his unqualified convenience.

"The Bugle was a very newsy little paper, however, and it served its purpose. It dwelt 'freely and fearlessly' on the public and private life of the Teanaway valley, its varied resources, picturesque location, scenic beauty, and other attractive features, and regularly presented a very roseate word picture of its prospective future.

"Just about the time the Bugle was at the zenith of its prosperity there was a marked absence of petticoats in the upper Kittitas country and, presuming from the tenor of an advertisement that appeared in several issues of the paper, it was evident that the sons of Adam, who were scattered throughout this region, in their solitary and hermit-like life, longed for the companionship and the civilizing influences of at least a few sympathetic daughters of Eve. 'PARTNERS WANTED! MUST BE FEMALES!! BEAUTY NO OBJECT!!!' were the attractive headlines to the announcement in bold type, which read as follows:

"After roaming around this cold, cheerless and unsympathetic world for many years, with nothing to love, no one to caress us, we, the undersigned old bachelors, have at last settled down on lovely ranches in the charming valley of the peerless Teanaway. All that is wanting to complete our happiness is partners of the female persuasion. No capital required and but few questions asked. Women of uncertain age and questionable beauty acceptable, provided they can otherwise pass examination. Sound teeth and strong constitutions are the essential requisites. Address either S. L. Bates, J. B. Stevens, A. Helmer, A. Haas, S. L. Taylor, J. H. Moore, C. M. Giles, Colonel Mason, Ephraim Allyn, T. L. Gamble, Gus Pletat, N. Plaisted, H. Boardwell, S. A. Bacon."

"The proposition courted investigation and the postmaster at Teanaway was given as a reference. It is not known to the Tribune whether the announcement was made at the request of the men whose names are affixed, but some inquiry developed the information that two or three of the above named gentlemen are now enjoying the complete happiness sought, and that the little proclamation in the Bugle opened the way to the matrimonial entanglements. In this respect at least it is hoped that the paper served a good purpose. . . ."

THE GOSPEL PREACHER.

This journal was issued monthly in magazine form, beginning with May, 1893, for about two years, in Ellensburg, the Rev. W. W. Stone being editor and publisher. It was the official state organ of the Christian church, and really a very ably edited little sheet. The Gospel Preacher went out of existence when Rev. and Mrs. Stone were compelled to go south for the health of the latter in 1895. They were pioneers of the Kittitas valley.

THE KITTITAS WAU-WAU.

The distinction of having been the first newspaper published in the region now embraced by Kittitas county unquestionably belongs to the Kittitas Wau-Wau, a small amateur paper published in 1879 by Austin A. Bell and Harry M. Bryant, conducting a general store at Ellensburg under the firm name of Austin A. Bell & Co. Number one, volume one, appeared July 4th, 1879, and one other issue ended the career of this venturesome little journal.

THE KITTITAS STANDARD

next entered the Kittitas journalistic field and immediately became one of Ellensburg's substantial and popular business enterprises. With the Standard the name of its founder, publisher and editor is inseparably connected, for Richard V. Chadd's strong personality made it what it was and gave it a territorial reputation. Before coming to Ellensburg in 1883, Mr. Chadd had established and published for some time the Yakima Record, a paper that all old pioneers of central Washington will vividly remember. From an excerpt taken from Editor Chadd's salutatory, appearing in No. 1, Volume 1, of the Standard, June 16, 1883, we may fairly judge the character of the man:

"Hence, we simply announce our presence and simply make the promise that we shall publish an independent paper. It will be tied to no man's collar, in the interest of no clique, or ring, and is not a 'branch' establishment. Its publisher has invested solely his own means as a business venture. His well known independence is a guarantee of the truth of this assertion. Our aim shall be to publish a local paper devoted exclusively to the interests and development of Kittitas valley and vicinity. This is all the promise we make. People of Kittitas, how like you the platform?"

However, it is not unlikely, indeed it is generally understood to be a fact, that John A. Shoudy gave the Standard his personal support. This was considerable, as Mr. Shoudy owned the townsite, conducted an immense business and was otherwise publicly interested in the progress and welfare of the valley. At any rate, the Standard prospered and experienced a healthy growth for a number of years.

Editor, Chadd was an able newspaper man and, true to his promise, gave the people an excellent journal, fearlessly independent, public-spirited and clean.

Thursday evening, September 10, 1885, Charles Voorhees, the Democratic candidate for territorial delegate, addressed the people of Ellensburg upon the political issues of the day. Mr. Chadd, who had not been in good health for some time, attended the meeting, afterwards returning to his little office on Pearl street, near Third, to work. A noisy demonstration, with booming of anvils, followed the meeting. But Editor Chadd was not well and kept within. When citizens visited the office a little later, they found him at his desk, dead. Evidently his weak heart had been unable to withstand the shock occasioned by some unusually loud explosion and the cord of life had snapped. With his death, the publication of the Standard ceased and the plant was shipped to do duty elsewhere. Robert A. Turner, proprietor of the Dawn, possesses an incomplete file of the old Standard, which has been freely used in the compilation of the county's history. There are several other newspapers in the Kittitas journalistic graveyard but we will not trouble the reader with the inscriptions on their tombstones. Pace quiescant.

CHAPTER IV.

THE YAKIMA INDIANS.

Such are the difficulties in the way of him who would search deeply into the inner character and life of the Indian that they can be overcome only in a limited measure. The Indian is by nature reticent. To none but his true and tried friends will he unbosom himself at all, and even the man who has won his confidence must exercise much tact to gain from him an insight into his traditions, folk-lore, religion and aspirations. "His language," says Dr. G. P. Kuykendall, "is difficult to comprehend; its idioms are peculiar, and his manner of thought is widely different from ours. In his heart the Indian sincerely believes the traditions and myths of his fathers; but it is difficult to get him to open his mind and communicate them to the whites. In their zeal to correct the erroneous beliefs of the Indians, the white people usually laugh at his stories; and then he becomes silent. These things are sacred to him, and he cannot complacently bear to have them ridiculed. They are his bible, his code of laws, his system of philosophy and his religion. From his infancy he has heard these things related by his father as facts—sacred facts; and to him they are sacred."

It would seem, however, that Dr. Kuykendall has been quite successful in his efforts to reach the sanctum sanctorum of the Indian heart and to win from it its treasure of tradition and legend. Having been for years engaged as agency physician on the Yakima reservation, he enjoyed unusual opportunities for the study of Indian characteristics, and much of the material for his excellent article on the Indians of the Pacific Northwest was doubtless compiled at this time. Very few writers have ever been so intimately associated with Indians in their every-day life as to admit of personal investigations into their character and habits. The writer cheerfully acknowledges himself indebted to the researches of the doctor and to information furnished him by Indian Agent Jay Lynch for material assistance in the preparation of this chapter.

The commonly accepted estimate of the Indian is a symposium of impressions formed of him while at war with the whites. At such times all that is basest, most savage, cruel and deceitful in his nature is uppermost; the side of his character brought into bold relief is the worst side, and an impression decidedly unfavorable to him is the natural consequence. So it happened that the Pacific coast pioneers came to believe the only good Indian was a dead Indian. But now that the conquest of the red man is complete, that there is no longer a chance of his waging successful warfare against the white men, a reaction has set in and many are coming to look more kindly upon the vanquished race, and to contemplate with feelings of sympathy the Indian's impending doom. Men are beginning to realize the pathetic aspect of the Indian's situation; how that his race has wrestled without guiding star for ages with the problem of destiny; yielding at last its native land to strangers and going out of existence as a race, leaving not even so much as a history behind. "Almost all that is known," says Kuykendall, "of the past hopes, fears, loves, battles, intellectual, physical and moral life of uncounted millions of human beings could be written on a single page. All the rest is silent and forever lost in oblivion. That the Indian race was capable of a great degree of civilization is evident from the ruins of magnificent cities found in the southern part of the continent. That this country is very ancient and has known a high degree of civilization is certain. Whether the North American Indians worked out their own destiny without any extraneous influence will probably never be known. Our Northwest Pacific country has a wonderful past as well as a grand future. As having some bearing on the past history of our tribes, it may be mentioned that while boring an artesian well in Nampa, Idaho, Mr. M. A. Kurtz found, July 24, 1889, a pottery image of a human form, almost perfect in every detail, at a depth of nearly three hundred feet. The well went first through the natural soil, gravel, etc., about sixty-five feet; then through a lava flow of about fifteen feet; and the rest of the distance was through layers of sand, quicksand, clay and pebbles. The image was found in sand underneath all these. It was of burnt clay and about one inch long. Who made it, where it came from, how it came where it was found and how long it had lain there are mysteries that will never be unveiled. This curious find would go to indicate that, at some remote age back of all written history, there were in this country, somewhere, people who were well advanced in civilization and art."

The origin of the Indian is another unsolved problem. Possibly the most feasible explanation of his presence is that his race is identical with the Mongolian and that his ancestors drifted across the Pacific ocean, probably where the two continents, Asia and America, approach each other most nearly. There are, perhaps, no physical differences between the Chinese and the Indians that cannot be accounted for by the effect of climate and environment. The war spirit is much more dominant in the American than in the Asiatic race, but this may have resulted from the physical conditions of the country in which the ancestral Indian found himself, being developed first by his warfare with the animal creation for subsistence and later by intertribal belligerence incident to chieftainship and a tribal form of government. Indeed, the recent Japanese-Chinese war furnished abundant proof that at least one branch of the original Mongolian stock was not deficient in martial spirit. Whether differences of environment and conditions are sufficient to cause the Asiatic Mongolians to be noted for their patient industry, while the American Indian is noted for his utter shiftlessness and contempt for anything like drudgery, is a matter of opinion.

The account of their origin given by the Pacific coast Indians themselves is of interest primarily as a part of their religion and mythology and incidentally from the fact that it presupposes a condition of physical features such as geological science teaches to have existed in past ages. The observations of the Indian led him to think that much that is now dry land was formerly covered with water, and the geologist's research has led him to the same conclusion. The legends of the different tribes regarding their creation, though not in perfect accord, are similar in all their essential features. The version of the eastern Washington Indians is thus given by Dr. Kuykendall:

A great while ago, in the wonderful age of the ancients, when all kinds of animals spoke and reasoned, and before the present race of Indians existed, there was a mighty beaver, Wishpoosh, that lived in Lake Cle-Elum. This beaver was god of the lake, owning it, and claiming property in all the fish, wood, and everything in and about its waters. He lived in the bottom of the lake; his eyes were like living fire; his eyebrows bright red; and his immense nails or claws shone and glistened like burnished silver. Like so many others of the Indians' animal gods, he was a bad character, and was very destructive to life. He had made the lake and its surroundings a place of terror; for he destroyed and devoured every living thing that came in his way. To those he could not kill, he denied the privilege of taking fish, of which there were plenty in the water. All about in the country the (animal) people were hungry for fish; and, with plenty near by, it seemed hard that they must starve. Coyote, in his journeyings, found the (animal) people in this sad plight, and their condition moved him to do something for their relief. As many unsuccessful attempts had been made to destroy the monster, Coyote knew he had a big job on hand, and so made elaborate preparations for the encounter. He armed himself with a powerful spear with a long and strong handle. This spear he bound to his wrist with strong cords of twisted ta-hoosh (Indian flax). Thus equipped, he went up to the lake, and finding old Wishpoosh, drove his spear into him. The wounded and enraged water god plunged into the lake and down to the bottom. The cord of the spear handle being fast to Coyote's wrist, he was dragged along by the infuriated beast; so that now the two went plunging and tearing along through the lake. A fearful struggle ensued, in which they tore a gap through the mountain, and came wallowing and swimming into the lake that then covered Kittitas valley. On across that they came, and thrashed through the ridge forming the Naches gap, and entered the lake that then stood over the Yakima valley. Still the mighty beaver god struggled; Coyote hung on, and they struck the ridge below the Ahtanum, and tore through, forming Union gap; and then they went floundering on down, tearing the channel of the Yakima river. Poor Coyote was getting badly worsted, and was almost strangled, and was clutching at trees along the bank, trying to stop his wild career down the stream. He caught hold of the large cottonwoods, but they broke off or pulled up; he tried the firs, but they tore out by the roots; he clawed at the rocks, but they crumbled off. Nothing could stand before the irresistible power of the mighty Wishpoosh. Exhausted and almost drowned, he found himself wallowing in the mouth of the Columbia among the breakers. The muskrat was standing on the shore laughing at him.

By this time the beaver god was dead; and the now half-drowned Coyote came out, dragging his game with him. When he came out, he wiped the water from his face and eyes, and proceeded to cut up the beaver's carcass. As he cut the different parts, he made of them the Indian tribes. Of the belly he made the lower Columbia and Coast Indians saying, "You shall always be short and fat, and have great bellies." Of the legs he made the Cayuses, saying, "You shall be fleet of foot and strong of limb." Of the head he made the northern tribes, saying, "You will be men of brains, and strong in war." Of the ribs he made the Yakimas or Peshwan-wa-pams. The various tribes had characteristics derived from the parts from which they were taken. Last of all there was a lot of blood, pieces of entrails and filth, which Coyote gathered up and flung off towards the country of the Sioux and the Snakes, saying, "You shall always be people of blood and violence." Having peopled the country with tribes of Indians, he started up the Columbia, and, reaching the point where the Columbia and Snake united their waters, the mighty maker of the red men paused. Standing there, at the meeting place of the waters, first towards the east and west, then toward the north and south, he said: "Earth is full of inhabitants; there is no longer place here for me." Then he ascended to the sky.

The god "Coyote," who figures so prominently in the foregoing legend, was, in the Indian mythology, the chiefest of a large number of animal deities. It seems to be generally believed by Indians that the animals as they now exist are degenerate sons and daughters of an ancestry endowed with the power of speech and a large degree of intelligence. Indeed it is stated that even inanimate objects were thought to have possessed, in that wonderful ancient time, the ability to speak and to perform marvels. The Indians believe that a spirit essence still exists in material blankets, beads and other articles of comfort and adornment, attesting their faith in the doctrine by burying such articles with their dead. They think that the soul of the blanket, pipe or other object attaches itself to the spirit of the departed and in some mysterious way ministers to his comfort in the undiscovered country. They believe, a fortiori, in the existence of animal souls, and some of them are in the habit of slaying a horse over the grave of his master, that the spirit of the animal may bear the spirit of the man in its journey to that good land to which the grave is the only portal.

The Indian's animal gods are a strange creation of his imagination. They are grotesque creatures possessed of magical powers to defy the laws of nature; cunning, deceitful, treacherous, reflecting with fidelity the moral character of the race that fabricated them. In their magical powers they were akin to the divine; in physique they were gigantic animals: in ethical standards they were ordinary Indians.

To Coyote, their great deity, are attributed wonderful powers. He could change the aspect of nature, convert beings to stone, transform himself into any form he wished. While he was not altogether good, and seems to have been a believer in the doctrine that a benevolent end might justify almost any means necessary to its accomplishment, yet he was for the most part the friend of the Indian and the enemy of the tyrant gods who would do him harm. With all his powers, he sometimes suffered from hunger and thirst, often found himself in ludicrous and absurd positions, was frequently guilty of folly and frivolity, and wise though he sometimes was, was forced more than once to take counsel of his three little sisters who lived in his stomach and were, in bodily form, like a species of berry. It is said that whenever these knowing females had given him advice, he would say "Yes, that is just what I thought," taking all the credit to himself. In order to rid the world of a troublesome one-horned dog, he created a two-horned canine out of clay which vanquished the hated animal in various feats. He thereupon traded for the hated dog and took him out of the country. Then, the two-horned creature, having accomplished the purpose of his creation, turned back to the vile clay whence he sprang.

But this was by no means the most wonderful of the deeds of the famed Coyote. He destroyed malevolent water gods; slew Amash, the owl; fought with Eenumtla, the thunder, beat him unmercifully and so broke his power that he is now seldom able to kill anyone, though he often frights; outwitted certain beaver women, who were in the habit of preventing salmon from ascending the rivers, and brought it about that the salmon might swim to the waters of the interior without hindrance; transformed the female aspirants for the favor of his son into rocks; cursed the monstrous tick god, who thereafter became small, feeble, insignificant and vile; slew by treachery the giant mosquito god, forming from his head the race of diminutive insects which now annoy mankind; attempted with Eagle to bring the dead back from spirit land and did many other wonderful things.

But the mighty Coyote at length overleaped himself. In a climax of audacity he ascended to heaven. This boldness proved his utter undoing, for on account of his presumption, or the sinfulness and deceit of his past life, he was fated to experience a tremendous fall, not only from his elevated position in space but from all the exaltation of attribute and magical power which were formerly his. There are several different versions among the Indian tribes of this fall of Coyote. One of them is as follows:

Coyote, in the course of his checkered career, had at one time occasion to mourn the death of his five daughters, or, according to some, sisters. While wandering about disconsolate, he was directed to a rope reaching up to heaven, having found which he began the ascent. Encouraged by a voice from above, he climbed higher and higher, until at last the strains of music reached his ear and looking up he saw grass and trees, and streams of water. He had paused to listen and when he again attempted to move upward, he discovered, to his consternation, that his paws had become fastened to the rope, so that he could neither ascend nor descend. While in this ridiculous position between earth and heaven, he heard a voice saying, "You cannot come up; your heart has been very bad; you have been fork-tongued and deceitful, and have practiced evil. You are unfit for the heavenly country. You never can come up until you have confessed your wrongs and put away your evil spirit."

A long time Coyote hung there before he could bring himself to make this humiliating confession, for he was a great god and not a little proud of his achievements. At length, however, he made a clean breast of all his iniquities, and was drawn up through a trap door into the sky country. Four of his daughters received him joyfully, but the fifth upbraided him for his sinfulness and presumption in coming to the heavenly land. She ended up by giving him a shove through the trap door. Coyote sought the rope but it had been drawn up into heaven, so there was nothing to hold onto and he fell precipitate. For more than "nine days,"—a whole year—he fell and fell. When at last he struck the earth he was mashed as flat as a tule mat; nor was there consolation in the voice which spoke to him from heaven, for it pronounced a curse upon him, saying: "You shall be a vagabond and wanderer, and shall be a common contemptible coyote, and shall forever cry and howl for your sins." Thus it came to pass that the coyote is a most ignoble animal, whining and crying of nights; wandering about continually in its destitution and friendlessness.

Referring to the strange admixture of conflicting characteristics attributed to this fantastic animal deity, Dr. Kuykendall says: "In the incongruities of the Indian god we see the incongruities of the Indian mind; for his god was the product of his own imagination and he clothed him with such attributes as were in harmony with his own intelligence, feelings and moral nature. Since these myths and traditions have been handed down for centuries, they convey to us a picture of the Indian character for ages back, more correct, perhaps, than any written history could give us. The myth-makers had no desire to flatter or traduce; but unconsciously, while telling of the doings of the gods, they told their own natures, feelings and impulses, and without knowing it gave us their own standard of morality."

A noticeable feature of the Indian mythology is that the death of a gigantic animal deity almost invariably resulted in the formation of a race similar in some respects to the slain god, but smaller in size, vastly inferior in power and dignity and degenerate in every way. Thus the death of Amash, the owl god, gave to the world the hooting bird of the night; the death of the mosquito god resulted in the blood-sucking pest of modern times, and even the fall of Coyote himself was fruitful in the creation of a race of animals. It was natural that the mythology of the Indian should take its form and substance from the animal creation. The earliest and the latest associations of the primitive red man were with the wild beasts of nature, and by the simplest psychological law he was constrained to weave them into his day-dreaming. The mythology of the Indian is the result of his efforts to solve the problem of origin, to explain nature as he saw it, a problem with which the mind of man has wrestled in all ages, and many times with as little success as has attended the philosophizing of the ancestral red man.

The Indian myth-maker did not pause when he had constructed a cosmogony of animal life. He sought also to explain by imaginative accounts many other phenomena of nature. The result is numerous myths concerning the origin of fire, the warm and cold winds, the existence of rocks in different places, etc., etc. Lakes and streams and springs were peopled with mythological inhabitants of various shapes and characters, and even the remains of extinct mammalia yielded suggestions to the story teller. A sunken place on the north side of the Naches river near a small lake is supposed to be the place where the famed Coyote used to have a sweat-house; and a depression in a south hillside near the mouth of the Satus is pointed out as the spot where the warm wind rested over night when on his way to avenge the killing by the cold wind brothers of his father and uncles.

From the character of myths heretofore referred to, it may be seen that the Indians, in common with practically all other races of men, believe in a future existence. In reference to the peculiar features of the Indian's belief in the doctrine of the soul and immortality, we find this language in Dr. Kuykendall's excellent article:

As has been mentioned, the Indians believe that all objects are of a dual nature, having a soul or spirit-like existence independent of the material form. It is said that some of the Oregon tribes formerly held that the various organs of the body were each endowed with separate souls. Among all the tribes the idea seemed to be that there were really two persons, the spirit or soul and the body with its animal life, and that the body could exist for some time while the soul was absent. This ghost-like self had the same form and visage as the body. While they believed in a spirit or soul, they do not appear to have thought it was as much a reality as the body. There was a vague, misty unsubstantiality about it that must have been very unsatisfying to their minds. The soul could leave the body and go away in dreams and trances, and could appear as an apparition in places far from the body, with form and features recognizable. In their languages, life and breath or spirit and breath meant the same thing.

A good many if not all of the Indians believed that there were certain shamans or conjurers that could rob them of their souls, and that the body would continue to live on for a longer or shorter time, but that it must soon die. In their so-called doctoring pow-wows, the doctors professed to restore the absent soul to its owner, and thus make his recovery to health possible. Another idea quite prevalent among the tribes of northern Oregon and Washington was that the soul could come back and inhabit some other body. The most northerly tribes bordering upon and reaching into British Columbia thought the soul came back and entered certain birds, fish, or deer or elk. Others held that the soul came back in the body of infants born to near relatives. It entered the body of a female and appeared in her child. If the child strongly resembled the deceased, then there was no doubt but that he had appeared again; and his name was sooner or later conferred upon it. Some of the tribes in the Northwest held that the deceased could choose into what family he would be born again; and, among the poor and sick and suffering, life was laid down with little regret, believing they might after a while be born into wealthy or honorable families. It was generally believed that the spirits of the dead are out around the world very active and busy during the night, but that in the daytime they stay about graveyards and lonely, dark places. Some held that the dead go into a state of insensibility as soon as the light of day comes on; and that, when darkness broods over the world, their spirits come forth rehabilitated and happy, dancing, feasting and engaging in all kinds of pleasures during the hours of darkness.

Whatever happiness or bliss was attributed to those in the spirit land, there seems to have been a sort of vague dread and much misgiving in regard to it; and their legends show clearly enough that it was the general belief that it would be desirable to have the souls of the deceased return to earth; and that the existence here is really more substantial and desirable than that in the spirit land. Everything goes to show that for some cause there had been a great deal of change going on in the belief of the tribes for some time before the advent of the whites. Their traditions indicate that the Indians had been travelling and visiting more together than formerly. There is every indication that, at some period back only a few hundred years, the tribes had no horses, and their excursions were limited, and there were greater provincialisms in customs and beliefs than in later times. Formerly each little tribe had its own grounds, lived and died near their birthplaces, and seldom traveled to any extent. Under these circumstances, each had its own legends and myths, and its own particular belief as to the future. Now and for some years back there are found traces of several beliefs mixed in with all the tribes. There was much more independence in thought and difference in religious belief than we have been prone to imagine. There was much more scepticism and tendency to unbelief than we have been taught to look for. Many individuals, when asked about the future state, will say, "I don't know." Some express a doubt as to the immortality of the soul; and some utterly deny it.

Among most of the tribes, there seems to have been a pretty distinct idea of rewards and punishments based on the Indian's idea of right and wrong. In nearly all cases, there was hope held out for relief and final entrance into the happy land. Generally, after an uncertain length of time spent in banishment, the sins of the offender were expiated, and he was permitted to pass in among the good, or was even assisted in. Among no tribes do we find anything like the orthodox fire and brimstone hell; but there are very close representations to the condition of the ancient Tantalus, forever tortured with images of everything pleasing to the senses, but which he was utterly unable to grasp. The Chinooks and Klicikats believed in a bright, happy land not very definitely located, where the good were permitted to enjoy themselves in hunting, fishing and every pleasure conceivable to the Indian mind; while the wicked were condemned to wander away in a land of cold and darkness to starve and freeze unceasingly. Some of the northern tribes say that in the other world there is a dark, mysterious lake or ocean; and that out of this lake there flow two rivers. Up one on the shores there is a beautiful country filled with all manner of berries and game, while the stream abounds in fish. Here the good Indian lives in happiness and comfort forever. Up the other river there is a land of frost and darkness, a stony, barren waste, a land of briars and brambles, where the sunlight never comes and where the wicked wander forever in cold, hunger and despair.

The Okanogans have an Indian heaven and a peculiar kind of hell. Instead of the orthodox cloven-footed, barbed-tailed devil, there is a being in human form with ears and tail of a horse. This fantastic being lives in the pine trees, and jumps about from tree to tree, and with a stick beats and prods the poor souls consigned to his dominions. If among the tribes of the Northwest there is any idea of a heaven in the sky or in some elevated spot in space, it probably was derived from priests or missionaries. In the extreme southern part of Oregon, the Indians represent the happy hunting grounds as beyond a deep, dark gulf or chasm across which all must pass—some say on a slippery pole. The good manage to get over, but the evil fall in and reappear upon earth in the form of beasts, insects or birds. One of the most common ideas among the interior tribes was that the spirit land is situated far away towards the south or west. In its journey the soul meets far out on the way a spirit being who understands his life, and weighs all his conduct and actions. If he has been bad, he is sent on to a crooked, wandering road that leads to a land of misty darkness, where the soul, forlorn, cold and hungry, forever wanders in despair; while the good are directed along a straight road leading to a country that is very beautiful, and abounding in everything the Indian can desire.

These various shades of belief all give expression to that unutterable longing, characteristic of humanity in all ages, to look into the future, to unravel the mystery of death, and to solve the problem of man's destiny after he quits this mortal body. In his vain attempts to satisfy the yearnings of his soul after immortality and happiness beyond the grave, man in all lands has invented mythic stories. Death, silence and darkness fill the savage mind with superstitious dread. The most profound and philosophical stand silent in the presence of death. Each tribe or nation of people has its own ideas of heaven; and each pictures what from its standpoint would seem the most happy and desirable condition. No people can picture a heaven superior to the powers of their conception to originate. The Indian's heavenly mansion was a mat house; because he had never seen nor thought of anything superior or better. Drumming, dancing, gaming and feasting were the highest conceptions of felicity possible to the Indian mind. Hence he pictured for himself a heaven in which these are the chief pleasures. The river and coast tribes, being accustomed to water and boats, located their heaven on a far away island; and the spirits were conveyed to the Indian paradise in boats. The prairie tribes, being accustomed to horses as the speediest and best mode of conveyance, sent their dead to heaven on horseback.

We thus see that the habits of life and the surroundings of a people have much to do in their heaven building. The Indian prophet harangues the children of the prairie and forest about a heaven where drumming, dancing and various plays and sports are conducted in a great mat house. The Mohammedan priest tells the followers of Islam of a land of palaces, fountains and delicate perfumes, where beautiful houris and genii are found; and where the soul revels in sensual pleasures. The early Christian fathers preached about a heaven with golden streets, jasper walls, seas of glass and fountains and rivers of life. A higher authority says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive," what heaven is like; and this is in consonance with reason and philosophy.

One of the strangest developments of the Indian doctrine of spirit, and the one having the most marked influence in enslaving the untutored

red man, is a belief in what they term "tamanowash." The word is hard to define; an Indian can convey an idea of its meaning only by citing illustrative examples; but it seems to be a species of spirit power, working through a mortal and exercising an influence in the affairs of individuals. Persons through whose mediumship this power acts are known as medicine-men or doctors. The method of initiation into their fraternity is this: A boy under the age of puberty goes out alone into a lonely place and there remains until a message comes to him. Some wild animal or bird gives forth the sound peculiar to its kind and in an unaccountable way intelligence from the realm of spirit is conveyed to the excited mind of the candidate. If he remembers the words of this supernatural communication to maturity he is a medicine man, having power to use for the blighting or healing of any individual of his race the resources of his patron spirit. This supposed league with the supernatural gives the reputed possessor of it great influence over his less favored brethren, for who of them would not fear a man who has power to bewitch, to cast spells and even to take life by an effort of the will? True, this power may be exercised for the benefit as well as to the detriment of an individual, and indeed it is invoked whenever the Indian is sick with an internal malady, but as diseases of this character are supposed to be the effect of a malevolent use of the tamanowash power, it can, after all, at best accomplish nothing more, even in the hands of its most benevolent possessor than to undo the mischief which, differently applied, it has itself wrought. This belief in tamanowash is also baneful to the Indian in that it makes him too much the slave of the wizard doctor, who is many times the veriest charlatan. But if tamanowash is a curse to the common Indian, it does not always prove an unmixed blessing to the doctor himself, for he is likely at any time to be accused of causing the death of some tribesman, who has fallen a victim to disease. When so accused, his charlatanism comes to the rescue, prompting him to lay the blame on some distant practitioner of sorcery. Occasionally he is unable to escape responsibility in this way, and dies at the hands of an enraged relative of the person he is thought to have murdered with his deadly spell.

Indeed a case of this kind occurred as recently as September of the year 1903 on the Ahtanum river, twelve miles west of North Yakima. The matter was brought to the notice of the civil authorities and a deputy coroner, having repaired to the scene, found the headless trunk of an old woman known as Tisanaway in the wickiup of her son-in-law, Yallup. The victim was a witch-doctor and had incurred the enmity of a number of her tribesmen by giving, as they would express it, "bad medicine" to their kindred. It is thought that this was the cause of her death.

Such were some of the superstitions which held the Indian mind in bondage when benevolent white men began the work of evangelization and education among the Yakima tribes, and such are some of the superstitions which are still enthraling a majority of those tribes, despite the efforts of the government and the missionary. The Indian has everywhere manifested a conservatism truly astonishing. With the fruits of civilization all around him, so that he cannot fail to observe the blessings which flow from intelligent industry, he still clings with pertinacity to his ancient habits and philosophy. Even the certainty that his doom is sealed unless he shall yield to civilizing influences, and that quickly, has failed to arouse him from his lethargy. His race must soon go out of existence as a separate and distinct branch of the human family, without a history, with no monument in the way of art or architecture save a few insignificant trinkets—"unwept, unhonored and unsung."

The Yakima nation first came into conflict with the American settlers shortly after the negotiation of the Stevens treaty of 1855. The story of that treaty and that war has already found place in these pages. None can follow the great Kamiakin in his efforts to form an Indian confederacy and in his conduct of the Yakima war without feeling that he deserves rank among the ablest diplomats and warriors of the western aborigines, and the nation of which he was head chief certainly embraced more than one tribe that might compare favorably in general intelligence and spirit with any other band in the Northwest, though the palm for integrity, sincerity, peaceful disposition and capacity for civilization is usually accorded to the Nez Percés. According to Kuykendall, "of all the Indians of the Northwest, the Klickitats were the most powerful, extending their excursions the farthest into the surrounding country. It is said that the word Klickitat signifies robber or marauder. It was characteristic of the people of that tribe to go almost everywhere and make themselves at home anywhere. Their language impressed itself upon a greater number of people than any other native language of the Northwest. They were the traveling traders, the 'Yankee peddlers' of the tribes in the Northwest. The Chinooks were also great traders in the Indian way; but finding nearly everything they needed to supply their wants in their own country, they seldom made extensive excursions among the surrounding tribes. Their habits of life, their climate and methods of travel created a greater affinity between themselves and the coast and Puget Sound clans. The Klickitats were quite nomadic in their habits; and the summer time found numerous bands of them making long journeys among distant tribes.

Every year some of them would go east, beyond the head of the Missouri river over into Dakota. They frequently met the Shoshones in Grande Ronde valley and traveled as far south as northern California. In fact, occasional trips were made as far south as the lower Sacramento valley. On the north they ranged far into British Columbia. The objects of these excursions were traffic, gambling, horse-racing and sometimes theft and pillage. These Indians were well supplied with buffalo robes, most of which they obtained from the tribes in Montana and Dakota, exchanging for them horses, shells, beads, knives, guns and articles of clothing which they had bought of the whites or traded for with other Indians. In many places in eastern Oregon and Washington there are yet to be seen old trails on the lines of commerce and communication between the tribes. These trails are sometimes as many as ten or fifteen in number, running parallel and close together; in many instances they are worn deep into the soil."

Besides the Klickitats there were some thirteen other tribes and bands, whose chiefs signed the Stevens treaty. All together constituted the Yakima nation, and occupied a territory extending over many hundreds of square miles of what is now known as the Inland Empire.

After the war of 1855-6, the United States government determined to establish a fort in the territory of these people, and in the fall of 1856 the construction of the post was begun. The site chosen was a place known among the Indians by the name "Mool Mool," referring, it is claimed, to the bubbling springs which there abound. The timbers for practically all the buildings were framed in the east, conveyed around Cape Horn on shipboard, thence up the Columbia river to The Dalles, from which point they were packed on the backs of mules over the mountains via the old military trail to the site chosen. It is said that the building now occupied by Agent Jay Lynch cost $60,000, and that the total amount expended by the government in the construction of the original Fort Simcoe buildings was $300,000. The work was so well and thoroughly done that most of the buildings have stood the test of time and are still giving service. They are quaint, old-fashioned structures, interesting relics of the days gone by. The ancient blockhouses are small low buildings constructed of timbers squared with the broad axe and laid one above another. It is not difficult to discern where the port holes originally were, though they are now filled up, and it is pleasant to remember that never once was it necessary to send a bullet through any of them to the heart of an attacking enemy. The blockhouses have long since been devoted exclusively to uses far remote from those for which they were originally designed, as have also all the other buildings, for Fort Simcoe has for more than four decades been a fort in name only.

The establishment of an agency among the Yakimas was one of the provisions of the treaty of 1855, without the fulfillment of which none of the other pledges of the government could be redeemed. Old residents assert that some of the earliest agents were frequently accused of fraud and inefficiency. All this ceased when the Rev. James H. Wilbur was appointed to the general charge of the agency. This worthy representative of the Methodist Episcopal clergy is known among the Indians as Father Wilbur, and they do well to honor him with this reverent and affectionate title, for he deserves a very large share of the credit for whatever progress the Yakimas have made in education and civilization. Speaking of him, John P. Mattoon stated to the writer that he was a very large man, weighing about two hundred and fifty pounds, well proportioned and powerful, dark complexioned and fine looking. He had a Roman nose and wore burnisides. He was quick to think and act, good natured, sensitive, slow to anger, but passionate, resolute and of great courage when aroused; had a commanding eye and voice and was seldom disobeyed by anyone. He was an excellent preacher. His wife was a small woman, of a retiring disposition, popular with all classes and a great favorite with the Indian women.

Wilbur was appointed superintendent of teaching September 1, 1860. With characteristic energy he began, immediately upon going to the agency, to prepare for opening a boarding school for the children of the agency.

"I pledged the department," wrote he in his official report of 1878, "if they would feed the children for a time, until the wild steers could be made oxen and the Indian children could be tamed to drive them, and seed planted and sowed, and time given for it to come to maturity, the school would raise enough for its own subsistence. Provision was made to subsist the children of the school for eight months. I immediately gathered in the larger boys for school and commenced my instruction in yoking the cattle, hitching them to the plow, and with the wild team and wild boys began making crooked furrows on the land chosen for a school farm. In starting out with unbroken team and unbroken drivers, I needed and had a boy or two for every ox in the team, and then it was difficult to keep them on an area of eighty acres. Patience and perseverance in the work soon tamed the cattle and instructed the boys in driving; so good work was done in opening a school farm. We plowed in the fall about twenty acres and sowed wheat, and in the spring plowed ten acres more, that was planted in corn, potatoes and garden vegetables. We fenced eighty acres. When the crops were matured we had 300 bushels of wheat, 500 bushels of potatoes, 40 bushels of corn, with peas, turnips and garden vegetables sufficient for the subsistence of the school and seed in the spring to assist the parents of the children in beginning the work of farming. The work was done wholly by the boys of the school and superintendent of teaching."

The general policy of this efficient worker in the civilization of the Indian, together with some of his views on the Indian question, are set forth with great perspicuity and vigor in another part of the same report. He says:

"I have no affinity for the custom and practice now pursued in many of the agencies of this nation—feeding the Indians in idleness and preparing them, when their treaties are run out, to fight the whites and get a new treaty, and then from year to year and generation to generation be a tax on the industry of the whites. What we want in the Indian service is not more money, but a consolidation of the agencies on good reservations, where the land, if properly cultivated, will be remunerative, where white men could live and prosper; where the Indians are remote from the pestiferous influence of degraded whites; remote from towns, cities and the great thoroughfares of the country. They want and must have men of God, full of business enterprise, capable of managing their own business and making it thrifty; men who are awake to the interests of this and the world to come; instructors to educate them by precept and example. Give the Indian agencies through the nation such men as agents, and the muscle and heart of the Indian would be educated, not for the use of the bow and arrow, not for the war dance and scalping knife, but for the plow, for the habits and practices of civilized life; for mental, moral and physical culture, for the knowledge of the Bible, of God and heaven."

But the labors of Father Wilbur and his worthy successors have not yet succeeded in converting the Yakimas into an industrious, intelligent community of citizens. Though most of them are self-supporting, they get their living more by renting their allotments to the whites than by their own toil. They do, however, spend a portion of each year in the hop fields, but even at this season most of the work is done by the squaws, it being, seemingly, next to impossible to disabuse the minds of the men of the idea that labor is beneath their dignity and to present any incentive to them strong enough to induce them to overcome their natural indolence.

The Yakimas have, however, made some progress toward civilization. Some of them have donned the habits of white men and a considerable proportion are professors of the Christian religion in one form or another. The Indian Methodist church, seven miles nearly due east of Fort Simcoe, has a membership of fifty-two, and its worthy pastor, Rev. J. H. Helm, has in many years received token that his labors and those of his predecessors have not been in vain. This church is supported by the missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Its property consists of an edifice built in 1879, a parsonage erected by Father Wilbur for church purposes and so used until the present building could be provided, and twelve acres of land, irrigated in part. There are two other Methodist Episcopal churches on the reservation, one at Toppenish, the membership of which consists mostly of white renters, and one on the Satus. There is also a Roman Catholic church, a very good building, situated near the Fort Simcoe Methodist church. Its pastor is Father Parrodi.

Besides the Methodist and Catholic Indians, who unitedly number a few hundred, there is a considerable representation of a sect known as the Shakers. This form of religion is of purely Indian origin. Just what the creed of its devotees is the writer does not profess to know, but it seems to mingle some of the doctrines and teachings of Catholicism with Indian superstitions and the emotionalism of the Salvation army. It is claimed by members of this sect that the desire for liquor and gambling,—two of the cardinal vices of Indians,—has, as a result of their religion, been miraculously taken away from them, and Messrs. Helm and Lynch both stated to the writer that this seemed to be indeed true. These gentlemen are inclined to look with favor upon the strange sect, inasmuch as it appears to be bearing the fruit of the Spirit among its members. It is highly probable that even the most nearly orthodox of the Catholic and Methodist Indians are far from free from the superstitions of their forefathers and that their theology, if it could be formulated into a creed, would present some startling divergences from the doctrines of their white brethren.

The Shakers are not the only sect that has arisen among Indians in comparatively recent years. In the seventies the famed Smohollah began preaching his celebrated "Dreamer" religion, a development of the old Indian idea of spirit. It borrowed nothing from Christianity; indeed it had its root in bitter enmity toward the white race. Smohollah lived on the Columbia at least part of the time with a small following of his own, a branch, it is said, of the Spokane tribe. He held religious dances, presiding over the ceremonies as medicine man, and dwelling persistently in his harangues upon a revelation he claimed to have received from spirit land to the effect that in the near future all the deceased Indians were coming out of their graves with physical bodies and were going to unite with their quick brethren in a tremendous effort to drive the whites from the country. The Indians of the east were to do likewise, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific a high carnival of war was to be held. When the white men were all killed or driven out the barbarism of the ancient days was to be once more established and the Indian was to revel and hunt and roam as in the glorious, golden past. This religion was certainly well calculated to appeal to the Indian imagination, the only objection to it—its utter lack of truth—being a small one to the minds of men long inured to the thraldom of superstition. The preaching of Smohollah was not in vain. Considerable excitement was stirred up among the Indians of the Northwest and these "Dreamer" doctrines no doubt incited some to take part in the wars of 1877 and 1878 who might otherwise have remained at peace.

That a religion so manifestly absurd should have gained a hearing and a following as recently as the later seventies is good evidence of the hold which the ancient barbarism still had upon the savage mind and heart. Neither can it be claimed that this hold has yet been loosened, though it is certain that constant contact with the whites is slowly breaking down the power of superstition among the Indians of the Yakima reservation. This is resulting not so much from direct instruction as from the fact that the two races are fusing their blood, so that the number of half-breeds and quarter-breeds is increasing and the number of pure Indians suffering a corresponding diminution. Of course the more white there is in any individual, the greater his affinity for the customs and habits of the white race. Naturally, then, the ancient code of laws, the ancient religion, with its feasts and dancing, and all the ancient observances and customs must soon go into oblivion. The new environment and conditions have already forced great mutations in the life of the Indians, and with change of habits must come the decline of the related ceremonials. Thus it happens that the war dance and the scalp dance have lost their significance, and when indulged in at all are merely spectacular performances; indeed the end of Indian wars must soon mean the end of the pow-wows, and dances and drills and savage chivalry, which are concomitants of Indian belligerence. Other changes in the red man's mode of life are alike inimical to his savage ceremonies. The policy of gathering Indians upon reservations has in itself, aside from direct efforts to civilize and Christianize them, had a marked effect in destroying the ancient usages; the policy now in vogue of inducing the red man to accept lands in severalty and dispose of the surplus to the government will go a long way further in the same direction; yet such is the conservatism of the Indian that we may expect some vestiges of his ancient beliefs, ceremonial observances and superstitions to persist until he shall have drawn his latest breath.

No attempt will here be made to describe the different dances, religious, remedial and social, the methods of courtship, the marriage customs, the mode of sepulture, or the criminal codes once in vogue among the tribes now on the Yakima reservation. Neither can a complete picture of their present habits be essayed; but it is thought that the narration of the observations and experiences of one or two white men will add something to the interest of the chapter and perhaps to the volume of general knowledge regarding the Indians. Walter Scott Elliott, speaking of Indian dances, says:

"The medicine man executes many weird incantations to awe the ignorant savages into subjection to his rule. Their religious dances, called 'Kulla Kulla' or bird dances, sometimes last for weeks at a time, during which the medicine man offers up supplications to their high 'tyee' for the sick and distressed, 'Chinook' dances for the early coming of spring are engaged in toward the close of winter. Their dancing is merely jumping up and down and 'howling' in a sort of sing-song.

"White men are not allowed usually to attend their dances, but the writer started out one night determined on seeing the performance. The chanting of a hundred voices could be distinctly heard over a mile away, getting louder and louder as I neared the camp. When I got within forty yards of the tepees, several dozen dogs announced my arrival, but the uproar inside prevented their alarm from being heard. I proceeded up to the 'curtain' door, and seeing nothing dangerous, slowly raised the flap and crawled into the hallway or 'chute' which led into the main room of the tepee, then, plucking up a little courage, walked boldly in.

"The sight which met my eyes defies accurate description. I was in a room about fifty by twenty feet; two campfires were burning some distance apart, the dim light casting a lurid glare over the vast assembly of painted faces. The dancers were formed in two lines facing each other with alternate men and women. Each of the men carried a bow and arrow in his left hand and in his right a single arrow with point upward. The women were in their gayest dresses, but carried nothing in their hands. No one apparently noticed me at first, so deeply were they interested in the dance. Finally, however, a big savage-looking Indian motioned me inside and compelled me to take off my hat and dance, which I did, much to the general amusement.

"Very soon the medicine man made his appearance with solemn tread, going up and down between the lines of dancers, uttering the most heart-rending cries and pulling at his hair, as if he were in the greatest agony, finally stopping over the campfire and leaning on a wand, his head being bent downward, he chanted away at regular intervals, between which the dance proceeded as before. Then a little, old, dried-up man hopped around the room, handing each one a little camas root, which he carried in a buckskin sack. At this juncture the savage-looking Indian turned to me and said, 'Go home now,' which order was promptly obeyed."

An interesting incident of personal experience was related by Agent Jay Lynch in a recent conversation with the writer. Mr. Lynch had always lived on terms of amity with Chief Teanana, who was later killed by one of his dusky brethren, and about the year 1893 the chieftain manifested his good will by inviting his white friend to attend certain festivities which were then in progress on the Yakima river. Teanana said he wished to make an Indian of Mr. Lynch, and requested that he present himself for initiation on a fixed date. Mr. Lynch appeared at the time and place appointed, and found a large tepee covering a space perhaps thirty by one hundred feet in dimensions, in the center of a cleared and leveled tract of two or three acres. When he got within a quarter of a mile of the spot he was halted by the two Indians that had been deputed to await him. One of these remained with him, while the other went to announce his arrival to the Indians at the big tepee. Presently four horsemen made their appearance, dressed in full regalia and on the backs of steeds gaily caparisoned and decorated. These escorted him to the tent, one riding in front, one on each side of his team and buggy and one behind. When he arrived at the clearing, drums began to sound inside the tent and the crowd started to chant, but the leader paused not in his march. He took Mr. Lynch in a circle around the tent, the horses walking. A second revolution was made in a full trot and then a third at a still higher speed, the movements of the marchers apparently increasing with the tempo of the drum beats and chanting within. This final revolution completed, the music stopped; the leader came to a halt and Mr. Lynch was invited to alight from his buggy and follow the directions of two guides who now took charge of him, and conducted him to the door of the tepee, where the sentry was alarmed by a series of raps. Some conversation in the Indian tongue was now held between the escort without and the watchman within, after which the door opened and Mr. Lynch was led inside. He made a swift reconnaissance of the premises. Indians were standing in four elliptical rows around the tepee, the men on one side and the women on the other, while in the center was a space of bare ground, smooth and clean as a tennis court. At the west end of the tepee stood Chief Teanana, gorgeously arrayed in all the finery the Indian taste could command, with drummers on his right and left. Behind him on the wall, painted on tanned, white skins, were crude representations of the sun, moon and stars; also other pictures whose signification could not be surmised by the uninitiated. In front of the chief some six or eight feet a small fagot fire was burning.

Three times Mr. Lynch was paraded around the fire and in front of the assembled red men; then he was stationed before the chieftain, who addressed him in language which, being interpreted, signified that he now recognized him as a brother and should always consider him one of the Indian people. The drum beating and chanting which had accompanied the marching always, had, of course, ceased when the chief began to speak.

At the conclusion of his brief remarks to Mr. Lynch, Teanana addressed at some length the general assembly, referring to the tepee in which they were and comparing it unfavorably with the houses in which their wealthier forefathers were wont to meet, houses many times constructed of stone. He gave a fanciful account of the creation, spoke of the earth as the Indian's mother, referred to a flood which destroyed nearly all the people; stated that what they then and there did had been done by their forefathers from time immemorial; referred to the Creator as the father who lived beyond the sun; asserted that in olden times there were many prophets among the Indians who lived in such close touch with this great father that they were able to foretell the future; that they had long foreseen the coming of the whites and had advised the Indians to treat them as brothers, inasmuch as all were children of the same father. At one point in his discourse the chieftain enumerated in a kind of prayer of thanksgiving the different foods used and blessings enjoyed by the red man, the people repeating each sentence after him in a sort of chant. Then the chief would say something like "We thank thee, O God, for the fish in the river," and when the words had been sung by the other Indians, he would say: "We thank thee, O God, for the bright, clear water," the response to which was a repetition of the same language in chant. In this way the whole category of blessings was enumerated and thanks offered for each, first by the chief speaking and then by the people singing.

At the close of Teanana's address the Indians engaged in a series of songs and dances, the latter consisting mostly in a simple swaying motion of the body. This part of the program ended, Mr. Lynch's conductor turned to him and said: "I will now shake hands with you, Indian fashion." He placed his hand over his heart, directing the white man to do the same, then extended it palm upward. Mr. Lynch also extended his hand in the same manner. The Indian clasped it and three times elevated it as high as possible, then unclasped and both men returned their hands to their hearts. The Indian then explained that the placing of the first position of the hand signified "good heart," while its extension palm upward and subsequent inversion above the hand of the other man meant a willingness to give whenever occasion required. The next day, which was Sunday, was given up to songs, prayer, exhortation and feasting. The method of cooking the salmon was described by Mr. Lynch. He said that fatot fires were made all around the large tepee and before these a row of Indians stationed themselves, each holding a whole fish by means of a forked stick, within roasting distance of the flame.

Most of the Indians on the Yakima reservation have accepted land in severalty, but they have not yet seen fit to accept any of the proposals of the United States government for the sale of the lands remaining after all allotments have been made. The government is still exercising its guardianship over them and still making efforts to educate and civilize them. It maintains an industrial school at Fort Simcoe, in which at the time of the writer's visit were about one hundred and seventy pupils ranging in ages from six to sixteen years, though most of them were under twelve. The day is divided between the study of the common branches and those things calculated to render the pupil industrious and capable of earning a respectable livelihood. The boys are taught agriculture and gardening and the handicraft of the blacksmith or the carpenter, while the girls receive instruction in making clothing, cooking, dish washing, laundry work and everything a good housekeeper should know. The regular teachers in the literary department of the school at present are W. H. Embree and Mrs. Venesia Kampmeir; the industrial teacher is Joe Sam, an Indian, occupying the position temporarily; the carpenter, James S. Anglea; the blacksmith, Charles Barnaby, a half breed; the girls' matron, Mrs. W. L. Shawk; the boys' matron, Miss Ethel Frizell; the cook, Miss Anna Steinman; the laundress, Miss Lydia Spencer, an Indian lady. Hon. Jay Lynch is agent and superintendent of the industrial school; G. Dawe McQuesten, clerk; Charles E. Roblin, assistant clerk, and Dr. W. L. Shawk, agency and school physician. The government property at Fort Simcoe consists of the school with four class rooms and a general assembly room, the boys' and girls' dormitories, eight dwelling houses, two commissary buildings, the agent's office, the doctor's office and government medical dispensary, and some buildings originally designed as barracks for the soldiers but now used for store rooms and shops. There is a general merchandise store across the street from the school buildings, but it belongs to J. D. Coburn, the postmaster and post trader.

The agency and school buildings are tastefully arranged in a beautiful cove in the foothills of a spur of the Cascades, known locally as the Simcoe range. Beautiful oak groves add to the attractiveness of the spot, while the view it commands of the valley stretching away to the Yakima river is simply magnificent. As indicated by its old Indian name, the place is well supplied with springs, but for the convenience of all concerned a water system has been installed, of which Superintendent Lynch, in his report for 1901, said: "The water system is a gravity system and water is conducted through four-inch mains, from a distance of about two miles up the canyon to an elevated reservoir on a hill near the school. This furnishes a fine pressure throughout the buildings and an excellent pressure for fire protection for the buildings of the school and agency. The fire hydrants are conveniently located for the protection of all the school buildings and the agency buildings, except the barn."

A general idea of the entire reservation may be gathered from what is said of it in the superintendent's report for the year 1902: "The reservation contains about 800,000 acres, of which about 300,000 acres have been allotted. All of the land that there was any practical way of irrigating was allotted to the Indians some time ago, when the last allotting agent was here, consequently the remaining portion of the reservation is very poor land and is practically worthless for farming purposes and remains tribal lands, where water cannot be secured for irrigation. A great portion of the unallotted lands is in the mountains, part of which is timbered. I estimate that there are about 75,000 acres of good price timber lands distant from forty to sixty miles from the railroad and inaccessible at present. These tribal lands afford or produce only a small amount of vegetation during a short portion of the early summer, and on account of the lack of rains dry up and supply but a very limited grazing for stock."

CHAPTER V.

REMINISCENT.

Driven by stern necessity, the early pioneers often accomplished tasks which would be considered next to impossible under ordinary circumstances. Accustomed from their youth up to toil and danger and the hardships of the strenuous life they led, they came to treat as commonplace deeds of daring and heroism that would now be heralded on the front page of the modern daily. It is to be lamented that the scope of this volume and the limitations of its authors will not permit the publication of all the incidents of thrilling interest, the anecdotes and stories which might be told concerning the early days of these three counties. Certain it is that such a collection carefully compiled would make a volume of surpassing interest. The long, tedious journeys across the Plains with ox-teams and pack-trains, the frequent brushes with the Indians, the hardships and struggles which attended efforts to establish pioneer settlements, have surrounded those early days with a host of delightful recollections both of an adventurous and humorous nature. No attempt will be made to incorporate here any extensive collection of these, but realizing that a few incidents and stories of early days may help to interpret the spirit of the times and to add interest to these pages, we have given space to a limited number.

A WOMAN'S GRAVE.

The tall grass waves on the sandhill's side—
A coyote crosses the sand flat wide
With hungry eyes on his destined prey—
A prairie dog on his porch at play—
Crosses and scatters beneath his feet
The wind-blown folds of a winding-sheet.

I stopped to study with curious air
The lonely grave that was hidden there;
A headstone, scarred by sand and flame,
Still recorded a woman's name
And the legend carved in rude design—
"Died, April, 1849,
"Aged five and twenty years;
"To the Mount of Life from the plains of tears."

Was she a wife? It does not tell,
A mother? Perhaps. We know as well,
For on the gravestone above the mould
Simply a woman's name is told.
—A woman's name, but let it rest—
'Tis better not to be here express;
Let the desert claim her for his bride,
Sleeping softly upon his side.

Long I paused in the evening dim
And gazed at the headstone black and dim—
Black with the fires of many a year,
Sweeping the sandhills far and near,
The coyote's cry came thro' the shades,
And a lizard troubled the spear grass blades,
And a light gray cloud passed overhead,
Dropping a tear—for it knew the dead.

I mused and wondered the more I thought—
Who she was who lay in that lonely spot.
Was she slender and fair to view
With a soul to dare and a hand to do?
A hero's heart in her woman's breast
Beating with passion to know the West,
Yet soothing with ways that never fail
The long, wild leagues of the Overland Trail—
With a woman's vision of faith and hope
Viewing the mountain's western slope—
Till the setting sun on the western sea
Beckoned her on to its mystery?

The cactus grows on the drifting mound;
The wolf and the sandstorm scar the ground;
The wolf and the wind may wail and sweep Above the bed where she lies asleep—
Not the wind nor the wolf shall disturb the rest

—A. E. SHELDON.

RETROSPECTIVE.

Some Casual Remarks by George D. Virden of Liberty, Washington.

I can but feel that all of my pioneer friends have well earned the right to live in this, the state of Washington. Washington I am sure will never surrender, but will forge ahead till it reaches the foremost rank in our grand republic; and Kittitas county will be typical of a fourteen-inch nickel-steel gun, on board the battleship of statehood. It was in the year of 1876 that our mule team pulled our wagon into the sagebrush near where Ellensburg now stands; our wagon was loaded with myself, wife, three children, and a few of the immediate necessities of life. When starting on our trip west we had intended to go to the Sound, but now it looked as if we were going to the rag basket. Our pocketbook had for some time shown unmistakable symptoms of fatal collapse. Our trail led back nearly two thousand miles, and it was a rough one, its varying altitudes ranging from near sea-level to snow-cloud-level and, as we had left no money at the other end on which to draw, we felt that we must cast our lot with the few settlers who had straggled into the valley during the last five years. Many of them were now working on the ever present problem as to how they were to cover up their outsides and fill up their insides, and we soon found ourselves trying to solve the same problem—it seemed to be catching. Some two years later, when we were all showing symptoms of improvement in our finances, there came another problem to solve; it was this: "Shall the white man or the red man knock under?" Some of the white men, while studying on this problem, got the flummaddles of the heart so badly that they had to hit the back trail on jackrabbit time, declaring as they left, that our climate was so outrageously bad they would not live in it. But the majority of our people were Indian proof and were located here with the avowed intention of thoroughly analyzing this somewhat rebellious appearing piece of nature's handiwork, now known as Kittitas county. At first the work was hard and the pay small, and often the wolf of poverty peered in through the screen doors. But, by loading up with a tremendous charge of the fulminate of hope, though we oftentimes had but a pinch of the chloride of expectation with which to shot the charge, we feel that we have brought down the game and think the game is worth the struggle. And now my heart tells me that I must drop a tear for those who have entered their chambers of eternal sleep while bravely battling, not only for their own betterment, but in knocking away the rough places for those who have followed into this county.

A PIONEER JUSTICE COURT.

State Senator A. J. Splawn, of Yakima county, Ellensburg's pioneer merchant and a well known pioneer of eastern Washington, relates the following story of a trial in the Kittitas valley in the early seventies:

"The year 1871," he says, "developed two characters which furnished a disturbing element, that up to that time had been lacking in the valley. They were Pat Lynch and 'Windy' Johnson, both sons of Erin. The latter derived his name from the fact that his mouth seemed to be the most useful organ in his body. Innumerable quarrels soon brought on a fistic encounter, in which my big-hearted friend Tom Haley acted as referee to determine which was the better man. By way of warning Windy said to Pat, 'Are ye ready to die?' Pat answered, 'Sure not, ye blatherskite.' The battle began and for the first half hour Windy had things his own way, wiping the earth with Pat, who all this time was playing a waiting game. Windy's forced fighting soon exhausted him and he wanted to stop. But not so with Pat, who proceeded to put the finish on Windy, not stopping until Johnson called upon the referee to stop the fight.

"One day Pat mounted his gray mare, taking a shotgun across the saddle in front of him, and started for 'Robber's Roost,' the name given to my old store. When he reached that part of the trail that crossed Windy's place he was hailed and ordered to go back and not to attempt to cross. However, Pat was not in the habit of taking a circuitous route to reach his destination to please anyone, certainly not Windy, so he continued on his way. Windy then fired his rifle, the bullet taking away a part of Pat's hat rim. Pat dismounted and blazed away at Windy with his shotgun, tearing away the tail of Windy's old coat. Thereupon Windy very wisely concluded to cease hostilities and to get satisfaction through the law.

"Pat was arrested and the case came up for trial before Fred Bennett, J. P., who knew more about Ayers' Almanac than the statutes of Washington territory. Six jurors were selected and the trial went on. Pat was a foxy Irishman and wanted to make a wise move, so he asked a friend of mine if it would be about the right thing to 'trate' the jury and was told it would do no harm to his case, so he struck out for the store. There was no whiskey on hand. He asked for Hostetter's or Old Plantation bitters, but they, too, were out. The only thing in that line was Vinegar bitters, so he purchased seven bottles,—one for the Court and one for each of the jurors.

"His thoughtfulness was well received. The court as well as the jurors 'hit' the bottle quite frequently during the course of the trial. When the evidence was all in and the case went to the jury, there were only three in their places. The court and four jurors were out. For two hours they attempted to be present all at one time, but failed on account of a portion of them always being out taking in the beautiful scenery of Kittitas valley by moonlight. Finally the court and four jurymen were present, and the judge announced that there were not likely to be as many together again that night. So the jury proceeded to render a verdict which acquitted Pat. Pat afterward became a good citizen, leaving as a monument to his memory a brick block in Ellensburg, which he gave to the Catholic church upon his death."

A PIONEER STOCKMAN'S ADVENTURE.

A good illustration of the vicissitudes which were likely to attend a journey with cattle to the mining districts during the early days is furnished by the experience of Leonard L. Thorp, one of the oldest living pioneers of Yakima county, who kindly told us his story, as follows:

"On February 14, 1866, Jack Splawn and I left the Moxee settlement with 160 head of fine beef cattle, bound for the mines of British Columbia and Montana. We were both in our early twenties then. Outfitted with good saddle horses, blankets and the remainder of a pioneer cowboy's equipment, and accompanied by a friendly Indian whose name was Washington, we commenced with light hearts and buoyant spirits what was destined to be for me at least a most unfortunate trip.

"We drove east across the ridge to the Columbia, striking that river at the White Bluffs. Here we swam the cattle and horses to the farther bank and ferried our luggage over in Indian canoes, all without accident. Then we came down onto Crab creek, where our troubles commenced. We discovered that the gentle warmth of springtime had made a premature appearance, for the weather suddenly turned cold again, forcing us to go into camp. Ice froze in March to the depth of a foot. The comforts of camp life under such circumstances are not very numerous, but we endured our privations without discouragement, and late in March were again ready to proceed eastward. By about April 1st, we were on the Spokane river to which we had made our toilsome way through two feet of snow. The aspect of the intervening wilderness had been dreary indeed, and the lugubrious howling of coyotes had served only to accentuate its loneliness and desolation. But the range was simply grand and the picture of it in my mind's eye is in striking contrast with the bare and brown hillsides of today. Bunch-grass was everywhere in abundance and primeval luxuriance, the bunch-grass which in later years furnished subsistence for tens of thousands of cattle and horses.

"We crossed the Spokane river by ferry about fifty miles below the falls, swimming the horses and cattle as usual. On the farther bank we pitched camp and I remained with the herd for a few days while Jack made a trip to Colville for the purpose of looking up the prices of beef there. We were exceedingly anxious to do as well as possible with the cattle, hence gave close attention to the different markets. Jack's report being unfavorable, we determined to go elsewhere with our stock, so we drove the band on to within a dozen miles or less of the falls, where another camp was established. This was about the middle of April.

"At this time the Kootenai mines in British Columbia were very prosperous and as reports indicated that we might do well with our beef in that camp, I decided to go thither, with a part of the cattle, taking Washington along as a companion, and leaving Jack at the camp to look after the remaining stock. With sixty of our strongest steers we started, Washington and I, and in a few days, we were on the shores of Lake Pend d'Oreille in Idaho. Here we embarked aboard a little steamer for the mouth of the Pack river, 250 miles up which stream the mines were located.

"A more uninviting spot than the mouth of Pack river was when we landed there could hardly be imagined. It was late in the afternoon. The rain was descending in torrents and soon had us thoroughly drenched, but we were accustomed to facing the elements, and cared little for such slight inconveniences. The ground was marshy where we camped and covered with a thick growth of a species of wild grass unknown to us. Next morning when we went after our three horses, we found two of them dead, evidently poisoned, but strangely enough, none of the cattle were injured in the least, so far as we could see, by this noxious herb of the swamp.

"Packing up the remaining horse, we started on foot with the cattle, despite the rain which still poured down upon us with unabated severity. Indeed we did not again see the sun until we reached Joseph prairie, sixteen miles south of the mines. The effect of the continued rainfall upon the trail may be imagined. In several places there was considerable snow and as soon as the news spread up the road that we were going in with a bunch of cattle, every packer and traveler halted until we should pass. All were willing to allow us the privilege of breaking the trail.

"We paused for a few days' rest at Joseph prairie, then pushed on to the mines, where I had no difficulty in disposing of the cattle to a man named Lord at ten cents a pound on foot, a good price, to be sure, but no more than it was worth to drive the animals so far. During the whole trip I had not once removed my clothes and when I arrived in camp they were mouldy and decaying on my back.

"We remained in town a few days and then set out on our return trip to the Spokane country. I secured a horse for $65, but when only about four miles out, he was attacked with mountain fever and the result was that he had to be driven the rest of the way light. This left me again on foot, so I was compelled to get out as I had got in, namely, by trudging through mud, snow and water. Full two-thirds of the outward trip was made in a heavy rain. One afternoon about four o'clock, while plodding along with Washington, who was about as companionable as most Indians are, I was startled by hearing a voice on my left. Turning sharply, I saw a monstrous negro standing on a high log some two hundred feet away.

"What is it?" I asked.

"The negro inquired if I had seen a cattleman named Thorp in town, and if so, where he was, explaining that he and his companions were friends of the stockman and were anxious as to his safety. I replied that I had seen such a man, that he had sold his cattle and was probably on his way out. They then wished to know if I knew him and where I had last seen him. From the very first I had been suspicious of the ugly looking gang before me (the negro was accompanied by three whites, all mounted), so I told the spokesman that their friend was probably some distance in my wake. I represented myself as a disheartened and financially embarrassed prospector, disgusted with the country. Washington kept out of sight. The men finally invited me to camp with them, but I chose rather to travel as long as possible, then camped off trail without fire. Next day at noon I met a German who inquired if I had passed a small party of men with a big black horse. I referred him to the negro's party, with whom I had seen such an animal. Later I met another man, who said they had stolen a horse from him, and subsequently we learned that the gang of outlaws, for such in truth they were, had come into conflict with the Canadian officers who attempted to capture them. In the fight, the sheriff was killed, also one of the men I had met. The four desperadoes fortified themselves in a cabin and prepared to fight to the death. They were attacked in their stronghold by enraged miners who shot their cabin to pieces. Of course all were riddled with bullets, one, it is said, being hit not fewer than thirteen times.

"Upon my return from a hurried trip home to pay a balance due on the cattle, Jack and I decided to take the remainder of the stock to Blackfoot, Montana, twenty-five miles from the present city of Helena. We went up the Spokane river to the bridge kept by F. D. Schnebly, who later became a pioneer of Kittitas county, crossed there, and proceeded to the Cœur d'Alene mission. There we had the misfortune to lose two of our horses, which fell into the hands of Indian thieves. From the mission we crossed the Bitter Roots by the Mullan military road and late in July we reached Blackfoot. The town was a typical western mining camp, busy, flourishing, wide open, full of gold diggers and gamblers and desperate characters. By selling our cattle in small bands, we obtained a fair price for them.

"But our troubles were not over. Just as we were about ready to set out on our homeward journey, an event occurred which greatly disturbed and annoyed us. For safe keeping we had buried a package containing $1,750, in a dense fir thicket below camp, taking pains that no one should discover its hiding place. Our secret, however, was not secure. In some way a man known as 'Dirty Tom' obtained knowledge of the whereabouts of our treasure. This fellow had recently come to camp with a party of Oregonians, with whom also came my grandfather, and was lying around our camp at this time. Tom and the money were missed about the same time, late one October afternoon, and surmising that the two were associated, we started on the trail of the man. About dark we came to a fork in the road. Jack took one of the branches and I the other, the understanding being that we would push on to Quinn's station, forty miles and farther from our camp. I traveled until I could no longer see my way, then tied my horse, crawled into a haystack and waited for dawn. When I reached Quinn's next day, Jack was already there. So was our man. Of course he denied having anything to do with the theft and tried to enlist the sympathies of Quinn in his behalf. In this attempt he failed utterly. We took him back to camp with us, and insisted that he show us where the money was hidden, for we had already satisfied ourselves by search that it was not upon his person. At last after much persuasion he took a pick and shovel, went down to the thicket and began digging near the spot where we had buried the money. Gradually he worked up the hillside for a distance of about sixty yards, where he uncovered the stolen property. We let him go free and the next day, he repaid our clemency by swearing out warrants for our arrest, claiming that the money had not been stolen, but that we had forgotten its hiding place. Fortunately, among our friends in town was a blacksmith, who was also chairman of a vigilance committee. He came out alone to see us and satisfy himself as to the truth of the matter, and we soon convinced him that we were in the right. Soon after, notices appeared in Blackfoot, requesting one Dirty Tom to leave the country at once or meet the vigilance committee. Tom left.

"Late in October, we got started for home. At Missoula City I received a message stating that grandfather was very ill at Blackfoot and requesting that I return forthwith. I did so. For six weeks I remained by his bedside, nursing him back to health. On the 4th of December, I set out with him on our long westward journey, traveling with a new spring wagon and a good team. The Mullan road was closed by winter's snows, compelling us to make a long detour south and to cross the Rocky mountains opposite the headwaters of Snake river. At Fort Hall we sold our rig and boarded the stage to the Bear river country, where we should strike the main stage line between Salt Lake and Boise, at that time owned by Ben Holliday. There were four of us in the stage, an Englishman named Cooper, grandfather, the driver and myself. The Indians were plundering and marauding in that region during the years 1866 and 1867, so that travel was exceedingly dangerous. The second day out we found the buildings burned and saw signs of the pillaging redskins on every hand. The driver called a consultation among the passengers for the purpose of deciding what course we should pursue. By a unanimous vote we decided to push ahead and fight if necessary. I thereupon left my seat inside the coach and took a seat in the boot with the driver, where I remained day and night during the four hundred-mile trip. All this time we were untiring in our vigilance. We traveled as rapidly as possible, spending little time at the stations or places where the stations had lately been, for indeed some of them were completely wiped out by the predatory savages. As it happened, however, we fell in with no hostiles and early in January we rode into Umatilla unharmed.

"There I left grandfather, who was quite exhausted from the effects of the long, tedious day-and-night ride, and started alone toward home. It was very foolish in me to do so for I too was thoroughly exhausted and in a poor condition to endure the fatigues of the remaining journey. I followed the Columbia until I found a couple of Indians who had a canoe. The river was very high at that time and full of floating ice and slush. I told the Indians that I wanted to be ferried across. They shook their heads negatively, pointing to the wild stream, and advising me to go back to Umatilla and stay a while longer. But I persisted. I offered them all the money I had, two dollars, to put me across and at length, after considerable argument, prevailed upon them to try. 'If you want mimaluse,' said they finally, 'all right.' Soon we had launched the frail canoe, and were struggling with long poles to clear away the slush ice and force a passage. For hours we worked, our clothes thoroughly drenched with cold water. The first hundred yards of our passage were made on top of the ice, but it was no child's play to cross the open channel, as all who have tried it at that season of the year well know. About one o'clock we succeeded in gaining the Yakima side, and I started immediately on my long walk, knowing that forty miles intervened between me and the first human habitation, Colonel Henry Cock's ferry on the Yakima, where Prosser stands. There were ten inches of snow on the ground and the temperature must have been about twenty degrees below zero.

"Right across the hills I went, over what is now known as the Horse Heaven country. I walked all night in the snow, which became deeper as I advanced. During all this time I had had nothing to eat and nature was asserting her claims in a most emphatic manner. Sleepy and tired and famished, I lay down in the snow from time to time, protecting myself as best I could from the piercing cold with my one light blanket. It was impossible to build a fire. I knew that my only hope lay in keeping in motion as much as possible, so all the next day and all the succeeding night I staggered along. My feet, ears, nose and hands became frozen and it was only force of habit that kept me moving.

"Late in the afternoon of the third day out from Umatilla, I lay down in the trail, completely exhausted and ready to abandon hope. Presently I saw an object coming toward me from the north, but I was so thoroughly exhausted that I made no effort to investigate it. I simply lay in my snowy bed and contented myself with hoping that the object might prove to be a man and that he would find and rescue me.

"When the object came up I was pleased to see that it was Charlie Splawn on his way to Umatilla to secure the settlers' mail. For him to place me on his horse was the work of but a moment and mounting in front of me, he set out post haste for Butts's house on the Columbia river. This we reached about eleven o'clock that night, for indeed I had come only about twenty-two miles in the three days and nights. A warm fire and kind hearts soon made me fairly comfortable, although my frost bites gave me great pain.

"Charlie went to Umatilla as soon as practicable and there had a sled made, with which to transport me home, for my toes had been frozen beyond saving and my condition was otherwise serious. Grandfather made the trip with me also. We crossed the Yakima at Cock's ferry, which was a rough flatboat with a rope cable, placed in service some time in 1866, and came up the eastern side of the river. Father summoned Dr. Nelson, the physician and surgeon at the Yakima Indian agency at Fort Simcoe, who amputated the toes on both feet. The operation was performed without anaesthetics. For over a year I was unable to do much except eat, drink and sleep and a much longer time had elapsed before I could resume the usual activities of life."

A FATAL SHEEP STAMPEDE.

George W. McCredy, one of central Washington's well-known pioneer stockmen, is authority for the following story of a remarkable accident whereby a faithful sheep herder met his death in the foothills of Kittitas county:

In the summer of 1880 Cameron Brothers lost 1,200 head of sheep in Kittitas county by what is known among sheepmen as "piling up and smothering to death." One of the features of the accident, which made it the more distressing and served to bring out the heroism of one man, is the fact that the herder, familiarly known as "Hindoo John," with his dogs, was caught under the sheep and also smothered.

At the time it was thought that the herder had deserted his place and left the country. The falsity of this story was proven the following spring, when his body, with those of his dogs, was brought to light by some one examining the great pile of sheep bones on the steep hillside. Then he was exonerated from the charge of unfaithfulness. From all the circumstances and surrounding conditions the accident was accounted for in this way: The sheep had become frightened while grazing upon the steep mountain side and had run for safety toward a clump of bushes and small trees. Reaching there, the leaders could get no farther and were eventually crushed down by the mad rush from their rear. The frightened sheep continued to clamber on top of one another and to be trodden down until they could climb no higher, but were turned aside.

The shepherd, it is thought, was trying, with the assistance of his faithful dogs, to loosen the blockade from the lower side and thus save the lives of his charges, when herder and dogs were caught under the moving, writhing mass and crushed to death. The weather was very warm and soon decomposition had set in. Within a comparatively few hours from the time of the accident the stench arising therefrom was so great that no one could approach within several hundred feet. Nor could examination be made for several months afterward. It is said that the grease from this pile of bodies ran in a stream for a distance of half a mile into the valley.

ANISICHE BILL'S ARTIFICIAL NOSE.

"Did you ever hear the story of Wild Bill and his famous nose?" said Dr. Middleton V. Amen, of Ellensburg, to the writer last winter.

"No."

"Well, it is an interesting little tale because of its uniqueness."

"When I came to the valley in 1878," continued the doctor, "and began the practice of my profession, the Indian population outnumbered the whites. This valley was a great illahé then—a monster camping ground to which Indians from all over eastern Washington came each summer. Here they fished, hunted, raced, gambled, dug kous and otherwise occupied themselves for a long period each year. Those tribes immediately surrounding us did nearly all their trading at Ellensburg.

"Wild, or Anisiche, Bill was a member of the Okanogan tribe. He was one of the bravest and most influential among the red men until the incident occurred which I am relating. One day, in the fall of 1880, as nearly as I can recollect, Bill and several other reds, who had indulged too freely in drinking bad whisky, became involved in a quarrel on Main street, then a sage brush thoroughfare on which stood half a dozen widely separated business houses. I was standing in front of Shoudy's store.

"Suddenly I heard a terrific yell and looked up the street just in time to see a drunken redskin strike at Bill with a monster knife. An instant later the greater part of Bill's nose dropped into the dust. Still the fight went on for several minutes before Bill was overcome by the shock and forced to seek support. The Indians at once gathered around their wounded comrade and attempted to assist him. At Bill's request one Indian picked up the nose out of the dust and took it down to the creek near the store to wash it.

"Upon his return, I was called to the scene and asked to 'make um good nose again.' Though I realized the hopelessness of the case, Bill persisted so earnestly that at last I stuck the nose on with adhesive plaster, fixing it up as best I could. This simple surgery satisfied the Indians and Bill, who was feeling badly cut up over his humiliation, for you must understand that among the Indians the loss of the nose is considered the height of disgrace. Death itself was preferable in the eyes of a redskin to a noseless existence.

"The next day I went up to Bill's camp, about two miles above Canaday's mill, and dressed the unfortunate nose. The following day I found matters in bad condition. The nose was beginning to decay, throwing off a sickening stench, much to Bill's misery and to the disgust of his fellows. Still Bill hated to give up the nose and consequent loss of honorable standing in his tribe, so bore his trials with stoical patience. For two or three days longer he wore it, hoping for a turn in his fortunes.

"But the nose went from bad to worse. Finally his brother red men waited upon him with a demand that he either leave camp or take better care of his offensive wound. As Bill himself was beginning by that time to have his doubts about the efficacy of the sticking plaster method, he decided to throw away the old nose and seek a new one from me. This he did and begged me to do something for him.

"There was only one thing for me to do. I manufactured an artificial nose, preparing it so that it might be taken off or stuck on at will. You never saw a happier man than Bill when that nose was finished and put in place. As a matter of fact, while the red men did not entirely like the 'big medicine' of the white doctor, they regarded Bill with awe and a sort of jealous curiosity. However, he never regained the position of esteem in which they once held him. He gave me a pony for my services. Bill subsequently settled into peaceful pursuits in Okanogan county and the last I knew of him was regarded as a good citizen by residents of the Wenatche valley, where he lived. The artificial nose I made served him many years to my personal knowledge, and may yet be serving him, for Bill was as faithful to it as a one-legged veteran is to his cork limb."

A STORY OF THE INDIAN SCARE.

There are few pioneers of the Yakima country more widely known than Jock Morgan, at present living near Sunnyside. Nearly all who came to Yakima in an early day and most of the people now residing in the lower valley are acquainted with genial Jock. His real name is Jonathan W. Morgan, but since he crossed the Plains with his parents in 1850 he has been universally known as Jock. In 1870, when he was twenty-six years old, he was presented by Superintendent H. M. Thatcher with a unique gold and silver medal, in recognition of his being regarded as the champion stage driver between Portland and Oakland, California. This is an honor of rare value,—a prize won only by sheer merit.

However, Mr. Morgan having attained the highest honors in staging, decided to abandon that business, so June 11, 1871, he came with his family to the Yakima valley, located upon the reservation, two miles south of Toppenish, and engaged in the stock industry. The privilege of residing upon the reservation was one granted him through the friendship of Father Wilbur, the agent, because of his friendly relations with the Indians themselves. His influence among them was as good as it was powerful.

Few were better among the residents of Yakima who kept better informed regarding the movements of the Indians in 1878, when the general supposition prevailed that an uprising of the Yakimas, Klickitats and Columbia Rivers was imminent. At his vantage point in the Indian territory, Mr. Morgan heard the rumors of war fresh from the redskins, and at night watched the signal lights on the surrounding hill tops.

Tow-hout, among the oldest red men of the Toppenish, held a position in 1878 which might be described accurately as that of signalman of his tribe. He was thoroughly versed in the marvelous sign language of his race and translated with ease and rapidity the flashes of light, the puffs of smoke, the maneuvers of the lone horseman and the gestures and motions that might come from any point.

For days and even weeks in the spring of that eventful year, says Mr. Morgan, Tow-hout daily and nightly read the wireless messages that came from Idaho and Oregon. Rattlesnake peak, on the high divide north of the Sunnyside valley, and Tumwater hill, south of Prosser, were the stations of the red signal corps. Far across the Columbia, from some point in the Blue mountains, the messages flashed over river and valley and hill to Tumwater's watchman, who caught them and sent them by way of Rattlesnake peak into the northern hills of the wild Okanogan. Often would Tow-hout tell his white tillicum of battles that had been fought between the Bannocks and the soldiers, two hundred miles to the south, or of other important military movements, and in every case the Weekly Oregonian confirmed the news days afterward. Thus did the Morgans rest secure while others fretted, for the former were constantly in touch with the situation.

All through May and June the signal man of the Toppenish read the messages passing over his head; meanwhile the Morgans continued their peaceful occupations. Slowly the warriors crept toward the Columbia and gradually the excitement on the reservation increased. The horse figures on the signal hills, indicating victory, came oftener toward the last of June. Still there did not appear to be menacing danger on the Yakima.

But one noon, while the family were eating dinner, old Tow-hout suddenly glided into the room and without excitement silently beckoned his white friend to the door. Mr. Morgan arose from the table to learn that a great battle was raging on the Columbia and that the Indians were again claiming victory. The messages said that large numbers of hostiles were crossing into Washington. Tow-hout said fly for life.

The time to flee had at last arrived. Within less than an hour the Morgans and a Miss Spurgeon, who was staying with them, were, with the most valuable things they possessed, in a wagon and on their way to The Dalles. Once again Jock Morgan, the fearless stage driver, was experiencing the exhilaration of danger as he held the ribbons of a powerful four-horse team. He drove hard up the new canyon road, recently finished by Yakima and Klickitat counties, following the north prong of the Satux. The ranch was left in charge of the men.

When within a mile and a half of the summit, the Morgans turned out from the road to seek camp for the night in a sequestered spot. They intended to be on the road again by daylight and hoped to reach The Dalles by nightfall.

Soon Miss Spurgeon announced that she heard talking, then Mrs. Morgan made the same claim. The noise, whatever it was, resembled the sound made by trees when stirred by the wind, and as quite a strong breeze was blowing off the mountain, Mr. Morgan was for a long time loth to believe that anything animate was near. However, to satisfy the women, he bade them be quiet, and started up the hillside. By making a short cut he soon reached the crest of a hill forming a portion of a basin near the summit.

Cautiously making his way to a vantage point on the hill crest, he peered through the trees and down into an Indian camp. Yes, there it was right beside him; furthermore, it was undoubtedly a hostile camp. Several Indians were holding a pow-wow, over which they were getting excited and talking loudly. Mr. Morgan was able to understand fragments of their conversation—enough to send him swiftly to his family.

Hurriedly the horses were again attached to the wagon and as quietly as possible the party made its way to the road. Then, with the shades of night fast falling, and with the deeper shadow of a possible Indian massacre casting its cold gloom over them, the little company of whites raced back over the road toward home. All night the wagon slipped and rolled and jumped down the grade. To any but experienced frontier people the strain would have been unbearable, for there was danger in front and danger behind, but the man and the women were all in the habit of making the best of things.

When daylight at last came, the Morgan party had reached the ranch. Breakfast was at once eaten and again a start was made. This time Mr. Morgan decided to try to reach Fort Simcoe by going up the north side of Toppenish creek and over the old Indian trail. The trip was without exciting incident and at last the shelter of the agency buildings and the protection of the government were reached by the exhausted party. Father Wilbur was informed of the situation and steps were at once taken to meet any emergency that might arise.

In the meantime Henry Craft had left the Morgan ranch with the news conveyed by Towhout and had carried it to the whites at Yakima City and on the Ahtanum. It is believed that the alarm given by Craft was the first definite information regarding the approach of the hostiles brought to the settlers and that it was the direct occasion of the feverish excitement that prevailed in the valley about the Fourth of July. There is little doubt in Mr. Morgan's mind that the Indian band he so nearly came into contact with on Simcoe mountain was the one that murdered Lorenzo Perkins and his wife a few days later.

A ROMANCE OF PIONEER KLICKITAT.

"Having been requested to relate an adventure with the Indians in Klickitat's pioneer days, for the benefit of the readers of this history I shall tell them about a most exciting incident which occurred at Bickleton in the spring of 1880.

"The town at that time consisted of one large building used as a store and dwelling, owned and occupied by Charles N. Bickle and his assistant, Lee Weaver. They as well as myself were tenderfoot. Our knowledge of the red man had been acquired for the most part by reading blood and thunder stories of life on the frontier. We were not cowards, but at the same time considered discretion the better part of valor in dealing with the dusky savage.

"In those days, as now, it was against the law to supply an Indian with liquor, but as the law was seldom enforced against those guilty of its transgression and the profits were large, the Indians managed at times to get large quantities of intoxicants. Occasionally a score or more of them would hang around Bickleton a day or two, or as long as the whisky supply lasted, making night and day hideous with their orgies. The Perkins murder was still fresh in our minds, aggravating our discomfort.

"One Sunday two or three of us boys went up to Bickle's store. We found some half-dozen white men and boys there and forty or fifty Indians, the latter under the influence of whisky and in a quarrelsome mood. A few moments after we arrived a young lady rode up on a spotted pony which she had borrowed from her brother, dismounted and went into the living rooms back of the store. A large, fierce-looking Indian immediately went over to the pony, a gelding, and remarked in English that 'that's my spotted mare, by G——.' An Irishman became greatly amused at this and laughed outright at the expression, whereupon the Indian sprang at him, slapped him, and called him a dozen names. For a wonder the Irishman took his punishment without a word of protest, thinking that the wiser course, though some of us were disgusted with his lack of courage. The Indian then proceeded to take possession of the pony. He was about to take off the side saddle, when I told him that the pony was claimed by a man who loaned him to the lady and that he must allow her to ride home. After a little talking, the Indian consented to this arrangement.

"We then went into the store, several of us whites and a few Indians. Among us was a lad who had a small cartridge in one hand. For some reason the Indian who was causing the trouble slapped the boy. That was too much for me and I promptly knocked him down. Another Indian jumped on my back, and together they would probably have done me up had not a friend come to the rescue. He was a powerful blacksmith, William Twitchell by name, who had just entered the room in time to see the fracas. Marching up to us he seized one Indian by the waist band and pitched him out into the road. Then I succeeded in throwing the other and kicking him out the door. The room having been cleared of Indians, Bickle and Weaver locked the doors and barricaded them with kegs of nails, of which they happened to have about fifty on hand.

"Then commenced a scene that was true enough to the graphic descriptions I had read of border life. Imagine fifty Indians, nude to the breech cloth, dancing, shouting, yelling, shooting firearms and brandishing knives. It was enough to strike terror to the hearts of veterans, let alone a squad of inexperienced boys and young men. I have always thought that we would have been killed had not help arrived at an opportune moment. The Indians were well armed with the exception of one who had picked up a ploughshare on the porch. But just in the nick of time, as we thought, a posse of mounted police from the reservation rode up on the double-quick. As soon as the drunken Indians saw them coming they ran for their ponies and, by separating and making toward the timber, all but a dozen made their escape. Capturing the unfortunate ones, the Indian police tied them to ponies and rode away with them at high speed toward the reservation. We learned afterward that Father Wilbur, the agent, had sent the police to arrest that particular band for drunkenness. To this day I believe that we owed our lives to the opportune arrival of the police. I had the only gun in the crowd, a Smith & Wesson 32-calibre revolver.

"After the Indians had departed I escorted the young lady home, and during that ride there commenced a friendship that rapidly developed into a warmer sentiment. She became my wife and lived happily with me for twenty years, but she is now in the unknown beyond."

A CHRISTMAS TALE.

The following touching story of a pioneer Klickitat Christmas appeared in the Yakima Herald in its issue of December 23, 1902. The author, whose name is unknown, says in introducing his tale: "It is written without an attempt at garnishment. Just a plain little story of an incident that actually took place, according to the statements of the old settlers, when our county was young and before the Northern Pacific was thought of or North Yakima founded."

"In one of the little valleys of Klickitat," runs the story, "a sturdy American pioneer had made his home. There, with his wife and little ones, he had settled and by hard work, square dealing with all and a wise selection of a homestead, became fairly successful. In the house and dairy his efforts were well supplemented by the diligence and economy of a faithful, energetic wife. The neighboring squatters, few and far between, respected him. Even the Indians, and there were quite a number living in the vicinity and on the ranch, loved him for his justice, honesty and many acts of kindness toward them. His barns and granary were full; the haystacks studded the fields; his cattle and horses were fat; there was an ample supply of provision and provender for man and beast; everything, in fact, had been made ready for the snows and storms of winter.

"The sleighing was good, so two days before Christmas he started over the hills for the county seat, some forty miles away, to purchase a few of the always eagerly-anticipated remembrances of Santa Claus for the children, and with a hidden, cherished purpose to surprise, in some substantial manner, the dear wife on his return with a like token of love and affection.

"The next day was a typical winter day; the wind souged mournfully through the trees along the creek; the air was damp, chilly and creepy; the dark gray clouds rolled low down on the hills about the valley, hiding their tops from view; the chickens hopped daintily out through the snow and then scurried back to their warm coop; the cattle filed off to the stream to drink and at once returned in solemn procession to the sheds; the horses bunched together in the brush under the cottonwoods; the old watch dog hesitatingly left his warm corner by the kitchen fire, walked gingerly down the snow path, sniffed the air, then turned back and scratched at the house door for admission. Everything was dark, gloomy, forbidding and presaged a coming storm. Even the children were affected and became unusually troublesome and fretful.

"Shortly after noon the wind ceased and then the snow storm began. At first little, scattering, dry flakes, growing larger and larger, coming faster and faster until it seemed as if there were one white sheet extending down from the clouds above to cover everything below in its white, cold mantle. The storm was well on when the 'Tyc' of the Indians opened the door and asked, 'Boston man no come?' On being told he had not, the red man closed the door and hurriedly walked off. This alarmed the wife and mother. On going to the window she could faintly discern through the falling snow a group of Indians standing by the ranch gate. A feeling of coming calamity oppressed her. She felt lonely and desolate. To occupy her mind, she commenced putting her children to bed (it becomes dark early in the day in these high latitudes), and then spread the table, prepared supper for her husband and waited. The fire had almost died away; she replenished it; opened the door to look out, when a great bank of snow fell into the room. The storm had nearly ceased, but everything looked dark, cold, lonely and cheerless. She shuddered, closed the door and, weeping, went to her bedside, knelt down and sobbed out an earnest prayer to the Omnipotent to spare the father of her babies.

"For hours before, away up on the plateau that divides the valley from the one in which the town is situated, a man and team had been persistently battling with the storm. The horses, wearied by their all-day wallow through the snow, were completely fagged. First one would slip off the beaten track into the deep snow and fall, and then the other. Sometimes both were down, and then the driver would get out, breast the snow, stamp it down about the horses, get them on their feet, and with words of encouragement induce them to make another effort. Night finally came. The snow still continued falling in great thick flakes. Soon the sleigh was half full. One horse became prostrate and refused to rise. The other trembled with cold, weariness and fear. The poor driver, wet by the snow, half frozen and hungry, was as exhausted as his team. He waited out ahead of the horses, uncertain if he should desert them and make one supreme effort to reach the valley alone or return to the sleigh and lie down to the alluring but deadly sleep.

"The standing horse snorted. The man looked up and there, away down in the direction he must go, were black objects approaching, struggling through the snow. Were they wolves? Surely they must be; no human being would be out such a night and in such a storm. Hurriedly he turned about for the rifle in the sleigh, but the quick motion was too much for his exhausted strength and he tripped, fell, and rolled over into the snow drift, unconscious.

"The dark objects moved slowly but steadily up toward the team. They could not be wolves or the standing horse would scream with fear and endeavor to kick loose from his prostrate mate and escape. He seemed instead to recognize them. He whinnied. They came closer and surged up around the deserted sleigh. The objects were the Indians from the valley, searching for and determined to find and rescue their benefactor and friend. They picked him up, shook him, rubbed his limbs with snow, brought him back up to consciousness and, bundling him up warmly and safely in their robes, placed him in the sleigh.

"Their coming seemed to reinvigorate the horses; they tramped the snow down before them, got the animals on their feet and then quickly led them down the hill to home and safety.

"Scarcely had the good woman breathed out her fervent prayer for help and protection for those near and dear to her when a stamping and tramping of feet were heard. The dog jumped up, barked quick, joyous and sharp; the door flew open and her husband staggered in, covered with ice and snow, followed by a happy group of smiling Indians bearing his gifts in their hands.

"There were joy and gratitude in that household on Christmas Day, and we may be sure that the faithful Indians in their warm tepees were not forgotten or unrewarded."

YAKIMA'S FIRST CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION.

"The first special Christmas celebration in the Yakima valley that I can remember," says Mrs. Martha (John P.) Beck, "took place the year of our arrival, 1869. The few of us that were living in the isolated region at that time were invited to spend Christmas eve at the home of Columbus Goodwin, near the site of Yakima City. The Goodwins, the doctor, his brothers, and a large family of boys and girls, came in 1865; the mother, Priscilla Goodwin, had died December 18th, of that year, her death being the first in the settlement.

"Columbus, or as he was generally called 'Lum,' Goodwin had a fine two-story log cabin on his ranch. The spacious kitchen served also as a dining room, and there we women loaded down a long L shaped table with all the good things we were able to cook with the limited supplies at our command. The luxuries were few. Everybody dressed as well as possible, which was not very fastidiously compared with the present standard, but we were not thinking as much of our appearance as of having a jolly time.

"After the children had been gladdened by numerous gifts brought principally by the bachelors of the community, they were given a place by themselves, and the customary dance began.

One of the fiddlers was Lum Goodwin; the other's name has escaped my mind. At midnight the crowd sat down to our crude banquet, evidently the climax of the celebration, judging from the avidity and apparent satisfaction with which the dancers cleared the table of its supplies.

"Then came some impromptu speeches by our local orators. Our toastmaster was a lawyer named Randolph, the pioneer attorney of Yakima. He was a witty speaker and withal a good one. On this particular occasion he fairly outdid himself, having braced for the event by a frequent resort to liquid inspiration. Lawyer Randolph's Christmas speech will never be forgotten by those who heard and saw him that night. For years afterward a reference to it was enough to put the bluest kind of a crowd into circus-day humor. He left us in 1870.

"More dancing and merrymaking followed the dinner and finally brought our Christmas affair to a close. It was one of those happy events that marked a bright spot in our peaceful existence."

INDIAN SCARES IN EASTERN KLICKITAT.

"The pioneers of Klickitat, who lived east of Rock creek," says Samuel P. Flower, "did not always dwell in sweet peace and perfect security in those early years. When I came in 1878 there were not more than two or three dozen whites in that rough area bounded by Rock creek, the Columbia and the Yakima valley. We were widely scattered over the country, most of us raising horses and cattle. Owing to the close proximity of the reservation on our north and west we were pestered a great deal by the Indians who roamed at will over our range. For several years in the later seventies and early eighties they continually stirred matters up in one way and another, usually by petty acts, but nevertheless serious enough to keep our nerves tense.

"Though they did not attempt any disturbance at the time of the general scare in 1878, occasionally we would see bands of them scurrying around the country looking for trouble, scaring settlers and otherwise doing mischief. This they kept up three or four years, much to our dissatisfaction. A typical instance of their little 'joking' occurred in November, 1879, which I well remember. At that time 'Old Looney,' as he was called, led the redskins in our region. He was a cripple, club-footed, a man perhaps fifty years of age, and a sub-chief. Fortunately, however, Looney was a good friend of the whites and kept his young bucks well in hand. It must also be understood that in 1879 all the Indians in this country were pretty thoroughly excited over the failure of the Bannock and Piute outbreak in Idaho and Oregon and the desperate efforts being made in Yakima county to punish the murderers of the Perkins family. So it was but natural that our people should be easily excited by redskin maneuvers.

"One afternoon, late in November, a neighbor of mine whose name I have forgotten, came over from Goldendale with a load of supplies. Just as he was crossing Wood gulch, four or five miles south of Cleveland, and at the bottom of the canyon, one of his horses balked. He tried every means at his command without being able to make the animal budge. This was aggravation enough with night rapidly coming on and a long road ahead of him, but to make matters worse up came a yelling, racing band of Indians. 'Old Looney' was in the lead. Behind him were about thirty young men painted and dressed in war toggery and well equipped with weapons.

"On they came right up to my friend, apparently bent on annihilating him. This movement seemed only to strengthen the determination of the balky horse to stand pat, notwithstanding the fact that most of the load of flour had been taken out of the wagon as an inducement for him to move on. Riding up, the redskins circled the thoroughly frightened settler, yelling like demons and flourishing their guns and knives in his face. Some of the Indians were beginning to give vent to their hatred of the white race by prodding the sole representative paleface present, when suddenly 'Old Looney' made himself heard. At a wave of his hand, the apparently enraged Indians underwent a complete transformation. Joyous grunts and laughing broke upon the air and a number of the horsemen jumped to the ground. In an instant they had the wagon in motion again loaded with the flour and the dumfounded driver back to his place on the load. The balky horse was evidently satisfied with his share in the joke on his master, for he gave no more trouble that day. Wagon, horses and man went one way; 'Old Looney' and his band of half-earnest, half-joking bucks went the other, and the incident terminated happily."

"But," continued Mr. Flower, "a far more serious and far-reaching scare than that one had a beginning equally trifling some two years later. I think it took place in the spring of 1881; anyhow, it was the spring that the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company began running its trains up the Columbia river.

"About 200 Columbia river Indians, under Chief Pascopal, were at that time encamped at the mouth of Alder creek, a favorite rendezvous with them. They had gathered quietly during a period of several days without particularly advertising the fact.

"I was then in partnership with Charles N. Bickle, conducting a general store at Bickleton, and had been down to Portland buying goods.

On our way up the river, at Arlington, rumors of an Indian outbreak reached us. Hundreds of warriors had massed on the river opposite Willow creek, ran the report, and were about to sweep the river settlements. Settlers were fleeing to common centers of refuge and the land was about to be stained with blood. Intense excitement prevailed and the scenes of '78 were being re-enacted. At Arlington, also, I was handed a box of cartridges to take to William A. McCredy, who at that time lived in Klickitat county, near the site of the supposed hostile camp.

"However, the train pulled out after a while, and soon we reached Willow station. There the air was quivering with war rumors. At the store, near the mouth of the creek, a rude fortification had been thrown up and about a hundred and fifty residents of the Willow creek region had assembled in the utmost haste. They were racing in from the interior when I arrived.

"About nine o'clock a special engine brought a major and Lieutenant Wainwright from Fort Walla Walla to investigate the trouble. Being thoroughly acquainted with the country and the Indians and able to speak their language, I consented to accompany them over the river. We immediately crossed and proceeded to the home of Joseph Jones at the mouth of Pine creek, where we spent the night. McCredy and his family were staying there also until the excitement should have passed.

"The next morning we were up bright and early and seeking the Indian camp. We saw moving bunches of horses several miles away, but for a long time were unable to find any Indians, though near Alder creek we met two squaws. I at once opened a conversation with them, but could obtain little information. A bitterly cold rain began falling, which added to our desire to quickly terminate our mission. Finally the squaws brought up old Willy, a well-known Klickitat, and to him I explained that we wished to talk to the Indians; that we had heard rumors of trouble; that the great white chief had sent two messengers to find out the cause of the troubles and to remedy the wrongs done the Indians, if any there had been. Slipping five dollars into his hand, I bade him go to his brethren with our message and request a pow-wow. Old Willy disappeared over the hill and we patiently awaited his return.

"It was not long before we witnessed a remarkable demonstration of the Indians' well-known ability to play hide and seek, for they commenced bobbing up around us with startling rapidity. Gradually their number increased until I thought that the whole tribe had left the reservation. At last the stragglers became fewer and fewer and it was apparent that they had shown at least all the force they intended, nor were they in a friendly mood nor dressed for peace. They were plainly angry and ready to receive us, if necessary, with powder and ball.

"Through an intelligent squaw, Eliza, I explained our mission to their camp and asked for a statement of their case. Then it was that we learned that white settlers and stockmen, with more meddlesomeness than discretion, had informed the Indians that the government had issued an order forbidding them to leave the reservation any more; that, therefore, they must remain at home. Without pausing to make specific inquiries, and probably in no humor anyhow to do so, the hotheads had organized a revolt. They had gathered at least 200 warriors, squaws and children, equipped themselves for traveling and fighting, and had determined to resist the new order of affairs. Naturally they chose the broken region around the mouth of Alder creek as the place where they would meet the soldiers.

"On behalf of the government, the army officers assured the Indians that such an order had not been issued, and pledged the government's aid in support of the rights of the red men should the whites attempt to coerce them. This talk seemed to satisfy the Indians that a serious mistake had been made, as Chief Pascopal and his men promised to cast off their war toggery and lay aside their arms.

"Our mission ended, we returned to the river, where I left the officers, and proceeded on my way, having delivered the cartridges. It is almost needless to remark that the panic stricken whites at the Willows returned to their abandoned farms as soon as informed of the true situation. So quickly did it all happen that practically none of the settlers on upper Pine, Alder and Wood creeks heard of the affair until long after the excitement had died out."

WHEN ELLENSBURG WAS YOUNG.

Anisiche, or Wild, Bill, of the Okanogan tribe, who attained widespread notoriety because of his artificial nose, was involved in another exciting adventure in 1879 or 1880. In those days the Indians were daily visitors to the town of Ellensburg, coming in from their camps in the valley or on the surrounding hills and mountains to sell ponies, buy supplies and many of them, if possible, to lay in a goodly store of whisky. It was no uncommon sight to see scores of Indians at one time in the village. Sober, they were not especially to be feared, but when they were drinking, the safest place to be was in a building securely protected. A man started a saloon at Peshastin in the later seventies, but as it did not pay in that locality, he removed the nefarious business to Ellensburg, thereby greatly adding to the troubles of the few settlers.

On this occasion quite a number of Indians came to Ellensburg and obtained liquor. The result was that they became exceedingly quarrelsome. The Indians gathered near the creek. George Morgan, a rough cowboy, somehow had a dispute with one of the Indians. He was, however, walking away peaceably when Bill and another Indian of fully as desperate a character, began a serious quarrel. Finally Bill started after Indian Bob with a knife. The latter slipped past Morgan, who, looking back, saw Bill coming toward him with a raised knife and supposed that he was to be the victim. Morgan quickly drew his gun and fired. The ball passed through Bill's mouth, knocking out a tooth and coming out through the cheek.

The pistol shot brought a dozen other redskins and in a trice Bill and his friends closed in on Morgan, flourishing knives and pistols. No doubt they would have killed him had he not succeeded in reaching Dr. M. V. Amen's office, at the corner of Main and Fifth streets, where he crawled under a bed. The enraged redskins followed him to the door, but would go no farther, as Dr. Amen stood guard in the doorway, and the Indians have a superstitious dread of a doctor. Some of them ran around to the rear of the office, supposing that, of course, Morgan would go through the building, but in this they were mistaken, as there was only one entrance. For a long time they blustered and swore and tried every strategy to get the doctor away from his post, but to no avail.

After dark Dr. Amen provided Morgan with horse and supplies and the frightened cowboy made his escape from the country.

In the meantime the fight became general on the outside between the drunken Indians and the whites. Fortunately no one was killed, though quite a number of shots were exchanged. At last Wild Bill mounted his horse and attempted to escape, riding through the sagebrush, and shooting at and defying the officers who were after him. William Prasbury and Jacob Becker were constables at that time. When Bill reached a point opposite the site of the courthouse, Becker fired at him, bringing the Indian's horse to the ground. However, Bill's companions gave him the needed assistance and he mounted another horse. By this time some of the citizens were mounted, and after a hard chase they captured the redskins above Canaday's brick mill.

They were brought back to town and lodged in the jail, which consisted of a half filled charcoal bin at the corner of Becker's blacksmith shop. A citizen—a noted character in those days—was employed to guard them. The Indians were soon in a drunken stupor. Some time during the night, Flood, the guard, took a pick and went into the jail. There he tried to kill the Indians to keep them from testifying against the parties who had given them the liquor, but, luckily, he failed in his diabolical purpose, though he did drive the pick point through the cheeks of some. The outcry brought help to the Indians. Subsequently Flood left the country, so strong was the feeling against him. Dr. Amen patched up the injured Indians, two of whom, Indian Bob and Wild Bill, were living two or three years ago on the Wenatche.

RECOLLECTIONS OF CHIEF MOSES.

Senator A. J. Splawn, one of the Yakima country's earliest and most widely known pioneers, in the following historical sketch, gives us a vivid picture of eastern Washington's famous Indian chieftain and incidentally of other well known early pioneers of this region. From the article also one may gain an excellent idea of the pioneer stockman's life in those years. Senator Splawn contributed this article to the Yakima Herald of September 30, 1902, and it is used by his permission:

I saw Chief Moses for the first time at Wenatche, September 1, 1861, where the Great Northern railway station now stands. I was in the employ of Major John Thorp driving a band of beef cattle from the Yakima valley to Caribou mines, British Columbia. As we were passing this spot on the opposite side of the Columbia river we saw an Indian village. Our appearance created considerable excitement among the lodges. Finally, out there rode a solitary horseman, riding towards the river. Riding in, he swam to the opposite shore, where we were watching his daring feat. Coming up the river bank to where I stood, he asked to whom these cattle belonged. On being told, he rode over to where Major Thorp was waiting on his horse. As he rode away I asked him his name. He replied, Suc-co-tal-sko-sum (Half Sun), but known to white men as Chief Moses. I had heard of this great chief before. He and the Major conversed for some time. As I watched them that day, the impression made on my mind—then a boy of sixteen—will never be forgotten.

Major Thorpe was an Oregon pioneer, who crossed the Plains in 1844; a magnificent specimen of manhood, standing over six feet tall, with the undaunted eye that marks the fearless soldier; he truly knew no fear, and Moses was tall and commanding, with a massive frame and a large head set on broad shoulders. His eagle eye ever on the alert, he sat on that blue horse like a centaur. He was then at the age of about thirty-five, the finest looking Indian I have ever met.

After finishing his parley, Moses rode back as he came, and we moved the cattle on, crossed Wenatche river, and camped near where now stands the county bridge. The place at present is owned by M. Horen.

Our horses and cattle were on fine grass, and, supper over, we retired for the night, but the mosquitoes were so numerous we could not rest, so I got up and went to the hill, a short distance off, and found they were not so bad; returned and told the Major, so we picked up our bed and started for the hill, followed by Joe Evans, the white man, Paul, the half breed, John and Kin-ne-ho, the Indians, with Eliza, the squaw. This constituted our force. Ere long all were asleep, when the sound of horses' feet awakened us, and soon the hill was covered with Indians. Loud voices arose from that band of warriors. Presently there dismounted an aged Indian, who spoke in low, earnest tones as if pleading; only a few murmurs of assent could be heard. Suddenly, out in plain view, rode an Indian, all feathered and painted, on a milk white horse; he commenced a loud harangue. Soon echoing whoops from all sides proved he was striking a responsive chord. Just then we heard horses fording the Wenatche river not far distant, and soon there came in view two horsemen riding rapidly by us to where the Indians were. One jumped from his horse, and throwing his blanket on the ground in front of him, with his hands he waved back that body of Indians, and soon the hill was cleared. Then I saw it was Chief Moses. He had come at an opportune time.

A few years later I learned from Nan-nun-kin, an Enteat Indian, that he tried to persuade the Indians not to molest us, but failing, he swam the Columbia river at Enteat, and rode to Moses' camp and informed him of what was about to occur.

In 1864 I again met Moses near Rock Island, below Wenatche. Two Chinamen coming from The Dalles, Oregon, had hired me to drive two beef cows they had purchased from Thorp, in the Yakima valley, and taking them horseback to the Chinese mining camp, where now the Great Northern railroad bridge crosses the Columbia river below Wenatche. Not far from Rock Island we saw two Indians galloping down the trail in front of us. The Chinamen were a little in advance of me when they met. One of the Indians began beating my passengers over the head with his whip handle, which was an elk horn; the other Indian came straight for me. He was a powerful fellow. Catching hold of my horse's bridle, he threw the animal on his haunches. In the meantime I slid off the horse and pulled out my revolver, intending to shoot, but he sang out: "Wake pook, nika Tye Moses" (Don't shoot, I am Chief Moses). He said he wanted some fun, and thought he would scare me to see if I was brave, and said: "Mika skookum tum tum" (You are brave). I requested him to make the Indian cease abusing the Chinamen. This he did, and then rode away. Gathering up my passengers I found, after checking up damages, nothing more serious than a few gashes on their faces and heads, no bones broken, and scalps still on. We soon reached the mining camp, and when those people looked upon their mutilated countrymen, the sounds were worse than a flock of geese. They expressed their gratitude to me for saving their lives by giving me an extra ounce of gold. I met Suc-co-tal-sko-sum many times afterward. In the earlier days he was more generally known as Qetal-e-can. He was a lover of sport, especially horse racing. We have often raced together when there was not a white man in many miles. The cheers went up just the same when I won as they did when I lost.

In June, 1869, while hunting lost cattle, I found Moses encamped at Rocky Ford, on Crab creek, which is now the home of T. S. Blyth, the cattle king of Washington. The Indians were having their regular spring festivities. At Moses' lodge there was a ten-gallon keg of whisky with the head knocked out and a tin cup hanging on the side as a sign for everyone to help himself. This did not indicate a health resort for a white man, but Moses was not drinking, so I concluded to stop and cook dinner, and so informed him. He pointed to a place where I could get down to the creek for water and find some grass for my horse, so I unpacked and cooked my dinner. As I finished my meal I saw a large body of Indians coming down the trail from Wilson creek to the eastward. All was excitement in Moses' camp. Men flew to arms. The new arrivals continued their course until only Crab creek separated them from Moses' warriors. I began hastily packing up to move out from between two fires. Soon Moses appeared and inquired why they came to his camp in such a threatening manner. Their reply was, they came to kill a medicine man of their own tribe who was then in the lodge of Moses, and unless he was given up he would be taken by force. Moses answered that the man had come to him seeking protection. It had been granted, and the word of a great chief once given was final; therefore depart, or he would order his men to fire on them; that when the medicine man saw fit to leave his lodge of his own accord he would no longer be responsible; they could do then as they wished. They departed in the direction whence they came.

Evening was drawing near, so I went to Moses' lodge and told him I would sleep there that night, but while we were talking he picked up the fatal tin cup filled to the brim with fire water, and swallowed its contents. My horses being saddled and packed, like the Arab, I quietly stole away. The Indians were too busy drinking to miss me for some time. I went down a few miles, and hid away for the night among the tules beside Moses lake, and could hear the Indians hunting for me during the night. Feeling that the danger from the Indians I had just left was only for the time they were intoxicated, at daylight I struck the trail on the west side of the lake and continued my way toward White Bluffs on the Columbia river. I had traveled but a short distance when, looking back, I saw the Indians coming at a gallop. Overtaking me Moses asked why I had left so abruptly the evening before. My reply was, that when I saw Chief Moses drinking like the common herd I considered it time to leave. He asked me to say nothing about the whisky for fear the soldiers would come after him.

During the Nez Perces war Chief Joseph's emissaries were continually going to and fro between the hostile camp and that of Chief Moses, trying to induce him to go on the war path, which he absolutely refused to do, as I afterward learned to my own satisfaction.

At that time, in company with E. D. Phelps and W. I. Wadleigh, we had purchased several thousand cattle on the White Bluffs and Crab Creek ranges, covering the territory from Pasco to Moses lake, and as far up the Columbia river as Moses coulee. Indians from all parts began to move towards Moses' encampment; those around Snake river points passed through our range and committed depredations such as burning our houses and corrals, driving off the saddle horses and killing cattle. Everything indicated an Indian uprising. People in many parts of the country in isolated settlements moved to more thickly-populated places for safety. This condition remained unchanged for about thirty days. People were fearful to relax their vigilance, not knowing at what hour the hostiles would be upon them. It was well known that a large body of Indians had gathered around Moses. We had heard that their lodges extended for many miles up and down the Columbia above and below Wenatche. Our cattle were running on the range adjacent to this body of Indians, and it boded no good to us in a financial way. At this time I was on a visit to the Kittitas valley. I found most of the settlers were gathered on Nanum creek, and had thrown up earth breastworks for defense, understanding in the excitement that existed the possible danger of a solitary Indian, who by chance might happen along that way, and be fired upon. That night I stayed in the fort and heard the instructions given to the guard, a boy of about 16, that if he saw an Indian to shoot him. This convinced me that my fears were well founded. A shot like that would have brought 2,000 Indians on them in ten hours.

Mr. Phelps, with whom I was associated, happened to be there also, and we knew that something had to be done at once. We concluded to go over to Wenatche and talk with Moses and learn if possible of his intentions. When we declared our purpose many begged us not to go. One man had only a few days before been to a tall mountain from which he could see the countless lodges along the Columbia for many miles. He said we would never return. But I knew Moses well, and from my many years' acquaintance with him felt that he was too much of a diplomat to engage in a war with the whites when he knew there would be no possible chance to win. We left the fort and at two o'clock that afternoon were on the Columbia river, six miles below the mouth of the Wenatche. Indian lodges were strung out on the opposite or north side of the river, as far up as we could see. The plains were covered with horses grazing, kept from wandering off by an occasional rider.

I remarked to Mr. Phelps that we were hunting Indians, and from the outlook we had succeeded beyond our fondest hopes.

From the high range of hills a few miles north of the river, we saw dust rising and streaming behind like the smoke from a locomotive. The objects creating this disturbance were coming towards the river, and as we dismounted to watch, they soon came near enough to the river on the opposite side for us to make out a body of sixteen warriors, their gun barrels flashing in the sunshine and making an interesting sight. They came down to the river to water their horses and espied us; two canoes near by were hastily manned and most of the party embarked. As the canoes neared the shore I saw, in the bow of the first, Chief Moses.

As he stepped on shore we met him. He looked searchingly at us for a few moments and then asked us why we came. I told him that the people in Kittitas and Yakima valleys had learned that he intended to make war on the whites and many had left their homes and moved into fortresses; the conditions were such that some at either of the whites or Indians would cause war, and, having known him for many years, I felt it was not his desire to bring on a war with all the bad results which must necessarily follow, so we had come to see him and talk over the situation, without fear of being killed by any of his men. He told us to go up to Frank Freer's store at the mouth of the Wenatche, and we would find Freer and Sam Miller there; we could remain over night and on the following morning he, with some other smaller chiefs, would come and have a big talk. We rode on up and found the Freer brothers and Sam Miller at their store, feeling perfectly safe.

The few miles we traveled—between the place we left Moses and the store—we counted 100 lodges, and were told that above, In-no-mo-sech-a, chief of the Chelans, was encamped with 100 lodges, and still on up the river a short distance were the Okanogans and San Poils, numbering 150 lodges. Moses' camp of 200 lodges was at the present site of Waterville. Each of these lodges would turn out about six warriors, enough to have swept our valley. Moses was on hand promptly the next morning with the following chiefs: Smo-hal-la, of the Priest River or Push-Wa-na-pum, In-no-mo-sech-a, of the Chelans; besides some smaller lights. On the flat in front of the store were many Indians. I was told that among those present were five Nez Perces, of Chief Joseph's bands, which were at that time retreating up the Clear-water in Idaho, followed by Gen. O. O. Howard, whom the Indians called Day-After-Tomorrow. Moses always received news from the seat of war earlier than we did. Their line of swift-riding couriers would have been a credit to any army.

Moses spoke first, saying that he had no intention of joining his cousin, Chief Joseph, in waging war on the whites, which could only end with the killing of many on both sides and the humiliation of himself and his people, and having recognized the danger of small parties or individual Indians committing outrages upon the whites, he had at the beginning of hostilities sent word for all the Indians to come to him at once. Some Indians had thought the order meant war, and consequently on their way to join him had done as he feared. After he had all the Indians gathered around him he continually guarded them, not allowing any to leave. Every day he went around the circle that enclosed the different encampments to see that no raiding parties had gone out during the night. This had been his mission when we met him the day before. He told us to return and tell our people that Moses was their friend who did not intend to go to war, and who would hold the Indians where they were for a short time, until he was perfectly satisfied that all danger was past.

Having been on the ground at the time and understanding the conditions as they were, I believe that to the energy and foresight of Moses, coupled with his good control of the Indians, must the credit be given for averting an Indian war at that time.

We returned to Kittitas valley and found our friends still holding the fort. After telling them of what we had seen and heard, with our full belief that all danger was passed, they returned to their homes. About three weeks afterwards Moses allowed the Indians to return to their different homes. Our horses were brought back to the range from which they were stolen, as Moses had promised us at Wenatche. Thus ended what for a time looked like a general outbreak of hostilities.

In summing up Chief Moses as I knew him, which covered a period of thirty-five years, from 1861 to 1896, my conclusions are that he was more of a diplomat than a warrior. Reckless in morals, the renegades of the different tribes gathered around him. His noted fondness for the running horse often forced him to pay long prices for swift animals which it was his ambition to possess. The Indian love for liquor was his greatest fault, but he never lost that proud bearing to which his inheritance entitled him. In point of intelligence he was the equal of any Indian in history. He might well be titled the "Bismarck" of the Indian tribes of the Northwest.

"SHOT MULES AT THEM."

Thomas Jenkins has long been a resident of Klickitat county and the Northwest, and can tell many interesting stories of pioneer life. He came across the Plains in 1844, and therefore is among the earliest of the Oregon pioneers. Mr. Jenkins has a clear memory of incidents that happened during the Cayuse and Rogue River wars. His oldest brother, Richard, was a volunteer in the Cayuse war and from him he has gathered a number of amusing stories about the Indians' idea of artillery, of which they obtained their first knowledge in that war.

In one instance the troops ran short of ammunition for their cannon and made use of brickbats, stones or anything that came to hand. This curious ammunition they rammed into the cannon and shot at the hostile savages. It is an Indian custom to carry a rifle with the stock behind, grasping the muzzle in his hand. When the cannon was discharged, one of the brickbats took the breech of an Indian's gun and broke it short off. The Indian was not accustomed to the cannon's roar and naturally thought it must be thunder. His conclusion was that the god of the white man had interposed against them and had sent a thunderbolt to destroy his gun, thus rendering him harmless to the enemy. He immediately went to the camp of the troops and gave himself up. He was not afraid to fight against men, but if God was arrayed against him he would surrender.

In another instance the volunteers had taken the small howitzers from their carriages and strapped them firmly on the backs of mules, to enable the animals to carry the guns into places otherwise inaccessible. It was found that after the mules became accustomed to the firing they gave little attention to the report of those small cannon and that the guns could be shot with a reasonable degree of accuracy from their backs. When the soldiers overtook the Indians and brought these pieces into action, the red men were very much horror stricken and many of them immediately surrendered. It seemed to them that the resources of the white men in battle were unlimited when they could shoot even the mules at their enemies.

AN ODD DOCUMENT.

The following document is a duplicate of similar agreements signed by the citizens of central Washington in 1878, at the time of the great Indian scare in this region, and is self-explanatory. It may be stated in passing that few if any of these guns were ever returned and that many of them to this day repose peacefully in Kittitas and Yakima and Klickitat homes, souvenirs of an eventful period in local history.

"I, the undersigned, a citizen of Yakima county, and Territory of Washington, do hereby acknowledge the receipt of one breech-loading Springfield needle-gun, with fifty rounds of cartridges, from the county commissioners of said county, for the protection of the people and property of Yakima county. Said gun and cartridges to be returned in good order, or accounted for, to said board of commissioners at Yakima City, at such time as the same is demanded.

"And in case of a failure to return said gun and cartridges in good order or to account for same as above provided, then and in that case, I hold myself and my heirs, executors and assigns severally bound unto Yakima county for the payment of the sum of fifty dollars U. S. gold coin for such failure.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 8th day of August, 1878.

A PIONEER HEROINE.

Thomas Jenkins, who settled in the Klickitat valley in 1859, and who has been a resident of the Northwest since 1844, tells a thrilling incident of his first year in Oregon. A couple of Indians, friendly Klickitats, came to his homestead and left a half dozen sacks of hazel nuts and camas for safe storage. It was not long after until several Indians of a hostile tribe came, determined to steal them. Thomas and his brother were small and their father was away, so the Indians were certain they would find no difficulty in frightening Mrs. Jenkins into giving up the nuts. There were two of them, a young, active boy of about twenty years and an old man, who had in himself magnified all the hideousness of the most repulsive Indian features, the nearest to representing the attributes of Satan in human form ever viewed by man.

The Indians were laboring under a false impression when they thought to frighten Mrs. Jenkins. She had in the house for purposes of defense two old army pistols, one loaded and the other empty. The loaded one she concealed beneath the pillow of a bed in the room, the other she held in her hand. When the Indians came, the boys, six or seven years old, took to the corner beneath the bed, but Mrs. Jenkins stood her ground bravely. The old Indian with the ugly features drew a long case knife and brandished it menacingly as if he would kill her, but the woman backed him out of the house with the cocked, empty pistol. Three times the Indian came back with the ugly weapon in his hand and as many times was driven away. The young savage had meanwhile climbed up to the loft where the nuts were stored and was lowering them to the floor below. Mrs. Jenkins turned the empty revolver upon him and he, thoroughly frightened, refused to come down until she had put away the pistol. No sooner did he get without the door than he ran like a frightened deer. The old Indian cursed Mrs. Jenkins and aimed all manner of insulting epithets at her, but dared not come back lest she should shoot.

In a day or so the friendly Klickitats returned for their stores and were much pleased when they heard how Mrs. Jenkins had defended them. "Skookum white squaw! Skookum white squaw!" they exclaimed in loud praise. When they left they gave her a sack of the nuts for "tenas white men," or the boys, as they said.

A HUMOROUS TRIAL IN KLICKITAT.

John J. Golden, a member of the first party to arrive in Klickitat county and the founder of Goldendale, tells an amusing story of the manner of holding court in the early days of the county's history. Mr. Golden had allowed his hogs to run in the woods, where they thrive and fatten on the acorns, but as they seldom saw any person, they soon became as wild as any undomesticated beast of the forest. Mr. Golden intended to let them run in the woods until the snow fell deep enough so that he could track them. The fall season, however, proved to be a mild one, and at no time was the snow deep enough to cover the ground. Mr. Golden succeeded in killing all he needed for his own use, but the rest he determined to abandon, as he did not care to take the trouble to hunt them. Three young men requested and obtained his permission to hunt them and after considerable tramping shot several.

J. H. Alexander, also an early pioneer, claimed that they had killed his hogs, and determined to demand satisfaction for his loss at the hands of the law. He was the justice of the peace for that section and unblushingly appealed to himself for justice in the case. It is not doubtful that Klickitat's present learned bar would find some irregularities in this manner of dispensing justice, but then the county was not troubled with legal advisers.

Mr. Alexander immediately took steps to apprehend and bring to justice the malefactors. Armed with a pistol which was in reality more dangerous to the user than to the one attacked, he succeeded in arresting two of the accused men; the third, preferring rather to risk the effectiveness of the gun than to trust himself in the hands of the law, took to his heels and ran for dear life, never once heeding the challenge of the justice to halt or die.

Now the prisoners were in most respects fearless men, but, having been brought up on the edge of the wilderness always without the reach of the law, and never having seen any of its operations, they had formed a very exaggerated idea of its powers.

The justice appointed the time of trial for the same evening and summoned witnesses accordingly. John J. Golden was called as a witness for the defense, and, after being duly sworn, told his story. No sooner had he finished his testimony than the justice, who believed in the argumentum ad hominum method of conducting a prosecution, proceeded to revile him for his false and perjured testimony.

The trial continued through the entire night and in the morning the justice, being moved by compassion, dismissed the case and pardoned the offenders, making it evident, however, that he had left himself liable by his leniency and neglect of duty. "I ought to have hanged you both," said the justice. "I could do it and it is at my own risk that I fail to do my duty."

The poor fellows were in great terror lest they be found guilty and the clemency of the court filled them with gratitude. The justice was somewhat disconcerted, however, and felt sure that this thing of conducting a court had its drawbacks when the witnesses, who had thoroughly enjoyed the fun, came to demand their fees.

TOPY AND NANCY.

Kittitas county's two most noted characters are unquestionably Toby and Nancy, residents of Ellensburg. There they are to be seen nearly every day—a sad picture of a dying race. Bent and tottering, wrinkled with the furrows of care and age, and picturesquely dressed in a motley garb of red and white men's clothing, they wander about the streets, poor, old, blind Toby led by a short rope and cautiously feeling his way with a cane, Nancy packing a load of food supplies or wood upon her back. Everybody knows them; all have a kindly word for them. They need not stir from their tepee on the city's outskirts for the matter of food or wood or clothing, for charity has kept them many years now, but they realize that activity is life to them.

How old they are, no one, not even themselves, knows. They were old when the first white settlers came to the valley in the later sixties. In 1873, Charles Reed employed Toby to do some road work, and at that time named him Toby. Toby worked for various people as long as he was able and since then has been supported by others. At the time of the Indian scare in 1878 he did some scout duty for the settlers. Nancy is the only wife Toby ever had. At one time they had several children, but these died years ago. Upon another page will be found late pictures of these Indian centenarians.

THE FAIR MOXEE.

In the days long since departed,
Lived a maiden, gentle hearted,
Ere the pale face came, so wary.
Tripped she lightly like a fairy;
Sweet her laugh as rippling water;
To old Yakima a daughter.
Wooers came from far to see—
Sang the praise of fair Moxee.

Many wooed but none had won her;
Through the spring and through the summer
Rang her note of rippling laughter Till the birds forever after Paused with silenced notes to listen
Where the bounding waters glisten—
Paused, entranced, to hear her glee, Sweetly laughing fair Moxee.

Once the Manitou, Multnomah, Spoke in smoke from great Tacamah;
And his voice brake forth in thunder
Till the tribes bowed down in wonder.
Thus he spake while flashed the lightning,
All the Yakimas affrightening—
Spoke of future time to be,
Spake unto the fair Moxee:

"Moxee, fair and gentle maiden,
Time for thee is richly laden—
Rich in stores of great fruition;
For thy breast shall yield nutrition,
To a race whose name is legion;
They shall own and rule this region.
Bride of pale face thou shalt be—
Keep the saying, fair Moxee."

Chilly winds and winters dreary
O'er the sage brush plains so dreary Came and went and left their traces,
Came and brought the first pale faces
With their tubes of thunder speaking,
With their leaden bullets shrieking.
One there was from near the sea
Who won the heart of fair Moxee.

O'er the wooing we will hasten;
Love each heart must surely chasten;
Broader paths the feet will follow,
Selfish aims are empty, hollow.
Sons and daughters soon caress them,
Plenty's hands with riches bless them;
Years of joys and sorrows flee
O'er the home of fair Moxee—

Till at last, by Time's hand stricken,
With a dread disease they sicken.
Side by side they now are sleeping,
O'er their graves the willows weeping.
In the quiet vale so lowly,
Where the river wanders slowly,
Old Tacamah's eye may see Where now sleeps the fair Moxee.

But the sage brush plains unsightly,
Where the robber coyote nightly
Sang his challenge 'round each teepee
To awake the eye that's sleepy;
Are changed to fertile fields of clover—
Orchards, vineyards cover over;
Sheep and cattle wander free
In the vale of fair Moxee.

This no doubt was then the reading Of the prophecy preceding;
Or the simple native dreaming
O'er his pipe so skookum, steaming,
Like some of a higher station
May have used imagination;
But e'en then you will agree
There's the valley of Moxee.

KITTITAS VALLEY.

No fairer vale was ever sung,
No better theme could poet know,
Or far, or near, for pen or tongue,
Than picture in the morning glow,
Our valley home, inviting all,
Environed by a mountain wall.

Afar, the rugged mountains rise,
Cold, gleaming in the morning sun,
Reaching as if to meet the skies.
I fondly turn to them, as one Would turn to greet a long tried friend, Unswerving, constant to the end.

The growing fields on every side, Proclaim a bounteous harvest near;
The cooling waters dance and glide;
With wild flowers springing everywhere,
While health inspiring breezes blow
And kiss the cheek to ruddy glow.*

Anear a thousand beauties spring,
In pleasing form to greet the eye;
Afar the towering mountains fling
A glory on the earth and sky,
That lifts and fills and thrills the soul
Above, beyond the will's control.

I love the mountains best of all;
Somehow they are so grandly free;
A nameless gladness seems to fall
In restful joy from them to me,
Such as I never elsewhere know
Save where the sea tides come and go.
—Kittitas Standard, June 16, 1883.

WITHIN A HUNDRED YEARS.

Where millions dwell in happiness,
And streams of commerce flow,
There stretched a pathless wilderness
A century ago.

Till then, no Saxon voice had stirred
The desert solitudes,
Nor sound of settler's axe disturb'd
The silence of the woods.

Wild savages alone had seen
The prairies bright with bloom,
The forests robed in summer green,
Or clouds of wintry gloom.

The trails that border'd this land then
Were often moist with blood,
From hearts of bold, courageous men,
Who led progression's flood.

From where Missouri's waters run,
So swiftly to the south,
To where the rays of setting sun
Flame at Columbia's mouth,

A thousand battles have been fought
 By hardy pioneers
 To make this change, that has been wrought
 Within a hundred years.

Now palaces and humble homes
 Are seen on every hand,
 And lofty spires and gilded domes
 Of cities grace the land;

Where busy people throng the streets,
 And boats ply on the streams,
 And every face another greets
 With joy's apparent beams.

But this was all most dearly bought,
 With wounds and widows' tears
 Of those whose valor this change wrought
 Within a hundred years.

EDWARD PRUYN.

ON THE BANKS OF THE KLICKITAT.

I stood on the banks of the Klickitat,
 On an Indian camping ground,
 Where a dusky band of Yakimas
 Had pitched their tents around.

They could see the bluffs of the ancient fort,
 Where their fathers had bent the bow;
 Where white and red had fought and bled
 In battle long ago.

They could see the white man's furrowed fields,
 They knew they could hunt no more,
 And their hearts grew cold like the snowy peaks
 That dotted the landscape o'er.

They sadly gazed on the busy road,
 Where once they followed a trail,
 While in the twilight gleamed the spires
 Of the city of Goldendale.

That night I saw them move their camp
 And ride in solemn tread
 As if they were chanting a requiem
 In honor of the dead.

They turned their train to the northern hills,
 Where now they are forced to stay;
 And only the dying embers show
 Where a nation camped that day.

Like phantoms grim where the willows shade,
 Where the path runs into the stream,
 I saw them cross it one by one
 In the moonlight's silvery gleam.

This I say is an emblem true
 Of all the faded race;
 They are crossing the river one by one,
 While the white men take their place.

Thus civilization surges on,
 Nor waits for flesh or blood,
 And those who will not join its ranks
 Must sink beneath the flood.

COL. ENOCH W. PIKE.

COL. ENOCH W. PIKE. The reader will need no extended introduction to the pioneer citizen whose biography is here recorded, so generally is he known throughout this section of the state. For nearly forty years the Pacific Northwest has been his home, and for thirty-two of those years he has been intimately and prominently identified with the history of Klickitat county as a pioneer farmer and stockman, volunteer soldier, business man, county official and a public-spirited citizen. Through all his life, except as a very young lad, he has been in the van of settlement, blazing the trail for others to follow, fighting the hostile red man, subduing the wilderness and rearing settlements, and whenever the call to action has come, wherever it has led him, he has responded with alacrity and energy and ability. Colonel Pike is a native of the New England states, born April 13, 1842, on a farm in Franklin county, Maine, the state of which it has been so aptly said "her chief product is men." Moses Pike, the father of Enoch W., was also a native of the Pine Tree state; he was born in Oxford county, February 12, 1816. In 1854 the Pike family left the old home on the Atlantic coast and penetrated the forests of Wisconsin, where the dauntless pioneer soon erected his new abode. After farming five years in that state, the home was again moved, this time to Minnesota. Not satisfied, however, the father determined to go to the westmost west, and accordingly, in the fall of 1867, took passage in a steamship bound from New York to Panama; thence he went to California and, without stopping in that state, north to Linn county, Oregon. He resided in that locality until 1873, when he became a pioneer of Klickitat, remaining in this county until his death, which occurred in 1900. Phoebe (Scribner) Pike, the mother, was born in historic Concord, New Hampshire, the year of her birth being 1813. She received her education in the schools of her native state and after graduating taught several terms. In New Hampshire, also, she was united in marriage to Moses Pike. Mrs.

Pike passed away in 1898, two years previous to her husband's death. Enoch W. Pike received his education in the schools of Maine, Wisconsin and Minnesota, being seventeen years old when he reached the last named state. He remained with his father on the farm until he was twenty years old, when he answered President Lincoln's call to arms by enlisting in Company K, Ninth Minnesota volunteers. He was mustered in August 22, 1862, and served continuously until June, 1865. During a long period he acted as camp clerk. He participated in the famous battles of Nashville and Mobile, as also in numerous other engagements of the Army of the West. Previous to his regiment's departure for southern battlefields, the young private also took part with his comrades in the historic Minnesota Indian outbreak of 1862. After the close of the war, the young soldier returned to Minnesota and spent a year, during which period he was married. In the spring of 1867 he came to Oregon, via the Panama route, settling in Oregon's capital city, Salem. While he tarried there a year he was engaged in carpenter work. But the next year he left the thickly populated settlement and for four years farmed in Linn county. Then, in May, 1872, he drifted again to the frontier, coming to the sparsely settled Klickitat country and taking a soldier's homestead, twelve miles east of Goldendale. There he lived for thirteen years, gradually accumulating a fine property and assisting others to secure a foothold. Early in 1885 he removed to the town of Goldendale, where he erected a livery barn, now known as the "Red Barn." During the next few years he was engaged in the livery business and in selling farm implements, wagons, etc. The livery he sold in 1894, the implement business, three years later, though he has since again taken up the latter business. He became associated as land inspector with the Oregon Mortgage Company in the year 1889, and still holds that responsible position. Col. Pike was one of the founders of Goldendale's first bank, the First National, and has been connected with other important business interests since he came to the city. In addition to his other business, he also handles real estate and loans money.

Miss Clara Palmer, a daughter of Aaron A. Palmer, was united in marriage to Mr. Pike at Winona, Minnesota, on Washington's birthday, 1866. Her father was born in New Hampshire and by trade was a mechanic. He immigrated to Minnesota in 1854 and there his death occurred in 1900. Mrs. Palmer, whose maiden name was Ladd, was also a native of New Hampshire, where she was educated and married; she died in Minnesota. Mrs. Pike is a native of New Hampshire, born in October, 1848. She was educated in the schools of Minnesota and in that state was married when eighteen years of age. Col. and Mrs. Pike have reared a family of three children, two sons and one daughter, all of whom are living. The oldest, Edwin W., was born in Klickitat county, February 14, 1879, and is one of the county's prosperous farmers; Chester A. was born in this county in 1882, and is now conducting a drug store in Goldendale; Vera, born in Goldendale, June 10, 1888, is living at home. Fraternally, Col. Pike is connected with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Order of Washington; besides, he is a member of Baker Post, No. 20, G. A. R. An active Republican, he was the candidate of his party for the office of assessor in 1878, and was elected, serving one term. His fellow men have also honored him by electing him several times to membership in the city council and once as the city's mayor. For fifteen years he was connected with the Washington National Guard, and he went through the different offices to colonel of the Second regiment. He was colonel for eleven years. However, his military record in Washington extends back to the year 1878, when he was chosen captain of the first militia company organized in the territory, the Klickitat Rangers. This company participated in the Moses affair and the arrest of the Perkins murderers. Colonel Pike's property interests are large, including, among other holdings, one thousand four hundred acres of deeded land, of which six hundred acres are in cultivation. Colonel and Mrs. Pike enjoy the highest esteem of all who know them. As a man of sterling qualities, keen business abilities and commendable public spirit, the Colonel well deserves to reap the rewards of good deeds well done.

WILLIAM VAN VACTOR. Among the leading men of Klickitat county the man whose name forms the caption of this article is certainly to be given a prominent place. Coming to the county some twenty years ago, he early won for himself a place in the esteem and regard of its citizens, who soon summoned him by their franchises to the office of sheriff. His services then and later were eminently satisfactory, as is evinced by the fact that the people have kept him in public office much of the time since. In private life also he has so demeaned himself always as to retain the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens and to impress them with the fact that he is a man of sterling integrity and worth. Mr. Van Vactor is a native of Hardin county, Kentucky, born October 8, 1842. He is of Dutch descent, his father, Solomon, having been born in Holland in 1813. When two years old he came to the United States with his parents, who settled in Hardin county, Kentucky. There Solomon Van Vactor was educated and spent his early years. When a young man he engaged in operating flatboats and other craft upon the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In 1848 he removed to Mead county, in the same state, and made his home there until murdered by river pirates in 1855. His wife, whose maiden name was Isabel Wilson, was born in Virginia in 1816. She went to Kentucky as a school teacher and while so engaged taught the younger members of the Van Vactor family the rudiments of their education. After her husband's death, she became the wife of a minister named Williams; her death occurred in the fall of 1890. The Van Vactor so prominently mentioned in Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," because of his magnanimous act of freeing the slaves of his plantation at a time when such an act was considered by Southerners to be rank disloyalty, was Solomon Van Vactor. William Van Vactor received his education at home, his mother teaching him, and when eleven years of age commenced working upon the river. After the murder of his father in 1855, William joined the rest of the family, who had removed the year previous to Lewis county, Missouri. In 1857 he went to Van Buren county, Iowa, and there learned the blacksmith's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years. Then the gold fields of the far west attracted his attention with the result that May 7, 1861, he started for California. The party crossed the Plains by mule teams, arriving in Virginia City, Nevada, October 26th. At that camp Mr. Van Vactor resided twelve months, working at his trade, but the succeeding fall continued his westward journey and finally settled at Stockton, California. The Golden state was his home until September, 1863, when he took up his abode in Linn county, Oregon. For fifteen years he lived there, partaking of the prosperity which came to the pioneers of the Willamette valley. But, urged onward by the pioneer spirit so characteristic of the family, he left Oregon in 1878 and settled on a homestead twenty-five miles west of Goldendale. While his family lived upon the ranch, Mr. Van Vactor followed his trade, working in various towns throughout the region until 1884, when he opened a blacksmith shop of his own in Goldendale. Two years later his fellow men elected him sheriff. Upon assuming his duties Mr. Van Vactor sold his shop and so faithfully devoted himself to the duties of his office that he was accorded a re-election in 1888. After retiring from office, he engaged in the general merchandise business in Goldendale and successfully conducted the store four years. He again opened a blacksmith shop in 1898 and followed that occupation until elected sheriff in 1902, selling the shop soon after. Besides being engaged in public work, Mr. Van Vactor conducts a livery stable and with his son, W. F. Van Vactor, recently established a general flour and feed store. He has served as city marshal also.

Mr. Van Vactor and Miss Mary E. Wishard, daughter of Archie L. and Lavona (Fisher) Wishard, were united in marriage August 7, 1864, in Linn county, Oregon. Mr. Wishard was born in Park county, Indiana, in 1815, and was of Holland descent. By occupation he was a farmer. He crossed the Plains by ox team to Linn county, Oregon, in 1852, where he died seven years later. Mrs. Wishard, also a native of Indiana, born in 1816, was the daughter of German parents. She was married in her native state and crossed the Plains with her husband, living in Oregon until her death in October, 1874. Mrs. Van Vactor was born in Park county, Indiana, March 24, 1847, crossed the Plains with her parents and was married when seventeen years of age; she died in Goldendale in 1892. Mr. Van Vactor was again married May 29, 1894, his bride being Miss Emma Robinson, daughter of Edwin W. and Catherine (Bowin) Robinson; the ceremony took place in Missouri. Mr. Robinson was born in Kentucky and is at present engaged in farming in Lewis county, Missouri, to which state he came when a young man. Mrs. Robinson was born in Missouri and died there in the year 1879. Mrs. Van Vactor is also a Missourian by birth, born September 24, 1870. She received her education in the public schools of that state. To Mr. Van Vactor's first marriage were born six children, of whom Monrova, born in Oregon, June 25, 1865, is the eldest; she is living in North Yakima. Mrs. Annie Johnson, the next eldest daughter, was born in Linn county, in July, 1867, and now lives in Portland; Samuel E., living in Heppner, Oregon, was born in the Webfoot state, July 14, 1870; Mrs. Martha E. Dunbar, another daughter, was born January 2, 1875; Francis, living in Portland, was born August 6, 1882; and William F., engaged in business with his father, was born January 22, 1886, the last two named children being natives of Klickitat county. To Mr. Van Vactor's second marriage, three children have been born: Dayton, May 11, 1896; John and Thelma, twins, September 23, 1903; all living. Fraternally, Mr. Van Vactor is connected with the Masons, Knights of Pythias and the Order of Washington. He is a member of the Methodist and his wife of the Christian church. Politically, Sheriff Van Vactor is a stalwart Democrat, active in the councils of his party. He has the distinction of being one of two Democrats serving one of the strongest Republican counties in the state. His strict integrity, faithful devotion to duty wherever it may be, and energy have made him deservedly a successful business man, a popular and efficient official and an esteemed citizen.

ALLEN BONEBRAKE, M. D. The fact that he whose name stands at the beginning of this biography is now serving his fourth full term as mayor of the city of Goldendale is in itself prima facie evidence of the substantial position to which he has attained and plainly indicative of the high regard in which he is held by those who know him best. As one of the city's pioneers, as a man who has taken an active part in the upbuilding of his county and as a successful worker in his chosen profession, Dr. Bonebrake is deserving of a place on the roll of Klickitat's history makers. Marion county, Iowa, is his birthplace, and January 21, 1852, the date of his birth. His father, Rev. William F. Bonebrake, an Ohioan, born in 1814, was a minister of the United Brethren church for over forty years. He came to Marion county, Iowa, from Illinois in 1843, living there until the spring of 1862, when he crossed the Plains, by ox team, to Roseburg, Oregon. Four years later he returned to Iowa, but again, three years afterward, recrossed the Plains to Oregon, this time settling in Coos county. He traveled throughout the state in his professional capacity until 1887, then came to Goldendale. However, he survived only six months after coming to Washington, his death occurring in 1887, also. Mrs. Bonebrake was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1816. Her parents moved to Ohio when she was a child and there she was educated and, when twenty-two years old, was married. Both she and her husband were of German descent.

Our subject received his early schooling in Iowa, being ten years old when he made the long, dangerous journey overland to Oregon, and his latter education in Oregon. Until he was eighteen years old, he remained at home, but not liking the migratory life rendered necessary by his father's calling, he then sought his fortunes alone. In the fall of 1870, he settled upon a quarter section in Coos county and for twelve years was engaged in farming and stock raising. During this time he began the study of pathology and subsequently entered the office of Dr. Tower, of Marshfield, Oregon, with whom he remained two years. He then matriculated at Willamette University, by which he was graduated three years later, in the class of 1883, with the degree of M. D. Shortly afterward he located in Dayton, Washington, where he practiced a year. Dr. Bonebrake opened his office in the town of Goldendale March 20, 1884, since which date he has resided in the city, winning success in all that he has undertaken.

On June 3, 1885, a year after his arrival in the city, he married Miss Letitia Flanary, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Green (Chamberlain) Flanary. Mr. Flanary was a native of Missouri, born in 1829, who crossed the Plains by ox team to Oregon in 1852, being among the earliest Oregon pioneers. He was engaged in farming in Yamhill county until 1879, when he settled eight miles east of Goldendale. He brought his family to Goldendale in 1884, and there passed away in 1899. Mrs. Flanary also died in 1899. Mr. Flanary was of English and Irish and Mrs. Flanary of English descent. Mrs. Bonebrake was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, March 22, 1867. She received her education in the schools of Goldendale and at the time of her marriage was eighteen years of age. Her eldest brother, William P. Flanary, is a photographer in the city; another brother, Jasper G., resides at Juliaetta, Idaho; one sister, Mrs. Sonora Hess, lives in the Ahtanum valley; and the other sister, Mrs. Susie Shearer, also lives in Yakima county. Mr. and Mrs. Bonebrake have reared a family of three children, all born in Goldendale. Holt, the eldest, was born April 17, 1887, and was recently stricken down in the flower of his youth; Allen Crede, the next oldest, was born January 12, 1893, and Adria, the only daughter, was born February 27, 1896. Dr. Bonebrake is connected with five fraternal orders, in all of which he is prominent: The Masons, Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, A. O. U. W., and the Order of Washington. Mrs. Bonebrake is a member of the Christian church. In politics, the Doctor is a Republican. Besides serving Goldendale as mayor so many years with honor to himself and profit to the city, he is city health officer, and for a number of years has been a member of the school board, being its president at this time. Of all his public service nothing but words of praise and commendation are spoken by those whom he has served. His property interests are substantial, including a fine city home and an undivided fifth share in four hundred acres of farming land. Dr. Bonebrake is truly one of the representative citizens of both city and county, highly esteemed by his fellow men and fellow practitioners.

STANTON H. JONES. The distinction of having been one of the first little company of dauntless white men to penetrate the wild Klickitat country and erect on its glassy plains the first homes built in the county is a distinction of which he whose name appears at the head of this sketch may well feel proud. Few can say with truth that they came to Klickitat in 1850, yet it was in that year that this venerable pioneer cast anchor in this section and made it his permanent home. For nearly half a century he has been engaged in the development of Klickitat county and he has left his name indelibly written upon its pages of history. Ottawa county, Ohio, is his birthplace. There he was born, March 23, 1830, to the union of Livingston J. and Elizabeth (DeNoon) Jones, natives of Maryland and Ohio respectively. The father, who was of Welsh descent, immigrated to Ohio about 1825 and cleared a fine farm in one of the heaviest timbered sections of the state. He died in 1850. Mrs. Jones was of French descent, her parents having emigrated from France to America and settled in Ohio, where she was married. She reared a family of seven children, dying when Stanton H. was a child. He attended school in Ottawa county and helped his father on the farm until the latter's death in 1850. The passing away of the parent soon caused the rest of the family to scatter in various directions, Stanton H. taking up the life of a sailor on Lake Erie. Two years afterward he was promoted to the captaincy of the vessel, which he continued to direct for two years longer. He then went, via the Isthmus of Panama, to California, and during the succeeding three years was engaged in mining. From California he went, in 1857, to Olympia, Washington, where he worked for a time in a sawmill. He passed the summer of 1858 in the Fraser River mines of British Columbia, and the next winter in San Francisco. He again followed the life of a sailor during the summer of 1859, but in the fall of that year came to Klickitat county, spending his first winter at the government blockhouse, situated about six miles west of Goldendale. The county was then unorganized and the settlers in the region could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Mr. Jones immediately engaged in stock raising, which he followed until 1871. Very early he filed a pre-emption claim to 160 acres of land near Columbus, proved up on the property and subsequently disposed of it to good advantage. In the spring of 1878 he built a grist-mill for Thomas Johnson, the first mill of its kind erected in the county. Joseph Nesbitt assisted him in this work, and Mr. Barber acted as superintendent. The mill burned in 1879, but immediately Johnson, Jones and Nesbitt put up another in its place. Two years later Mr. Johnson sold his interests to the other partners and the property was operated under the firm name of Nesbitt & Jones until 1890, when they sold to the Goldendale Milling Company. Mr. Jones took a two months' trip to his Ohio home in 1885. He filed a homestead claim, in 1880, to a quarter section situated a mile and a half northwest of Goldendale, and the year previous purchased seventy-eight acres of land only a mile and a half north of the city. This property he has since set out in fruit, there being now a five-acre apple orchard, a mixed orchard and several varieties of berries, etc., upon it. Mr. Jones retired from active farming last year, removing to the city in September, 1903, where he expects to pass the remaining years of his life.

Mr. Jones was married in Klickitat county, June 2, 1870, the lady being Miss Harriet Boots, a daughter of Elisha and Betsey (Jones) Boots. Mr. Boots was a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. He went to Missouri when young and in 1852 crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in Marion county. Seven years later he came to Klickitat county and a few years ago removed to California, where his death occurred in 1902. Mrs.

Boots was a native of Indiana; she was married in Missouri. Harriet Boots was born in Missouri in 1844 and came across the Plains with her parents when she was a child, receiving her education in Oregon. She was married at the age of twenty-six. One child has blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, George W., born on Washington's birthday, 1871. Mr. Jones has been a devoted member of the Methodist church for nearly a lifetime, and has served in nearly every office of his church. He is a Republican of pronounced views, one of the old Abraham Lincoln school, and was a delegate to the first Republican convention held in Klickitat county. He was Klickitat's first assessor, serving three years, and subsequently served as county commissioner four years, filling both offices with fidelity and credit. Though he has sold most of his property, he still retains the first ranch near the city, as also some valuable city real estate. Mr. Jones is now in his seventy-fifth year, but notwithstanding his advanced age and the long life of hardships he has experienced on the western frontier, is still hale and hearty, with a mind as vigorous as ever. None knows him but to be his friend and admire his character.

JOHN H. SMITH, auditor of Klickitat county and one of its most widely and favorably known citizens, as well as one of its early pioneers, resides in the city of Goldendale. A native of Missouri, he was born in Scotland county, June 20, 1847, the son of William D. and Mary (Owens) Smith. The father was a native of Kentucky, born in the city of Versailles in the year 1826. His parents were among the earliest pioneers of the Blue Grass state. William D. was a millwright by trade and until 1875 operated a mill in his native state. Then he went to California, where he farmed two years, after which he went north to Oregon and settled in Clackamas county in the spring of 1877. During the next three years he followed agricultural pursuits in the Webfoot state. He became a settler of Klickitat in 1880, following farming and stock raising until his death, August 16, 1900. Mrs. Smith was likewise a Kentuckian, born in 1829. When a young girl she removed with her parents to Missouri, and in that state attended school and, at the age of eighteen, was married. Mrs. Smith survives her husband and is at present living with a daughter in Goldendale. She is of Scotch-Irish descent; he was of Irish ancestry. John H. Smith is the second oldest child of a family of eleven children, all of whom are still living. He was reared upon the farm, receiving a good education in the schools of Missouri. With his parents he went to California in 1875 and to Oregon two years later, continuing to assist his father upon the farm. However, he did not tarry long in Oregon, coming almost directly through to the Klickitat country in the spring of 1877 and filing upon a homestead two miles southeast of Centerville. With the exception of several years spent in the mercantile business at Centerville, Mr. Smith has assiduously devoted himself to farming and stock raising during most of the remaining years he has lived in the county, meeting with an enviable success. He opened a general store at Centerville in 1887 and conducted it until 1892, when he satisfactorily disposed of it. The next two years he served the county as assessor, retiring from office to give farming and sheep raising more attention.

Mr. Smith was married at Centerville, February 16, 1882, to Miss Ella Sparks, a daughter of Andrew and Mary (Fowler) Sparks. Mr. Sparks brought his family to Washington from Kansas in the spring of 1876, and with his wife is at present a resident of Chehalis, Washington. Mrs. Sparks was born and married in Kansas, and is the mother of ten children. Mrs. Smith was also born in Kansas, 1861 being the year of her birth. She received her education in the schools of Klickitat county and at the time of her marriage was twenty-one years old. Mrs. Smith passed many years ago to her eternal home, revered by all who knew her, and leaving three children to mourn her loss: Fred A., born near Centerville, February 25, 1883, now attending the University of Washington; Grace M., born Independence Day in the year 1886, who recently was graduated from Klickitat Academy, and Edna L., born October 30, 1888. Mr. Smith's brothers and sisters are all living, Thomas J., the eldest, in Salinas City, California; Fred A., at Benicia, California; Edward S. at Toppenish, Washington; Mrs. Sarah H. Teel, in Spokane; Robert L., Ludwell B., Singleton D. and David C. all live near Centerville; Mrs. Mary A. Hamilton in Goldendale and Mrs. Emma L. Hamilton in Oregon City, Oregon. Fraternally, Mr. Smith is connected with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, A. O. U. W., Woodmen of the World and the Order of Washington. He is one of the most influential Democrats in this section of the state, and as an illustration of his popularity at home it is only necessary to state that he was elected to his present office in November, 1902, in one of the strongest Republican counties in the state; he received five-eighths of all the votes cast. Besides his property in Goldendale, Mr. Smith has other large holdings, including the home ranch of 280 acres of as fine wheat land as lies in the valley. He is generally conceded to be one of the most faithful and capable officers that ever served Klickitat county. He commands the esteem and friendship of all who know him and is worthy in every respect to be classed as one of Klickitat's foremost citizens.

ALMON BAKER, of the well known mercantile firm of Baker Brothers, Goldendale, bears the enviable distinction of being one of Klickitat county's most successful business men and influential citizens. For more than twenty-five years he has been closely identified with the business interests of his home city and, with the exception of two years, has been a resident of the county since 1877. By his thrift, energy, perseverance and integrity, Mr. Baker has won his present position and is, therefore, justly entitled to the rich rewards of his success. Of English and Irish ancestry, he was born June 9, 1856, in the town of Prescott, Province of Ontario, Canada, the son of George and Elizabeth (Connell) Baker. The father was born in Ireland to English parents in the year 1824, and when twelve years old came with his folks to the United States. The family settled upon a farm in New York state. In 1848 the young man engaged in farming near Prescott and in that community resided until his death in February, 1896. Elizabeth Connell, a native of Ireland, was born in 1832, crossed the ocean to Canada ten years later and was there wedded to Mr. Baker; she is still living, near Prescott. Almon Baker remained at home on the farm, attending school in term time, until the year before reaching his majority, when he left the old Canadian home to seek his fortunes in California. There he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until August, 1877, when he came north to Klickitat county and entered the employ of his uncle, Thomas Johnson, at Goldendale. The young man spent the next three years in his uncle's store, and by strict attention to the work in hand, rapidly mastered the business. Upon leaving Mr. Johnson's service, he entered the store of Lowengart & Sichel, another Goldendale firm, remaining with it twelve months. However, the ambitious young clerk again entered his uncle's employ in 1881, going to Ellensburg, where Mr. Johnson owned one of the pioneer stores. In June, 1883, Mr. Baker returned to Klickitat county and commenced farming, but the following fall again returned to the mercantile business, as an employee of Lowengart & Sichel, with whom he remained this time until 1888. Then, equipped with his years of valuable experience and a knowledge of local conditions, he embarked in business for himself, purchasing a half interest in the general merchandise store conducted by William Millican. A year later Mr. Millican disposed of his remaining interest to his partner's brother, George H. Baker, thus giving inception to the present firm of Baker Brothers, one of the strongest in southern Washington. Its growth has been rapid and steady; the firm's stability is one of its prominent characteristics.

At Goldendale, October 12, 1881, Mr. Baker married Miss Sarah A. Chappell. She is the daughter of William H. and Mary (Leach) Chappell, both of whom are still living. William H. Chappell is a native of Kentucky, now in his seventy-eighth year. He was taken to Missouri as a child, was there married and in 1864 crossed the Plains by team to Marion county, Oregon, where he engaged in farming. In 1878 he removed to Goldendale and during the next sixteen years conducted a hotel there. Mrs.

Chappell is a native Missourian, born in 1833. She was reared, educated and married in that state, her marriage taking place when she was nineteen years old. Mr. Chappell is of French descent; his wife is of German extraction. Mrs. Baker was also born in Missouri, October 12, 1862, and came across the Plains when a child. She was educated in the schools of Salem, Oregon, attending both grammar and high schools, and was married at the age of nineteen. Mrs. Baker is one of a family of nine children, two of whom, James and Ella, are dead. Four brothers, David, William, Charles and John, and one sister, Mary, live in Goldendale; the other sister, Elizabeth, resides in British Columbia. Mr. Baker is the eldest child of the family, and has six brothers and sisters living: Charles, William and Mrs. Claudia Dunlap, in Canada; George H. in Goldendale; Mrs. Anna Snyder, at Everett, Washington, and Edward, a Methodist minister, at Union, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have two children. Fred, the elder, was born in Goldendale, December 27, 1882; Herman was also born in Goldendale, the date being December 15, 1886. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baker are prominent members of the Methodist church, he having filled most of the offices in the church and having acted as superintendent of the Sunday school for twelve years. Politically, he is an active Republican, and, though never an office seeker, is well known in the councils of his party. He has served one term as councilman. Mr. Baker has accumulated a goodly holding of property during his residence in the county. At present he owns six hundred and seventy-five acres situated five miles south of the city, this tract all being in cultivation; two hundred and forty acres on the Columbia river in use as a stock ranch; a homestead, twelve miles north of the city, which he filed on in May, 1895; a timber claim near the homestead; six hundred and forty acres of school land in Lake county, Oregon, considerable stock and his interest in the Goldendale business. It is not going beyond the truth to say that Mr. Baker is considered by all to be one of the city's brightest business men, upright and honorable in all his dealings, while his zealous interest in church work, public spirit and benevolence indicate his character; his popularity is widespread among all classes of law-abiding citizens.

CHARLES M. HESS, who owns, with his father, a flouring mill with a capacity of seventy barrels a day, located in the city of Goldendale, is a native of Oregon, born in Astoria on the 12th of December, 1874, the son of John M. and Minnie (Beebe) Hess. His father, who was born in Fulton county, Illinois, October 5, 1848, and was educated in the public schools of Iowa, removed to Oregon with his parents at the age of nineteen. He remained at home until twenty-five years old, during this time learning the cooper's trade from his father, grandfather of our subject. Marrying then, he took up a homestead of eighty acres, on which he lived for seven years ensuing. Coming to Goldendale in the fall of 1883, he entered the drug business there, and he continued in the same for five years, but in 1888 he bought the mill he now has. It has, however, been improved so thoroughly since, that it would hardly be recognized as the same plant. In the year 1896 he installed the gravity system which now furnishes the city with water, and during the ensuing seven years he operated it successfully, selling out at the expiration of that time to the city. He has one of the finest residences in Goldendale. His wife, a native of New York state, born May 3, 1854, was educated in the schools of Iowa. She married at the age of nineteen and she and Mr. Hess have had five children, of whom our subject is the oldest. Having accompanied his parents to Washington, when less than ten years old, Charles M. completed his school training in Goldendale. At the early age of fifteen he began learning, in his father's mill, the trade of a miller, a task which he has successfully accomplished, having long since become a master of the craft. At present he is the owner of an interest in the mill, which he and his father operate as partners.

On the 17th of April, 1898, Mr. Hess married Miss Sarah E. Masters, the ceremony being performed at Goldendale. Mrs. Hess is the daughter of Thurston and Mary J. (Story) Masters, the former of whom was born in the central part of Washington county, Oregon, and is a butcher by occupation. He came to Klickit county in the early days, and has ever since remained there. Mrs. Hess was born in Klickit county, January 18, 1875. She was educated at Vashon College, near the city of Tacoma, taking a course in music and elocution, both of which she teaches to a limited extent at the present time. She has two brothers and two sisters, namely, David A., Thurston H., and Sylva, in Goldendale, and Mrs. Ethel Russell, in Silverton, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Hess have two children, Madalene, born April 17, 1899, and Reginald, born April 17, 1903, both in Goldendale. Fraternally, Mr. Hess is connected with the Knights of Pythias, the Artisans, the Woodmen of the World, and the Rathbone Sisters, and in politics, he is a Democrat. An industrious, ambitious young man, thoroughly conversant with his business, to which he gives close attention, he is winning his way nobly in the financial world; at the same time enjoying, among his fellow citizens, an enviable reputation for integrity and uprightness of character.

JOHN J. GOLDEN, the first settler in Klickit county and founder of the city of Goldendale, where he now resides, is a native of the Keystone state, having been born in Westmoreland county,

March 18, 1826. He comes of pioneer American stock. The Goldens came to this country from England at the beginning of the eighteenth century and at once attained to a position of influence in the settlement. William Golden, the father of John, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, March 15, 1797, the son of a veteran of the Revolutionary war, who served under General Washington. William Golden removed to western Pennsylvania at the time when that region was still a wilderness and became one of its earliest pioneers. Subsequently he removed to Fort Wayne, Indiana, where his death occurred. He was of English and German descent. Julia A. (Williamson) Golden, his wife, of Scotch extraction, was a native of New Jersey, born in 1804. She came to Pennsylvania when a child and at the age of twenty-three was united in marriage to Mr. Golden. Mrs. Golden died in Indiana in her seventy-fourth year. One of a family of twelve children and reared upon the western frontier, the son John early became inured to the hardships and dangers of the border, and it was but natural that he should inherit the spirit which leads men to explore and conquer the wilds. Until he was twenty-three he remained at home upon the farm, attending the schools of his native state, but a few years later, when he was living in Indiana, the opportunity to penetrate through to the Pacific was offered him. Harlow Coleman, a young man who had just returned with glowing stories of California, organized a party of young men to cross the Plains to the gold fields, charging each member of the company $200 for services as guide. Mr. Golden and sixteen others started on the long, dangerous journey, in 1852, riding saddle horses and carrying supplies by ox teams. After being out only two days, the company's horses were stolen, but, having resolved never to turn back, the two thousand-mile trip was continued on foot, six months being required to reach the Pacific. That was the year cholera raged, and it has been estimated that at least ten thousand people were stricken while on their way across the Plains. Finally, however, the party arrived in California, September, 1852, and young Golden commenced mining on American river. During the following winter he was taken down with fever and nearly lost his life. The next year he went to Shasta City, where he lived three years, engaged in mining and conducting a general supply store, which he had opened there in 1854. Unfortunately, in 1855 fire completely destroyed his business, valued at $32,000, and he was left with only a little ready money and a pack-train of thirty-two mules. With his partner, J. A. Johnson, he bought a $4,000-stock of goods, opened another store and within a short time was again in prosperous condition. The partners disposed of their store and mining interests in the summer of 1856 and in the fall took a contract to furnish beef for eleven shops scattered throughout Trinity county. They made a success of the venture, buying cattle at five cents and selling at ten cents, without killing the stock. A year later they took a contract to deliver one thousand four hundred hogs in California, attempting to fulfill it by driving overland from Oregon. But heavy snow storms overtook them at Yreka, threatening to ruin them. They averted this calamity by turning most of the hogs into bacon, which they sold at an enormous profit. In the spring of 1858, the partners got the Frazier river gold fever and at once started for that new El Dorado. At a point near where the city of Wenatchee stands they were attacked by Indians, but succeeded in making their escape without injury. The same fall Mr. Golden returned to the Willamette valley, via Seattle, and in Polk county was married May 17, 1859.

Three days after the wedding he started for Walla Walla in search of a suitable place to rear his home, but at The Dalles heard of the fertile region across the Columbia, in Washington. So on July 9th he crossed the river, entered the Klickitat valley, found an unsurpassed stock range, well watered and timbered, and decided to remain. With him he had a fine herd of Durham cattle, which he turned loose as soon as he was able to bring them across the Columbia. In August Mr. Golden brought his wife, his wife's family and the Tartar family into the Klickitat valley and the first permanent settlement in this region was established. These families all brought cattle with them. The first two winters were mild and the stock thrived, but the third winter there were three feet of snow, and not having any shelters erected, Mr. Golden lost his entire band, with the exception of one yoke of oxen, suffering a loss of fully $20,000. Times became so hard that, with the exception of three families and Mr. Golden's, all the settlers of the valley left in 1862. Mr. Golden succeeded in securing a contract to deliver one thousand cords of wood at Columbus for the use of the O. R. & N. S. S. Company's steamers and during the year 1862 fulfilled the contract, receiving ten dollars a cord. The next year he took a freighting outfit to the Bannock mines in Idaho, a journey of four hundred and fifty miles. He was four months on the road and did not return until late in the winter of 1863-4. The next summer he and his brother, Thomas, erected a sawmill on the Klickitat, five miles east of Goldendale. This was the second mill built in the county. Golden Brothers operated mills eight years, marketing most of their lumber at Umatilla, Oregon, where they opened a lumber yard in 1865 and conducted it three years, trading lumber for cattle, horses, grain, or any salable commodity. In 1867 the first mill was sold and the brothers built another one, a mile and a half from Goldendale's site; subsequently this mill was removed to Kittitas county. Mr. Golden was also heavily interested in horse raising until 1875.

from the year 1871, when he purchased two hundred acres of land from L. J. Kimberland, who had filed a soldier's claim to most of the tract; later Mr. Golden filed a homestead claim to an adjoining quarter section. In the fall of 1871 a largely attended camp-meeting was held on this ground, and it was so successful that it was decided to build a church nearby. Mr. Golden donated twelve lots to the church and four to the minister, having laid out a town about that time. Upon the completion of the church buildings, the settlers held a meeting and named the place Goldendale, in honor of its founder and owner. The town site was surveyed in the spring of 1872 by a surveyor Mr. Golden brought from The Dalles. Thomas Johnson accepted a bonus of eight lots for the establishment of a store, I. I. Lancaster accepted another generous bonus for the erection of a blacksmith shop, a postoffice was then added, followed by quick succession of hotels, churches, stores and various others constituents of a town, to all of which Mr. Golden made generous property donations. In 1885 he gave two lots and a cash bonus of $200 for the first jail, and for schoolhouse purposes he gave another tract, also furnishing the necessary lumber and helping to build it. To the second school, built a short time later, he gave sixteen lots valued at $100 each, and $200 in money. When the railroad entered the city in 1903, he presented the company with fifty-two lots for depot and yard purposes. In fact, Goldendale has been exceedingly fortunate in possessing a liberal, far-sighted founder, for not a little of the city's hardy growth and present prosperity is due to the wise, generous policy pursued by him. The thrifty, substantial city of Goldendale will ever be a monument, more imposing than marble and more enduring than granite, commemorating the achievements of Klickitat's first pioneer.

Mr. Golden was married in Polk county, Oregon, May 17, 1859, to Miss Jane Parrott, a daughter of Lewis S. and Amy (Long) Parrott. The father was a native of Tennessee, who went to Missouri when a child and crossed the Plains with the emigration of 1847 to the Willamette valley. He took a donation claim in Polk county, where he lived until he came with the Golden to Klickitat in 1859. Throughout his long, useful life Mr. Parrott was a true Methodist and by an unusual coincidence, his death occurred while attending church, October 26, 1902, he being then in his eighty-fourth year. Mrs. Parrott was a Virginian by birth, but was taken when a child to Kentucky. When twenty-one years old she went to live with a brother in Missouri and was there married. Mrs. Golden was born in Missouri, August 5, 1845, and was only two years old when brought across the Plains by her parents. She was educated in the public schools of Oregon and, like many other girls of the time, was married at an early age, she being only fourteen. To this union, eleven children have been born, all of whom except three are still living. Mrs. Sarah E. Barnett, the eldest child, was born in Klickitat county, December 8, 1860, and lives at Wasco, Oregon, her husband being a banker and a merchant there. She was the first white child born in Klickitat county. Mrs. Mary Barnes, the next oldest, was born September 24, 1862, and is living near Goldendale; Mrs. Florence L. Barnes, born August 19, 1864, died in 1883, leaving three children; Clara J. and Annie L. Golden were born October 11, 1866, and August 10, 1868, respectively, and died at the ages of thirteen and thirty respectively; Mrs. Flora D. Shelton, the next oldest, born July 19, 1870, is the wife of a Goldendale druggist; Dora Dale Golden, now Mrs. I. C. Richards, was born October 11, 1872, and bears the distinction of being the first white child born in Goldendale; Mrs. Almada Baker, born March 3, 1874, Mrs. Luella Love, born August 10, 1876, John W., born July 8, 1882, and Paul C., born January 13, 1884, are all living in the city, the latter two being still at home. Mrs. Golden has one brother, William S. Parrott, a Portland artist; a sister, Sarah, died in Missouri at the age of eighteen months. Mr. Golden has two brothers, Elgin, living in Whatcom, and John, a Portland business man, besides three sisters: Mrs. Mary B. Snipes, of Seattle, the wife of Ben E. Snipes, once Washington's cattle king; Mrs. Elizabeth Pond, the wife of a Seattle mining man, and Eligia D., who resides in Portland.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Golden are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Golden is an enthusiastic Republican, though never seeking office. He was one of the members of the city's first council, was Goldendale's first postmaster and has served his fellow men in other positions. Besides his large holdings of city property, he also owns four hundred acres of farming lands, timber land and some stock—enough to give him a comfortable competency in his declining years. Mr. and Mrs. Golden are held in high respect and esteem befitting two worthy pioneers of marked courage, integrity and generosity and are spending the evening of life on the old homestead, surrounded by a devoted family and a legion of loyal friends.

JOHN E. CHAPPELL. One of Goldendale's most substantial, successful and popular merchants is he whose biography is herewith presented. Nor is his success an accident; rather, it is the result of natural business ability, coupled with well directed energy. John E. Chappell is the son of William H. and Mary E. (Leach) Chappell, who are still living, respected citizens of Goldendale. The father, who is of French ancestry, is a native of the Blue Grass state, born in 1827, and by occupation is a farmer and business man. For several years he followed farming and stock raising in Missouri, then crossed the Plains to Oregon, where he lived until 1879. In the fall of that year he came to Goldendale and engaged in the hotel business. This place was burned in the great fire of 1888, but was immediately replaced by another, known as the Palace, which Mr. Chappell conducted three years. About 1894 he and several other business men built the Central hotel, which was destroyed by fire in 1902, a few years after Mr. Chappell had retired from active business pursuits. Mrs. Chappell is a native of Missouri, born in 1836, and married in that state nearly half a century ago. After receiving a fair education in the public schools of Goldendale, John E., at the age of fifteen, began his business career by entering the store of Baker Brothers. For eight years he labored faithfully and energetically, gradually acquiring a thorough knowledge of the mercantile business. At the end of that time he embarked in business for himself, opening a store May 25, 1898. Since that date his business has rapidly expanded until at present it occupies attractive, commodious quarters in one of the city's largest brick blocks. Mr. Chappell operated a sawmill in Cedar valley in 1901, and two years later bought the entire output of three other mills. He is also dealing extensively in timber lands.

Mr. Chappell was united in marriage at Goldendale, May 16, 1894, to Miss Clara B. Brokaw, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Peter and Caroline Brokaw, natives of New York and Pennsylvania respectively. The father, who is a farmer and stockman, early in life removed to Pennsylvania, thence to Missouri, and in 1878 became a pioneer of Klickitat county, settling on a homestead two and a half miles north of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Brokaw were married in Missouri; they are still living in the county, at Bloodgood Springs. Mr. Brokaw is of German descent. Mrs. Chappell was born August 18, 1871. She received her education in the schools of Klickitat and for several years was engaged in dress making. Mrs. Chappell has two brothers, Charles and Ira, and one sister, Mrs. Flora Le Fever, all living in Klickitat county. Mr. Chappell has three brothers, David, William A. and Charles, living in Klickitat county, and three sisters, Mary Chappell and Mrs. Sarah Baker, residents of Goldendale, and Mrs. Elizabeth Dickson, who makes her home in Kaslo, B. C. Another brother, James, died when twenty-eight years old, and a sister, Ella, died at the age of twenty-four. Mr. and Mrs. Chappell have one child, Benjamin E., born in Goldendale, July 16, 1895. Mr. Chappell is an elder in the Presbyterian church and also superintendent of the Sunday school of that organization. He is a Prohibitionist in politics. As councilman and member of the school board he has faithfully served his fellow townsmen at different times. His property holdings are extensive and include his store and two and a half sections of timber land in Oregon. Mr. Chappell is a successful business man, a public-spirited citizen, a devoted church worker and an unusually popular man with the people of Goldendale and the surrounding country.

HARVEY H. HARTLEY, M. D., a physician and surgeon in the city of Goldendale, Washington, is an energetic, progressive young man who enjoys the confidence of his fellow men and those in his own profession. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, near Forest Grove, September 12, 1871, to the union of James C and Martha (Givens) Hartley, pioneers of Oregon. James C. Hartley, who is still engaged in farming near Forest Grove, is a native of Illinois, born July 10, 1845. He is a veteran of some of the Oregon and Washington Indian wars and took part in quelling the Klamath Indian outbreak. He came across the Plains in 1864 and has spent most of his western life in Washington county. Mrs. Hartley was born in Indiana in the year 1850. She first crossed the Plains as a child only three years old, and twelve years later made a second trip, both times riding in wagons drawn by oxen. Mrs. Hartley has one brother, Doctor Givens, superintendent of the insane asylum at Blackfoot, Idaho. The father is of German descent, the mother of Welsh. Dr. Hartley attended the public schools of Washington county and in 1897 was graduated by Pacific University, at Forest Grove; three years later he received the degree of Master of Arts from this well known institution. After graduation he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Oregon at Portland, and from it he received the degree of M. D. During the next fourteen months he practiced in the hospitals of Multnomah county, Oregon. He came to Klickitat county in May, 1900, locating first at Centerville, then in Goldendale, and since that time has built up a most satisfactory and lucrative practice in the community.

Dr. Hartley married, at Forest Grove, Oregon, in November, 1900, Miss Mary M. Gleason, a native of Washington county and a daughter of the well known pioneers, John E. and Hardenia (Naylor) Gleason. Mrs. Gleason was born near Forest Grove in 1850, her parents being among the earliest settlers in that locality. Dr. Hartley has two brothers, Joseph J., residing at Banks, Oregon, and Clarence, who recently graduated in dentistry, and is now practicing his profession in Portland. His sister, May Hartley, is a student in Pacific University. Dr. and Mrs. Hartley have one child, Frederick, born Christmas day, 1901. Dr. Hartley is a member of several fraternities, the Masons, O. E. S., Order of Washington, Woodmen of the World and Modern Woodmen of America. Politically, he is a Democrat. A popular member of the community, highly esteemed personally and an excellent physician, he is sure to win unusual success in the profession he has chosen.

WENDELIN LEIDL, one of Goldendale's most successful and substantial business men and progressive citizens, as also a pioneer of Klickitat, is a well known acetylene gas manufacturer, watchmaker and jeweler. Like many another of our influential citizens, Mr. Leidl is a native of Germany, born in Bavaria, October 19, 1861. His father, for whom the son was named, was a German government officer, whose death occurred in 1864. The mother, Josephine (Brumuller) Leidl, was also of German birth and ancestry. Germany continued to be Wendelin Leidl's home until he reached the age of eighteen. He there learned the jeweler's trade and spent eleven months in the army, as required by law. Crossing to France at the age mentioned, he spent some time there, then, in 1879, came to the United States. His first stopping point was Chicago, where he worked two years at his trade. He went thence to Texas, rode the range awhile, bought railroad land and tried farming and stock raising for a period, but eventually sold his property and in 1881 came north to The Dalles. From The Dalles he went to the little town of Dufur, in the same county, where he remained three years, farming and following his trade. With his family he then moved to Klickitat county and settled upon a homestead near Hartland. Two years later we find him employed at Goldendale and three years afterward, he changed his residence to that city: Mr. Leidl's next important step was the purchase of the jewelry business belonging to Victor Gobat, for whom he had been working, paying therefor $2,700. This store he still conducts and by his strict attention to business has built up an enviable reputation as a first-class workman. He was also, for some time, engaged in the drug business, but sold this establishment a year ago. Recently Mr. Leidl, who is a skilled mechanic and a thorough student of physics, went into partnership with the patentee of a process for manufacturing acetylene gas and he is now devoting most of his time to this business, installing plants in various stores and residences throughout this section of the state. The success of this patent is not only a triumph for its inventor but it is also a splendid advertisement for the city of Goldendale.

Mr. Leidl was married at Dufur, Oregon, in 1881, to Miss Lisette Koehler, likewise a native of Germany, who came to America after reaching the age of womanhood. Six children have been born to this union, five of whom, Emma, Charles, Josie, Louis and Wendelin, are attending the public schools of Goldendale; a married daughter, Mrs. Minnie McKillips, is also a resident of this county. It is a characteristic of the subject of this biography that he is active in everything he undertakes. Fraternally, he is a Mason, an Odd Fellow, a Woodman of the World and a member of the Seattle Encampment of the Order of the Eastern Star and of the Maccabees. He has served the city two terms as councilman and at present is a member of the city school board, one of the most energetic on it. Politically, he is a Republican of decided influence. He has served at various times on executive committees and is credited with being a leader among the Germans in his county. Financially, he has done exceedingly well. He had two dollars in cash and was $1,700 in debt when he came to Klickitat; now he owns four hundred acres of farming lands, store buildings in Goldendale, eight lots, two dwellings, his gas factory and other interests, and is entirely free from debt. His congeniality and integrity, his thorough knowledge of mechanics and his tireless energy are all characteristics of him, which stand out prominently, and because of them he commands the confidence and favor of his fellow men.

CAPT. SAMUEL H. MILLER. A typical pioneer of the Northwest is this soldier-pioneer, who is now an esteemed resident of the Klickitat valley. His American ancestors were hardy pioneers before him, so that to this member of the family the frontier held no terrors. To him the border with its wild forests, its trackless plains, its barren deserts, was but a natural environment, while most of his early life was spent with the Indians, hunters, scouts, gold miners and homeseeking emigrants as companions. Captain Miller is a native of the Empire state, born in Clay, Onondaga county, July 16, 1828, to the union of James and Nancy (Vanvorst) Miller. James Miller, a German, was likewise born in New York state, on the Mohawk river, in the year 1796, and was a farmer by occupation. He removed to Illinois in 1845, settling in DeKalb county, and there, June 10th of the same year, the new home was saddened by his death. His wife, of Holland Dutch descent, was born in Schenectady, New York, the daughter of James Vanvorst. He was a pioneer of that state, a freighter during a long period of his life. James Vanvorst attained distinction as an Indian fighter and in one of his numerous encounters with the hostiles killed three of the attacking party with a pitchfork. With his sons, Peter and James, the brave, loyal old frontiersman fought in the War of 1812. Samuel H. Miller was one of nine children. Until he was seventeen years old he lived in New York state, but at that age, in September, 1844, struck boldly into the Illinois frontier, settling near Fox river, a region at that time extremely wild and sparsely settled. Equipped with a common school education, a knowledge of the carpenter's and blacksmith's trades and a strong body and constitution, the young man thus began life independently. After his father's death, Samuel remained on the property until the spring of 1849, then went to Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and helped to build the Moore and Siegle mills. He followed his trades in that city until 1852, returning in that year to Illinois, but April 15, 1853, he deserted the rapidly settling country for the almost unknown and uncared for Northwest, arriving in the Willamette valley, November 24, 1853, after a long, hard trip across the continent. In the spring he entered the mines of Jackson and Applegate in southern Oregon, lost nearly a thousand dollars, and once again took up his trades. About this time the Indian war of 1855-6 broke over the Northwest and as a volunteer, the young westerner received his first baptism of blood, bullets and powder. Subsequently he fought at Big Bar on the Rogue river during that famous outbreak. In the meantime he built a tannery in Phoenix, Oregon, but later sold it and in 1857 took up his residence near Scio, in the same state. When the Civil war broke out, in 1861, the First Oregon volunteers was at once organized. A company (F) was at once formed in Mr. Miller's community, and he was elected captain of it. Governor A. C. Gibbs was at the head of the troops, the company headquarters being at Lebanon. This regiment did its full share in the war by protecting the frontier from Indian uprisings and holding the Copperheads in check. In 1870, the captain and his family became pioneers of Klickitat county, which was then very sparsely inhabited, locating upon the present homestead. He came in February, filed on the land, built a house and then, in the fall, brought in his family. Like other settlers, he engaged in stock raising and farming, industries which he has since followed. Capt. Miller associated himself with John J. Golden in the construction and operation of the second sawmill in the county. He passed through the Indian scare of 1878 without inconvenience or trouble in any form.

Captain Miller was united in marriage, at Scio, Oregon, May 20, 1857, to Miss Alice Boyce, a daughter of Dr. Joseph and Alice (Nessly) Boyce, of Irish and German descent respectively. The grandfather, John Nessly, served in the War of 1812. An uncle of Mrs. Miller, the Rev. John Fawcett Nessly, was a noted minister of Washington; he died in Tekoa, in November, 1903. This eminent clergyman is the author of a book soon to be published, entitled "Early Methodism in the Ohio Valley." Mrs. Miller was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, November 30, 1842; she has one sister still living, Mrs. Maggie Kellogg. Capt. Miller has several brothers and sisters: James A., in Scio; Walter C., living in Asea, Oregon; Frances T., a resident of this county; Mrs. Sophia Craiz, residing in Camden, New York, and William Henry Harrison, living at Fruit Flat, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have raised a large family, ten children in all. Mrs. Elizabeth Nesbitt, of Goldendale, is the oldest; Joseph E. and Philip S. reside four miles northeast of Goldendale; Mrs. Margaret Hill and Mrs. Nancy Sophia McKinney live in Goldendale; John W. lives at The Dalles; Henry

T. is a resident of Klickitat county; Cortez R. is a student at Pullman college; William A. is a threshing machine engineer, living with his parents, as does also the youngest child, Cornelia J. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have seven great-grandchildren, of whom they are very proud. For nearly forty years Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been members of the Methodist church. He belongs to only one fraternal organization, the Grange, and in politics has always been a Republican. He was one of the organizers of the party in Linn county, being a delegate from Lebanon. Now he votes independently, though not taking an active interest in such matters any longer. For fourteen years he was coroner of Klickitat county, and besides holding this office has served as road supervisor ten years. Many years the captain has been a school director and clerk and he is an ardent advocate of public education, regardless of the taxes imposed as a consequence. He is a devoted stock fancier and at one time owned the imported horse, "Arabian Boy," sired by Col. Genifer's noted Egyptian horse. His farm, seven miles southeast of Goldendale, contains three hundred and thirty acres of the best land in the valley and its owner claims to raise more grain on the place, in proportion to its size, than is raised on any other tract in the county. Captain Miller is a gentleman of sterling integrity and ability, an honored pioneer and a popular citizen, esteemed by a host of friends throughout the states of Washington and Oregon.

GEORGE PARROTT, one of the early settlers of Klickitat county and one of its substantial agriculturists, resides on his farm of 160 acres, three miles south and two east of Goldendale. He was born in Cook county, Tennessee, February 10, 1833, the son of Job and Sarah (Swagerty) Parrott. His father, who was of German descent, was likewise born in Tennessee, and like our subject, followed farming. He passed his entire life on his place in the eastern part of the state, where he died some years ago. His wife was also a native of Tennessee and lived there the greater part of her life. George Parrott, the subject of this article, received his early education in the common schools of his native state, adding the finishing touches in the schools of Missouri, to which he removed at the age of seventeen. In 1862 he enlisted in Company K, Twenty-fifth Missouri volunteers, and served for some time, then was transferred to the Eighty-first Missouri, with which he remained until the close of his term of enlistment, in 1864. Returning then to Missouri, he resided there until the fall of 1874, at which time he moved to the Willamette valley. After a residence of four years in Oregon, he came to Klickitat county and settled on a piece of school land, which was his home until 1887, when he filed a homestead claim to a tract near Goldendale. To the cultivation and improvement of this he has ever since devoted himself with assiduity and energy, putting the entire quarter section into a state of cultivation.

In Jefferson county, Kansas, on the 13th of August, 1856, Mr. Parrott married Martha Ewell, whose father, Laten, a farmer by occupation, was born in Missouri, the son of English parents. He died when Miss Ewell was but seven years old. Her mother, Elizabeth, also a native of Missouri, passed away in 1859. Mrs. Parrott was born near St. Joe, Missouri, January 3, 1859. Left an orphan at the age of seven, she was taken care of by guardians until sixteen, when she married. Her father was a man of means, but unfortunately the administrators of his estate managed to secure the better part of his possessions. Mr. and Mrs. Parrott have had ten children, namely, Mrs. Annie Story, who was the wife of an Idaho school teacher and who died in 1899; Charles W. and Mrs. Eliza J. Atkinson, born in Kansas; Mrs. Cora Phillips, born in Missouri in 1861, now a resident of Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Winnie Hartley, born in Missouri, some eight years later; Benjamin F. and Fred, also born in Missouri; Mrs. Effie Maud Carson, born in Oregon, now a resident of Goldendale; Mrs. Carrie Chatman, also born in Oregon, now living in Portland; and Grace, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Parrott are members of the Presbyterian church and politically, Mr. Parrott is a Republican. He stands high in the estimation of the people in this locality and the surrounding country, among whom he is rated as a man of high moral character, sterling honesty and pleasant address.

FRANK MESECHER, a prosperous farmer of Klickitat county, residing on his ranch of 160 acres, three and a half miles northwest of Goldendale, was born in Hancock county, Illinois, February 3, 1863, the son of William D. and Margaret (Martin) Mescher. His father, a native of Virginia, born in 1835, was likewise a farmer. He served three years in the Civil war in the Seventy-eighth regiment, Illinois volunteers, and was with Sherman on his famous march to the sea. He was taken prisoner during the war and had the experience of Confederate prisons of which so much has been written. By reason of his services he was granted a place on Uncle Sam's pension roll. He lived for a time in Crawford county, Kansas, of which section he was a pioneer, but in 1883, he came to Klickitat county, where he filed on the first claim in Cedar valley. He passed away in this county, January 8, 1904, but his wife still lives. She was born in Missouri in 1842. Frank Mescher, of this review, moved to Kansas with his parents when a small boy and grew up near the city of Girard, on the parental farm. He started out in life for himself at the age of nineteen, at which time his parents moved west, leaving him alone in Kansas. He farmed in Jasper county, Missouri, three years.

In 1889 he came to Washington and took up a pre-emption claim in Cedar valley, but later he sold his improvements, and relinquished it, having previously purchased his present place, to the cultivation and improvement of which he has devoted himself continuously since. He practices diversified farming, always keeping some stock, especially hogs.

Mr. Mesecher was married in Missouri, March 25, 1888, the lady being Miss Alice J. Stith, a native of Jasper county, born in 1869. Her father, H. B. Stith, at present resides near Goldendale, but her mother died in 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Mesecher have had eight children, Amos A. and Alice, the youngest, being now deceased. Bertha is the oldest child; the other children are Charles, Dacy, Rebo, and Harry and Paul, twins. Mr. Mesecher has two brothers, Hartwell E., residing in Cedar valley, and Charles W. Fraternaly, Mr. Mesecher is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and in politics, he is a Republican. A public spirited man, he has discharged faithfully the duties which have devolved upon him as a citizen, having served as road supervisor, and being at present a member of the school board. He is a vigorous advocate of everything tending to increase the efficiency of the public school system. His standing in the community is an enviable one, he being regarded by his neighbors as a man of integrity, honor and uprightness.

JAMES W. JACKSON is a well-established and widely known farmer and stockman residing five miles west of Goldendale, Washington. He is a North Carolinian, born in Davidson county, near Thomasville, April 20, 1841. His father, Solomon Jackson, born in the same county and state, in 1808, was of English parentage. William Jackson, the father of Solomon and grandfather of James W., of this biography, fought in the Revolutionary war, and died many years ago in North Carolina. The mother of James W. was Sarah (Osborn) Jackson, a native of North Carolina, born in 1823. She was of Scotch-English descent.

James W. grew to young manhood on the North Carolina farm. He received his education in the common schools, but owing to the many reverses to which he and his parents were subjected during his youth, his schooling was insufficient. When the Civil war broke out his people were of pronounced Union sentiments and feared not to uphold their views. Though but twenty he refused to yield to the Secessionist demands, and fought a duel with an officer of the Confederate army, in which shots were exchanged and the officer severely wounded. For his impetuosity James was imprisoned and ordered to be shot, but, fortunately, managed to escape. During the time of his imprisonment he was compelled to work for eighteen months in a paper factory. In 1866 he started afoot from North Carolina to Tennessee with a dollar and a half in his pocket and the clothing he wore his sole possessions. He tarried but a short time in Tennessee, proceeding thence to Kentucky, where he stayed for two years. He then spent a short time in Indiana and Missouri, each, and then, in 1871, came west to Oregon, settling in Clackamas county, where he stayed for three years. His final move was to Klickitat county in 1874, and, upon his arrival, he found only three buildings in what is now the prosperous town of Goldendale. He immediately took up land on Spring creek, but later his filing was canceled. He then bought a four hundred acre tract known as the Crevling place. This property he improved, and in 1882 sold to Mr. Crevling, the former owner. After the sale he visited for a year in the east, and in 1883 returned to Klickitat county and took up land in Horseshoe Bend. In addition to acquiring a pre-emption, a homestead, and a timber claim by filing, he purchased six hundred and forty acres of railroad land, which property he improved and built upon till the spring of 1903, when he sold out and purchased his present place. This farm he is making into one of the finest in his community.

Mr. Jackson was married June 15, 1882, in North Carolina, to Miss Ruth E. Pope, a native of Davidson county, that state, born in 1855. Miss Pope was the daughter of Elijah Pope, also of North Carolina, born in 1836. He served in the army during the early years of the Civil war, but died in 1864, near its close. The mother was Nancy (Kennedy) Pope, who was born in North Carolina in 1837. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Jackson are three, Earl Branson, Bessie and William Carlos. Both parents are members of the Baptist church. By election as the candidate of the Republican party, Mr. Jackson has served two terms as sheep inspector; he has been school clerk of his district for twelve years, and has had eight years of service as road supervisor. He is prominent in the politics of his county, always attending the conventions, and taking an active interest. He owns the place he now occupies, and this, with other property interests and his unimpeachable standing as a citizen, gives him an enviable position in his community. Though claiming no literary talent, he has written a number of very interesting papers on his experiences during the war, and considering the nature of his experiences, the papers have proved most worthy of publication. Mr. Jackson's life during the war, and at times since, has been strenuous and stormy, but he now rejoices in being able to live more peaceably.

ANTHONY B. COURTWAY, a large property and sheep owner of Klickitat county, at present engaged in the livery business in Goldendale, was born in Essex county, Canada, June 26, 1857. Francis X. Courtway, his father, was likewise born in Canada, in 1834, and was of French and German descent. He left Canada in 1861 and went to California; after a two years' residence in the Golden state, he once more crossed the line to his home. Returning to the United States in 1880, he settled in Klickitat county, but at present he makes his home in Chelan county, Washington. His wife, whose maiden name was Judick Gilboe, was born in Canada, in 1832, to French parents, and passed away in 1873. The subject of this review moved to Pontiac, Michigan, with his parents at the age of ten and received a common school education in that city. He spoke nothing but French at that time, but was an apt pupil and soon learned the language and customs of this country. He started out to make his own living two years later, working first in a boot and shoe store and later with a grocery firm. In 1875 he came west to California, where he farmed four years, coming then to Klickitat county. After farming a piece of school land for three years, he secured a farm some twenty-two miles southeast of Goldendale, in the Goodnoe Hills, of which he is still the owner. He resided on the property from 1884 to 1903, engaged in raising cattle and horses, and in general agriculture. He had unlimited range for stock; the bunch-grass was plentiful and he made money. In 1903 he moved into the city and traded a half interest in his band of 3,000 sheep to Oscar Vanhoy for a livery barn, which he still conducts; he also exchanged his cattle for some Goldendale property, which he still owns. He has been in the sheep business only a short time.

In Klickitat county, in 1885, Mr. Courtway married Miss Addie Venable, a native of the county, born in 1864, the daughter of Francis M. Venable, one of the earliest pioneers of the county. Her father crossed the Plains to the Willamette valley in the earliest days and came to Klickitat county at the time of the first settlement. He was engaged in the cattle business and suffered heavy losses during the severe winter of 1861-2. At present he resides in Sherman county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Courtway have a family of seven children, namely, Amelia May, Anna Eva, Lillie Irene, Ruth, Naoma Jane, Isabel Lucile, and Anthony B. Mr. Courtway has a brother, Francis, living at Sand Point, Idaho, and another brother, Albert N., in Wenatchee, while his sisters, Mrs. Amelia McKillip and Mrs. Lizzie Taylor, live near and in Goldendale, and another sister, Mrs. Annie Williams, makes her home in Silver City, in the Okanogan district. Fraternally, Mr. Courtway is connected with the Masons, the K. of P., the A. O. U. W., the Woodmen of the World and the Grange. Though a Socialist, he was in 1896 the candidate on the Democratic ticket for the office of sheriff, but with the rest of the party suffered defeat. Besides his livery business and half interest in a band of 3,000 sheep, he owns a modern residence and 1,545 acres of land. His farm is well improved, about 550 acres of it being cultivated, and the rest devoted to the pasturing of his horses and cattle. Certainly few in central Washington, where material success is usually found to await the man who seeks it earnestly, are more worthy of congratulation for industrial achievements than Mr. Courtway, and the value of his wealth is enhanced by the fact that it was won without sacrifice of integrity or of the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens.

ERNEST O. SPOON, deputy auditor of Klickitat county, a member of the firm of Smith & Spoon, abstracters, and one of the county's popular young men, was born in Plumas county, California, September 24, 1872. He is, therefore, a Westerner by birth as well as by rearing. His parents are Abram J. and Josephine (Alexander) Spoon, natives of New York and Missouri respectively. They now live in Bickleton. Mr. Spoon is at present county commissioner of the third district. Ernest O., who is one of three children, was nine years old when his parents settled on the prairie near Bickleton. He attended the public schools and assisted his father until eighteen years of age, when he commenced teaching school. His first school was at Oak Flat, on Rock creek. For eight years he followed this profession (with the exception of six months spent in a business college at Portland), teaching at various points throughout this section of the state. However, in September, 1899, he entered the auditor's office under James W. Butler and served as deputy until Mr. Butler's death, March 29, 1902. He was then appointed auditor to fill the unexpired term, a trust that he fulfilled with credit. In 1902, at the request of the new auditor, Mr. Spoon remained in the office as deputy and he is responsible in no small degree for the splendid record Auditor Smith is making. Roy M. Spoon, a brother, resides at Bickleton; also a sister, Mrs. Alice Mabel Flower.

In Goldendale, October 17, 1900, Mr. Spoon married Miss Mary L. Allyn, a daughter of Rev. James H. Allyn, one of Klickitat's pioneer Methodist ministers. Mrs. Spoon is one of Klickitat's daughters, born July 2, 1881. Her education was obtained in the public schools of this county and in Klickitat Academy, at Goldendale. She was nineteen years old at the time of her marriage. Mrs. Spoon is one of a family of twelve children, seven of whom are living, namely, Joseph H., Rufus C., H. Oscar, Jessie G., and Mrs. Abbie Miller, in Klickitat county; Mrs. Charlotte Peringer, at Bellingham, Washington. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Spoon is blessed with the presence of one child, Jennie G., born in Goldendale, September 26, 1902. Mr. Spoon is a member of the I. O. O. F., being a past noble grand of Excelsior lodge, No. 111, at Bickleton, the Modern Woodmen and the United Artisans. He is an energetic worker in the Methodist church, being treasurer and recording steward of the Goldendale society. Politically, he is a Republican and that he is retained by a Democratic officer speaks well for his work. Besides a half interest in the abstract business, Mr. Spoon owns some city property. He is an able, respected and popular young man, rapidly winning his way to greater success.

ISAAC HINSHAW, one of the oldest pioneers of Klickitat county, a carpenter by trade, although he now follows gardening, a fitting occupation for an old man, was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, in the year 1831, making him now seventy-three. He is the son of Benjamin and Mary E. (Lawrence) Hinshaw. His father, who was likewise a native of North Carolina and born in 1804, was of English descent. He died at the age of thirty-six. Our subject's mother passed most of her life in North Carolina, where she was married and where she brought up her family. She died ten years after her husband passed away. Our subject received his education in the common schools of his native state, remaining at home until he was eighteen years old, when he took up the carpenter's trade. He worked as an apprentice for two years. In 1850 he migrated to Morgan county, Indiana, and for the ensuing seventeen years he followed his trade in various parts of the county. Removing to Douglas county, Kansas, in 1867, he followed farming in that locality for eight years, then in the winter of 1875 moved to California, settling eventually in Sonoma county. In 1877, he again moved, this time to Washington. After spending six months in Ellensburg, he came to Klickitat county and settled on a piece of railroad land. This was in the fall of 1877, and in November of the same year his family came to stay with him. From that time until 1893 he gave himself energetically to the cultivation and improvement of this land, then, however, he moved into Goldendale, where he has since lived, following gardening as an occupation.

In Indiana, on the 20th of April, 1856, Mr. Hinshaw married Elizabeth M. Hadley, a native of North Carolina, daughter of John L. and Elizabeth (Bray) Hadley. Her father, who was of English descent, but a native of North Carolina, born in 1809, was a farmer by occupation. He moved to Indiana in the early days and settled in Hendricks county, whence, in 1855, he removed to Iowa, in which state he died some years afterward. Mrs. Hinshaw's mother was likewise of English descent, a North Carolinian by birth, the junior by three years of her husband. She passed away when Mrs. Hinshaw was but a few weeks old. Mrs. Hinshaw was born on the 8th of February, 1837. She was educated in the public schools of Indiana. Married at the age of nineteen, she became the mother of nine children, of whom all are living but one, Eldon S., who was born in Indiana on Independence Day, 1865, and died at the age of sixteen. The other children are: Tunis T., born in Indiana, May 3, 1857; Vernon T., born in the Hoosier state April 1, 1859; Elmer E., born in Indiana, August 18, 1861; Mrs. Mary E. Chapman, born in Indiana on the 11th of July, 1862, now living in Goldendale; Mrs. Ora A. White, born in Kansas, June 20, 1867, now in Newberg, Oregon; Mrs. Laura A. Wright, born in Kansas, March 16, 1874, also a resident of Newberg; Mrs. Ella G. Lee, born in Kansas on the 14th of July, 1869, now in Goldendale; and Ida M., born in Klickitat county, September 11, 1878, residing at home with her parents and engaged in teaching music. In religion, Mrs. Hinshaw is a Free Methodist, while Mr. Hinshaw is a Quaker. In politics, he is a Prohibitionist. Some time after moving to Goldendale from his ranch, which was situated a mile and a quarter from town, he disposed of the property. Mr. Hinshaw is a very pleasant old gentleman, greatly respected by his many friends in the city and by very many in all parts of the county, for, being an old pioneer, he enjoys a wide acquaintance.

BARNETT J. GANO, a prosperous Klickitat county ranchman living in Goldendale, the owner of a farm of three hundred and twenty acres three miles northwest of the city, was born in Berkeley county, West Virginia, on the 29th of August, 1833, the son of John and Mary (Hartsock) Gano. His father, who was also a native of West Virginia, was descended from a French family that settled in the state in early days. He removed to Greene county, Illinois, in 1840, and farmed there until 1859, then moved to Missouri, locating in Henry county. He passed away in the early seventies. The mother of our subject was of German parentage, but born in Maryland. She died in Missouri in 1865. The subject of this review received his education in the common schools of Illinois. He remained on his father's farm until he reached man's estate, then started to farm on his own account, on an eighty-acre tract given him by his father. He was thus engaged until 1871, when he migrated to Missouri, and settled in Cedar county, in the northwestern part of the state. He remained for a twelvemonth on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres there, given him by his father, afterward returning to Illinois for a year's stay. He then spent a year in Henry county, Missouri, whence in 1875 he came to California. For five years after his arrival he followed farming in Sonoma county, but in 1880 came to Klickitat county and took a homestead three miles northwest of Goldendale. He has ever since devoted his time to cultivating and improving the land thus secured and other land acquired later, combining agriculture with stock raising. Although he moved into Goldendale a few years ago, he still owns and cultivates the place. Mr. Gano is an energetic, progressive agriculturist, successful in an unusual degree.

In Greene county, Illinois, on the 20th of November, 1854, Mr. Gano married Clarendia, daughter of John and Amelia A. (Boyles) Hoffman. Her father, a native of Kentucky, and a farmer by occupation, became a resident of Greene county, Illinois, at an early date and there raised his family. He was of German descent. His death occurred in 1858. His wife was likewise a native of the Blue Grass state, but moved to Illinois, and died there a number of years ago. Mrs. Gano is a native of Illinois, born August 29, 1834, and received her education in its common schools. She and Mr. Gano are parents of six children, Amelia, now Mrs. George Mattox, born in Greene county, in 1856, at present a resident of Douglas, Idaho; Mrs. Mary O'Neil, a year younger than Amelia, also born in Greene county, now in Portland, Oregon; Laura and George B., both born in Greene county, Illinois, in the years 1860 and 1863 respectively, now at home; Toinett, now Mrs. Dunn, born in Missouri in 1866, at present living at The Dalles, Oregon; and Edmonia, now Mrs. William Stith, born in Missouri in 1868. Mr. Gano is a member of the Christian church and politically, a Democrat. He has filled the office of school clerk in district No. 25 and in many other ways has manifested his willingness to discharge such duties of a public nature as may devolve upon him. Industrious and capable in his business, public spirited and upright, he enjoys an enviable standing in his community and county.

JOSEPH C. MOREHEAD, one of the oldest pioneers of Klickitat county, Washington, and a stockman, living in the city of Goldendale, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 19, 1843. His father, Andrew Morehead, was born in England, but early came to the United States and settled in the Quaker state. He brought up his family in Pennsylvania, where he died some years ago, being stricken with the cholera. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Ann McKay, was likewise born in England, but she died in her native country.

Joseph C., whose life is the theme of this review, received his education in the public schools of Iowa, to which state he came when twelve years old. His father died when he was eleven and he soon after left his home and friends and went to Iowa, where he got his public school training. In 1870 he moved to California by train. After remaining in San Francisco for a brief period, he took the boat to Portland, Oregon, and from that city went to Albany, whence the same fall he came to Klickitat county. At that time there were few settlers in the county, not over twenty families altogether. He settled on a homestead a mile and a half east of Goldendale, upon which he lived for twenty-four consecutive years, putting most of the land under cultivation. In 1894 he removed to Goldendale, and opened a meat market, establishing a business which he conducted successfully for the ensuing seven years. He also bought and sold cattle and stock during this time. In 1901 he sold the market to Hail & Files, and since that time he has been engaged in the stock business alone, buying cattle for the Union Meat Company of Portland, Oregon. He owns a farm of 120 acres just outside of Goldendale.

Mr. Morehead was married in Iowa, in September, 1865, the lady being Matilda, daughter of Robert Larkin. Her father, a native of Pennsylvania, of German extraction, was a farmer by occupation and a pioneer of Iowa, to which state he went when it was still a sparsely settled, wild country. He died there in 1863. Mrs. Morehead's mother, Rebecca, was born and married in Pennsylvania, and died in Iowa, after having become the mother of six children. Mrs. Morehead was born in Iowa and was educated in its public schools. She and Mr. Morehead have had six children, namely, William, born in Iowa, March 20, 1866; Charles, also born in Iowa, two years later, now living in the Palouse country; Frank, born in Klickitat county, where he still lives, in 1872; Mrs. Ada Lear, born in Klickitat county in 1875, now living in Goldendale; Elmer, two years her junior, also living in Goldendale; and Edna, born in 1884, the present assistant postmistress of Goldendale. Fraternally, Mr. Morehead is connected with the Masons and the Order of the Eastern Star. He is a member of the Methodist church, and in politics, a Republican. His ranch, just outside the city, embraces 120 acres. An old pioneer of the county, he is very widely known among its citizens, all of whom respect him as a man of integrity and sterling worth.

CHARLES C. ALVORD, a hotel man in the city of Goldendale and one of the prominent citizens of that place, was born in Lake county, Illinois, October 23, 1859, the son of Wolcott and Sarah K. (Wilder) Alvord. His father was a farmer by occupation, born in New York state. He moved to Waukegan, the county seat of Lake county, when a small boy, and there grew to manhood and was married. He lived in the state until 1869, then removed to Minnesota, where he followed farming until his death. His wife was likewise a native of New York state and grew to womanhood there. While in Illinois on a visit to her brother, she met and married Mr. Alvord and thereafter she continued to reside in Illinois until her death, which occurred when Charles C. was eleven years old. She was of English descent. Our subject was educated in the public schools of Illinois and Minnesota. At the death of his mother, the family home was broken up, and, with his father, he removed to the latter state. He lived there until eighteen years old, working on the parental farm part of the time. But, in 1877, his father having married again, he left home and went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he farmed for three years. In the spring of 1880, he came to Klickitat county and entered the employ of Mr. Waldron, who owned a large farm and stock ranch. He was with him two years. His next employment was with the O. R. & N. Company, in the construction department, doing bridge work. He remained with that corporation for three years, then in the spring of 1886 went to work in the logging business for Pierce Brothers on Bowman creek, staying with them until the spring of 1889. Coming then to Goldendale, he bought a livery stable and he has continued in that line of business the greater part of the time since. He operates a stage line between Goldendale and Grants, Oregon, at present. In June, 1903, with A. J. Ahola, Mr. Alvord built a fine hotel, the Central, in Goldendale, one of the best equipped in this section of the country, modern in its appointments and lighted by the only electric light plant in the city.

Mr. Alvord was married some years ago in Goldendale, the lady being Lizzie B., daughter of Hon. Daniel W. and Belinda (Blake) Pierce. Her father, a native of Vermont, born in Danville, August 31, 1835, was a mechanic. A pioneer of Nebraska, he took part in the Indian war in that state. He came to Klickitat county in 1879 and died there, April 28, 1899, after having exerted a powerful influence in the county's affairs for many years. At the time of his death he was state senator from his district. Mrs. Pierce was likewise a native of Vermont, born September 19, 1830. She and Mr. Pierce were parents of six children. Mrs. Alvord was born in Vermont in 1866, and educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Washington. At the early age of seventeen she began teaching and for three years she followed that profession, then was married. She passed away in Goldendale, July 1, 1899. Her brother, Daniel W. Pierce, lives in the city, and another brother, Elmer, lives in North Yakima, while her sisters, Mrs. Ella D. Adams and Mrs. Ruth Hayden, and her brother, Edward, all live in Goldendale, or near by. Mr. Alvord is a member of the K. of P. and in politics, a Republican. He was a member of the city council for one year. Besides his city property, he owns a ranch of 240 acres, all in cultivation, a mile from the town. He is a genial gentleman, a public spirited, progressive citizen, and a successful man of affairs.

HOUGH N. FRAZER, an enterprising business man of the city of Goldendale, handling hardware and building material in his store, was born in Salem, Oregon, July 13, 1865, the son of Hon. John A. and Sarah (Nicklin) Frazer. His father, a native of Kentucky, was of Scotch-Irish parentage. He crossed the Plains in 1849 and settled in Polk county, Oregon, on Salt creek, near Salem. He was a school teacher and farmer and at the time of his death in 1866 was state senator from Polk county, serving his second term in that office. He was a public spirited man and took a great deal of interest in the development of the country surrounding his home. His wife, a native of Virginia, born in 1841, crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents in 1851 and was married in Marion county, Oregon. She passed away in 1866. She was likewise of Scotch-Irish descent. Our subject, who was left an orphan at the age of one year, lived with his grandmother until he was seven years old, then for a year with his uncle, William Frazer, then took up his abode with Dr. John Nicklin, another uncle, with whom he remained until thirteen years of age. He then went to Portland to live with an aunt, and he made his and her living by carrying newspaper routes after school hours. He graduated from the common schools of Oregon and at the age of eighteen engaged in clerking. He was employed in that capacity for five years in various stores in Portland. When he was twenty-three years old he went to eastern Oregon for the purpose of taking up land in Gilliam county, but on account of his poor health at the time he abandoned his original intention and accepted a position as deputy county clerk. He served in that position for seven years under J. P. Lucas, who was afterward register of the land office at The Dalles. In 1895 Mr. Lucas resigned his position as county clerk and Mr. Frazer was appointed to fill his unexpired term. In each of the next three elections he was the Republican candidate for that office and in each he was successful, so he continued to hold the position until 1902. In 1901, just previous to the expiration of his last term, he opened a hardware store in Condon, Oregon, with a Mr. Clark, the firm name being Clark & Frazer. He sold out a prosperous business in August, 1903, and after spending a couple of months in the mountains in recreation, came to Goldendale and opened his present store. A judicious, careful and able business man, he is achieving a splendid success in this undertaking.

In Pendleton, Oregon, on May 14, 1890, Mr. Frazer married Estella, daughter of Milton and Valinda (Nicherson) Houston. Her father, who was born in Ohio, April 27, 1830, was a farmer by occupation. In the early days he towed canal-boats, and James A. Garfield, afterward president, was employed with him at the same work. He crossed the Plains when a young man, located near Albany, Oregon, and there died in February, 1887. His wife is also a native of Ohio, born in May, 1844, and was married at Albany. She now lives in the city of Spokane, Washington. Mrs. Frazer, their daughter, was born at Albany, September 28, 1869, and educated in the local schools. She afterward became a dressmaker. Mr. and Mrs. Frazer have three children, namely, Rollo H., born in Pendleton, Oregon, July 5, 1891; Zona K., born in Condon, March 24, 1894; and Joe A., also born in Condon, on March 5, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Frazer is affiliated with the following lodges: Masons, I. O. O. F., K. of P.,

Woodmen of the World, Eastern Star, Rebekahs and Rathbone Sisters. In religion, he is a Congregationalist, and in politics, a Republican. He served as school clerk and town recorder at Condon, during his residence in that place. Besides his business in the city, he owns three-quarters of a section of Oregon land. Although a resident of the city for only a short time, he has already won a place in the esteem and confidence of his business associates and all who have come to know him, and he is represented to be a man of sterling integrity and gentlemanly bearing.

HOWARD M. SPALDING, postmaster of the city of Goldendale, and a carpenter by trade, was born in Eaton county, Michigan, August 13, 1857, the son of Carlos and Helen (Andrews) Spalding. His father, a native of the Green Mountain state, born in Orleans county in 1823, was a farmer. He moved to Ohio with his parents when twelve years old and was educated in the public schools of that state. In 1848 he went to Michigan and he lived there until 1877, when he came to Klickitat county. He continued to reside here until his death in 1896. He was of English parentage. His wife, a native of New York state, was ten years his junior. She moved to Michigan with her people in 1847 and there grew up and was married. She passed away in Klickitat county in 1887. Our subject received his education in the common schools of Michigan. He remained at home on the farm until nineteen years old, then came to Washington with his parents, and helped his father to open up a homestead. He worked on the land for two years, then took up the carpenter's trade, at which he worked off and on for a number of years. In 1883 and 1884 he followed his trade in Yakima City, and the seasons of 1887 and 1888 were spent in the same place. In 1897 he was appointed by President McKinley postmaster of Goldendale and in 1903 he was reappointed. The fact that he was given a second term is abundant proof that his discharge of the duties of his office has been satisfactory.

In Klickitat county in the year 1883, Mr. Spalding married Miss Louisa, daughter of Samuel R. and Susanna (Hutton) Darland. Her father, a native of Indiana, was a farmer by occupation. He early removed to Illinois, thence to Iowa and thence in 1865 to Oregon, the trip being made across the Plains with ox teams. He came to Klickitat county in 1896 and took a ranch five miles northwest of Goldendale, but later he moved into the city, where he died in 1903. Mrs. Spalding's mother was of German descent, but she was born and married in Indiana. Mrs. Spalding was born on November 10, 1862, and when only three years old, crossed the Plains with her parents. She was educated in the common schools of Oregon. She has nine brothers and sisters, namely, Ike C., a traveling salesman for an implement house, with the state of Washington for his territory; Levi, in San Francisco; Mrs. Mary Baker, in Forest Grove, Oregon; Mrs. Harnett Bryson, in Garfield, Washington; Mrs. Amanda Alberson, at Andrew, Harney county, Oregon; Mrs. Alice Gilmore, in North Yakima; James, at Pullman, Washington; Charles, at Arlington, Oregon; and George, in Klickitat county. Mr. and Mrs. Spalding have nine children, namely, Clyde, born in Klickitat county in 1884; Guy, born two years later; Ray, born the succeeding year; Edith, Bruce, Martin, Lynn, Neva, and Gilman, all born in the county, the last named in 1902. Mr. Spalding is a Republican in politics and very active, taking great interest in all matters of local or national concern. He is very obliging in the discharge of his official duties, and in all the relations of life he has always demeaned himself so as to cement to himself the good will and command the respect of those with whom he is associated.

MELVILLE M. WARNER, an expert blacksmith of Goldendale, was born in Marion county, Illinois, May 20, 1861, the son of William J. and Nancy (Powell) Warner. His father, who is of German parentage, was born in Ohio, April 15, 1834. He early removed to Illinois and thence in 1865 to Nebraska, where he followed his calling, that of a farmer, for a period of ten years. He then migrated to California, and made his home there for nearly three and a half years. In the summer of 1878, he moved north into Oregon, and the following year came to Klickitat county and settled twenty-five miles west of Goldendale, where he resided ten years. He then went to Wenatchee, and there he still lives. His wife, who was also of German extraction, was born in Iowa on the 6th of October, 1833. She was married in Illinois on the 11th of August, 1853, and became the mother of two children, our subject and Mrs. Rosa A. Drips, of Portland. She passed away in Klickitat county, in 1881. Melville M. was educated in the public schools of Oregon, to which state he had come with his father at the age of fourteen. He remained with his parents until twenty-one, but upon reaching his majority, he took up a homestead near Hartland, Washington, and upon it he lived for seven years, in which time he placed over a hundred acres of the land in cultivation. He had learned the blacksmith's trade when a young man, and in 1890 he moved to Goldendale and bought a half interest in his present shop, forming the firm of Fenton & Warner. The partners ran the shop for four years, then Mr. Warner bought Mr. Fenton out, and he has since continued to run the business alone.

Mr. Warner was married in Klickitat county, March 18, 1883, the lady being Lucinda J., daughter of Chester and Lucinda J. (Kistner) Parshall. Her father is of English parentage, but was born in Michigan, in 1831. Crossing the Plains to California in 1850, he followed his trade there, that of a butcher, for a number of years, also was engaged in mining and in the freighting business. In October, 1878, he came to Klickitat county from Oregon, where he had lived a little over a year. Locating at Hartland, he resided there until 1895, when he moved to North Yakima. At present he lives at Toppenish. While in North Yakima, he had the misfortune to lose his wife, who was a native of Illinois, born in 1841. Her father, a harness maker, was of German extraction, as was also her mother. The family crossed the Plains with ox teams in 1855. Two years after her arrival in California, she was married, though only sixteen. Mrs. Warner was born in San Jose, California, August 15, 1866, and was educated in the California and Klickitat county schools. A few years after her marriage she learned the dressmaker's trade. She has three sisters and three brothers living, namely, Mrs. Caroline C. Shearer, now at Wilbur, Washington; Mrs. Mary Varke, at North Yakima; Mrs. Gracie Berry, in The Dalles, Oregon; Lyman, Wilbert and Asa, all in North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Warner have two children, namely, Leonard M., born at Hartland, September 22, 1884, now living at Wasco, Oregon, and Esther V., born in Goldendale, November 21, 1895. Fraternally, Mr. Warner is connected with the Masons, the I. O. O. F., the K. of P., the Woodmen of the World, the Order of Washington, and the Eastern Star. He is past noble grand of Goldendale Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. F., and past chancellor of the K. of P. Mrs. Warner belongs to the Eastern Star, the Rebekahs and the Rathbone Sisters. Mr. Warner has been in the city council at four different times. In politics, he is a Republican. Besides his business in the city, he owns two hundred and forty acres of land twelve miles east of Goldendale, of which one hundred and eighty acres are in cultivation. An expert at his trade, he is considered by some the best blacksmith in the city, while as a man and a citizen his standing is most enviable.

HENRY D. BOGART, a retired Klickitat county farmer and a resident of the city of Goldendale, was born in Roane county, Tennessee, November 21, 1833, the son of William and Mary J. (Preston) Bogart. His father, who was of German descent, was born in the same neighborhood in 1803. He was likewise a farmer by occupation. He removed to Missouri in 1844 and after fifteen years of residence there, went to Illinois, where he died in 1859. His wife was also a native of Tennessee, but of English parentage. She also died in the state of Illinois. Henry D., the subject of this review, received his education in the public schools of Missouri, to which state he removed with his parents when ten years old. He remained at home until eighteen, then crossed the Plains by ox team to California. He mined in the Golden state for several years, then returned home, traveling via Panama to New Orleans, and thence up the Mississippi river. He remained in Illinois seven years, engaged in farming, then, in 1866, removed to Missouri, in which state his home was until 1875, when he went to Texas. In 1888 he came to Klickitat county and bought a sawmill on Klickitat creek, some six miles east of Goldendale, also took a homestead near-by. He ran the mill for two years, after which he turned the business over to his boys. Selling his farm in the spring of 1903, he removed into the city and he has since been enjoying a well earned retirement.

In February, 1859, in the southeastern part of Missouri, Mr. Bogart married Mary J., daughter of Elisha and Jane (Ward) Turner. Her father, a native of Tennessee, of Irish extraction, was a preacher and farmer. He removed to Missouri in 1844, and some sixteen years later established himself in the southwestern part of that state, where he passed away. Mrs. Turner was likewise a native of Tennessee and grew up and was married in her native state, but died in Missouri. Mrs. Bogart was born in Tennessee, May 16, 1834, but was educated in Missouri. She is a member of the Baptist church. She and Mr. Bogart have six children, namely, John, born in Missouri, in 1860, now residing in Klickitat county; Mrs. Isabel Allen, born in Missouri, two years later; Elisha L., born in Illinois and now residing in Goldendale; William W., born in Illinois; Mollie, now Mrs. Fane, a resident of Texas, also born in Illinois, and Charles, born in Missouri, at present living in Klickitat county. Mr. Bogart has served as school director and held other local offices. He is a Democrat in politics. Although nearly seventy-one years old, he is still hale and active, and takes the interest that all public spirited citizens should in his home town, in which he has some property, and in the affairs of county, state and nation. He enjoys in full scriptural measure the good will and respect of those who have been and are associated with him.

ISAAC C. DARLAND, of Goldendale, Wash., traveling salesman for the Gaar-Scott Company, in charge of the Spokane territory for the firm, was born in Warren county, Illinois, December 30, 1849. His father, Samuel R. Darland, was a farmer of the state of Indiana, born in November, 1825. He came west to the Willamette valley, Oregon, in 1865, crossing the Plains with mules and horses. During this trip the entire outfit was captured by the Indians near Fort Hallock, after a fierce encounter in which some were killed on both sides. He came to Klickitat county in 1876, and died June 18, 1903. The mother of our subject was Susanna (Hutton) Darland, a Kentuckian, born in 1829. She crossed the Plains with her husband in 1865, and died December 4, 1900.

Our subject was seventeen years old when he came west with his parents across the Plains, and he was one of a posse of emigrants, and a detachment of soldiers from Fort Hallock, that followed the Indians who attacked their wagon train and stole all his father's horses and mules. An engagement took place within a couple of miles of the fort, resulting in much loss on both sides, but while the Indians were brought to terms, they had in some mysterious manner spirited away the stolen stock, which was never recovered. When the boy was seventeen, he gave his father $200.00 to let him remove from home and start out in the world for himself, and when a little over twenty-two years of age he removed to Klickitat county, where he settled permanently the following year. At the time he came to the county there was no city of Goldendale, but the place was named the same winter for the original founder, John J. Golden. For twenty years after his arrival he followed farming and stock raising, having taken up a homestead and bought a band of cattle the first year of his residence. From 1893 to 1896 he traveled for the Advance Thresher Company. He was appointed postmaster of Goldendale by President Cleveland, in 1893, the duties of the office being attended to by his wife and son. About this time he invested heavily in the Farmers' Mercantile Company, and lost a large amount of money thereby. After leaving the employ of the Advance Thresher Company he was with the Buffalo Pitts Company for two years, traveling throughout Oregon, Washington and Idaho. He then became connected with the Gaar-Scott Company, in whose service he still is. Mr. Darland was married in 1871 to Sarah A. Hawse, a daughter of one of the old Oregon pioneer families. She was born on the plains of the Snake river, while en route to Oregon, and died in 1882, leaving four children, Armintha A., now deceased; Merton A., now employed in Baker Brothers' store at Goldendale; Earl W., at Mohler, Idaho, and L. C., deputy in the treasurer's office at Goldendale.

Mr. Darland was married a second time in June, 1884, the lady being Lida M. Kurtz, a native of Minnesota. Her parents removed to California when she was quite young. She was of German descent on her father's side, and her mother was a native of York state. For seven or eight years previous to her marriage she taught school, part of this time in Goldendale. She died November 25, 1900. The following children were born to this marriage: Bessie M., now at Bellingham, Washington, attending the state normal school, and Bertie C., living with an uncle near Pullman, Washington. Mr. Darland is fraternally connected with the K. of P., A. O. U. W. and the Rathbone Sisters. Politically, he is a Democrat. He was nominated for sheriff of Klickitat county in 1874, and came within four votes of election in a Republican county. He has been quite active in politics in past years, and used to attend the state and county conventions regularly. He owns a farm in Latah county, Idaho, but his home is in Goldendale. In the early days he did considerable freighting between The Dalles, Oregon, and Ellensburg, Washington, bringing flour and other goods back from Yakima City. He now devotes his entire time to his soliciting business.

WILLIAM FLEMING BYARS, editor and proprietor of the Goldendale Sentinel and deputy county surveyor of Klickitat county, was born in Wilbur, Oregon, February 26, 1871. He is the son of William H. and Emma A. (Slocum) Byars, the father being one of Oregon's most prominent and popular citizens. William H. Byars, who is also a newspaper man, was born in Iowa in 1839, the descendant of a Virginia family. He crossed the Plains to Oregon in the fifties with his mother and stepfather, John Mires, and settled in Douglas county. As a young man he became United States mail carrier on the Oregon-California route and during the Modoc war had some very narrow escapes from death. He was on the early government surveys through Oregon and Washington and still follows that line of work. His first newspaper was the Roseburg Plaindealer, which he purchased in 1873 and changed to a Republican journal. He was elected state printer in 1882 and while in Salem bought the Daily Statesman, which he conducted for several years. He was one of the founders of the Daily and Weekly Journal. Besides holding the position of city engineer of Salem, he was for a number of years surveyor general of Oregon with headquarters at Portland. He was afterward appointed commandant of the Soldiers' Home in Roseburg and served in that capacity four years. In the early seventies he was at the head of the Umqua Academy and also served as superintendent of schools of Douglas county. At present Mr. Byars makes his home in Salem, where he follows his engineering profession. His wife is a native of Kentucky; her father was born in Massachusetts and mother in Ohio. The family crossed the Plains to Oregon in the early fifties, settling in Douglas county. William F. remained with his parents throughout all his early life, living in Wilbur, Roseburg, Salem and Portland. He was graduated from the public schools of Salem and took a business, scientific and Latin course in the Willamette University. During his father's service as surveyor general, William was draughtsman and clerk in the office and at this time, also, attended the Oregon Law School in Portland. Very early in life he learned the printer's trade, so that he might assist his father, and also acquired a thorough knowledge of surveying, being now a United States deputy surveyor. His first work was with his father on the survey for the extension of the Oregon & California Railroad from Roseburg in 1881. In 1893 Mr. Byars came to Goldendale, and took charge of the Sentinel, being a stockholder. After a six months' stay, he returned to Portland and worked as a draughtsman in the United States surveyor general's office until the next summer. Then he returned to Klickitat county and resumed charge of the paper, and has continued in charge ever since. Gradually he has acquired the interests of others in the plant until at present he is practically the sole proprietor. The Sentinel has the distinction of having been the only Republican paper in the only Republican county of eastern Washington at the time of President McKinley's first election. It is a progressive, ably edited journal, which has not only acquired a high standing at home, but is well known throughout the state. A comprehensive sketch of the Sentinel appears in the press chapter.

Mr. Byars was married at Goldendale, May 4, 1893, to Miss Ada Nesbitt, a daughter of Hon. Joseph Nesbitt of this city. He was one of Klickitat's pioneers and a prominent citizen during his entire life. At one time he served this district in the legislature. He was county commissioner six years and county auditor two terms. At the time of his death, quite recently, he was manager of the Goldendale Milling Company. Miss Nesbitt was born in Kansas. She is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music, of Willamette University, Salem, and is an accomplished musician. Mr. and Mrs. Byars have five children, William Nesbitt, Azalea, Alfred Theodore, and Marguerite and Miriam, twins. Mr. Byars has one brother living, Dr. Alfred H. Byars, residing in California, and one dead, Dr. J. Rex Byars, at one time surgeon on the line of the Portland & Asiatic Steamship Company; he also has two sisters, Mrs. S. W. Thompson and Miss Vera, living in Salem. Fraternally, Mr. Byars is connected with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Artisans and the Modern Woodmen. In 1899 he was appointed county surveyor by the board of commissioners and served the rest of the term; he had acted in that capacity before for several months, also as deputy assessor. Mr. Byars has been connected with various public enterprises since he came to Klickitat county and in private, official and professional life has ever sought the welfare of his community. Energetic, able and with progressive ideas, he is one of Goldendale's popular business men and a citizen of influence.

ARTHUR C. CHAPMAN, ex-county treasurer of Klickitat county, Washington, and now engaged in the furniture business in the city of Goldendale, was born in Mauch Chunk, the county seat of Carbon county, Pennsylvania, April 11, 1861. His father, William Chapman, is a native of England, born in 1836, and married in the old country. He is a physician, also a minister of the Advent-Christian church. He came to the United States in 1854, settling first in New York, from which he soon afterward removed to Iowa, becoming a pioneer of the latter state. In 1878 he came to Klickitat county and took a homestead, upon which he lived until 1890, when he moved to Seattle and engaged there in the practice of his two professions. He was government physician at Fort Simcoe during the years 1884 and 1885, and while residing in Klickitat county also practiced medicine. At the time of his arrival in the county the Indians were on the rampage in Idaho and Oregon, on account of which the settlers of Washington were thoroughly alarmed. In fact, a majority of them removed with their families either to Goldendale or The Dalles. Mr. Chapman and a companion were engaged in herding sheep on Rock creek at the time, and one day a band of renegade Klickitats surrounded them. For four days the white men were imprisoned. Their relief was accomplished by Father Wilbur, the Yakima Indian agent, who came unarmed from Fort Simcoe, held a pow-wow with his wards and succeeded in dispersing them. Mrs. Chapman's maiden name was Elizabeth S. Newman. She was born in Birmingham, England, September 3, 1836, and married February 14, 1854. The aged couple celebrated their golden wedding February 14, 1904. Arthur C., the subject of this sketch, was educated in the schools of Iowa, and was nineteen years old when he came with his parents to Klickitat county. He farmed on the homestead until his marriage in 1883, then engaged in the grocery business in Goldendale for a period of three years, afterwards returning to farming. Eight years later, as the candidate of the Republican party, he was elected county treasurer and moved his residence to Goldendale; that was in 1894. So satisfactory were his official services that he was accorded the indorsement of a re-election in 1896, serving until January 1, 1899. After the expiration of his second term, Mr. Chapman engaged in his present business. Few men in the county are more familiar with grain than he, as he was for thirteen years a grain buyer at Columbus. Among his possessions is a valuable fruit farm on the Columbia river.

Mr. Chapman's marriage was celebrated August 8, 1883, the bride being Miss Mary Hinshaw, a native of Morgan county, Indiana, born in 1863. When twelve years old she was taken to California by her parents and three years later came to Klickitat county. Her parents are Isaac and Elizabeth (Hadley) Hinshaw, who are among Klickitat's pioneer citizens. Mrs. Chapman has seven brothers and sisters, Tunis T., Vernon T., Elmer E., Orie, Ella, Laura and Ida. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman have a family of six bright children, of whom Floyd is the oldest and Chester A. the youngest. The others are Veve M., Merle M., Orell C., and Roy B. Mr. Chapman is a member of the Advent-Christian church, and, fraternally, is connected with the Order of Washington. His wife belongs to the Women of Woodcraft. He is an ardent Republican. His fellow townsmen have shown their confidence in him by electing him city councilman; also, a school director for a number of terms. The cause of education specially interests him, and considerable of his time has been given to the betterment of Goldendale's schools. He is an energetic, progressive and straightforward man, and is making a success of his business. He commands the respect and esteem of his fellow men.

JOSEPH A. BECKETT, proprietor of a planing mill and lumber yard in the city of Goldendale, Klickitat county, Washington, was born in Peterborough county, in the province of Ontario, Canada, January 4, 1854. He is the son of James and Nancy (McIntosh) Beckett. His father, who was a farmer by occupation, was a native of Scotland, born in the city of Glasgow, in 1809. He came to Canada in 1818, and across the line into Michigan in 1869, where he died, May 12, 1902. The mother of our subject was likewise a native of Scotland, born in 1815. She passed away in 1855. Joseph A. Beckett, of this review, grew to manhood at Saginaw, Michigan, working on the farm until about sixteen years old, and attending the common schools. He also took a course in the British Commercial College at Toronto, Canada. He went to Marshall county, Kansas, in 1879, and began farming, his younger brothers and sisters being with him at the time. Coming to Klickitat county in 1880, he started to work in the planing mill conducted by Beckett & Pierce, the senior partner being his half-brother, David. He bought the business in 1901, and has since continued to run the mill and yard.

At Goldendale, August 30, 1893, Mr. Beckett married Mrs. Addie (Sturgis) Goddard, who was born at Vancouver, Washington, in 1862. Her father, Orville Sturgis, an old Washington pioneer, died years ago. Mary (Goddard) Sturgis, her mother, was born in Ohio, and now lives in Goldendale. At present she is Mrs. Allen. Mr. Beckett has three sisters, and two brothers, all his elders, also one brother, James, deceased. His sisters, Barbara and Jeanette, live in Ontario, Canada, and his brother, John, resides in Pomona, California. He has a sister living at Portland, Oregon, by name Margaret. His half-brothers and sisters are, David Beckett, a resident of Portland, Oregon; Jane, who lives in Myrtle Creek, Oregon; Sarah, who makes her home at Walla Walla; Thomas, a resident of the town of Medford, Oregon; Ada, living in Walla Walla, and William, now deceased. Fraternally, Mr. Beckett is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and the Circle, while in politics, he is a Republican. Besides his business property in the city, he owns a modern residence. Industrious and capable, and possessed of many virtues as a man and citizen, he has won the respect and good will of his community generally.

WILLIAM P. FLANARY, a photographer in the city of Goldendale, in Klickitat county, Washington, and an artist in his line of work, was born in Washington county, Oregon, October 10, 1864, the son of Thomas G. and Emily J. (Chamberlain) Flanary. His father, a farmer by occupation, was born in Andrew county, Missouri, in 1828. His people were early pioneers of that state. He crossed the Plains with oxen in 1851 and settled in Marion county, Oregon, where he took up a donation claim, situated eighteen miles from Salem. The trip across the Plains was made without any encounters with the numerous bands of Indians roving over the country, but the party helped to bury many settlers, during the trip, who had fallen victims to the murderous Indians; and when they arrived in Oregon, the Indians were on all sides. He removed to Washington county in 1859, where he had bought an interest in a grist-mill, and later he purchased a farm in the neighborhood. Coming to Klickitat county in 1878, he bought a farm here, but after six years' residence on the property he moved to Goldendale, his health being precarious. He served in the city council for a time. His health continued poor and in June, 1899, he passed away. His wife, who was born in the Blue Grass state, in 1833, also died in 1899.

William Flanary resided in Washington county, Oregon, until he reached the age of fourteen, and during this time worked on the farm. On account of his health he did not attend school very much while in Oregon, but later attended the Goldendale schools, and also took a commercial course in a business college at Portland, Oregon. He taught one term of school, but did not like the work, so turned his attention to teaming, an occupation which he followed for twelve months. He next bought into the photograph business with his married sister, Mrs. Sonora Hess, and they did a good deal of view work besides the work in the studio. Finding this kind of employment to his taste, he has since followed it in the city, except for a period of eight months in 1900. In the early part of that year he sold out, but later he returned to Goldendale and opened another studio, which he still continues to conduct.

Mr. Flanary married, at Walla Walla, on Washington's birthday of the year 1898, Miss Mary Blackburn, a native of Morgan county, Ohio, born in 1874. When she was an infant, her mother died, but her father, R. C. Blackburn, is still living. She followed school teaching in the middle west for several years, later coming to Umatilla county, Oregon, with a sister, and still later to Goldendale, where she also taught and where Mr. Flanary met her. Mr. and Mrs. Flanary have one child, Ruth Emily, born September 3, 1900. Mr. Flanary has four brothers and sisters, namely, Susan J., now Mrs. Shearer, a resident of North Yakima; Mrs. Sonora A. Hess, also living in North Yakima; Mrs. Letitia Bonebrake, wife of a Goldendale physician, and Jasper G. Flanary, an electrician. Fraternally, Mr. Flanary is a Knight of Pythias and one of the charter members of Friendship Lodge, No. 37, of Goldendale; also a member of the Order of Washington. He was an active Brvan man during the last campaign. Besides his business in the city, he owns six and a half acres adjoining the city limits and a two-fifths interest in a four hundred-acre farm. He has been administrator of the joint interests of the heirs of his father for some time. Besides his photographic business, he writes insurance policies. He is a successful business man, with a host of friends in the city and surrounding country.

JAMES PETER NELSON, a well-to-do citizen of the city of Goldendale, Washington, by trade a brick and stone mason and plasterer, was born in Denmark, about seven miles from Copenhagen, November 12, 1840. He is the son of Peter and Hannah (Jensen) Nelson, both natives of Denmark, in which country they died a number of years ago. James P. was educated in the Danish schools, and started in to learn his trade soon after he completed his education. He worked in the old country for some time as a mason, but in 1866 came to the United States and settled at Waupaca, Wisconsin, where he followed his trade for a period of almost fourteen years, succeeding well and saving his money. He next came west to Goldendale, Washington, arriving October 22, 1880, and took a contract to dig a large ditch. This work was also a financial success. On its completion, he once more took up his trade, which he has followed in this city most of the time since. He has invested in property and bought a number of city business blocks, having been able with his ample means to pick up many bargains in land and buildings, as they were offered. Among his city property is the corner building now occupied by the Waters Dry Goods Company.

Mr. Nelson was married, in Denmark, June 17, 1865, to Miss Anna Gabrielson, a daughter of Gabriel and Cecilia (Hansen) Gabrielson, and they now have a family of six children: Esther, a resident of Goldendale; Mrs. Aba Fisher, who resides in Portland, Oregon; Mrs. Elvina McKee, living in Goldendale; Oscar and Midas. Mr. Nelson has one sister, now Mrs. Mary Johnson, a resident of Walla Walla, Washington. He is a member of the Lutheran church, and politically, a Republican. In 1894 he was elected county coroner, and he has held that office for two terms. He is one of the leading factors in the town in financial matters and a shrewd business man, successful in all his undertakings.

WILLIAM J. STORY, editor and proprietor of the Klickitkat County Agriculturist, a sketch of which will be found in the press chapter, is one of southern Washington's pioneer newspaper men and a pioneer of Klickitkat county. For nearly a quarter of a century he has been engaged, through the medium of the press and otherwise, in the upbuilding of the county and city in which is his home, and is today more active than ever in promoting the prosperity and advertising the resources of the Klickitkat country. Editor Story comes of an old pioneer family of Dutchess county, New York, and himself was born in Poughkeepsie, the county seat, August 18, 1853. His father, James E. Story, a farmer and stockman, was also born in Dutchess county, the date being December 20, 1823. His ancestors originally came from England and settled in the Empire state in an early day. He came west to this county in 1880, and settled upon a homestead near Bickleton, where he lived until death overtook him not long ago. The mother, Electa (Ellsworth) Story, was born in Ulster county, New York, of English parentage; she passed away a short time before the death of her husband. William J. spent his early life in his native state. He attended the public schools and the academy near his home, thus securing a good education. Then he entered the printing office of the Eagle, in Poughkeepsie, where he learned the printer's trade. After serving his apprenticeship, he was employed in New York City a time, then came west with his parents in 1880. Arriving here, he at once began work on the Klickitkat Sentinel and remained faithfully with that journal ten years, or until 1892, and a year afterward he established the Klickitkat County Agriculturist. The venture was a success from the start and for twelve years has been one of the county's strong papers and one of the most influential Republican journals in southern Washington. The Agriculturist now has a circulation of 1,200, its newsy columns and well written editorials being eagerly read throughout this section. One of the Agriculturist's strong features is its enthusiastic public spiritedness and hearty support of all worthy public enterprises.

Mr. Story is still single, and of his immediate family only one other member is living, James E. Story, a brother, who resides in Bickleton. Fraternaly, Mr. Story is connected with the Masons, the Maccabees, Woodmen of the World and its auxiliary, the Women of Woodcraft. For many years he has been junior deacon of the Goldendale Masonic lodge. He is an active and a prominent worker in his party, though never himself becoming an official. Most of his attention is given strictly to the welfare of his business, and by the installation of modern equipment, he has made the Agriculturist office highly efficient in job work. Though many obstacles have arisen in years gone by to block the path of progress, with true family courage and energy he has overcome all and won an enviable success in business and social life. Known as a man of conscientious principles, sound judgment and aggressiveness, the editor of the Agriculturist has drawn to his side a host of ardent supporters and admirers and has attained to a position of influence among his fellows, both in his profession and out of it.

WILLIAM ENDERBY, a progressive business man in the city of Goldendale, and proprietor of an implement and vehicle house, was born in Lincolnshire, England, August 12, 1865, the son of John and Eliza (Benton) Enderby. His father, a wagon maker by trade, and likewise an Englishman, died in his native land in 1889. His mother still lives in England, at the age of fifty-eight. Our subject grew to manhood in England, and there learned the wagon and carriage maker's trade. He was educated in the schools of his native land, but at the age of twenty-three went to Chile, South America, where he was employed in the government car shops for a period of three years. He also worked for Balfour Lyons & Company for some time as foreman of their railroad car department. He was in Chile during the revolution, and also at the time the United States had some difficulty with the country, and President Harrison had to send the cruiser Baltimore to protect American citizens, and their interests. He left that country in 1892, and came to Tacoma, Washington, where he stayed about twelve months. Late in 1893 he removed to Goldendale, where he followed the trade of a carpenter for five years. He opened his present store in 1898, putting up his own building, and he has since worked up a lucrative trade, his success being due chiefly to the faithfulness with which he has attended to business.

March 27, 1901, Mr. Enderby married Mrs. Ruth Hayden, daughter of D. W. Pierce, an old pioneer and mill man of Klickitat county. Mrs. Enderby was born in Pennsylvania, in 1873, and came west to Klickitat county with her parents when a small girl. Her father and her mother, Mrs. Belinda Pierce, are both deceased. Her brother, D. W. Pierce, is foreman of the planing mill in Goldendale, owned by the White Pine Lumber Company. Mrs. Enderby has one son by her first marriage, Orlin Hayden. Mr. Enderby has three brothers and one sister, all living in England, and all younger than he. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and Goldendale Camp, No. 5890, Modern Woodmen of America, in the latter of which orders he is clerk; politically he is a Republican, but, aside from serving in the city council, he has never held any elective office, nor has he sought any. His realty holdings include, besides his business, some valuable Goldendale property. An industrious, progressive business man, a good citizen and a worthy member of society, he has won for himself and still retains an honored place in his home city and in the county.

CHARLES H. TEALE, a prosperous Klickitat county farmer, resides on his ranch of four hundred acres, known as the Old Blockhouse farm, seven miles northwest of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Coshockton county, Ohio, September 20, 1830, the son of Martin G. and Catherine (Clark) Teale. His father, born in Pennsylvania, November 1, 1793, was a teacher and farmer by occupation. He came of an old English family, of means and title, with a coat-of-arms emblazoned with two ducks.

Having completed his education in the common schools of the Quaker state, he afterwards went to the West Indies as superintendent of a sugar factory. He was a pioneer of Ohio and died there in 1850. The mother of our subject, who was likewise of English descent, was born in Culpeper county, Virginia, in 1812. Her father served in the war which broke out between the Americans and British in that year. She died January 25, 1903. Charles H. Teale, of this review, grew to the age of twenty-two in Ohio, working on his father's farm much of the time. He attended school for seven years, at the same time running the farm, for, as he was the oldest child, the burden of the work fell on his shoulders. When twenty-two years old, he went to Illinois, and in 1865 took up eighty acres of land near Greenwood, about twenty miles from Lincoln, Nebraska. He had bought land in the same locality, prior to that time, and on the home he created out of his realty holdings he lived for eighteen years. In 1883, he moved to California; still retaining his Nebraska property; and for a period of five years he ran a fruit farm in Napa county. He then moved to Oregon, and, after traveling about the state for some time, settled at Pomeroy, Washington, where he lived two years. He later moved to Monmouth, Oregon, where he resided until July, 1903, engaged in fruit raising. At that time he came to Goldendale, and bought his present ranch a few miles from the city.

Mr. Teale was married, December 12, 1867, at Lincoln, Nebraska, to Miss Mary E. Parker, who was born in Ross county, Ohio, but was brought up in Piatt county, Illinois. At the time of their marriage, Lincoln was in the first year of its cityhood; now it is the state capital. John Parker, his wife's father, a farmer by occupation, was born in Maryland, December 18, 1809, and passed away in Nebraska, of which state he was a pioneer, May 30, 1885. Mrs. Parker was born in Virginia, to Scotch-Irish parents, November 10, 1815, the youngest of a family of seven. Her father participated in the War of 1812. She passed away September 15, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Teale have had eight children—Ella Opal and Myron E., now deceased; J. Clark, born in Cass county, Nebraska, June 15, 1869; Clinton P., James D. and Charles Gardner, born the former two in Nebraska, the latter in California, April 28, 1874, November 21, 1882, and November 9, 1887, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Teale are members of the Christian church, and Mr. Teale is a Prohibitionist. He is a thrifty farmer, and, although a late comer in the locality, has already won the esteem of the people of the surrounding country.

CARL BURTON WEBB, an enterprising young business man of the city of Goldendale, and a partner in the firm of I. A. Webb & Co., which handles a large stock of furniture, carpets, etc., was born in Fullerton, the county seat of Nance county, Nebraska, on the 17th of February, 1883. He is the son of Isaac A. and Kittie L. (Burton) Webb. His father, a large property owner in the town of Medford, Oregon, was born in Nebraska, on the 30th of October, 1853, but settled in Medford in 1884. At that time there were but five or six houses in the town; at present it is a well-built and growing city of 3,000 inhabitants. He invested extensively in real estate; and opened a furniture store a number of years ago, which he sold in 1901. He is now a man of means, being the owner of considerable property in Portland, Oregon, and various other places, besides his holdings in Medford and Goldendale. He is of English and German descent, and his wife of English and Irish. The latter is a native of Indiana, born December 12, 1862. Our subject was but twelve months old when his parents removed to Medford, and he grew up and was educated in that town, attending the high school, and later taking a business course. He worked in his father's store for some time, then entered the employ of the Heywood Brothers & Wakefield Company, a Portland firm, doing a large furniture and willow-ware business. He started at the bottom, but, being apt and quick to learn, was shortly made a salesman. Leaving their employ in October, 1902, he, with his father, at once purchased the present business in Goldendale, of which he has had charge from the start. His father travels most of the time, looking after his various interests. The firm owns its own building, and keeps always on hand a large stock of up-to-date goods; also has an upholstering and repair department connected with the store.

On February 17, 1904, Mr. Webb married Miss Ethel Elliott, in Portland, Oregon. She is the daughter of Hugh and Adelia Elliott, her father foreman of the O. R. & N. car shops, at Albina, Oregon. She was born in Canada. Mr. Webb has two sisters living—Pearl Nelson Webb and Mrs. Edith M. Welch, the latter a resident of Baker City, Oregon. He adheres to the Christian church, and his wife to the Methodist Episcopal. In politics he is a Republican. A few years ago he was assistant city recorder in Medford. By strict attention to business, he has worked up a large and lucrative trade, and the prospects for further development of his business are bright.

LUTHER C. CAPLES, manager and head miller of the Goldendale Milling Company, at Goldendale, was born in Platte county, Missouri, July 19, 1853, the son of Luther W. and Jane E. (Cunningham) Caples. His father was a practicing physician, born in Ohio, but of German parentage. He moved to Missouri when a young man, and there followed his practice and also entered the general merchandise business. A very prominent man, he helped to lay out the townsite of Leavenworth, Kansas, and later that of Olathe, the county seat of Johnson county, to which part he had removed and in which he had taken up a homestead. Going eventually to St. Louis, Missouri, he followed railroad work there for several years, afterwards removing to Kansas City, Missouri, where he took up the same line of work. But his health failed, owing to the confinement of office work, and he returned to Kansas and took up farming, following that until his death, which occurred December 11, 1894. His wife, a native of Fredericksburg, Virginia, removed to Kentucky with her people when a young girl, and was educated in the schools of that state. She died in Kansas City, Missouri, in 1902.

The man whose name forms the caption of this article received his education in the public schools of Kansas City, Missouri. He remained at home until he was twenty years old, then took up the miller's trade in Kansas City, entering the mill of P. G. Willhoit. He worked for two years as an apprentice, thoroughly learning the trade, then entered Price & Company's mill. He remained with them four years, leaving the position of head miller in 1881 to go to Columbus, Kansas. He conducted a flour-mill in that city until the fall of 1883, when he came west to Oregon City, Oregon, and took charge of a mill for Sibson, Church & Company. Twelve months were spent in their employ, then a year at Milwaukee, Oregon, a town near Portland, in charge of a mill, then he returned to Oregon City, himself rented a mill and remained in possession of it for two years. At the expiration of this period he engaged with the Portland Flouring Mill Company, of Oregon City, with which he remained nine years, holding during eight of these years the position of head miller in two of their mills with respective daily capacities of 300 and 600 barrels. His next undertaking was the remodeling of a mill at Toledo, Washington, for Captain O. Kellogg, a task which kept him busy for four months. Then he completely overhauled a mill at Roseburg, Oregon, consuming four months' more time. The ensuing three years were spent in work of like nature, in various parts of Oregon and Washington. His next place of residence was Palouse City, where he remained seven months. Coming to Goldendale in May, 1900, he took a position with the Goldendale Milling Company and he has been discharging the duties of head miller for them ever since. He has an interest in a mill at Mohler, Idaho.

Mr. Caples married, near Liberty, Missouri, the day before Christmas, 1879, Miss Annie R. Oldham, daughter of James Oldham, a Kentucky farmer, of English descent. He removed to Indiana in 1853, and thence some years later to Missouri, in which state he afterwards passed away. Mrs. Caples' mother, Anna (Neale) Oldham, a native of Scott county, Kentucky, died in Missouri in 1878. She was of Scotch and English descent. Mrs. Caples was born in Indiana, February 15, 1854, and was educated in the public schools of that state and of Missouri. She and Mr. Caples have had two children—Ethel, who was born in Kansas City, Missouri, in 1880, and died when two years old, and Mrs. Nina Divine, born at Columbus, Kansas, in 1883, now living in Goldendale with her husband. Mr. Caples is a member of the Presbyterian church. He was president of the Y. M. C. A. of Oregon City, while located there. Fraternally, he is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics is a Democrat. He served two terms in the city council of Oregon City. A thoroughly competent workman, and a man of unusual ability in his line, he has achieved a very enviable success as a miller, winning a wide reputation for thoroughness and skill. He has also taken a position of leadership in the social life of the various communities in which he has lived, gaining the esteem and respect of all who have known him intimately.

DAVID A. MASTERS, a young miller of Goldendale, and a popular member of society, was born in Goldendale, June 19, 1883. He is the son of Thurston L. and Mary J. (Story) Masters, the former a native of Oregon and a butcher by trade. The older Masters was born in Washington county May 9, 1851, the son of Andrew J. and Sarah J. Masters, natives of Kentucky and pioneers of Oregon of 1843, both now deceased. He learned the butcher business at the age of thirteen and worked at it for several years afterward, also following stage driving as an occupation for some time. He came to Klickitat county in the spring of 1871 with a band of cattle and took a pre-emption claim twelve miles east of Goldendale, which he later sold. He moved into the city in 1878, bought a butcher shop, and continued to run the business until 1898, then disposed of it. He kept a hotel and stable at the Summit Place, between Goldendale and North Yakima, for two years. At present he is a resident of Goldendale, as is also his wife, who is the daughter of David and Pheba (Pugh) Storey, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively. She was herself born in Illinois October 24, 1853, but was educated in the schools of Washington county, Oregon, and married at Goldendale the day before Christmas, 1872, at the age of twenty. David A. Masters is one of a family of five. He was educated in the public schools of Goldendale, also attended the Klickitat Academy and took a course in the state university at Seattle. He learned the butcher's trade from his father when a boy of twelve, and at the age of seventeen accepted employment in a drug store in his native town. After following that business for nearly a year he gave it up and spent a season on the farm. In the fall of 1901 he started in his present business under L. C. Caples, of the Goldendale Milling Company, and he has now learned the miller's trade thoroughly and still follows it. Mr. Masters' sisters and brothers are: Sarah E., now Mrs. Hess, living in Goldendale; Mrs. Ethel Russell, now at Silverton, Oregon; Sarah

S. and Howard T., at home with their father and mother.

Mr. Masters was married on May 5, 1902, the lady being Miss Pearl E. Shoemaker, a native of Washington. Her father, Peter Shoemaker, came to Klickitat county in 1878, and passed away in 1902. Her mother's maiden name was Catherine Ames. Mrs. Masters was born in Centerville, Klickitat county, and received her primary education in the local schools, later attending a Portland school. She took a course in elocution in the latter institution, becoming an accomplished elocutionist. She and Mr. Masters have one child, Evelyn, born in Ellensburg December 18, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Masters is connected with the Maccabees and the Order of Washington, and in politics he is a Republican, while his religious faith is that of a Methodist. With youth still his, and with a good trade well learned and plenty of energy and ability, he can hardly fail to exert a very sensible influence in the material and social development of his native town.

WILLIAM E. HORNIBROOK, a prosperous and well-known farmer and stockman, resides two and one-half miles south of Goldendale, Washington. He is a Canadian by birth, born October 4, 1851. His father, Samuel Hornibrook, also a native of Canada, was a minister and farmer, but confined his pastoral work largely to the community in which he resided. The mother, Sarah (Dwyer) Hornibrook, also of Canadian nativity, is now residing in Goldendale.

William E. received his education in the common schools of Canada. Until twenty-one years of age he lived at home with his parents, and during that time gained experience both as a school teacher and a lumberman in the lumber camp which his father then maintained, in addition to learning agriculture. When twenty-one years old he accompanied his parents to Iowa, and there followed rail-roading for four months. Abandoning this occupation he purchased a farm, and for fifteen years followed farming independently. His next move was in 1888 to the Klickitat valley, where he acquired the fine farm of several hundred acres, which he occupies at present.

Mr. Hornibrook was married in Cherokee county, Iowa, June 21, 1882, to Miss Ellen F. Laucamp. She was the daughter of Bernard Laucamp, a farmer and stockman, and native of Prussia, who, after leaving the old country for America, served in the Mexican war. The mother, Sarah (Rice) Laucamp, was born in Wisconsin. From Wisconsin Mrs. Hornibrook's parents moved to Iowa, where she was educated in the common schools. When twenty-four years of age she married Mr. Hornibrook. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hornibrook, namely: Samuel, in Iowa, May 28, 1883; Sadie and Cynthia, twins, September 15, 1885, and William, September 22, 1892. Mr.

ALBERT F. BROCKMAN, M. D.

SAMUEL SINCLAIR.

Hornbrook is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and is now serving honorably as a trustee of his church society. He has served several terms as a school director, and in this, as in other matters, his judgment has rarely been found faulty. In the fall of 1902 he was elected county commissioner by the Republican voters of his county for a term of four years. His farm now comprises 640 acres of excellent land, and is supplied with all necessary implements and stock to carry on successfully agricultural pursuits. It is Mr. Hornbrook's belief that the slipshod method of farming, for which farmers have often been justly criticised, is destined to become a thing of the past. In accordance with his conviction, he is setting an excellent example in the management of his own ranch. The judgment of his fellow men in selecting him for the responsible office he now fills has proven good, for he is universally credited with being a faithful, capable officer. Commanding the confidence of those around him and the friendship of those with whom he is intimate, Mr. Hornbrook is, indeed, one of Klickitat's leaders.

ALBERT F. BROCKMAN, M. D. Numbered with those capable, energetic, broad-minded citizens of Klickitat county who are devoting the best that is in them to the upbuilding of the country in general and the Bickleton section in particular is he whose name initiates this paragraph. For more than a decade he has been prominently identified with the progress of his community. Born in Pleasant Mount, Missouri, June 4, 1868, Albert F. Brockman is a son of James M. and Martha E. (Adcock) Brockman, of German and English descent, respectively. The elder Brockman is a native of the Buckeye state, born in 1841. When a boy he was taken by his parents to Missouri, they being among the first settlers of Miller county, where he was engaged many years in farming. He also served for a number of years as sheriff of that county. He served as a Union soldier in the Civil war and was under General Sherman for more than three years, participating in most of that famous general's great engagements. In 1890 he came to Washington, locating in Kittitas county, where he now lives, his home being at Ellensburg. Mrs. Martha (Adcock) Brockman, who is also living, was born in 1847. Missouri remained the home of Albert F. until he had attained man's estate. There he received his education, and for the first sixteen years of his life lived on the farm. He then secured employment as a clerk in one of the stores of his native town and later entered the drug store of his uncle, Henry H. Brockman, who was also a physician. His ambitions to be a physician, too, were soon aroused, and he immediately began the study of medicine. When twenty years of age he matriculated at the American Medical School, of St. Louis, Missouri, and from that institution he received his degree two years later, in 1890. His first location was at Russellville, Missouri, but after a few months he crossed the continent to Friday Harbor, San Juan island, Washington, whence on February 12, 1891, he came to the sparsely settled Bickleton country. The young doctor made friends and prospered. He opened a drug store in the town of Bickleton in 1894, and four years later was able to erect the present substantial Brockman block, in which he placed the drug store and a furniture establishment. From time to time he has increased his business interests, among other things which have claimed his attention being the extensive buying and selling of stock, in all of which he has done well.

Dr. Brockman married Miss Anna E. Sigler, the daughter of James C. and Frances E. (Moore) Sigler, at Bickleton, September 5, 1895. She is of German and English stock and was born in Lake county, California, in November, 1877. Her father was a pioneer of the Golden state, as also of Klickitat county, to which he came in 1883. Mrs. Sigler is a Washingtonian, born near Walla Walla. Both parents are still living, residents of Oregon. One child, Cecil C., born June 17, 1896, has blessed the union of Dr. and Mrs. Brockman. Dr. Brockman has one brother, George B., living at Ellensburg, and three sisters—Mrs. Lucy J. Hick, of Ellensburg also; Mrs. Mary M. Sharp, of Boise, Idaho, and Mrs. Bessie O. Riegel, a resident of the Kittitas valley. The doctor is one of the most prominent men in fraternal circles in this section of the state. He holds membership in the following lodges: Olive Branch Lodge, No. 89, A. F. & A. M.; Simcoe Lodge, No. 113, K. of P.; Bickleton Camp, No. 6249, M. W. A.; Arlington Lodge, No. 63, A. O. U. W.; Excelsior Lodge, No. 111, I. O. O. F.; Homestead Lodge, No. 20, B. A. Y., and Wheatland Union, No. 74, Order of Washington. He has held every office in the local Odd Fellow lodge and has been a delegate for many years to the grand lodge of that order. In politics he is also active. For ten years he has attended the Republican state conventions as a delegate, and he is now serving his party as central committeeman. He has not only won success in his profession, but has built up large interests in business lines, being a member of the firm of Clanton, Mitty & Company, a stockholder in the Bank of Bickleton, owner of the northern part of Bickleton's townsite, besides owning a drug store, furniture store, and other valuable town property; he is also a dealer in horses. The doctor is one of the county's truly successful citizens, respected by his fellow men and popular with all who know him because of his genial, generous qualities.

HON. NELSON B. BROOKS. Prominent among the most substantial citizens of Klickitat county, widely and favorably known throughout southern Washington and northern Oregon, a successful business man and a leading attorney of the state in which he resides is the subject of this biographical sketch. His labors have been directed along many lines, but, notwithstanding this diversity, he has won success in all and has developed to an unusual degree that rare and characteristically American quality—versatility. Amid the pine forests of Lenawee county, Michigan, Nelson B. Brooks was born January 23, 1858, the son of Emory E. and Martha (Taylor) Brooks, pioneers of that state. Emory E. Brooks was of English parentage, born in New York state, but in 1840, when eight years old, was brought to the Michigan frontier and was there educated and reared. The discovery of gold in California drew the young pioneer to the Pacific coast in 1850, the lad bravely making the hazardous journey across the continent. He plunged at once into the placer fields with such success that within three years he accumulated a small fortune. With this he returned to his Michigan home, via the Isthmus of Panama, and bought large tracts of wild land, which he improved as rapidly as possible. However, the attractions of the Pacific proved too strong for him to resist, and in 1874 he recrossed the plains, settling in Washington county, Oregon, where he still lives. Mrs. Brooks was also a native of New York, born in 1838, who came to Michigan when a child, and died there while still a young woman; she was of Scotch descent. Nelson B. was fifteen years old when he came to Oregon with his father. He assisted on the farm and attended school during the next five years, receiving a high school education. Then, when twenty years old, he commenced teaching school, first in Washington and Yamhill counties, Oregon. He came to Klickitat county in the month of May, 1880, and that spring filed on a homestead claim lying twenty miles west of the city. The succeeding seven years he made this farm his home during the summer months and taught school in the surrounding country during the winter months. Four years after coming to the county he was elected principal of the Goldendale school, and capably filled this position during the years 1885 and 1886, leaving it late in 1886 to become county superintendent by appointment to fill an unexpired term. In that capacity he served five years, being twice elected to the same office afterward. While superintendent he determined to enter the legal profession, and, with that end in view, read law in the office of Hiram Dustin four years. His energy and perseverance were rewarded by his admittance to the bar October 8, 1892, after having passed a creditable examination before the state board of examiners. He at once opened an office in Goldendale, and since that date has been steadily rising into prominence in his chosen profession. As an attorney, Mr. Brooks won national recognition in 1898 through his victory over the Northern Pacific Railway Company in a suit involving the title to 230,000 acres in Washington and Oregon. The case was dropped by the company after decisions had been rendered against it by the superior and state supreme courts. Mr. Brooks, who fought the settlers' case unaided, won his magnificent victory through the establishment of an interpretation new to the courts of the United States. For his services he received a sum that did not even pay his expenses, acting for a small coterie of poor settlers. The history of this notable case is treated elsewhere in this volume.

At Middleton, Oregon, August 12, 1883, he was united in marriage to Miss Rosa Olds, a native Oregonian, born April 25, 1861, to the union of Green and Eveline Olds. The father, who now lives with his daughter in Goldendale, is of English parentage and a native of Ohio, born in the year 1824. He went to Coldwater, Michigan, when a young man and resided there until 1852, when he crossed the Plains and settled at Middleton, Oregon. He was Middleton's postmaster for a quarter of a century; by trade he was a wagon maker and a blacksmith. Mrs. Olds was a native of Vermont, who went to Michigan as a child. She was educated in Michigan and there married. For many years previous to her marriage she taught school. Her death occurred at Goldendale in 1902. Mrs. Brooks was educated in the schools of Washington county and in the Mc-Minnville high school. She taught school previous to her marriage, spending six years in the profession in Oregon and Washington. One child, Zola O., born in Goldendale, July 18, 1892, blesses the home of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks take a keen interest in the social life of the community and are inestimably rich in loyal friends and well wishers. Mr. Brooks is identified with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, United Artisans, Eastern Star and Rathbone Sisters, and Mrs. Brooks belongs to the auxiliary lodges. Politically, he is a Democrat, though in 1882, when barely twenty-two years of age, he was elected on the Republican ticket as Klickitat's representative in the territorial legislature. In 1898 he was the Fusion candidate for state senator from his district. During the year 1895 he served as mayor of Goldendale. He was city attorney for the two succeeding years, and for the past ten or twelve years has been a member of the city council. Mr. Brooks also served as the county's first court commissioner: Always a military enthusiast, he was for five years adjutant of the Second regiment, Washington National Guard. His property interests are large, including the ownership of a large portion of the townsite of Goldendale, a modern two-story brick block on Main street, a controlling interest in the opera house, two other valuable business blocks and 400 acres of timber land. He has been largely instrumental in securing a railroad for the valley, by his own personal efforts obtaining the greater part of the C. R. & N.'s right of way. As early as 1895 he took a leading interest in railroad agitation, raising $1,300 that year for the purpose of making surveys and himself becoming a member of the surveying party. He then collected an additional $2,000 from Goldendale's business men, and with this money the first mile of road was graded northward from Lyle. Mr. Brooks is recognized by all as a leader, and none has done more toward the upbuilding of Klickitak county and Goldendale than this "self-made" man of the people. His popularity with all classes is deserved, his success is justified.

IREDELL S. STONE, one of the prosperous sheep owners and cattle raisers of Klickitak county, lives on his farm nearly five miles east of the town of Bickleton. He was born near Little Rock, in the state of Arkansas, January 9, 1857. His father, Samuel B. Stone, a farmer by occupation, was a native of Tennessee, born in June, 1831. He crossed the Plains with ox teams the first time in the spring of the year 1854, settling in California, and for some time afterward he mined on John's creek, but finally returned east. His second trip across the Plains was made four years after the first, and California was again his objective point, but he stayed there only a few months, having soon concluded to try his fortunes in Oregon. He settled in the fertile Willamette valley, and for the ensuing nineteen years followed farming there. In the latter part of 1879 he came to Klickitak county, took up the land which his son still holds, and engaged in farming and dealing in horses. He died in September, 1900. He was of Scotch descent, and his wife, whose maiden name was Gabrilla Yeager, was of German, but her ancestors were among the first settlers in the state of Pennsylvania. She was born in July, 1836. When a small girl, she became a resident of Arkansas, and it was there she met and married Mr. Stone. She is the mother of three children—Iredell, the oldest; Elias, engaged in business with him at the present time, and a daughter, deceased. The subject of this article came to Portland, Oregon, with his mother when nine years old, reaching that town via New York and the Panama route. Arriving at Portland, he went to the Willamette valley with his mother, there joining his father, who had bought a ranch in the valley. He grew to manhood in Oregon, receiving his education in the common schools. At the age of twenty, he started out to make his own living, his first employment being sheep herding. Coming to Klickitak county with his parents when twenty-two years old, he soon after leased a band of sheep, purchased some railroad land and engaged in the stock business. He did well with his sheep until the hard times in the nineties, when he, like all other sheep men, was exceedingly hard pressed, but he managed to weather the financial storm and came out all right. Since that time he has acquired possession of numerous tracts of land until he now owns a total of 2,200 acres, while but recently he disposed of four thousand acres to good advantage. This locality was wild and unsettled when he first came, there being numerous Indians about, who were not any too friendly, and plenty of cowboys, the cattle men ranging their stock over the entire district without restriction. For some time he and the rest of the family were obliged to live in tents, not being able to get any lumber. It was almost a year before they could secure enough to put up their house.

Mr. Stone was married in Klickitak county November 28, 1895, to Helen Meier, a lady of Swiss and German descent, born in Russell county, Kansas, February 14, 1875. Her father, John Meier, a native of Switzerland, born in 1849, came to this country in 1867, and has since followed farming. At present he resides at Lucas, in Klickitak county. Her mother, who is of German descent, was born in 1850. She, also, is in Lucas. Her maiden name was Mary Elms. She has three other children still living, namely, Harry, Mrs. Anna Stout, residing in Kansas, and Joseph, in Yakima county, Washington. Mr. Stone has one sister living, Mrs. Leona Baldwin, residing near Kiona, Washington. He and Mrs. Stone have four children—Cynthia, Walter Vernon, Ray and Lavina, the last named being the youngest. Fraternaly, Mr. Stone is connected with the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W., and his wife is a member of the Baptist church. He is at present one of the school board of District No. 31. In politics he is a Republican, sufficiently active to attend caucuses and conventions. An industrious, thrifty man, Mr. Stone has reduced most of his 2,200 acres to a state of cultivation and created for himself and family a fine home. His stock consists of 2,300 head of sheep and about sixty head of range cattle. As a man and citizen, he stands high in Klickitak county, his integrity and uprightness having won and retained for him the respect and good will of his neighbors.

SAMUEL SINCLAIR, an energetic business man, farmer and stock raiser at Dot postoffice, was born in Linn county, Kansas, on the 14th of March, 1873. His father, John Sinclair, was born in Ireland in 1828; came to this country as a young man, and eventually settled in Kansas, where he raised his family. He was a soldier in the Civil war. In the spring of 1882 he moved to Klickitak county, where he has since lived. His wife, whose maiden name was Maria McKien, was a native of Missouri, in which state she was married. She died in Klickitak county in the year 1896. The subject of this review received his education in the common schools of Washington, having been only nine years old when he came to this state with his parents. At the age of fifteen he started out to make his own living, herding sheep for Frank Lyon, in whose employ he remained for six years. On reaching his majority, he entered into sheep raising on his own account, and until the year 1901 he followed that business with assiduity and success. Selling out then, he purchased the Cleveland Roller Mills, which have a capacity of fifty barrels per day, and in the fall of the succeeding year he bought a half interest in a sawmill located at the head of Pine creek, six miles northwest of Cleveland. He disposed of the latter interest in 1903, selling to George W. McCredy. His realty holdings consist of 140 acres of fertile land, about three-fourths in cultivation, also 320 acres of timber land and 480 acres of pasture lands. He has considerable stock of various kinds on his farm.

At Walla Walla, Washington, February 12, 1901, Mr. Sinclair married Miss Gertrude Bailey, daughter of Lyman Bailey, a native of the vicinity of Boston, Massachusetts. Her father crossed the Plains in the early fifties, settled in Oregon and was married there, but some time in the seventies he came to Goldendale, Washington. He resided in the state until his death, which occurred near Cleveland in the year 1899. Mrs. Sinclair's mother, Mary (Graham) Bailey, was a native of Missouri. She crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents when a small girl, and now resides some six miles southeast of Cleveland. Mrs. Sinclair has the distinction of being a native of Klickitat county, having been born in Goldendale September 15, 1876. She received her education in the local public schools. She has two brothers, Lee and Robert, the former living at Walla Walla, the latter four miles south of Cleveland. She also has two sisters, namely, Lenore, at Walla Walla, and Mrs. Harriet Raymond, near Cleveland. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have two children—Hugh, born April 18, 1902, and Helen, born March 8, 1904. Mr. Sinclair is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., and Mrs. Sinclair belongs to the Presbyterian church. In politics, he is a Democrat. A young man of energy and unusual business talent, he has already achieved a degree of success in the commercial world of which a much older man might be proud, and his neighbors, who always admire thrift, respect him very highly as a shrewd homme d'affaires and a worthy citizen.

ELMER E. HINSHAW. There are comparatively few citizens of Klickitat county who have been engaged in agricultural pursuits in this section and otherwise identified with its history during the past twenty-seven years. Among those pioneer farmers and present-day successful men is he whose sketch is herewith presented. He resides three miles south of Goldendale. A native of Morgan county, Indiana, he was born August 19, 1861, to the marriage of Isaac and Elizabeth (Hadley) Hinshaw. They were of Southern birth, the father born in North Carolina April 15, 1831, the mother in the same state February 8, 1837. When Elmer E. was five years old he was taken to Kansas, where the family resided nine years. Then they went to California. In 1877 they came north to the rapidly developing Columbia river basin and took up their home in Klickitat county, which was then very sparsely settled and principally in the hands of stockmen. In Kansas, California and Washington our subject received the greater part of his education, attending the public schools of the various localities in which he lived during boyhood. He remained at home upon the farm until he reached his majority, then filed on a claim near Dot. There he farmed and raised stock for seven years, or until 1889, when he sold that property and invested in railroad land, purchasing a quarter section of forfeited land for $1.25 an acre. This purchase, together with one hundred and sixty acres since acquired, comprises his present farm, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation.

On the 13th of October, 1886, Mr. Hinshaw married Miss Ida R. Dingmon, a native of Washington county, Oregon, born June 19, 1867. Her father is of Canadian birth and English parentage. He removed from Canada to Michigan in 1860, served with distinction in the Civil war, and afterwards came to the Pacific Northwest. Mr. Dingmon is now a resident of Klickitat county, to which he came in 1871. Mrs. Laura (Sewell) Dingmon was also a native of Oregon, born in Washington county, the daughter of parents who were among Oregon's earliest pioneers; she died in 1896 at her home near Goldendale. Mrs. Hinshaw received the most of her school training in Klickitat county. At the age of twenty she was married to Mr. Hinshaw. She passed to the world beyond in 1896, mourned by all who knew her, for in her they recognized a woman of exceptional worth. Five children survived, whose names and birthdays are as follows: Amy, August 14, 1887; Cora, January 31, 1889; Eldon E., April 25, 1891; Wilma, June 14, 1893, and Anna, November 1, 1895; all are natives of Klickitat county.

Mr. Hinshaw was again married, February 17, 1903, Miss Hattie M. Gunn then becoming his bride. Her parents, Peter and Carrie (Fraser) Gunn, were born in Nova Scotia and both of Scotch descent. Hattie, the daughter, was born at Wine Harbor, Guysborough county, Nova Scotia. The family became residents of California in 1870, and eight years later came to Klickitat county, the year of the Indian outbreak in Oregon. Mr. Gunn is still one of the county's prosperous farmers; Mrs. Gunn's death occurred May 26, 1904. When seventeen years of age Miss Gunn, now Mrs. Hinshaw, commenced teaching school, and for sixteen years, including six years in the public schools of Goldendale, she was engaged in that high vocation, attaining commendable success. With the exception of one year, spent in King county, she taught in the Klickitat schools. To better fit herself for this work, she entered Willamette University, from which institution she received her degree June 14, 1892. She served two years on the board of county examiners. Mrs. Hinshaw also possesses marked ability as a painter and has spent considerable time studying under an excellent teacher. Much of her best work is to be found in her own home. Mr. and Mrs.

Hinshaw have gathered around them a wide circle of loyal friends and acquaintances and enjoy the highest esteem of all. By thrift and good judgment Mr. Hinshaw has transformed his land into one of the best appointed and most substantial farms in the valley.

VERNON T. HINSHAW is a prosperous farmer living one and one-half miles south of Goldendale, Washington. He was born in Morgan county, Indiana, April 1, 1859, the son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Hadley) Hinshaw, of whom further mention is made in this volume. Vernon T. received his education in the common schools of Kansas, to which state his parents moved from Indiana. When he was eight years old they went to California, to which state he also came when fifteen. Later he accompanied them to Klickitat county, arriving in 1878. Vernon lived at home with his parents till he was thirty years of age, then bought a tract of railroad land, which, with other land and improvements since added, comprises his present farm.

Mr. Hinshaw was married at Lyle, Washington, March 22, 1893, the lady being Miss Hattie Snider, a native of Kansas, born August 17, 1867. Miss Snider was educated in the common schools of Kansas and of Klickitat county. After completing her education she taught school for three terms, also tutored the family of Mr. George Smith for two years. She married Mr. Hinshaw when twenty-six years of age. Jesse J. Snider, her father, was born in Ohio, but moved with his parents to Indiana when he was a boy, and thence to Kansas. There he grew to manhood and married, and thence, in 1875, he came west as a homeseeker. Klickitat county he found suitable to his ends in view, and three years later, in 1878, he sent for his family, whom he had preceded to the home of his choosing. His death occurred during the winter of 1903 in Goldendale. Tenitia (Pate) Snider, the mother, was born in Tennessee, but when a small girl moved with her parents to Kansas. She is the mother of five children, among whom was Hattie, present wife of Mr. Hinshaw. At present she resides near Goldendale. Mr. and Mrs. Hinshaw are the parents of four children—Virgil V., born in Klickitat county April 3, 1895; Ruth C., October 31, 1897; Cecil F., January 3, 1901, and Frederick L., May 9, 1903, all in Klickitat county. In religion Mr. Hinshaw is a Methodist, and he is inclined to the Prohibitionist views in politics. His farm comprises two hundred and forty acres of land, one hundred and sixty of which are under cultivation, and is well stocked with all necessary equipments to make successful the efforts of its owner. The farm, in every detail, bears evidence of the well-directed industry of Mr. Hinshaw, and, in view of the increasing value of farming property in this section of the country, promises substantial returns for the toil and energy he has expended upon it.

JAMES COFFIELD. The gentleman whose life history it is now our purpose to review in brief has earned a rank among the most successful agriculturists of Klickitat county, of which for many years he has been a resident. Bringing to the business he chose for his own a degree of enthusiasm and energy and a soundness of judgment such as few possess, he has wrought his way steadily to fortune, and he now enjoys not only an abundance of worldly goods, but, what is more satisfying, the consciousness of having accomplished with unusual success a worthy undertaking. Mr. Coffield is not one of those who, in winning fortune in material things, have forfeited the esteem and respect of their fellow men, but in the battle he has fought with the forces of nature and the conditions of existence he has ever been mindful of the rights of his fellows, and all his goings in and comings out and all his dealings with his associates have been such as to retain the good will of the latter and cement to himself their friendships. Mr. Coffield is a native of the Keystone state, born in Allegheny county, July 4, 1845. His father, Timothy, was likewise a son of Pennsylvania and had in his veins the blood of that sturdy race known as the "Pennsylvania Dutch." By occupation he was a farmer and carpenter. The mother of our subject, Debby (Wright) Coffield, though of English descent, was by birth a Pennsylvanian. She made the state of her nativity her home during her entire life. Mr. Coffield, of whom we write, received his educational discipline in the public schools of Allegheny county, then gave his time and energies to the assistance of his father in farming operations until he was twenty-six. The elder Coffield rewarded his faithfulness by giving him a farm, and, with his newly-wedded helpmeet, he then began independently the struggle of life. Soon, however, the passion for the west seized him, and in about a year he had sold his holdings and was en route to Colorado. His change of residence was attended by no change in occupation, however. Purchasing a grain and stock farm, he gave himself assiduously to agriculture and the rearing of cattle for nine years, then he yielded to another impulse to move westward, and the fall of the year 1881 found him in Walla Walla county, Washington. His residence in Klickitat county dates from the next spring, when he purchased a stock farm from the Letterman Brothers, together with all their cattle and other domestic animals. This farm contained some four hundred acres. For two years it was the home of Mr. Coffield and the scene of his labors, then he traded it for a 620-acre tract on the Columbia river, where he lived continuously until 1902. In 1892, however, he had purchased another place eight miles south of Goldendale, and on this tract he has resided for a couple of years past. It consists of 420 acres, a half section of which is in cultivation, the remainder being used as pasture land. Mr. Coffield is evidently making a success of that species of agriculture so frequently advocated and so seldom carried on successfully known as diversified farming. He has one hundred Short-horn and Hereford cattle, twenty horses and other live stock, and his cultivated acres include a seven-acre orchard, a half-acre vineyard and a quarter-acre strawberry patch.

Mr. Coffield was married in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1870, the lady being Rosine, daughter of Christ and Rosine Koenig, both natives of Switzerland. Her father was a farmer in his native land, and when he came to Pennsylvania he naturally engaged in that business. He died in Colorado. Her mother, making the most of the opportunities which came to her by reason of having lived in both Europe and America, became an excellent scholar in both English and German. As Mrs. Coffield was born in Switzerland and spent the first five years of her life there, she also enjoyed like advantages in the study of language, and, by attending faithfully an academy in Pittsburg, she acquired an excellent education in the tongues of both her native and her adopted country. She likewise became a splendid musician. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Coffield are: Louisa J., now Mrs. Compton, born in Pennsylvania June 11, 1871; John H., born in Pennsylvania February 9, 1873; Alice M., who now runs a millinery store in Goldendale, born in Colorado March 3, 1875; Frank R., born in Colorado February 12, 1877; George, born in Colorado March 31, 1879; Elsie, born in Colorado May 11, 1881; Mrs. Emma Pike, born in Goldendale August 26, 1883; Mary J., born in Goldendale September 18, 1885, and now attending the Goldendale Academy; Roy A., born in Goldendale July 17, 1890; Eunis C., born in Klickitat county June 28, 1893. In politics Mr. Coffield is a Republican, and, notwithstanding his extensive farming interests, he finds time to give not a little attention to the public affairs of county, state and nation. Fraternally, he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows, and in religion he and his family are Presbyterians.

JOHN H. COFFIELD, son of James Coffield and a brother of Frank Coffield, both of whom have been mentioned elsewhere in this volume, is a respected citizen of Klickitat county, now residing ten miles south and two east of Goldendale on a ranch which is devoted to the production of grain, fruit and live stock. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born near Pittsburg February 9, 1873. The particulars of his family history appear in the sketches above mentioned. John H. received the greater part of his education after arriving in Klickitat county with his parents in 1882. Here he passed through the common schools and later graduated from Vashon college, on Vashon Island, near Tacoma. When not in college he lived at home the greater part of the time until he was twenty-two, and at that time accepted employment as a clerk in a general merchandise establishment owned by George Smith. Here he worked for nine months, then with R. L. Pfeil, bought a half interest in a meat market. He remained in this business for three months, then selling out and going to Great Falls, Montana, where he worked in a restaurant for two months. Upon quitting this occupation he went to Pullman, Washington, where for two years he conducted a meat market, except for one term, during which he served as city marshal. From Pullman he returned to Goldendale. For the first year after his arrival he managed his father's farm, afterwards purchasing a farm of his own, on which he has since lived.

Mr. Coffield married, in Goldendale, November 26, 1899, Miss Gertrude Reeder, a native of Idaho, born in Moscow, Latah county. Her father was Dr. James W. Reeder, a physician, who went to Goldendale in 1891, and is at present residing in that city. Before her marriage Mrs. Coffield received a practical education in the schools of Moscow and in Goldendale. She married Mr. Coffield when twenty years of age. To this marriage two children have been born—Florence, born in Pullman, Washington, October 11, 1900, and Lola, in Goldendale, October 6, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Coffield is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. In religion he adheres to the faith of the Methodist church. He is reputed to be a man of uprightness of character, and this attribute, combined with enthusiasm and affability of manner, gives him a high place in the esteem of his fellows.

FRANK R. COFFIELD is a well-known farmer and stockman residing ten miles south and two miles east of Goldendale, Washington. He is the son of James and Rosine (Koenig) Coffield, of whom further mention is made in this volume, and was born near Denver, Colorado, February 12, 1877. His parents came to this county, locating, when he was three years old, at Goldendale, and there he grew to early manhood. He attended the common schools and later took an academic course, acquiring a good education before reaching his majority. When twenty-four years of age he rented a farm and thence afterward worked independently, before this time having lived with his parents. After renting for two years, by hard work and good management, he was enabled to buy the property, which he has since devoted to farming and stock raising.

Mr. Coffield was married, in Goldendale, December 15, 1902, to Miss Clara Barnes, a native of Klickitat county, born February 14, 1884. She was educated in the common schools of Goldendale, and also attended an academy. She married Mr. Coffield when eighteen years of age. Her parents were Columbus O. and Florence (Golden) Barnes, both among the early settlers of Klickitat county. Mr. and Mrs. Coffield have one child—Marcelle, born November 26, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Coffield is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics he is a staunch Republican. In religion he adheres to the Methodist church. His property holdings amount to a half interest in three hundred and thirty-eight acres of land on the Columbia river and a half-interest in a herd of fifty cattle. He is yet a young man, and has not had time to achieve the profound success in life which, as is noted in this volume, is attributable to his father. Hereditary and natural inclinations, however, promise well for his future.

OSCAR VANHOY, a citizen of Goldendale and a sheep man of Klickitat county, was born in Henry county, Missouri, January 28, 1854. His father, Hamilton J. Vanhoy, is of German descent and a farmer by occupation. Born in North Carolina in 1818, he was a pioneer of Missouri, also of Klickitat county, to which he came in 1877. Upon his arrival in the far west he took up land and engaged in farming, and he still resides upon the old homestead, though age and decrepitude have long since compelled him to desist from heavy work, for he is now eighty-six. His wife, whose maiden name was Louisa Henley, is likewise of German parentage, but was born in North Carolina in 1821. She also lives on the old homestead, with her venerable husband. Oscar Vanhoy, who is one of a family of eight children, grew to manhood on the parental farm in Missouri, acquiring a common school education. On reaching his majority, he came west to California, where he lived two years, coming thence in 1877 to Klickitat county. At that time there was but one store in Goldendale. He took up a homestead and lived on the land fourteen months, engaged in farming, then bought a ranch in the Swale district, and farmed on the Masters place until August, 1808, when he moved into Goldendale, bought the livery barn of I. C. Darland and engaged in the livery business, continuing in the same until November, 1903. He then traded the barn for a half-interest in a band of 3,000 sheep, owned by A. B. Courtway, and he has since followed the sheep industry. He is the owner of some city property. When he came to Goldendale the Indian scare was at its height and the settlers had started to build forts, but these were never completed, and many of them moved to The Dalles, with their families. Mr. Vanhoy and his brother, David, were on the homestead one night when the horses stampeded, and they were sure at the time the Indians were outside in numbers, but fortunately it turned out to be only a scare.

In 1885, Mr. Vanhoy married Miss Emma M. Simms, the ceremony being performed in Klickitat county. Mrs. Vanhoy was born in Missouri and came to Klickitat county in 1877 with her parents. Her father, Richard Simms, a farmer by occupation, resides in the county, some miles east of Goldendale. Mr. Vanhoy has four brothers and one sister living—John, now in Oklahoma; David, residing in the county, three miles west of Goldendale; James and George, living at the distances of nine and twelve miles, respectively, from the same city, and Annie, now Mrs. Gilwater, residing, with her husband, twelve miles south of Goldendale. Mr. and Mrs. Vanhoy have two sons and two daughters, living at home, namely, Hamilton, William, Myrtle and Valinda. Fraternally, Mr. Vanhoy is connected with the K. of P. and the Woodmen of the World, and in politics he is a Republican, sufficiently active in the councils of his party to attend caucuses and conventions. He has also been on the county central committee, and at all times has helped elect his friends to various offices when they have been nominated, but has never sought office himself. Being a man of integrity and sterling qualities, he commands the respect and esteem of all with whom he is intimately associated.

WAYNE SCOTT WARWICK. One of Klickitat's most favorably known and successful citizens and also one of this county's pioneers is he whose life record forms the subject of this sketch. Mr. Warwick resides upon one of the largest ranches in this region, 1,160 acres, situated two and a half miles south and nine and a half east of the county seat, Goldendale. He was born in Anderson county, Tennessee, October 3, 1851, the son of Preston and Charity (Hansard) Warwick. His father was likewise a native of Tennessee, born September 20, 1816, to English parents; he followed farming until his death, several years ago, in his native state. The mother is still living in Anderson county, where she was born September 20, 1829. She was married in that state and has spent most of her life within its confines. Wayne S. Warwick was educated in the public schools of Tennessee. He remained at home until he reached the age of eighteen, then decided to move west, and accordingly came to Linn county, Oregon. For the first two years he worked for different farmers throughout the country, then formed a partnership with James Thompson, with whom he was connected in that relation six years. In the fall of 1879 he came to Klickitat county, where his first work was done for Daniel C. Cram. Later he formed a partnership with his employer and together they bought 240 acres of railroad land, which they farmed successfully six years, or until 1888, when Mr. Warwick bought Mr. Cram's interest. Since that time Mr. Warwick has lived on that place, farming, and he has placed several hundred acres of land in cultivation.

Mr. Warwick was united in marriage in this county, June 22, 1881, to Miss Anna Duffield, a daughter of Thomas J. and Sarah J. (Neff) Duffield. Her father was born in Virginia in 1828, to Dutch-Irish parents, and was a farmer by occupation. He moved to Illinois in 1847, and in 1852 or-gained a company of young men and accomplished a most daring and creditable feat, that of walking across the Plains to California. In the Golden state he pursued mining for many years, and there he was married in 1856. He removed to Klickitkat county in 1879, where his death occurred in 1902. Mrs. Duffield was a native of Indiana, of English descent, who crossed the Plains with her parents when a girl of thirteen years. Three years later she was married. Mrs. Warwick was born in California, August 13, 1857, and is the oldest of ten children. She was educated in the public schools of California, and was married in Washington when twenty-three years of age. Her brother, Robert, lives in Anaconda, B. C.; another brother, Frank M., resides in Idaho; a sister, Mrs. Frances E. Brown, lives at Hood River; another sister, Mrs. Mary L. Miller, resides in the Klickitkat valley; Thomas L. Duffield lives in Mohler, Washington; George, in LaGrande, Oregon; Daniel, at Mohler, Washington; James E., in Buffalo, New York, and another sister, Mrs. Alice E. Adams, lives ten miles west of Goldendale. Mr. and Mrs. Warwick have five children—Thomas P., born May 4, 1884; Elvira M., born December 5, 1886; Ada C., born November 12, 1888; Waldo S., born April 2, 1891, and Annie L., born May 1, 1897, all in this county. Mrs. Warwick takes a deep interest in religious matters and is a member of the Methodist church; Mr. Warwick is a Baptist. Fraternally, he is identified with the Odd Fellows, A. O. U. W. and Woodmen of the World, and in politics he is a staunch Republican. For a number of years he has served his community as a school director. Of his entire land holdings, more than six hundred acres are under cultivation, and he ranges considerable stock. Few men in the county are as popular as Mr. Warwick or have been as successful in life. He is one of the influential and substantial citizens of his county.

ROBERT G. FERGUSON, one of the many prosperous farmers of Klickitkat county, resides on his well-improved ranch of 640 acres, three miles south and seven miles east of Goldendale. He was born in the province of Ontario, Canada, July 21, 1853, the son of Robert and Christina (Ross) Ferguson, the former of whom, a native Scotchman, was likewise a farmer by occupation. He immigrated to Canada at an early date and there he was married and passed the remainder of his days. The mother of our subject was born in Scotland in 1810, went to Canada with her brother and sister in the early days and died there August 5, 1891. Robert G. Ferguson received his education in the Canadian schools. He remained at home with his parents until twenty-three, then crossed the line into the United States and came west to California. For a period of two years he worked on a ranch near the city of Sacramento, but in March, 1879, he came north to Klickitkat county and bought the improvements and filed a homestead claim to his present place. He has since made his home on the property, adding to his holdings from time to time and achieving a splendid success in his farming operations. He has placed one-half of his section of land in cultivation, also giving some attention to stock raising, especially to the rearing of hogs.

In Klickitkat county, December 22, 1886, Mr. Ferguson married Ella, daughter of Thomas D. and Susan (Boots) Burgen. Her father, a native of Kentucky, of Pennsylvania Dutch extraction, was a farmer by occupation. He early removed to Missouri, and in 1852 crossed the Plains to Linn county, Oregon, whence, seven years later, he came to Klickitkat county, locating near Centerville and becoming one of the earliest pioneers of Klickitkat county. He remained in the county until his death, which occurred in August, 1897. The mother of Mrs. Ferguson is a native of Oregon, in which state she grew up and was married. She now resides on Chamberlin Flats, Klickitkat county. Mrs. Ferguson was born in this county, August 27, 1863. She was educated in the public schools, and, after completing her education, taught two years. She and Mr. Ferguson are the parents of two children—Walter, born November 15, 1887, and Harry, born October 22, 1889. In politics, Mr. Ferguson is a Democrat. He combines business acumen and shrewdness with sterling integrity of character and a certain geniality of disposition, which wins him the good will and esteem of those with whom he is associated.

EDSON E. PIERCE, a competent and well-to-do farmer of Klickitkat county, resides two miles south and two and a half east of Goldendale. He was born in Renovo, Clinton county, Pennsylvania, February 12, 1870, the son of Hon. Daniel W. and Belinda B. (Lathe) Pierce. His father, who was born in the town of Derby, Orleans county, Vermont, was a mill man by occupation. He moved to Nebraska in the early days, and in 1867 changed his residence to Pennsylvania, whence some ten years later he came to Albany, Oregon. In October, 1879, he came to Klickitkat county, which elected him, in 1892, to represent it in the legislature. He passed away in 1900. His wife, a native of Vermont, in which state she was married, died in Goldendale some years ago.

Edson E., whose life is the theme of this outline, took his earliest steps in the pursuit of knowledge in the schools of the Quaker state, then attended school two years in Oregon, to which he had come at the age of seven, and completed his education in Klickitkat county. He worked in his father's mill until reaching the age of twenty-three, at which time he married and started to farm on his own account, securing a ranch some five miles east of Goldendale. He resided on that property four years. In 1901, he secured the place on which we now find him, and to its cultivation his energies have been devoted ever since. His holdings now aggregate 240 acres, all but fifteen of which are under cultivation. June 3, 1893, in Goldendale, Mr. Pierce married Rachel McEwen, daughter of Methuen McEwen, a native of Scotland and by occupation a farmer and stockman. He came to America when a small boy and settled in Missouri, from which state he crossed the Plains in the early days with a company of Mormons, settling in Utah. At a later date he came thence to Klickitat county, where he died in 1895. Mrs. Pierce's mother, whose maiden name was Sarah A. Stevens, was married in Utah, but now resides in Goldendale. Though born in Utah, April 19, 1874, Mrs. Pierce was reared and educated in Klickitat county. She and Mr. Pierce are parents of two children—Mathew M., born June 4, 1894, and Marjorie M., born March 16, 1901, both in Goldendale. Mr. Pierce is, in religion, a Presbyterian, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. He adheres to the principles of the Republican party. A man of high moral character and sterling integrity, he is highly esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances.

JOSEPH O. YOUNG, one of Klickitat county's pioneers and an estimable citizen, follows the occupation of a farmer on his fine 200-acre ranch, seven miles southeast of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, February 4, 1857, the son of Daniel and Ailazan (Henton) Young. The father was born in Ohio, of American parentage, and was a carpenter and farmer. He was taken to Missouri, the "gateway of the west," when nine years of age, and in 1848 came across the Plains to Oregon by ox team conveyance. His parents bought a farm in the Willamette valley, and there he lived until 1875, when he came to Klickitat county, in which was his home until swept away by the grim reaper in 1891. The mother was a native of Indiana, who came as a little girl to Oregon in 1850; she died in that state. Joseph attended the common schools of Oregon, receiving a fair education. He was eighteen years of age when he came to this county and commenced farming and stock-raising. Four years he raised sheep. He resided on railroad land eighteen years, and when it was forfeited to the government he filed a homestead claim to it, and he has since made it his home. He still farms the land, nearly three-fourths of which is in a splendid state of cultivation. One of Mr. Young's uncles was killed during the blood-thirsty Cayuse war that followed the Whitman massacre.

Miss Eliza M. Myers, a daughter of John and Hulda M. (Nunley) Myers, was united in marriage to Mr. Young, January 9, 1884. Her father was of Dutch descent. He crossed the Plains to Oregon in early days and settled in Yamhill county, where he died several years ago. Her mother, who now resides with her, at an advanced age, is a native of Tennessee; she was married in Arkansas.

Mrs. Young was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, in October, 1868, and was educated in the public schools there established. She was married in Klickitat county at the age of seventeen. Five children have been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Young, of whom Bessie M., the oldest, was born December 21, 1886; Joseph W. was born in Klickitat county, February 2, 1891; Della M., five years later; John M., in 1897, and Nellie, in 1900. Mr. Young is a member of the Methodist church, and in politics is a staunch defender of Republican principles. He is one of the popular members of his community, a farmer of progressive and modern ideas, and a man of sterling honesty and exalted character.

EVERETTE C. THOMPSON, a progressive ranchman of Klickitat county, resides on his 160-acre farm, three miles south and four east of Goldendale. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, January 21, 1874, the son of James Thompson, who was born in Tennessee in 1848, and who was likewise a farmer. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Harriet Cram, was born in Minnesota and came thence to Oregon when she was seventeen years old, and her marriage occurred in the latter state. She is at present living near her son. She has married again, and is now Mrs. G. D. Whitcomb. Our subject received his education in the public schools of Oregon and of Klickitat county. His father died when he was twenty years old and he ran the parental farm twelve months afterward, then rented Col. Pike's place and farmed it four years. In 1899 he bought his present place, and he has since lived on and farmed the land, which is all in cultivation; also raising stock. He holds as a homestead a quarter section of mountain land, besides his farm near Goldendale.

March 3, 1896, in the town of Goldendale, Mr. Thompson married Hattie, daughter of George T. and Mary D. (Newman) Slaughter. Her father was born in Peoria county, Illinois, in 1840, and was a farmer by occupation. He removed to Missouri in 1856, married in that state and lived there until 1893, at which time he came to Klickitat county. He passed away in June, 1894. His wife was born in Hardin county, Kentucky, in 1842. Her parents moved to Missouri when she was a small girl, and she grew up and was educated there. Mrs. Thompson was born in Christian county, Missouri, November 14, 1876. She received her education in the schools of Missouri and Washington, having come to the latter state at the age of sixteen. She is the fifth in a family of eight, her brothers and sisters being: Charles W., in Missouri; Mrs. Mary C. Kivett, also in that state; Mrs. Eliza J. Godsey, in Franklin county, Kansas; Theodore T. and George H. C., in Douglas county, Washington; Mrs. Clara A. Miller and Mrs. Pearl Mobley, in Klickitat county. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have four children, namely, Guy, born October 12, 1897; David R., on the 30th of April two years later; Victor B., January 11, 1901, and Claud L., March 14, 1902, all in this county. Mrs. Thompson belongs to the Women of Woodcraft, and in religion she is a Baptist. Fraternally, Mr. Thompson is connected with the I. O. O. F. and the Woodmen of the World; politically, he is a Republican. He is an upright citizen, possessing the esteem and good will of his neighbors.

JOHN ATKINSON, one of the leading farmers of Klickitat county, resides three miles south and four miles east of the city of Goldendale, Washington. He was born in Nodaway county, Missouri, October 13, 1852, the son of Robert and Elizabeth (Clemens) Atkinson. His father was born in Ireland, came to the United States with his parents when six years old and became a resident of Andrew county, Missouri. He grew up in that locality and was married there, the lady of his choice being a native of Clay county, Missouri, of Dutch and Irish descent. By occupation he was a farmer. He came to Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1870, and there he remained until his death, which occurred in 1891. Mrs. Atkinson also died in Yamhill county, Oregon. John Atkinson, of this article, received his education in the common schools of Missouri, attending school, also, for a short time in Oregon, though he was eighteen when he came to that state. He remained at home until he reached the age of twenty-two, then married, and for the ensuing four or five years he followed farming. He next engaged in the hotel business in Newberg, Oregon, but in the spring of 1893 he embraced an opportunity to exchange this place for his present home in Klickitat county, and here he has ever since followed the occupation of a farmer, achieving a very marked success. His land holdings include 1,720 acres, and of this mammoth domain he cultivates fully 1,000 acres.

Mr. Atkinson was married in Yamhill county, Oregon, March 12, 1876, to Miss Eliza J. Parrott, daughter of George and Martha (Ewell) Parrott. Her father, who was born in Cook county, Tennessee, February 10, 1833, was a pioneer of the county, having come in the fall of 1878. He is an honored veteran of the Civil war, and one of the substantial farmers of Klickitat county, his residence at present being two miles west of his daughter's home. Mrs. Atkinson's mother was born near St. Joe, Missouri, January 3, 1830, and Mrs. Atkinson herself is a native of Kansas, born August 11, 1859, though she grew to womanhood and received her education in the states of Missouri and Oregon. She is the mother of four children: Edward D., born December 24, 1879; Hugh M., on the 9th of June, 1883; George R., April 2, 1885; Verona B., April 13, 1887, all in Yamhill county, Oregon. Mr. Atkinson is a member of the Methodist church and in his fraternal connections he is an Odd Fellow. He adheres to the principles of the Republican party. A competent farmer of modern and progressive ideas, he has achieved a success of which he has just reason to be proud. He has been no less successful in winning the esteem and regard of his fellow citizens, who speak of him as one who combines unusual business shrewdness with the highest integrity of character.

TUNIS T. HINSHAW, a representative citizen of Klickitat county and a farmer by occupation, resides on his ranch two and a half miles south and two east of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Morgan county, Indiana, May 3, 1857, the son of Isaac Hinshaw, whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume. His father and mother were both natives of North Carolina. He received his education in the public schools of Indiana and Kansas, to the latter of which states he went with his parents at the age of ten. The family came west to California when he was about eighteen years old and the following year he took up the carpenter's trade, which he followed for nearly three years. He came north to Klickitat county in 1878, arriving on the last day of May, and settled in Goldendale, where he followed his trade for a period of three years. He then took up agriculture as a means of gaining a livelihood. He was employed by R. W. Helm fourteen months, then in the fall of 1882 rented his employer's place and engaged in farming on his own account. Two years were thus spent. He filed on his present homestead in June, 1883, and has since made his home on the land, following agriculture and stock raising. He now owns about 260 acres of land, of which he is at present cultivating 200 acres. He has considerable stock of different kinds on the place, but is making a specialty of the best blooded hogs. He is an enterprising, progressive and successful farmer.

October 30, 1883, in Marion county, Oregon, Mr. Hinshaw married Lucinda J., daughter of John W. and Mary A. (Clymer) Short. Her father was born in Delaware to German parents and was a minister by calling. Crossing the Plains to Oregon in 1852, he came thence to Klickitat county in 1873, but returned two years later to the Webfoot state, where he passed away in 1902. Her mother was brought up in Indiana, married in Iowa and died in Oregon in 1805. Mrs. Hinshaw is a native of Oregon, born in Marion county in 1861, and educated in the local schools. She and Mr. Hinshaw are parents of eight children, namely, Lelia M., born in Klickitat county, September 18, 1887; Mabel H., September 14, 1889; Ernest T., November 4th, two years later; Marv E., December 10, 1893; Laura E., October 23, 1895; Alice and Agnes, twins, born April 25, 1897; and Hazel, born two years later on the 19th of October, all in Klickitat county. Mr. Hinshaw is a member of the Methodist church and a Prohibitionist. He has served in the capacity of school clerk for the past fourteen years. A man of generous traits, good morals and sociability, and a public spirited, progressive citizen, he enjoys the esteem and confidence of all his neighbors.

WILLIAM L. HARRIS, a Klickitat county land owner and farmer, resides on his ranch two and a half miles south and two miles east of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, January 2, 1865, the son of John E. L. and Mary (Armstrong) Harris. His father, who was of German descent, was likewise a farmer by occupation. Locating in Jackson county, Missouri, he resided there until 1881, at which time he came west to Klickitat county and took up a homestead two miles and a half south of Goldendale, where he lived until his death in 1898. His wife, Mary, who is likewise of German descent, claims Tennessee as her birthplace, but now makes her home in Klickitat county. William L. Harris received his early education in Missouri and later attended school in this county, to which he came with his parents at the age of fifteen. He remained on the parental farm until twenty-three, then bought the improvements and filed on a homestead near-by, on which property he lived some ten years. In 1899 he traded his first place for the present home, removing to the latter farm soon after making the deal. His property holdings comprise 461 acres, of which at present he is cultivating 300 acres, the balance being pasture land. He has a number of kinds of stock on the farm, to which he gives his careful attention, and he is achieving a very enviable success in agriculture and stock raising.

In Goldendale, on Independence Day, 1880, Mr. Harris married Miss Dora Simms, whose father, Richard Simms, was born in Clay county, Missouri, December 23, 1839. He followed farming in his native state until the outbreak of the Civil war, then enlisted at St. Joe and served throughout the strife. He came to Benton county, Oregon, in 1874, and thence to Klickitat county three years later, and at present he resides about three miles and a half southeast of Goldendale. Mrs. Harris's mother, whose maiden name was Mary Garner, was born and married in Missouri, and passed away in Klickitat county in 1886. Mrs. Harris was born in Missouri on the 20th of February, 1871, but was educated in the common schools of Washington. She and Mr. Harris are parents of four children: Mary, born September 13, 1891; Annie B., born August 28, 1893; Clara, December 15, 1895; and Ethel G., January 17, 1900. In religion, Mr. Harris is a Methodist, and fraternally, he is connected with the Woodmen of the World and its auxiliary, the Women of Woodcraft. He is an active Democrat, taking great interest in all political matters. Interested deeply in the cause of education, he is now discharging the duties of the office of a school director. A successful agriculturist, a capable and honorable business man, a public spirited citizen, and a good neighbor, he enjoys a large measure of respect and esteem among those who know him well.

WINFIELD S. LEFEVER, one of Klickitat county's pioneers and at present a prosperous farmer and stock raiser, living two miles east and a mile south of the city of Goldendale, was born in Van Buren county, Iowa, December 19, 1848. He is the son of John and Rebecca (Robinson) LeFever, the former born in Pennsylvania to French and Dutch parents. The elder LeFever was a mechanic, though during the greater part of his life he followed the occupation of a farmer. When a young man he moved to Iowa, where he was married. He went to Texas in 1873 and died in that state in the year 1894. Rebecca LeFever was born in Ohio in 1830, and when a small girl, was taken to Iowa by her parents. She now makes her home in Montana. Winfield S., the subject of this sketch, was denied the privilege of a good school education, through unfortunate circumstances, but nevertheless has educated himself and has acquired a comprehensive knowledge of things practical and useful. He worked with his father on the farm until he was nearly twenty-six years old and then formed a partnership with his father which lasted four years. His residence in Klickitat county dates back to the year 1878, the time of the great Indian scare in this region. In the fall of that year he located on a piece of railroad land, upon which he has since made his home. When this land reverted to the government through the forfeiture act, Mr. LeFever fled upon it as a homestead and subsequently acquired title. He now owns some 600 acres of valley land, of which 230 are in a high state of cultivation, the balance being pasture.

Mr. LeFever was married in Van Buren county, Iowa, October 12, 1871, to Miss Mary Findlav, a daughter of Alexander F. and Margaret (Whitfield) Findlav. Her father was a Scotchman, a coal miner and farmer by occupation. He came to the United States when fourteen years old and settled in Maryland. Afterwards he removed to Iowa, where his death occurred. The mother was also born in Scotland, though she was married in Maryland, and is now a resident of Iowa. Mrs. LeFever was born in Maryland, April 27, 1848, and educated in the schools of her native state. She was married at the age of twenty-two. She and Mr. LeFever are the parents of eight children, of whom George C., born in Iowa, in 1874, and at present living in Alaska, is the oldest. Frank and Harry were born in Texas, Nettie E. in Klickitat county, in 1879, and the other children, Richard C., Jesse, Daniel and Mary, also in this county. Mr. LeFever is a member of the Methodist church and in politics, is a Prohibitionist. He is at present serving his district in the capacity of school director. Besides his real estate, he also owns nearly a hundred head of stock, including a large number of grade Durham cattle. Mr. LeFever is a gentleman of high moral character, a successful farmer and stockman, possesses those companionable qualities which attract friends, and is, in short, one of the community's most substantial men.

ARTHUR G. HARRIS is a farmer and stockman, residing five miles southeast of Goldendale, Washington, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, May 17, 1858, the son of John E. L. Harris, a farmer, also native of Tennessee, born February 16, 1826. The elder Harris moved with his family to Jackson county, Missouri, in 1861. Here he served in divers engagements which took place in Missouri incident to the Civil war. At the close of the war he moved from Jackson county to Cass county, in which he resided till March 23, 1881, when he started west, his objective point being Goldendale, and at this place he resided till the time of his death. The mother, Mary F. (Armstrong) Harris, was a native of Tennessee, born August 21, 1833, and is still living, her residence now being in Klickitacounty. Arthur G. lived in Missouri during the interval between his second and his twenty-second year. During this time he became well acquainted with the Younger brothers, and in Cass county attended school with the Dalton boys. It was at this school, his playmates lads who were to become the most desperate criminals in the country, that Arthur received such education as was to come to him through the use of school-books. He came west with his parents in 1881, but in the fall of that year returned to Missouri and, on November 21st, married Miss Mary Alice Cassell, a native of Springfield, Missouri, born August 3, 1862. Her father, Joseph Cassell, died when she was young. Immediately after marriage Mr. Harris returned to Goldendale, and settled on the place he now occupies, to the original one hundred and sixty acres of which he has added forty acres, secured from the railroad by purchase. The farm has been devoted by Mr. Harris principally to the production of grain. When he began farming he was obliged to haul his wheat many miles to Columbus, his nearest market, where it was weighed on diminutive scales, five sacks at a time. Mr. Harris has raised a crop every year since he first began farming in 1882 on his fine two hundred-acre farm. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Harris, of whom the first, Charles W., is dead. Those living are Sadie Ella, Lottie May, Millie I., Maude E. and Claude E., twins, Ada B., Martha A. and Arthur J. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Harris are Mrs. Polly A. Oldham, Mrs. Julia A. Morgan, John P., now living in Goldendale; William L., Mrs. Alice C. Brown, residing west of Goldendale; Richard L., in Oregon; Mrs. Carrie L. Jones, residing at The Dalles, and Wiley J., living in Klickitacounty. Fraternally, Mr. Harris is associated with the Woodmen of the World, and Mrs. Harris has membership in the Women of Woodcraft order. Both husband and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In politics, Mr. Harris is almost independent, though slightly inclined to favor the Prohibition party. At different times he has served his community as school clerk, and as road supervisor. As a threshing machine man, Mr. Harris is one of the experts of the county. His bearing in business affairs, as well as in matters relative to the interests of his community, has ever been strictly commendable, and such as to merit the respect of his fellow citizens.

DAVID A. SHEARER is a farmer and stockman, residing two and one-half miles southwest of Goldendale, Washington. He is a native of Iowa, born October 10, 1861. His father, William Shearer, was born in South Carolina, and died January 29, 1890, at the age of seventy-two years. The elder Shearer was one of the pioneers of Oregon. He made the journey to this then unsettled wilderness in 1864, crossing the Plains, in company with other equally hardy homeseekers, with a team of oxen. In 1884 he came to Klickitacounty, and there he resided till the time of his death. The mother, Nancy (Johnson) Shearer, died when David A. was but four years of age, and of her he knows but little. David was brought to Oregon when three years old, and remained there on a farm until nineteen. He received his education in the common schools, also attending a business college in Portland, from which he received a diploma. After keeping books for two years, he took a homestead in Klickitacounty, to which he had come in 1882. This place he proved up on and sold; then he purchased other property, which he in turn sold, and for some time he continued this course of buying and selling. He worked as a cowboy at a time when fences were practically unthought of hindrances to rangemen, and it was during this period of his life that he learned to speak Chinook fluently. During 1886 and 1887 he drove stage from Goldendale to North Yakima, and followed other occupations, all incident to the pioneer conditions obtaining at that time.

In March, 1887, in Klickitacounty, Mr. Shearer married Miss Jennie Stephens, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1870. Her father, Thomas Stephens, one of the pioneers of Oregon, is now living near Roseburg, in that state. He crossed the Plains in 1849, and fought in the wars necessary to quell the Cheyenne Indians, also in the early Indian wars of Washington and Oregon. One battle in which he took part was fought at a point just east of the present location of Goldendale. Some of the campaigns in which Mr. Stephens served were among the severest during the subjugation of the Indian tribes of the West. Mr. Stephens' wife, Ann (Thornton) Stephens, is also still living, but her mother died when Jennie—now

Mrs. David A. Shearer—was but twelve years old. Her demise occurred near the site of the present Arlington, and a wagon-box was used for the interment, since no better coffin was obtainable. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Shearer are Chester L., now at home; Ida Nell, Gretta M., and Delbert A. Politically, Mr. Shearer is independent, and fraternally, he is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. Mrs. Shearer is a member of the Baptist church. Their home farm comprises two hundred and thirty-eight acres of land, all in a body, but this land is only a part of what Mr. Shearer farms, as he leases extensively. Up to last year he gave considerable attention to cattle raising, but is now largely out of the business and into that of raising draft horses. His animals are among the best in the county.

ANGUS J. WATSON, an energetic Klickitat county farmer and stockman, resides on his 160-acre farm, situated some six miles east of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Napa county, California, in December, 1874, the son of Robert and Anna (Ferguson) Watson. His father is a native of Ireland, and likewise a farmer by occupation. He crossed the Atlantic to this country when six months old, and his parents settled in Canada. He removed to California when a young man, and followed farming in the Golden state until 1879, at which time he removed north to Klickitat county, and bought some land. He again farmed in the county until 1901, then sold the ranch and moved to Yakima county, where he and his wife now reside. She was born in Canada, of Scotch-Irish parents.

Angus J., one of a family of six children, came to Klickitat county with his parents when five years old. He grew up in the county, and received his education in the public schools near the parental home, his spare time being employed on the farm. At the age of eighteen he started out in life for himself, and since that time has made his own living. He bought his present place in 1889, and has since followed the occupation of a farmer and stock raiser. Besides his own property he also rents two other farms, and he is cultivating over three hundred acres at present.

In Klickitat county, in January, 1900, Mr. Watson married Miss Minnie Hamilton, daughter of Alexander and America Jane (Chamberlain) Hamilton. Her father is now sheep commissioner of the county, of which he is one of the early pioneers. Mrs. Watson was born in the county in 1882. Mr. Watson has a brother, Elmer R., and a sister, now Mrs. Ida Sexton, who lives near his home, also another brother named Fred. Mrs. Maud Richardson, wife of a Bickleton blacksmith, is also his sister, and his other sister, Mrs. Collie Harnard, makes her home in Pasco, Washington. Angus is the second oldest child, his brother Elmer being the oldest of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Watson have one child, Alice Christine, a girl of three years. Their son, Robert A., just recently passed away. In politics, Mr. Watson does not ally himself with any party, but votes for the best man. He is an energetic young man, and is succeeding admirably.

WILLIAM C. AND ALBERT RUST are prosperous business men of Goldendale, Washington, and are partners in a clothing, gents' furnishing goods and shoe store. They are sons of Carl C. and Minnie (Lindenberg) Rust. The elder Rust is a native of Germany, and a mason and contractor by trade. He came to the United States in 1873, and settled in Faribault, Minnesota, where he still lives. Mrs. Rust is also of German descent, and now lives with her husband in Minnesota.

William C. Rust was born in Prussia, Germany, in 1871. He grew to manhood in Faribault, having been but two years old when his parents brought him to this country. He learned the milling trade, and followed it in Faribault and Blue Earth, Minnesota, until May, 1902. While learning the trade, he was in the employ of the Old Straight River Stone Mills. Having come to Goldendale from Minnesota, he worked for the Goldendale Milling Company for some time, but in February, 1904, his brother, Albert, came to the city, and the two opened their present business shortly after.

Albert Rust also grew up in Faribault, Minnesota, attending a German school until he was thirteen years old, then completing his education in the public schools. He began to make his own living by working in a dry goods and gents' furnishing goods store, serving as window decorator in the establishment. He also worked twelve months in a Marshall, Minnesota, store, at the same business.

The brothers have two sisters, named Minnie and Augusta Rust, but their brother, Charles, is now deceased. They have also two brothers living, Henry and Herman. The brothers are both single; and William is fraternally connected with the K. of P. and Modern Woodmen of America, while Albert also belongs to the latter order. Both were brought up in the Lutheran church, and Albert still adheres to that denomination. Both are Republicans, and William took an active interest in politics while in Minnesota. He owned a farm in this locality, but has recently disposed of it, and also sold an interest in a homestead that he had held for some little time. He still owns a business lot in the best part of the city. While both are newcomers in Goldendale, the Rust Brothers have already proven their ability to win the prizes which the west has for them. They have already gained an enviable standing as business men of energy and integrity. At this writing they are erecting a brick building which they hope to occupy with their stock of goods.

GUY SHELLADY, a business man of Goldendale, was born in Gilliam county, Oregon, in 1871, the son of John and Ella (Ricord) Shellady, the father a stockman by occupation, born in Iowa. He crossed the Plains in 1849, at the time of the gold excitement, and settled in California, where he mined for a number of years with success. Later he moved to what was then a part of Wasco county, Oregon, and engaged in the stock business. The county has been divided since, and the locality in which he then lived is now a part of Gilliam county. He was one of the first three settlers on Rock creek, in that county. A large cattle raiser, at the time of his death, in 1873, he owned a band of 3,000 head. He took part in the Indian wars of Oregon, as one of the volunteers, doing his full share toward subduing the troublesome redskins. His grandfather, Alexander, came from Lancashire, England, in the early days. The mother of our subject is a native of the Golden state, born in 1848, a member of a Pennsylvania Dutch family. Her parents crossed the Plains very early in the last century. She is still living, a resident of Salem, Oregon. Guy Shellady, of this review, was educated in the common schools of Gilliam county. He remained at home until nineteen years of age, after completing his school training, riding the ranges and engaged in the stock business generally, shipping numerous carloads of horses to the eastern markets. In 1890 he went east, and was a resident of Detroit City, Minnesota, for a number of years. Coming to Goldendale in 1899, he opened an establishment there; and he has ever since been numbered among the business men of that city.

In 1902, Mr. Shellady married Miss Lillian Washburn, a native of Goldendale, whose father, John Washburn, was an old pioneer of this section, and one of the first settlers in the county. Mr. Shellady has one sister, now Mrs. Clemma May Durbin, a resident of Salem, Oregon. In politics, Mr. Shellady is a Democrat. He is a well-to-do business man of this growing city, possessed of a genial, approachable disposition.

JACOB RICHARDSON, United States mineral surveyor at Goldendale, was born in Clark county, Illinois, July 29, 1859, the son of Jesse H. and Lydia J. (Groves) Richardson. His father, a farmer and stockman, is a native of Cayuga county, New York, but of English descent. He was born in 1834, crossed the Plains to Utah in 1865, and came to Yakima county in 1866. The next year he moved into Klickitat county, took up land near the town of Columbus, and engaged in farming and stock raising. Later he moved to the Swale district and in 1894 he bought his present home. His wife, who is of German descent, but a native of Ohio, born in 1840, is also still living. Her father and brothers served in the Civil war. The subject of this article crossed the Plains with his parents at the age of six and grew up in Klickitat county on the parental farm. Starting out with a government survey party, as chain carrier, when only eleven, he has since followed surveying in many different counties of the state, even working in the Sound county, though his principal fields of operation have been Yakima, Kittitas and Spokane counties. He specially qualified himself for the work about the time he became of age, making himself master of his profession. When he came to the county it was wild and unsettled and overrun with stock. There was a small settlement at Columbus and a few settlers in what is known as the Swale district. Among the settlers at Columbus he recalls Amos Stark, Thomas Jenkins and S. H. Jones. There was no Goldendale then. In the Swale district John and Thomas Burgen, Alba Bunnell, Chauncy Goodnoe, M. S. Short, W. B. Walker, S. H. Fish, John Golden and Nelson Whitney were about the only ones, and there were a few settlers at Rockland, including A. S. Curtis, A. M. Gilmore, Thomas Connell, and Thomas Johnson, the pioneer merchant of Goldendale. Marion S. Flower was also living near Rockland at that time. The people had an excitement almost every year over supposed Indian uprisings, but no serious trouble ever occurred. Mr. Richardson was near Rattlesnake Springs when Mr. and Mrs. Perkins were killed by the Indians, and he saw the murderers after they were captured. He was below Lewiston, Idaho, on government survey work at the time of the Nez Perce outbreak.

In Klickitat county, in 1878, Mr. Richardson married Miss Anna McPheeters, a native of Clark county, Illinois. Her father was James McPheeters and her mother's family name was Scott. Mrs. Richardson had come to Klickitat county with an uncle in 1876. She and her husband have one child, Arthur, now county surveyor of Klickitat county. Mr. Richardson is a member of the K. of P. and in politics, an active Republican, attending caucuses and conventions. Elected county surveyor first in the eighties, he served in that position for twelve years, and at present he is United States mineral surveyor in Goldendale. Though the owner of considerable realty, he still gives his time to the pursuit of the profession he so early chose, and has so assiduously sought to perfect himself in. A man of genial nature, pleasant and approachable, he naturally has made many friends throughout the state, while in the county that has so long been his home his standing is most enviable.

ISAAH McBEE. Few of the present generation of Westerners, comfortably situated, prosperous and generally at peace with the world, realize at how great a cost their home has been reclaimed from barbarism. The sacrifice has been enormous and human life has been the most precious medium of exchange. Yet, withal, the priceless sacrifice made upon civilization's altar by the parents of Isaiah McBee must ever be his most treasured heritage. Few pioneers came to the shores of the Columbia under more trying difficulties than did the subject of this sketch and his sisters. Isaiah McBee, of Scotch and German descent, was born in Ray county, Missouri, February 9, 1840, and is the son of Levi and Elizabeth (Ream) McBee, natives of Maryland and Ohio respectively, born in 1811 and 1815 respectively. Levi McBee was a carpenter by trade, but gave most of his life to farming. He was among Ohio's early pioneers and took up his abode in Missouri in 1836. There he reared a family and lived until the year 1852, when the richness and wonders of far-away Willamette proved too attractive to withstand and he, his wife and little children were soon westward bound. Cholera broke out in the company and before its ravages were finished, both father and mother were sleeping the sleep that knows no waking upon this earth. He was stricken near Fort Kearney, Nebraska, and there buried; his faithful helpmeet was laid at rest at the mouth of Ash Hollow, on the North Platte river, Nebraska. The seven little orphans continued their weary, lonesome way. Soon two of them dropped from the little company and were buried by the wayside. The remaining fatherless and motherless children, of whom Isaiah was one, were tenderly cared for by two paternal uncles and others of that fearless, saddened emigrant train, and in time arrived safely at their journey's end. Isaiah immediately went to work in King's tannery, Portland, where he remained until November, 1854, when he became a resident of Vancouver, across the Columbia. There he worked six years at various occupations. Upon the discovery of gold in the Clearwater country, Idaho, he started with a wagon train and was one of the first to reach that river with goods. Before returning, he went as far as Elk City; he wintered in Vancouver. From that time until 1872 he traveled throughout Washington and Idaho, engaged in freighting, next spending six years on Puget sound. In 1878 he came to Klickitat county, where as early as 1860, he had assisted in surveying four townships for the government. Five years he conducted a blacksmith shop near the No. 6 school-house, at the same time filing upon land in that locality. Because of his long association with the Indians, he remained on his place during the Indian scare of 1878, not fearing the redskins as did many of those around him. Mr. McBee has gradually accumulated a goodly holding of farming property and is still devoted to agricultural pursuits.

He was married in 1868, but has no family at the present time, a niece, Diana Wilkes, keeping house for her uncle. Of his sisters, three are still living: Mrs. B. A. Chambréau, in Portland; Mrs. Rebecca Knighton, in Gilliam county, Oregon; and Mrs. Caroline Beeman, in Idaho. In politics, Mr. McBee is known as a strong Republican. He owns three-quarters of a section of rich valley land eight miles east of Goldendale, and also some property in Whatcom. With commendable generosity and a sense of appreciation, he has bestowed a 240-acre farm upon his faithful niece. Secure against want and possessing the respect and good will of all around him, this worthy pioneer of pioneers is rich in such blessings as this world can bestow.

A. I. RHODES, an industrious and competent farmer and stock raiser of Klickitat county, and a carpenter by trade, resides on his well improved ranch eight miles southeast of Goldendale. He was born in Kekoskee, Dodge county, Wisconsin, December 3, 1851, the son of Richard and Lucy (Demmon) Rhodes. His father, who was born in New York state in 1816, and was likewise a farmer, was a pioneer of Dodge county, Wisconsin. He enlisted in Company C, Third Wisconsin volunteers, in 1861, and later re-enlisted in the Tenth regiment, serving until 1864. His son, John, a brother of the subject of this article, who was a member of the Twenty-ninth Wisconsin volunteers, was killed in the Civil war, and Richard Rhodes, grandfather of our subject, was killed in the War of 1812. Mr. Rhodes returned to Wisconsin after being mustered out of service and remained in that state until his death, in 1882. He belonged to an old English family. His wife, a native of New York state, died when her son, A. I., was but six years old. The subject of this review grew to manhood in Wisconsin, attending the common schools of that state, then assisting on the farm for some time. He also learned the carpenter's trade. Eleven years of his life were spent on a farm in Blue Earth county, Minnesota, but on account of severe sickness contracted there, he came, in 1888, to Oregon, and settled in the Willamette valley. He bought land there and resided upon it about eight years, then, having traded it for 160 acres of Klickitat land, he removed to that county in 1896. Later he bought another tract of 160 acres, and he has also taken up a homestead, his design being to work into the cattle business gradually. During the summers he follows his trade and his boys run the place. They cultivate about 150 acres of the farm at present and are succeeding admirably in building up a valuable property. Among the improvements on the place is a splendid apple orchard. Mr. Rhodes is giving considerable attention to the breeding of Hereford cattle at this time.

December 15, 1881, in the state of Minnesota, Mr. Rhodes married Miss Mattie Stone, a native of Scott county, born in 1857. Her father, William Stone, a native of Ohio, and by occupation a millwright and farmer, died many years ago. Her mother, whose maiden name was Emma Misseldine, was born in England and came to this country when a small girl. She died in 1897 at the age of eighty. Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes have six children, namely, Richard, the oldest; Ruth, born November 21, 1884; Burton, born October 26, 1887; Edith, March 22, 1889; Roy, August 4, 1891; Effie, March 22, 1893; all at home with their parents. Mrs. Rhodes is a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Rhodes displays his public spirit by serving on the school board. No one is more interested in good schools than he, and he works always to bring the local schools up to the highest possible point of efficiency. He has also discharged the duties of road supervisor for two years. He enjoys a splendid standing in his community, his neighbors speaking of him always as a good citizen, a man of strict integrity, and an approachable, courteous member of society.

ARKELLAS D. HARTLEY. Among the progressive farmers and stock raisers of Klickitat county, the man whose name initiates this article must be given a place. He resides on his farm of 160 acres eight miles east of the city of Goldendale, in rural free delivery district No. 1. He was born in Franklin county, Illinois, March 1, 1860, the son of David and Amanda (Dollans) Hartley, the father a native of the Blue Grass state, born in 1837, to Scotch parents. The older Hartley, a farmer and gardener by occupation, crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1865, came thence to Klickitat county in 1879 and now resides in Goldendale. His brother is a Civil war veteran. His wife, the mother of our subject, is a native of Illinois, born in 1839. Arkell D., whose life record it is here our purpose to outline, was but five years old when he came to Oregon with his parents. He grew to the age of twenty on the parental farm in Marion county, attending the local common schools. When old enough to shoulder the responsibilities of life, he chose farming as his occupation and he followed it in Oregon until 1888, when he came to Klickitat county and homesteaded a quarter section of land. No sooner had he acquired an inchoate right to the property than he began energetically the task of improving it and he has resided on the place continuously since. He raises grain, wheat, oats, and other farm products very successfully; fruits of various kinds and stock.

Mr. Hartley was married first in 1883, the lady of his choice being Miss Rachel Clymer, who died, leaving one child, Mary Wenona, born in Linn county, Oregon. His second marriage occurred October 6, 1886, when Miss Winnie Parrott, a native of Missouri, born in 1860, became his wife. She is the daughter of George and Martha (Ewell) Parrott, the former a native of Cook county, Tennessee, born February 10, 1833. Mr. Parrott is an early pioneer of Klickitat county, to whom more extended reference is made elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Hartley's mother, who was born near St. Joe, Missouri, January 3, 1859, still lives near Goldendale. Mr. Hartley's sisters and brother are: Mrs. Laura Shank, living in Umatilla county, Oregon; Mrs. Nellie Mosier, in Klickitat county; Mrs. Ella Mosier, a resident of Oregon City, Oregon; Mrs. Anna Current, in Goldendale; and Frank, on the Nez Perce reservation, in Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Hartley have no children of their own, but have one adopted son, George. They are both members of the Christian church in Goldendale, and of the Grange in school district number six. In politics, Mr. Hartley is a Democrat. He is a member of the school board and is doing all he can, in his locality, for the amelioration and extension of educational opportunities. An energetic farmer, a good citizen and a genial, approachable man of strict integrity, he stands high in the esteem and regard of his neighbors and associates.

RICHARD A. SIMMS, one of the many well-to-do and prosperous farmers of Klickitat county, resides on his well improved ranch, three and a half miles southeast of Goldendale. He was born in Clay county, Missouri, December 23, 1839, the son of John H. and Martha (Huffman) Simms. His father, a native of Stafford county, Virginia, born in 1794, and a member of an old English family, was a farmer by occupation. In 1826 he removed to Clay county, Missouri, and he died in Holt county, that state, in 1874. Having served in the War of 1812, he was a pensioner and his wife still draws a pension from the government on account of the services he rendered in that conflict. His wife was born in Missouri, in 1824, to Irish and Dutch parents. She still lives in Falls City, Nebraska. Richard A., of this article, grew to manhood on the parental farm near Liberty, in Clay county. He received a common school education, then followed farming until the outbreak of the Civil war. In 1863 he enlisted in the Union army, at St. Joe, Missouri, and later he served with the Confederate forces, though he was not in favor of slavery or secession. At the close of the war he moved to Holt county, Missouri, with his father and brothers and he lived there three years, going then to Atchison county, where he resided until 1874. His next move was to Benton county, Oregon. There he lived for three and a half years, but in 1877 he again moved, coming to Klickitat county. He homesteaded his present place shortly after his arrival, and upon it he has lived continuously since. He was here during the Indian scare of 1878, but paying no attention to the excitement all around, continued at his work. He has added to his original property by taking a pre-emption claim and an eighty-acre timber culture claim, in the mountains near-by, and his realty holdings at present consist of about six hundred acres; his home place being a tract of 360 acres of rich farming land. He raises wheat, barley and other farm produce, also an abundance of fruit for the market. Among the many improvements on his place is a good house with modern conveniences.

Mr. Simms has been twice married. On December 19, 1861, he wedded Miss Mary Garner, and to this union ten children were born, of whom eight are still living, namely, Mrs. Luanna Lee Harris and Mrs. Emma M. Vanhoy, in Goldendale; Mrs. Dora J. Harris and Mrs. Margaret N. Hull, in the county; John A., in Woodland, Washington; Richard M., deceased; James A., the eldest son, who died September 24, 1903; Mrs. Martha G. Tallman, in Klickitat county; Mrs. Amanda B. Chappell, in Goldendale; and Mrs. Frances A. Inlay, on the Columbus road. Mr. Simms' first wife died on the 21st of May, 1886, and in 1890 he again married, the lady this time being Miss Julia A. Goff, who was born in Massachusetts in 1842, and brought up in Wisconsin. Her father, Stephen Goff, a native of the Old Bay state, passed away in 1873, at the age of eighty-one. Her mother, whose maiden name was Persis Bates, was likewise a native of Massachusetts and is also deceased, having passed away in 1879, at the age of seventy-nine years and eight months. Mr. Simms is a member of the Grange in school district number six, and both he and his wife belong to the Presbyterian church. In politics, he is a Prohibitionist. A man of sterling honesty and benevolent disposition, and in all respects a thoroughly good citizen, he stands high in the esteem and good will of his neighbors and associates.

COLUMBUS O. BARNES, one of Klickitat county's well-to-do farmers and gardeners, resides just outside the limits of Goldendale on a place of historic interest, his farm being one of the first homesteads located in the county. The original owner, a man named French, conducted one of the first stores in the county on the land in an old building still standing. The subject of this sketch was born in Washington county, Ohio, near Marietta, April 1, 1856, to the union of Owen and Catherine (Young) Barnes. Owen Barnes was born in 1822, near Barnesville, Belmont county, Ohio, where he was for many years engaged in farming and conducting a store. The city of Barnesville was named for an uncle, James Barnes. Owen Barnes served through the Civil war in the Seventy-seventh Ohio regiment, under Generals Thomas and Rosecrans. In 1870 he took up his residence in Indiana, but three years later moved to Butler county, Kansas, where his death occurred in 1896. He was of Scotch descent. His wife, who was of German and Irish ancestry, was born in Ohio in 1825; she still lives on the old Kansas homestead. When fourteen years old, Columbus O., who was the seventh child in a family of nine, was taken by his parents to Indiana, and there obtained the greater portion of his education. He remained at home until he reached his majority, then, in 1877, settled in Klickitat county, following farming and stock raising for seven years. He then sold out and returned to the Sunflower state, where he entered the mercantile business and invested in farming land. However, misfortune overtook him and he lost his entire capital. So he again came to Klickitat county, in the spring of 1889, and at once engaged in farming and road building. Success crowned his efforts. He purchased his present fine place in 1901 and has since made his home on that property, devoting his time mostly to the raising of strawberries, for the production of which he has achieved an enviable reputation. There are one hundred and sixty acres in the property, through which winds the Little Klickitat.

He was married at Goldendale on the last day of the year 1879, Miss Florence Golden, a daughter of John and Jane G. (Long) Golden, becoming his bride. Her parents, among the first company of whites to take up their abode in the Klickitat country, are still living in Goldendale, of which Mr. Golden is the founder; biographies of Mr. and Mrs. Golden appear elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have reared a family of ten children, of whom the eldest, Charles G., is dead. The next older, Harvey O., and Mrs. Clara Coffield both reside in this county. The others, Jessie L., Howard O., Aaron Clay, DeWitt L., Columbus W., Cecil (a daughter) and Florence C., are all living with their parents. Mr. Barnes has five brothers, Joseph W., Aaron W., and Cornelius C., residing in Kansas; William L. and John H., in Ohio; and also three sisters, Sarah E., living in Kansas; Nancy J., in Los Angeles, California, and Ella M., in Salt Lake City.

In politics, Mr. Barnes is a staunch Republican and a supporter of the present administration. Fraternally, he is a member of the A. O. U. W. Upon his place he has built one of the finest residences in this section of the state. He is conceded to be one of the county's most capable farmers and business men, stands high in the community as a man of strict integrity, and is one of Klickitat's representative citizens.

SAMUEL A. WILKINS, a well-to-do Klickitat county farmer, residing on his 320-acre ranch, situated some three and a half miles southeast of Goldendale, was born in England, January 4, 1839, the son of William and Sarah (Ashby) Wilkins. His father was likewise an Englishman, born in 1805; he died in 1854, in the same house in which he was born. His wife, the mother of our subject, is also dead. Samuel A. never had the opportunity of obtaining a school course, but has picked up his education in various ways through life, acquiring a good fund of practical knowledge. When but seven years old he started to work on a farm, and so faithful was his service that the same farmer retained him in his employ for eighteen years. At the end of that long period he took up the trade of a rope-maker, at which he served his full apprenticeship and several years as a journeyman, all in Northamptonshire, England. In March, 1869, he left his native land for the United States, settling at length in Huron county, Ohio, where he resided eighteen months.

Going then to Marshall county, Kansas, he followed farming there for six or seven years. In 1874 he came to California and after two years' residence in the Golden state, he made his way to Klickitat county, the first few years of his residence in which section were spent in well digging. In 1884, however, he filed on a homestead near Goldendale and upon it he has lived continuously since, purchasing other land as he was able. At present he cultivates nearly 200 acres, retaining the rest of his half section for pasture land.

Mr. Wilkins married, in England, May 15, 1865, Miss Charlotte Stimpson, whose father, Josiah, a native of that country born in 1816, was a farmer by occupation. He died in his native land. Mrs. Wilkins' mother, whose name was Mary (Dayton) Stimpson, was also born in England. She passed away November 5, 1903, at the age of eighty-three, after having become the mother of eight children. Mrs. Wilkins was born September 17, 1839. She received her education in the English schools and at the age of twenty-six married. She and Mr. Wilkins are parents of six children, namely, William J., born in England, July 15, 1866; Mrs. Ada J. Bunnell, born in Ohio, October 3, 1869, now living near Goldendale; Mrs. Alice A. L. Richardson, born in Kansas, September 16, 1872, at present residing in The Dalles; Mrs. Agnes M. Thomas, also a native of Kansas, born June 1, 1875, and living in The Dalles; Ellen E., born in California, July 10, 1877, and living at home, and Hiram A., who was born October 5, 1880, and passed away at the age of six. Mr. Wilkins is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Grange and is an active worker in the Methodist church. He has been a choir singer much of his life and was trustee of the Goldendale church for sixteen years. In politics he is a Republican. A man of pleasing personality and unquestioned integrity, he has always commanded a full measure of respect and esteem, and his standing in his community is an enviable one.

EDWIN M. ANDREWS, a prosperous farmer of Klickitat county, Washington, residing five miles southeast of the city of Goldendale, was born in Douglas county, Kansas, January 24, 1872. Emery B. Andrews, his father, was born in the New England states, removed to Kansas in the early days and was there married. His wife, whose maiden name was Hortense Adamsson, was a native of Sweden. She came to the United States when a young woman, taking up her abode in Kansas, where she was married in 1868; her death occurred while she was living in Klickitat county in 1885. The subject of this biography received his education in the public schools of Klickitat county, to which he came with his mother when a lad of six years. He began earning his own living when only fourteen years old, working on the farms of neighboring ranchmen. For many years he lived with his grand parents, or at least made his home with them. In the spring of 1893 Mr. Andrews rented a farm belonging to an uncle and operated it two years. His grandfather passing away in 1896, the court appointed Edwin N. Andrews administrator of the estate, and subsequently he bought out the interests of the other heirs and took full charge of the farm, which constituted the major portion of the property. In 1902 he filed on a homestead claim fifteen miles northeast of Goldendale, this and the old farm comprising Mr. Andrews' present holding. He has followed agricultural pursuits since youth and has met with a fair share of success in that industry.

Mr. Andrews was married in Goldendale, October 16, 1900, to Miss Carrie L. Montgomery, a daughter of Allen W. and Emma (Woods) Montgomery, a biographical sketch of whom appears elsewhere in these pages. Mr. Montgomery is a well known and successful horticulturist, living just north of Goldendale. Mrs. Andrews was born in Kansas, April 11, 1882, and in that commonwealth received a good education in the public schools. She was eighteen years old when married. One daughter, Effie L., has been born to this union, the date of her birth being September 11, 1901. Mr. Andrews is an active Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Odd Fellows. Besides his 200 acres or more of real estate holdings he owns some stock and property of minor value. He is a citizen of excellent standing in his community.

WILLIAM H. ADAMS, a Klickitat county land owner and farmer, resides six miles east and three-quarters of a mile north of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Perry county, Pennsylvania, February 27, 1868, the son of John F. and Catherine (Buck) Adams, both of whom were of Dutch extraction. His father, who was likewise a native of the Quaker state and was a blacksmith by trade, served throughout the Civil war in a Pennsylvania regiment of volunteers. After its close, he went, in 1866, to Kansas and took a homestead there, upon which he lived until the time of his wife's death. He then returned to his native state, where he was killed in 1871 by accident. His wife, who was likewise born in the Quaker state, also met a violent death, being killed in a railroad accident in Kansas. The subject of this article was educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Kansas. Left an orphan at the age of three, he was early compelled to take life's burdens upon his own shoulders and at the age of ten he was placed on a cattle ranch in Kansas, where he remained for seven years. He then took up farming for three years, then, in 1888, came west to Klickitat county, where his first work was in a sawmill. Twelve months later he removed to Oregon. He spent a year in a logging camp there, then went to work for the O. R. & N. Company, in whose employ he remained another year, coming then to Goldendale. He was employed, in Hoggard's sawmill for nearly a year after his arrival, and his next employers were D. W. Pierce & Son, for whom he wrought as head sawyer for four years. In 1900, he took a homestead nearly six miles from the city and he has since made his home on it, following farming with assiduity and success. His realty holdings at present consist of 480 acres of land, two hundred of which are in cultivation, and he keeps some stock.

In Goldendale, on the 16th of January, 1896, Mr. Adams married Mrs. Ellie D. Roe, whose father, Daniel W. Pierce, a native of Vermont, came to the county in 1878 and still resides in Goldendale. Her mother's name is Belinda. Mrs. Adams was born in Wisconsin in 1859, but was educated in Pennsylvania, in which state she married Carlton Roe. Three children were the fruit of this marriage, Bert C., Harold and Ernest. She and Mr. Adams have one daughter, Esther, born in the county in 1897. Mr. Adams is a member of the Presbyterian church and in politics, a Republican. He is a school director in district No. 46 at present. A pleasant, approachable gentleman, an energetic and successful farmer and a man of integrity, he enjoys the full confidence and hearty good will of his neighbors.

THOMAS C. FLANNERY, one of Klickitat county's well known farmers, resides on a fine 160-acre ranch, situated seven miles east of the City of Goldendale, and is one of the most successful agriculturists of his community. The Emerald Isle is his birthplace. There he was born, in Tipperary county, May 14, 1850, the son of Patrick and Jane (Wills) Flannery, both of whom were also Irish. The father, who died several years ago in his native country, was born in 1818 and was a farmer. Mrs. Flannery was married in Ireland; she died in the state of Pennsylvania many years ago. At the time Thomas C. came to the United States he was twenty years old, and, while he had followed farming in the old country, he took up a different line of work in America. The first three years of his residence were spent in the ordnance department of the United States army. He next spent a like period in the service of the American Express Company. In the fall of 1875 he went west to California and for two years was employed in the shops of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The ensuing four years he worked for a street car company in San Francisco. Then, in 1882, he came north to Klickitat county and took a homestead five miles east of Goldendale. That place was his home thirteen years, or until 1895, when he removed to his present farm. By dint of much hard work and commendable thrift, Mr. Flannery has placed nearly all of his land into cultivation, giving him an unusually attractive place.

He was married in San Francisco, October 8, 1876, to Miss Dorothy O'Leary. Her mother and father were both of Irish birth and descent; both are now dead. Mrs. Flannery was born in England in 1846, educated in the schools of Britain, came to Chicago in 1870 and passed away in 1892, some sixteen years after her marriage. One child was the fruit of the marriage, James, who was born in California, August 4, 1877, and who is still living. Mr. Flannery is connected with one fraternal order, the Woodmen of the World. He possesses the genial nature characteristic of his race, is known as a highly competent man and commands the good will of the entire community.

WILLIAM AND JOHN ROCHE. William Roche, a well-to-do farmer of Klickitat county, living on his ranch five miles east of the city of Goldendale, was born in Illinois, December 22, 1854. His father, John Roche, a native of New York state, is a carpenter by trade. He early removed to Illinois, and in 1855 located in Saint Croix county, Wisconsin, of which he was one of the earliest settlers. He lived there eleven years, then came to California and settled in San Francisco, where he lived twelve months. He next removed to Napa county, in the same state, and he followed his trade in various parts of the county for some years. In 1879 he came to Klickitat county for a stay of five years, going then to Douglas county, Oregon. After a residence of eleven years there, he came again to Klickitat county, but at present he makes his home in North Yakima. William Roche, his son, received his education in the common schools of Wisconsin. Coming to the Golden state with his father at the age of seventeen, he worked on various farms there for nearly seven years, then, in 1878, came north to Klickitat county and took up a homestead some five miles east of Goldendale. He lived on the property for five years, cultivating the land, and he has resided in the immediate vicinity ever since, engaged in agriculture and raising stock.

Near him lives his brother, John, who was born in Wisconsin, September 22, 1865. He attended for a time the public schools of his native state, but completed his education in California, to which state he moved with his parents at the age of nine. He came to Klickitat county with his father when a little over fourteen years old and worked for various stockmen on the range, until he was twenty-five. During this period he entered the horse business on his own account. In 1892 he bought his present place from the railroad company and to its improvement and cultivation he has devoted most of his time since, putting the entire tract into cultivation. The brothers have well improved and valuable farms of some two hundred acres in the aggregate. Both have considerable live stock of different kinds on their places, and John has a band of about seventy-five horses. They are industrious, thrifty farmers, up-to-date in their methods and progressive always. As men and citizens their record is above reproach. Both are members of the Catholic church and William allies himself with the Democratic party.

ELMER R. WATSON, an energetic and prosperous farmer of Klickitat county, resides on his ranch of 240 acres, fifteen miles east of the city of Goldendale. He is a native of the Golden state, born March 13, 1876. His father, Robert, of Canadian birth, is likewise a farmer by occupation. In early days he crossed the border into the United States and settled first in California, where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1889. In that year he came north to Klickitat county. At present he is living in Nort Yakima. Mrs. Watson, whose maiden name was Annie Ferguson, was also born in Canada and it was there that she met and married Mr. Watson. Elmer, their eldest son, received his education in the public schools of this county, mostly in district No. 6. He remained at home with his parents until twenty-six years old, then began farming on his own account and for a number of years has combined stock raising with agriculture. His father gave him 240 acres of deeded land when he was twenty years old, over two-thirds of which he has succeeded in bringing under cultivation. His eldest brother, Angus, and sister, Mrs. Ida Saxton, live near Goldendale; another sister, Mrs. Maud Richardson, makes her home in Bickleton; his brother, Fred, lives near Elmer's ranch, and the remaining brother, California H., resides in Pasco.

Mr. Watson still remains single. He is a young man of estimable character and gives strict attention to his business, of which he is making a splendid success. He enjoys an enviable standing in his community and the esteem and good will of his neighbors and fellow citizens.

WILLIAM HART, an extensive fruit raiser of Klickitat county, resides a mile and a half north of Goldendale. He was born in London, England, March 17, 1854, the son of John and Lucy (Richardson) Hart. His father now lives in London, where he was born, following the life of a shoemaker. His mother was born on Chalon Island, off the French coast, and passed away in England some years ago. The man whose life is the theme of this review received his education in England, also learned the shoemaker's trade from his father, but at the age of seventeen he made up his mind to become a professional nurse, and for the ensuing two years studied that profession in a London hospital, graduating. The succeeding five years were spent in the practice of his profession, and in 1879 he crossed the Atlantic to this country and once more engaged in that occupation, practicing in various hospitals in New York and Chicago. He also followed his calling in other places throughout the country. Coming to Klickitat county, March 9, 1894, he found here but little opening for a nurse, so went back to his early trade, shoemaking, and for seven years followed it successfully. In November, 1901, he bought his present place, twenty acres of fruit land, and he has since given his entire attention to fruit and berry culture, planting an acre and a half of strawberries, over 800 trees of various varieties, including apples, pears, plums and cherries, an acre of small berries of the hardier varieties, etc. He is making a splendid success of his business and finds ready markets for his fruit.

Mr. Hart was married in Portland, Oregon, in 1889, to Catherine, daughter of John and Catherine (Collier) Neagle, the former of whom was born in Ireland and is a shoemaker by trade. He came to Canada when a small boy, went thence to Nevada, and from that territory to Portland, Oregon, where he now lives, engaged in the pursuit of his trade. Mrs. Hart's mother, who is likewise a native of Ireland, also resides in Portland. Mrs. Hart was born in Montreal, Quebec, in 1864, and grew up and received her education in Canada. She and Mr. Hart have seven children, namely, Thomas, born in Portland in 1890; Annie and Lily, also born in Portland, one and two years later respectively; Kitty, William, Daisy and May, all born in Klickitat county, and the last three in Goldendale. Mr. Hart is a member of the Congregational church and fraternally is connected with the I. O. O. F., the Woodmen of the World and the Redmen, in the first named of which orders he is past grand. In politics he is a Republican. He has filled with efficiency the office of coroner for two terms. A shrewd business man of pleasing address, a worthy citizen, and an upright, honorable gentleman, he enjoys the good will and respect of all who know him intimately.

GEORGE C. BROKAW, owner of a well-improved farm of 480 acres three miles north of the city of Goldendale, was born in Chautauqua county, New York, April 2, 1854. His father, Peter Brokaw, a native of New Jersey, follows the occupation of a farmer, although he was formerly a lumberman. He removed to New York when a young man, then spent five years in Illinois, going thence to Pennsylvania, where he lived for four years. At the expiration of that period he went back to Illinois. Nearly two years later he removed to Henry county, Missouri, where his residence was for the greater part of the ensuing eight years. He came west to Klickitat county, October 22, 1876, and now lives about two miles from Goldendale. He is of German extraction. His wife, a native of Pennsylvania, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Stewart, passed away a number of years ago in New York state.

The subject of this article received his education in the common schools of Illinois and Missouri. Coming west with his father at the age of twenty-two, he farmed with him and a brother for nearly seven years, living at home all this time. In 1878 he filed on his present place and he has ever since made his home on the property, following farming and stock raising. At present he cultivates about 160 acres of the land, using the rest for pasture for his cattle and horses.

On July 20, 1885, at Goldendale, Washington, Mr. Brokaw married Miss Lizzie Robertson, daughter of Edward B. Robertson, a native of Ohio, and a farmer by occupation. He crossed the Plains to Oregon in the early fifties, came to Klickitat county in 1880, and now lives in Goldendale, as does also Mrs. Robertson, who was a Miss Broombo before her marriage and who was born in Pennsylvania and married in Ohio. She is of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. Mrs. Brokaw was born in Ohio in 1866, but grew up and was educated in Oregon and Washington. She and Mr. Brokaw are parents of five children, namely, Fay, born in the county in 1886; Mrs. Mary M. Hamlet, born two years later, living near Goldendale; George R., born in the county in 1897; Peter B. and Ira O. L., born in the years 1899 and 1901 respectively. Mr. Brokaw is a member of the Methodist church and fraternally is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is an active Democrat. That he is interested in education is evinced by the fact that at present he is faithfully performing the duties of the unremunerative and thankless office of school director. He is a thrifty, progressive and prosperous farmer and stockman, a good citizen and neighbor and in all respects an honorable and worthy man.

JOHN R. SMITH, one of the prosperous farmers of Klickitat county, resides on his ranch of 160 acres three miles north and a mile and a half west of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Pike county, Missouri, April 27, 1844, to the union of George H. and Margaret (Coppell) Smith, the former of whom was born in New York state in 1810 to Dutch and Irish parents, and was a farmer by occupation. He migrated to Illinois when a young man, thence to Missouri, and in 1846 crossed the Plains by ox team conveyance to Washington county, Oregon, spending six months on the trip. He lived in Oregon until 1879, then came to Klickitat county, where he resided until his death in October, 1895. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri, in 1808, to Dutch parents. She crossed the Plains with her husband and passed away in her sixty-fourth year. The subject of this review received his education in the common schools of Oregon, to which state he was brought by his parents when two years old. He remained at home until he reached the age of eighteen, then worked on a farm two years, at the end of which time he married, rented a farm and engaged in agriculture on his own account. After a few years he moved to Hillsboro, where he followed teaming for four years. Then he again took up farming, following it until 1880, at which time he came to Klickitat county and bargained for a piece of railroad land which he was compelled later to file upon as a homestead, it having reverted to the government. This land is his home at the present date, he having devoted his time to its cultivation and improvement ever since.

At Hillsboro, on the 19th of January, 1865, Mr. Smith married Miss Louisa J. Enyart, daughter of John and Marion (Stevens) Enyart. Her father was a native of Missouri and a farmer by occupation. He crossed the plains to Oregon in 1845, but after two years' residence in Washington county, removed to California, where he later passed away. Mrs. Smith's mother, who was likewise a native of Missouri, died in Washington county, Oregon, about forty-three years ago. Mrs. Smith was born in Portland, March 1, 1846, and received her education in the public schools of her native state. She and Mr. Smith are parents of three children, namely, Raleigh E., born in Washington county, March 27, 1867; Mrs. Addie E. Robertson, born in Washington county, March 10, 1870, now in Goldendale, and Mrs. Ora Brumbaugh, born in Oregon, February 25, 1873, now in Klickitat county. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Christian church and the former is a Republican in politics. Raleigh E. Smith, their oldest son, is now living on his eighty-acre farm near the parental homestead. He married in Goldendale, March 8, 1891, Miss Sarah L. Robertson, daughter of Edmund B. and Sarah A. (Brumbaugh) Robertson. Her father, a native of Iowa, crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1865, and in 1881 came to Goldendale, where he has since followed his handicraft, the carpenter's trade. Her mother, who was born in Indiana and married in Ohio, crossed the Plains with her husband and now lives in Goldendale. Mrs. Sarah L. Smith was born in Marion county, Oregon, but was educated in the schools of Klickitat county. She is the mother of five children, namely, John E., born June 6, 1892; Darrell M., born April 4, 1895; Florence E., born November 9, 1898; Annie, born January 4, 1901; and Ora E., born August 27, 1902. Fraternally, Raleigh E. Smith, their father, is connected with the Woodmen of the World. Both he and his father stand high in the estimation of the entire community as conscientious, upright men, honorable in all their dealings.

ALLEN W. MONTGOMERY, a prosperous fruit raiser of Klickitat county and owner of a farm two miles or less from the city of Goldendale, was born in Cambria county, Pennsylvania, near Johnstown, January 1, 1848, the son of Hugh W. and Margaret (Strayer) Montgomery. His father, who was likewise born in the Quaker state in 1804, was of Irish lineage. He, too, was a farmer by occupation, also a steamboat and canal boatman. He removed to Dickinson county, Kansas, in 1867, took a homestead there and resided in that state until his death, which occurred when he was eighty-four years old. His wife, a native of Pennsylvania, was a member of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. She passed away in 1898, in her eighty-fifth year. The subject of this article went to Fulton county, Illinois, with his parents, when three years old, and he spent the ensuing sixteen years there, acquiring, during this time, a limited education and a knowledge of the carpenter's trade. At the age of nineteen, he removed to Kansas with the family and at a later date took up a pre-emption claim in Smith county, that state, upon which he lived for the next twenty years, doing fairly well. In 1894 he sold out his holdings and came to Goldendale. The first two years after his arrival there he followed his trade and he still does some carpenter work though his chief business has been agriculture since 1896, when he bought his present place. He is giving special attention to berry raising, bringing the best varieties of plants from Illinois and eastern Missouri, and transplanting them here. By so doing, he is not only winning a splendid success for himself, but is conferring a favor upon other residents of the county. In the important business of berry and fruit raising, he uses his entire tract of land, about fifty acres, which is well adapted, both by the nature of the soil and by its location, for the purpose to which it is being devoted.

Mr. Montgomery was married in Kansas, December 10, 1874, to Miss Emma Woods, whose father, Thomas Woods, was born in Pennsylvania and was an early pioneer of Smith county, Kansas. Mrs. Montgomery is a native of Illinois, born in 1854. She and Mr. Montgomery have had eight children, of whom six are now living, namely, Roy, Earl, Carrie, Leslie, Lulu and Lillie. Fraternally, Mr. Montgomery is affiliated with the Masonic order. In politics he is independent. While he resided in Kansas he held the position of justice of the peace for some time, but he has never been an office seeker. His standing as a man and citizen is of the highest, and integrity and fairness are said to characterize all his dealings with his fellow men.

JOHN KURTZ, an energetic and prosperous farmer of Klickitat county and a carpenter by trade, resides on his ranch of 160 acres, four miles northwest of Goldendale. He was born in Crawford county, Ohio, July 5, 1834, the son of George and Dorothy (Rapp) Kurtz. His father, a native German, was likewise a farmer. He came to the United States in 1831 and settled in Ohio, becoming a pioneer of that state, and he died there in 1886, at the age of seventy-eight. The mother of our subject was also born in Germany and married in her native land. She came to the States with her husband and passed away in this country in 1888, being seventy-eight years old at the time of her demise. She was the mother of eight children, of whom John, our subject, is the youngest. He attained the age of fourteen in Ohio, receiving a limited common school education. In 1848 he started out in life for himself, going first to Indiana and later to Illinois. In 1856 he went to Minnesota and took up a pre-emption claim and for a number of years afterward he farmed part of the time, also following his trade in various parts of Olmstead and Fillmore counties, of which he was a pioneer settler. June 2, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, Twelfth regiment, Second battalion of the regular army, for three years' service in the Civil war. He campaigned under Generals Pope, Burnside and Meade, making an honorable record for himself, nor did he lay down his arms until peace was assured. After leaving the army he went back to Minnesota. There he lived until 1871, doing well all the time; but in that year he came west to Napa, California. The ensuing seven years were given to the pursuit of his trade in the Golden state, but in 1878 he came to Klickitat county and took up land. Later he bought the improvements on his present home, which he afterward secured by compliance with the requirements of the homestead law. He has since resided in the locality, engaged in farming and stock raising. In his work he has achieved an abundant success. During the early days he had large bands of cattle and horses on the ranges continually, and from the profits accruing therefrom he retrieved his shattered fortunes, for he had lost everything before leaving California, through fire. Coming to Washington with practically nothing, he has acquired a competency by the use of good judgment and by unremitting effort.

In Mower county, Minnesota, in the fall of 1857, Mr. Kurtz married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Mary (Doyle) McCabe, both of whom are now deceased. She was born in New York state on the first day of July, 1835. Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz have one daughter, Mrs. Clara Bowers, living in Seattle, and one son, Leslie A., residing with his parents. Mr. Kurtz is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and Mrs. Kurtz belongs to the Presbyterian church. In politics he is an independent voter. His splendid services during the dark days of civil strife are acknowledged, as they should be, by his being granted a pension from the United States government. Since the close of the war, he has continued his good services to the commonwealth, by invariably taking his place, wherever he has lived, as a public-spirited citizen, and keeping a strong shoulder to the car of progress always. In the community in which he now resides, his standing is an enviable one, his neighbors all respecting him as a man of integrity and worth.

WILLIAM H. STITH, a man of means and influence and a prosperous ranchman of Klickitat county, resides some five and a half miles northwest of the city of Goldendale, on his farm of 320 acres. He was born in Jasper county, Missouri, January 14, 1873, the son of Henry B. and Malinda (Walker) Stith. His father, a miller and butcher by trade, was born in Kentucky, March 31, 1806, and in 1840 moved to Missouri with his parents, where he still lives on the old homestead which was originally owned by his father and mother. He is of Dutch descent and his wife of Scotch. She was born in 1826, and passed away in her forty-eighth year. William H., the youngest of four children, grew to the age of twelve on the parental place, then removed to Webb City, where he followed mining for a space of five years. When seventeen years old he got the western fever, borrowed forty dollars to pay his fare and came to Klickit county. His first employment was with Hale & Slade, who operated a stage line between Grants and Moro, Oregon. About the time of his marriage, 1892, he rented a ranch and engaged in farming. In 1901 he bought the farm and also an adjoining quarter section, and he has since farmed on a somewhat larger scale, cultivating at the present time about 250 acres. He estimates the value of the land and improvements to be in the neighborhood of $8,000, certainly a very considerable sum for a young man to have acquired solely by his own efforts in so short a time. He also owns a modern, self-feeding thresh-er. His principal product is wheat, but he gives considerable attention to stock, breeding Poland-China hogs and Clydesdale horses. A competent blacksmith, he has a shop on his own place and does all the necessary repair work himself.

On December 6, 1892, in Klickit county, Mr. Stith married Miss Edmonia Gano, a native of Iowa, born in 1871, the daughter of B. J. Gano, who has lived in this county some twenty-four years, and a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume. Her mother, whose maiden name was Clarinda Hoffman, died in 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Stith have three daughters, Clarinda, Gertrude and Aura, and one son, Alfred. Mr. Stith has three sisters, all married, namely, Mrs. Aura King, in Missouri; Mrs. Alice Mescher, in Klickit county, and Mrs. Ada Draper, in Idaho. In politics, our subject is a Republican, and though not specially ambitious for political preferment, is ever ready to discharge his duties as a citizen. By the successful fight he has made against poverty and hard times and adverse conditions, he has won the respect of those who have known him; while his integrity as a man has gained him the esteem and confidence of his neighbors.

ALBERT L. BAKER. Ranking high among the many who have demonstrated the agricultural possibilities of the Goldendale district is Albert L. Baker. He resides six miles northwest of Goldendale, his postoffice address being Blockhouse, and, though a tinner by trade, is engaged in horticultural farming, chiefly. Mr. Baker is of German-Scotch parentage, born in Center county, Pennsylvania, February 8, 1847. His father, also native of Pennsylvania, died in 1850. In Germany the family name was Becker, but upon transferring his citizenship to the United States, the elder Becker, father of Samuel and grandfather of Albert L., of this biography, changed his name to Baker, which is English for Becker. In Pennsylvania Father Baker was a school teacher, and took a prominent part in the introduction of new school books and improved methods of teaching. The mother of Albert L. was Hannah (Glenn) Baker, of Scotch parentage and a native of Pennsylvania. She died when Albert was a babe of six months. Three years later the father died, and Alfred, now an orphan, was taken charge of by the Leidy family. He remained with these people until eighteen years of age, during which time he acquired a common school education, and, in New Jersey, learned the trade of a tinner. At this occupation he worked for a season, and then went west to Des Moines, Iowa. At Des Moines, Winterset and other points in Iowa he worked at his trade for eleven years. In the spring of 1880 he moved from Iowa to Goldendale and there worked in a tin shop. He also took a homestead, and while he worked in the shop, his family lived on the land. This plan he followed until 1887, when he was able to prove up.

Mr. Baker, in 1872, married Miss Ida F. Bean, then resident in Iowa, though a native of New Hampshire. Miss Bean's stepfather, Wm. Ames, was prominently associated with the pioneer development of Iowa. He is now deceased. The mother, Adeline (Locke) Bean, was born in New Hampshire, and died in Ellensburg several years ago. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Baker, namely, Glenn H., Harry, and Mrs. Katie M. Bratton, the last named residing on Crofton Prairie. Though he occasionally works at his trade in town, Mr. Baker no longer follows the work as a vocation. He now specializes in the fruit growing business, and so assiduous has he been in this line that at times his neighbors and friends have good-naturedly termed him a "crank" on the fruit question. He first devoted his attention to berry raising, and later put out an orchard. In each venture his success has been most commendable. Now he has about a hundred varieties of apple trees growing in his orchards, though all have not yet reached maturity. His cellars and packing-houses are commodious and well adapted to their uses. In all, the place comprises one hundred and sixty acres. Politically, Mr. Baker is independent, and in religion he accepts the faith and doctrine of the Advent Christian church. His one brother, Daniel W., died many years ago in Illinois. Mr. Baker's life and environments have been such that at all times he was dependent largely upon his private resources and force of character for his success in this world, and the estate he has now reached demonstrates the truth of the statement that he has proven himself lacking in few elements of strong, honest manhood, such as are conducive to a successful life.

SAMUEL T. DAVIS is a farmer and stockman with residence four miles west of Blockhouse, Washington. He is a Missourian, born in Caldwell county, May 27, 1847. His father, Lewis F. Davis, also a farmer, was a native of Illinois, born April 5, 1825. The grandfather, Dennis Davis, a native of Maryland, came to Illinois in an early day with pack horses. In Illinois, Grandfather Davis served in the Blackhawk war, and through divers other conflicts with the Indians. He also was a veteran of the War of 1812, while his father, the great-grand sire of our subject, served with distinction throughout the Revolutionary war. The Davis family settled in Missouri in 1844, Mr. Davis having been preceded by his brother, who went there in 1832. Father Davis died July 31, 1884. Milly (Barrons) Davis, the mother of Samuel T., was born in Tennessee, and came to Missouri when a little girl. Her death occurred December 26, 1862. She was of Scotch-Dutch parentage, while her husband was Welsh-English, by descent. Samuel T. grew to manhood in Caldwell county, Missouri, where his parents settled in 1844. He received his education in the common schools of that county, and taught in 1872-3. Afterward, for several years he farmed and dealt in cattle. In 1880, he went to California, thence through eastern Oregon to Klickitat county, where he arrived July 29th. Here he immediately bought the relinquishment of a place formerly filed upon by Thomas Crofton, after whose father Crofton Prairie was named. For several years he devoted the farm which he thus acquired to the growth of grain and the raising of live stock, principally cattle and horses. He has since, like his neighbors, gone to farming more extensively, with a consequent decrease in the attention paid to stock raising.

On September 10, 1874, in Caldwell, Missouri, Mr. Davis married Miss Matilda Kayser, a native of the county mentioned. She was born in 1856, the youngest of the family. Her father, Barnhart Kayser, was born in Switzerland in 1803. His death occurred in 1866, forty-nine years after he had come from Switzerland to the United States. The mother, Matilda (Seitzinger) was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1810. Her death occurred when she was fifty-nine years old. She was of German parentage. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis are three, Artimas A., now deceased; Zelbert L. and Clarence A. In politics, Mr. Davis is a decided Democrat. He takes an active interest in the affairs of his community, and has served for thirteen years as a school director of his district. This school is now the largest in the county, and its excellent organization is said to be due in part to the labor of Mr. Davis. His farm is one of the finest in the county, comprising five hundred and twenty acres of well-watered land. It has a good orchard, and is well equipped with farm buildings. As a stock fancier he has a preference for Poland-China hogs. It is regretted that ill-health has deprived Mr. Davis of the ability at present to take an active part in the management of his affairs; however, his two sons, Zelbert and Clarence, on account of their father's ill-health, have taken charge of the farm-work, and are executing their charge very ably.

WILLIAM M. EDMISTEN is a genial and prosperous farmer, residing two and one-quarter miles west of Blockhouse, Washington. He was born in Caldwell county, North Carolina, October 13, 1837. His father, John T. Edmisten, and mother, Cathern (Hayse) Edmisten, were both born in North Carolina, and both have died in the state of their nativity, the mother dying when William M. was but a small child. During his early years he was not permitted to attend school to any extent greatly beneficial, but since then, being endowed with good sense and the ability to understand correctly things seen and heard, Mr. Edmisten has acquired a stock of general information which renders him by no means an unlearned man. When thirteen years old he left home and worked out till the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Southern army. After the war was over he settled in Missouri, but remained there only till 1866, when he migrated to California. There, for six years, he worked as a farm hand for various farmers, and during this time acquired a thorough knowledge of the business. From California he worked his way up the coast to Washington, and on February 28, 1878, landed at Goldendale. Immediately upon arriving he took up a piece of land located three miles north of the town, which he farmed and made his home upon until 1888. Then he sold out and returned to California, remaining ten months, coming again to Klickitat county in 1889, however. On this occasion he bought his present place of one hundred and sixty acres, which he has since devoted to farming and stock raising.

Mr. Edmisten is one of a family of eight children. His brothers and sisters are James, Abraham, Lucy, Mrs. Mary Church, Mrs. Margaret Church, Mrs. Fannie Dancy, and John, now resident in Mission, Washington. He is a Democrat and strongly set in his political convictions, though not so radical as to allow any party prejudice to draw his influence from the best interests of his community. He has a well-tilled farm, and sufficient stock and implements with which to farm it advantageously. Spoken of by his many friends he is called "a good old bachelor," and this kindly meant cognomen implies a degree of good-will from friends and neighbors given to none but the most deserving. Mr. Edmisten has had five houses burnt, with their contents, since coming here, but being a frugal, provident man, he has in each instance been able to command the funds to build a new one. Two of the burned houses were where his present home stands.

FRED W. GERLING, the owner of a 960-acre ranch in Klickitat county, fourteen miles east and six south of the city of Goldendale, was born in Germany, June 21, 1840. His father, Fred W. Gerling, was likewise a German, and a farmer by occupation. He came to the United States in 1857, but not liking the country, returned home, where he died in 1895, at the age of eighty-six. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Mary Trenttman, was also a native of Germany. She died in 1851, after having become the mother of eight children. Fred W., whose life is here chronicled, received his education in the German schools. Leaving home at the age of fifteen, he crossed the Atlantic to New York, went thence to Wisconsin, and for four years worked in a sawmill there. In 1859 he returned to New York, whence he came to California by the Isthmus route. After a short stay in the Golden state he went to Portland, Oregon, arriving there July 9, 1859. Ascending the Willamette river to Oregon City, he worked ten months in a sawmill there, then followed steambating on the Willamette for a like period, meeting, at the end of his service, with an accident on the boat. He then went to Florence, Idaho, and mined one season, afterward returning to Oregon City for the winter. In the spring of 1862 he removed to The Dalles and again engaged in steambating, an occupation which he followed uninterruptedly for the ensuing four years. From 1866 to 1875 he was foreman of the warehouse at the Celilo ferry, but on April 5th of the latter year, he came to Klickitat county. He was engaged in the stock business near Rock creek until 1881, when he took up as a homestead a part of his present place. An energetic, ambitious man, he has added to his holdings until he now has nearly a thousand acres, seven hundred of which are under cultivation. Besides carrying on agricultural operations on an extensive scale, he finds some time to devote to stock raising.

In the state of Wisconsin, September 9, 1871, Mr. Gerling married Mary, daughter of William and Mary (Bollmeier) Mohle. Her father was born in Germany in 1823, came to the United States in 1852 and settled in Wisconsin, where he farmed until 1873. Coming then to Portland, Oregon, he spent there the remainder of his days, passing away at the age of eighty-three. His wife, who was likewise of German birth, also died in Portland. Mrs. Gerling was born in Wisconsin, March 12, 1858, and was educated in the schools of that state. She and Mr. Gerling have six children, namely, Fred W. A., born in Celilo, Oregon, in 1873; Edward C., born in Portland, in 1876; Ernest D., born on the Rock Creek ranch in 1878; Oma, in Klickitat county in 1886, Frank in Klickitat county in 1888 and William, also in Klickitat county in 1892. Mr. Gerling is a member of the Lutheran church. Fraternaly, he is connected with the I. O. O. F. and in politics, he is an active Republican. He enjoys the respect always accorded to those who have the ability and energy to achieve success in any line; while his integrity and uniform fair dealing have won and retained for him the esteem of his neighbors and all who are associated with him.

CHAUNCEY GOODNOE, another of Klickitat's early and respected pioneers, still resides in the county to which he came more than forty years ago, being at the present time engaged in sheep raising. His 640-acre ranch lies five miles south and eleven miles east of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Broome county, New York, December 30, 1841, and is the son of Luther and Martha (Swartward) Goodnoe, both of whom were of English descent. The father was a lumberman by occupation and during a useful life of fifty-seven years, dating from 1801, resided in his native state, New York. The mother was a year younger than her husband, to whom she was married in New York, her native state, also. She died in Wisconsin in the year 1896. Chauncey Goodnoe received his education in the common schools of New York. He remained at home until twenty years of age, when he came to California, via the Panama route. He wintered in the Golden state, then came north to The Dalles, arriving at his destination July 4th, 1862. There he was engaged in freighting to various interior points until winter, then went to Oregon City. In the spring he returned to The Dalles, but soon departed for Klickitat county, where he spent the summer and fall of 1863. The next winter he spent in the Grande Ronde valley, returning again to Klickitat for the summer. In 1865 he bought a squatter's right to a quarter section which comprises a portion of his present ranch, filed a homestead claim to it and since then has made it his home. He was engaged in the cattle and horse business until 1903, when he sold the larger stock and invested in sheep, to which he now devotes his entire attention.

In Klickitat county, in the year 1881, Mr. Goodnoe married Miss Maggie Mills, the daughter of John B. and Margaret (Hurst) Mills. Mrs. Goodnoe belongs to a distinguished pioneer family of the Northwest. John B. Mills, her father, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1815, of English parentage. Very early in life he removed to Arkansas and April 15, 1843, started with a famous company of heroes to colonize the Oregon country. The story of this famous emigrant train's sufferings and harsh experiences and of its final success is a matter of Northwest history. The names of those who made that fearful trip to save to the Union Washington, Oregon, Idaho and a portion of Montana, at the entreating call of the brave Marcus Whitman, will ever stand out prominently on history's page. This leader of all emigrant trains arrived in Oregon City, December 8, 1843. Mr. Mills resided in Washington county fourteen years, in Douglas county a like period, in Clackamas thirteen years and in 1884 came to Klickitat. He now lives with his daughter, Mrs. Goodnoe, and although nearly ninety years of age, is still hale and hearty. His wife, a Virginian, born in 1818, moved to Wayne county, Indiana, when a little girl and was married at the age of twenty-one. She was with her husband in all his frontier life, but passed away twenty-one years ago. Mrs. Goodnoe was born in Douglas county, Oregon, in the year 1858, and was educated in Oregon. At the age of twenty-one she was married. She and Mr. Goodnoe have two daughters, Mabel and Edith, the former born March 12, 1882, and now a resident of Spokane; the latter born December 14, 1884, at present employed as a dressmaker in that city. Mrs. Goodnoe has three sisters and one brother living: Mrs. Jane S. Witt, in California; Mrs. Mary A. Vaughn, in Salem, Oregon; Mrs. Virginia Saxton, in Oregon; John F. Mills, in Yakima City; three brothers, William R., Isaac C., and Jasper, and one sister, Mrs. Martha Saxton, are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Goodnoe are members of the Christian church. Mr. Goodnoe takes a deep interest in political matters, his party being the Democratic. At present his herd of sheep numbers 1,500, but it is being rapidly augmented. Most of his ranch is grazing land, though considerable of it is in cultivation. Mr. Goodnoe is a man of high standing in the community, public-spirited and honorable in his dealings with all, rich in the number of his friends.

ALFRED O. WHITE, a large sheep owner and a prominent Klickitat county farmer, resides on his well improved ranch of nearly six hundred acres, fourteen miles southeast of Goldendale. He is a native of Oregon, born in Washington county, March 3, 1864, the son of Charles and Florence (Speer) White. His father, who is likewise a farmer and stockman by occupation, was born in 1839. He crossed the Plains with his parents when a little past five, and settled in Washington county, Oregon. His father, Richard White, grandfather of our subject, built the St. Charles Hotel, on the principal street of Portland, one block from the Willamette river. At the time they arrived in Portland, the present city was composed of but a few board shanties. Alfred's father, now sixty-five years old, still resides in the Willamette valley. His mother, a native of Missouri, passed away in 1892, at the age of forty-five. Her parents were old Oregon pioneers, and at one time owned land on the site of the present city of Portland. The man whose life is the theme of this review was the second oldest of a family of six children. He grew to young manhood in Oregon, receiving his education in the common schools of that state. Coming to Klickitat county with his parents in 1884, he engaged with them in the cattle business on their present home place, but some six years ago his father returned to Oregon, and he and his brother, John, formed a partnership in the business. Finally selling their cattle, they engaged in the sheep industry and later Alfred bought out the entire interests of his brother, becoming sole proprietor of the business, which he still continues with excellent success. He owns a band of 2,200 sheep, which he winters on his ranch and in the summer time ranges in the vicinity of Mount Adams, Mount Ranier and in other places.

Mr. White was married in the Willamette valley, June 18, 1894, the lady being Miss Minnie Trumbo, a native of Dakota, born in 1873. Her father, John Trumbo, who was born in Ohio in 1840, resided in Dakota for some time, taking part in the Sioux Indian war. He served in the army for eight years. In 1876 he came to Oregon, in which state he died on the 1st of February, 1890. His wife, Ruth, still resides in Washington county, Oregon, and draws a pension from the government on account of her husband's long service in the United States army. Mrs. White is one of nine children, her brothers and sisters being, Mrs. Rachel Gosney, the oldest, Mrs. Ida Gosney and Ira, twins, Frank, Mark, John, Uriah B. and Maud. Mr. White has four brothers, Richard R., John, Peter and Grover, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Weld, residing with her husband in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. White have two sons, Edward and Ellis, and two daughters, Maud and Vera. In politics, Mr. White is a Republican. An energetic, shrewd and successful homme d'affaires, an honorable, upright man and a public spirited citizen, he has won and still retains the full confidence and hearty good will of all with whom he has been associated.

MERIEL S. SHORT, a minister of the Church of Christ, engaged in farming and stock raising twelve miles southeast of Goldendale, is one of Klickitat's earliest and most honored pioneer citizens. Nor is he a stranger to the Northwest, for he came here more than half a century ago and has done his full share in the subduing of this erstwhile wilderness. He was born in Lawrence county, Indiana, March 12, 1827, the son of John and Ava (Owens) Short. John Short was born in Virginia, 1786, of Welsh parentage. His father came to Kentucky from North Carolina and took part in the early Indian wars of that section. John Short served in the War of 1812, settled in Indiana in 1818, removed to Illinois in 1847, and thence to Iowa in 1853, where he passed away in 1867. His wife, of Irish descent, was a Kentuckian, born November 10, 1788, the daughter of early pioneers of that commonwealth. Meriel was one of a family of eleven children, and until he was eighteen years old, lived in Indiana. There he obtained a good education in the public schools and later attended two seminaries, one located at Cherry Grove, Illinois. In 1853 he left the Illinois home to seek his fortunes in the far west, going overland to the Willamette valley and settling in Marion county. During the years 1855-6, he served as a volunteer in the Indian war of that date, being a member of Company J, under Captain Ruford Miller, Colonel Shaw commanding. For this loyal service, he now draws a pension from the government. At the time of the outbreak, he was teaching school near Silverton, being among the earliest teachers in Oregon. As a soldier, he visited the Yakima country, Wallula, Walla Walla and the Grande Ronde valley, Oregon, where the troops engaged the hostiles. In the battle, forty-two redskins were killed, besides several soldiers. In 1861, in the month of March, he came to Klickitat county, taking as a homestead what is now known as the old Coffield ranch, on the Grants-Goldendale road. That was the first homestead taken in the county. Mr. Short brought in with him sixty-five head of cattle, but these were nearly all destroyed by the severe winter of 1861-2. That winter was the severest ever known in the Northwest. The cattle themselves seemed to realize at its beginning that it would be their death. They lowed and tramped around all the time. During the winter one animal was known to stand on the Swale forty-two days without feed; it died after reaching food and water. One of the settlers wintered four yoke of cattle on the dead bodies of his other stock, which he cut up and fed in chunks. The starving animals ate the food voraciously and thrrove. For five years, or until 1866, Mr. Short conducted a blacksmith shop on the Columbus road. Then he removed to Chamberlin's Flats and took up cattle raising. He suffered considerable loss during the winter of 1871-2 and experienced his worst reverse in 1880-81. He bought his present ranch in 1880 and has since made it his home, following farming and stock raising with success. His property now embraces 360 acres of deeded land, while he controls fully 700 acres of school and railroad land. He began raising sheep in 1896 and now has nearly 2,000, a portion of which he leases. Mr. Short has also devoted much of his time to church work. In 1845 he joined the Church of Christ, and in 1875 he organized his first church with ten members. Subsequently this church was removed to Goldendale.

Mr. Short was married in Marion county, Oregon, June 16, 1859, to Miss Louise Anderson, a daughter of James and Eleanor (Simpson) Anderson. The father was born in Virginia, not far from Blue Ridge; the mother was a native of North Carolina. Mrs. Short was born in Platte county, Missouri, in April, 1837. Of the nine children born to this union, three, Adelia, Angelo and John M., are now dead. Two daughters, Mrs. Viletta Bullock and Mrs. Ella McDonald, reside in this county. The other children are Ari, Meriel J., Dudley G. and Clarence W. Mr. Short has two brothers living, Wesley, in Bloomington, Illinois, and Livingstone, in Kaslo, B. C. His eldest brother, Washington, now deceased, was a Christian minister for more than fifty years. The other brothers and sisters were: Samucl, Martin, Hansford, Hubbard, Nancy, Mary and Jacl. Mr. Short belongs to the Grange, and, politically, is a Democrat. An estimable man of high character, benevolent and charitable, he commands the respect of the entire community and is held in high esteem by his wide circle of friends in Oregon and Washington.

RALPH W. FENTON, a well-to-do farmer of Klickitat county, resides on his well improved ranch of 880 acres, eight miles east of the city of Goldendale. He cultivates the entire tract individually, and is said to be the most extensive farmer in his part of the county. He was born in The Dalles, Oregon, October 29, 1871, the son of Solomon and A. Emma (Osborn) Fenton. His father, who now lives with him, is of English descent and likewise a farmer, although his health is such that he does not do any hard work now. He was born in Indiana in 1828 and came by the isthmus to San Francisco, thence to Portland in 1851. He was one of the settlers who worked for the admission of Oregon to the Union. Some years later he returned east and engaged in the mercantile business, following it until 1864, at which time he crossed the Plains to Dallas, Oregon, whence in 1870 he came to The Dalles. Two years later he moved to the Goldendale country and took up a homestead near the site of the present town. He has continued to reside in the locality ever since and has only lately retired from active work, on account of enfeebled health. His wife, who was born in Iowa in 1845, was of English parentage. She passed away in 1874. Her father had the distinction of having been the first Baptist minister on the western coast and of having founded a church in Colorado, which cost $100,000. Ralph W., whose life it is our task to here chronicle, was but six months old when he came to Klickitat county with his parents in 1872, from The Dalles, Oregon, and he grew up in the county, acquiring his education in the local schools. An apt pupil, he in due time secured a teacher's certificate, but did not take up the profession of pedagogy. For a period of eleven years he rode the ranges steadily, engaged in the cattle business with his brothers, Frank and B. Fenton, who had entered this business on an extensive scale and were at one time among the most prominent Klickitat cattlemen. In 1895, our subject and his brother, Frank, invested in land, the latter undertaking to run the farm, the former to look after the cattle. For about two years Ralph handled the stock of Baker Brothers. In 1902 the partnership was dissolved, the stock and property being divided, and since that time our subject has been in business on his sole account. Lately he has sold his cattle and now farms on an extensive scale. He is a young man of superb executive ability, great energy and unstained reputation, and he certainly has cause for gratification in the splendid success he has already attained and in the brightness of his prospects for the future.

At Walla Walla, Washington, December 24, 1902, Mr. Fenton married Miss Ella, daughter of Joseph and Matilda C. (Perry) Yox. Her father and mother were formerly residents of Omaha, Nebraska, where Mr. Yox was engaged in the furniture business, but now live in Walla Walla, Washington. Mrs. Fenton was born in Omaha and educated in Walla Walla, where she took, in addition to public school work, a thorough business course. She was a teacher before her marriage. She and Mr. Fenton have one child, Bruce Harvey, born near Goldendale, December 28, 1903. Mr. Fenton's brother, Frank, has a farm adjoining his own, but his brother, B. Fenton, now lives in Roseburg, Oregon. A sister, Mrs. Maggie J. Wing, lives four miles southwest of Goldendale. Fraternally, Mr. Fenton is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and in politics he is an active Democrat.

JEFFERSON D. SMITH, an enterprising farmer of Klickitat county, lives on his 480-acre ranch, at Pleasant postoffice, two miles north and twelve east of Goldendale. He was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, in 1870, the son of Samuel H. and Nannie (Shaver) Smith. His father, a native of Tennessee, born in 1836, is likewise a farmer. He grew up in his native state, and at the age of twenty-two drove a stage from St. Joe, Missouri, to Salt Lake, Utah. When the Civil war broke out, he enlisted in the First Missouri volunteer cavalry, and served first under Colonel Gates, and later under General Price, of the Confederate army. He was wounded several times, and at Vicksburg was captured by the Union forces, but later paroled. He came to Klickitat county in 1877, and the following year took up a farm a mile and a half northeast of Pleasant postoffice, where he still resides. His wife, who belonged to an old Virginia family of German origin, died in Tennessee, in 1876. The subject of this review grew to manhood in the states of Tennessee and Virginia. His mother having died when he was six years old, he then went to live with his maternal grandparents, in Smith county, Virginia, with whom he resided until past twelve years of age. During this time he received his education, also learned the miller's trade, which he followed until he reached the age of nineteen. At that time his grandparents passed away, and he came west with his father, and settled in Pleasant valley, where, with his father's help, he bought his present farm. He has lived on the property and followed farming and cattle raising ever since with splendid success, also pursuing the threshing business during harvest seasons for some years. He started with a horse-power thresher, but now owns an interest in a valuable steam machine. Mr. Smith has been unusually successful in his various business ventures, his land, especially, having quadrupled in value since it came into his possession. He has a splendid orchard of many varieties of choice fruit, and numerous improvements on his fine farm testify to his skill and his thrift.

Mr. Smith married, in Klickitat county, on the 12th of January, 1898, Ella, daughter of Alexander M. and Eliza A. (Brack) Wylie. Her father, a farmer, was born in Indiana, November 29, 1850, and came to Klickitat county in 1878. Her mother was born in the Blue Grass state, in 1853. She is a native of Sonoma county, California, born twenty-five years later. Mrs. Smith has three brothers, James W., Francis S., and Thomas A., and four sisters, Ethel E., Lorena G., Mrs. Nancy J. Stump and Mrs. Hettie Hornibrook. Mr. Smith has one sister, now Mrs. Benna Vesta Allyn, a resident of Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Smith is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics he is a Democrat, while he and his wife both adhere to the Methodist Episcopal faith. He is a successful farmer and enjoys the respect always cheerfully accorded those who succeed in what they undertake, as well as the confidence which none but the upright and honorable may have.

WILLIAM SCHUSTER, a prosperous Klickitat county farmer, resides on his well-improved ranch of five hundred and eighty acres, twelve miles east of Goldendale, and two miles north of Pleasant postoffice, in rural free delivery district No. 1. He is a native of the state, born in Klickitat county on September 27, 1866. His father, August Schuster, was a very early settler in the county, and a prominent man in his time. He was a native German, but came to the United States when a young man, crossed the Plains to California in 1852, and took up a homestead on the site of the present city of Oakland. He did not remain there long, however, but returned east, and in 1862 brought his family to Washington, settling in Klickitat county, on the site of the present town of Lyle. He lived on the property five years, then bought a large ranch across the river from The Dalles, where he resided until his death, which occurred July 9, 1894, at the age of seventy-four years. He served by appointment as the first sheriff of Klickitat county, Rockland being the county seat at the time. He was afterward elected to the office and served continuously for sixteen years. He was always very active in politics. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Dell, was a native of Ohio, of German descent. She passed away April 27, 1901, at the age of seventy-five. William Schuster is one of a family of five children. He grew up in the county, attending the pioneer public schools, and at the age of twenty-one started in the meat market business in Goldendale. This occupation was followed by him for eight years, then he rode the range for some time. In 1895 he rented a ranch in Pleasant valley, consisting of a section of land, and began farming the property with profit. Purchasing his present place in 1899, he has made it his home for three years past, cultivating about two hundred and fifty acres of his land, and raising wheat upon it principally. He owns a steam thrasher which he operates in the surrounding country during the harvest seasons.

Mr. Schuster was married in the county, in 1888, to Miss Alice Cowles, daughter of Joel and Elizabeth (Blackburn) Cowles. Her father, who came to the county with his wife and daughter, some twenty-two years ago, is now deceased. Her mother lives with her. Mr. and Mrs. Schuster have two sons and one daughter, namely, William Raymond, Calvin Floyd and Sylvia May. Mr. Schuster has one brother, Charles A., a resident of Seattle, and three married sisters, Mrs. Mary Wickman and Mrs. Eliza Schanno, in The Dalles, and Mrs. Rosa Davis, in Walla Walla. Mrs. Schuster is a member of the Christian church, and her husband is affiliated with the Maccabees; also is overseer in the Grange, a lodge recently organized. In politics, he is an active Republican, attending caucuses and conventions. He has been a committeeman for a number of years, and constable in his precinct for nine years, also has served a like time as school director. At present he is road overseer in district No. 2. An energetic, ambitious and progressive man, and a good, public-spirited citizen, he enjoys an enviable standing in the community and much popularity.

WILLIAM H. MILLER is a farmer and fruit grower, residing eight miles south of Goldendale. He was born near Syracuse, New York, in the old Salina salt works, December 23, 1837. His father, James Miller, was a contractor and builder, born in New York state, in 1797, and was possessed of considerable wealth until he became involved in losing investments in the Salina salt works. After these reverses, which deprived him of his fortune, he came west to Illinois, hoping to better his financial condition, but died ten days after his arrival. The mother of William H.—Nancy (Van Vorst) Miller—was a native of New York state, born December 9, 1797. Her death occurred in 1881, near Goldendale, and her monument was the first erected in the Goldendale cemetery. She was of French and Holland Dutch extraction, and her husband, the father of William H., was of German. Our subject's grandfather, Van Vorst, when a boy of twelve, drove a supply wagon in the Revolutionary war.

When but seven years of age William went with his parents to Illinois, and remained there till he reached the age of thirty, meantime acquiring his education in the common schools. In 1868 he moved to Story county, Iowa, and in 1876 went west to Oregon, proceeding thence to Klickitat county, where he arrived June 10th of the same year. He immediately took a homestead one and one-half miles east of Goldendale, which he held till he made final proof on it, afterwards selling out. He then moved to Oregon and remained there for two years, at the end of which time he returned to Klickitat county and took up his residence upon a place he owned in the Goodnoe hills, which he later sold, only to purchase his present place. He has since become one of the promoters of the small-fruit industry in the Columbia river fruit bearing localities, and is finding the vocation quite profitable.

On March 19, 1866, Mr. Miller married Miss Mary A. Richmond, a native of New York, born in Oneida county, March 19, 1844. She was the daughter of Justus and Catherine (Wendell) Richmond, both of whom were born in New York state, the mother in 1822, and the father March 27, 1815. Mrs. Richmond died in 1862, and her husband on January 12, 1903, having survived her over forty years. The former was of Holland Dutch descent and the latter of English, but the families of both were among the colonial founders of this country, the grandsires of each, during the Revolution, having engaged actively in the struggle for liberty. Besides William H., of this sketch, there were ten children in his family. Those living of his brothers and sisters are James A., Captain S. H., Walter C., Frances T. and Mrs. Sophia M. Craig. The ones deceased are Mrs. M. A. Gibson, Mrs. E. A. Everham and R. G. Mrs. Miller's sisters and brother are: Mrs. Sarah Sheldon, Mrs. Emma Shinkle, Mrs. Henrietta Day and Alonzo. Three children, Ethelda, Hattie and Bertha, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller. Fraternally, Mr. Miller is associated with the Odd Fellows and the Enterprise Grange organizations, of the latter of which he is a charter member. Politically, he is independent, though he was in sympathy with the Populist ideas a few years ago, and is now a Roosevelt supporter. In politics, as in all other things, Mr. Miller takes a broad, altruistic view, aiming to support the principle most worthy, be it of one party or the other. He is one of the substantial men of his community.

CHARLES H. WEDGWOOD, an energetic farmer of Klickitat county and the owner of sixteen hundred acres of its tillable soil, situated three miles south and eleven east of Goldendale, was born in Brownville, Maine, March 14, 1841. His father, Amaziah, who was likewise born in Maine, March 10, 1804, a son of French and English parents, was a mechanic and farmer. His people were among the first settlers in Maine. He removed to Ohio in 1850, and thence to Michigan four years later, settling near Grand Rapids, where he resided until his death, at the age of ninety-six. Mrs. Elizabeth (Kelly) Wedgwood, his wife, was born in Connecticut in 1811, and died in Michigan in 1884. Charles H., the subject of this article, got his education in the common schools of Maine and Michigan. He remained at home with his parents until August, 1861, at which time he enlisted in the Tenth Missouri regiment, for twelve months' service. Upon receiving his discharge he again enlisted, this time in a Michigan regiment, and he served until the last gun of the war was silent, being honorably discharged in 1865. He then took up the blacksmith's trade, and worked at it for three years, then followed lumbering for several additional years, but eventually he purchased a farm and engaged in agriculture. In 1880 he moved to Hancock county, Iowa, where he resided eight years more, engaged in farming and stock raising. Coming to Klickitat county in 1888, he farmed rented land there for four years, then filed on the land which is now his home. Being a thrifty, energetic man, he has added to the original homestead from time to time since until he now owns a princely domain, of which a thousand acres are now being cultivated, much of it being in wheat this year. He also has considerable stock.

In Grandville, Michigan, on December 7, 1866, Mr. Wedgwood married Persis, daughter of Jesse and Sarah (Schoonover) Ellis. Her father, who is of French and Welsh descent, and a native of Summit county, Ohio, is a farmer by occupation. He went to Michigan in 1860 and has since lived in the state, now residing near Manton. Her mother, who was born in New York state in 1830, and married in Ohio, is also still alive. The place of Mrs. Wedgwood's birth is North Hampton, Ohio, and the date April 28, 1847. She was educated in the public schools of her native state and married at the age of nineteen. She and Mr. Wedgwood are parents of eight children, namely, Mrs. Rosa Condon, a resident of Goldendale, born in Michigan, January 26, 1868; Mrs. Flora Wallis, born February 16, 1870, now in Biggs, Oregon; Clarence, born June 26, 1872, at home; Fred, born January 3, 1874, Sarah A., born July 3, 1876, now in Portland, Oregon; Warren, Ray and Grover C., all born in Iowa September 7, 1878, May 14, 1880, and November 0, 1882, respectively. Mr. Wedgwood is a member of the Methodist church, to which he has belonged since he was fifteen years old. In politics he favors the principles of the Republican party. A man of great energy and splendid business ability, he has achieved a splendid victory in his battle for material success; and has, at the same time, contributed largely to the development of Klickitat county, by whose citizens he has the honor to be esteemed and respected most cordially.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN FENTON is a comfortably situated farmer and stockman residing eight miles east of Goldendale, Washington. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, July 24, 1869, the son of Solomon and Emma (Osborn) Fenton. Solomon Fenton was born in Madison county, Indiana, in 1828. He was a farmer and stockman and also, in a less degree, a merchant. He moved from Indiana to Iowa in an early day, and after several years spent there, in 1851 went west to California, via the Isthmian route. At a later date he returned to the eastern states, whence, still later, he crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in Polk county in 1864. His final migration was to Klickitat county in 1872, where, immediately upon arrival, he took up land one and one-half miles from Goldendale. At present he is living, though very feeble. Emma (Osborn) Fenton was born in Iowa in 1845; her death occurred in 1874. Her father was a Baptist preacher who carried on his ministerial work in California during the early days, the greater part of his life, as well as his fortune, being spent in this work. From both of his parents Benjamin F. derived English blood. He arrived in Klickitat county with his father and mother when three years of age and here grew up on a farm, attending the common schools till well advanced in his class work, then taking a year's course in Salem, Oregon. When twenty-one years of age he taught one term of school, after which he took up farming, later engaging with his brother, Ralph, in the cattle business. He remained in partnership with his brother at this vocation for seven years. In 1898 the brothers sold their cattle and invested in land which they farmed jointly until two years ago, at which time they dissolved partnership. Since then they have farmed independently.

On February 12, 1895, Mr. Fenton married Miss Ida M. Day, a native of Iowa, born January 8, 1876. Her parents were Jacob and Etta (Richmond) Day, the former born in Indiana in 1851, and the latter in Illinois in 1850. Both parents are now living, their home being a garden ranch near Goldendale. Mr. Fenton has two brothers and one sister, namely, B. Fenton, residing in Oregon; Ralph, in Klickitat county, and Mrs. Maggie Wing, also in Klickitat county. Mr. and Mrs. Fenton have three children, Claud, Ethel and Alma. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fenton are members of the Methodist church, and in politics the former is a Democrat. He takes a commendable interest in school affairs, and has served two terms as a school director. In his farm he has six hundred and forty acres of land, and he gives his personal attention to all his farming interests. By his methods, characterized as they are by care and judicious management rather than by haste and inattention to details, Mr. Fenton has built up a farming business creditable and profitable to himself.

ERNEST L. WELD is a comfortably situated rancher and stockman residing six miles south and one and a half miles west of Golden-dale, Washington. He was born in La Salle county, Illinois, October 10, 1863, the son of Timothy and Samantha (Alvord) Weld, both of whom at present reside in Klickitak county. Timothy Weld is a stockman by vocation and a carpenter by avocation. He was born in Maine in 1828 and arrived in Klickitak county in 1881. During the first few years of his stay here he was engaged in the planing mill business, and later he worked as a contractor and builder. At present, however, he is devoting his attention to stock raising. Samantha (Alvord) Weld, who was born in Illinois in 1844, is still living. She is of German descent. Ernest L.'s parents moved from Illinois to Story county, Iowa, when he was five years old, and after residing eleven years at Ames in that county moved to Furnas county, Nebraska, where they settled at Arapahoe. Here the elder Weld followed contracting and building. Buffaloes were not yet extinct from this part of Nebraska, and the first influx of settlers was pouring into the country and breaking away the barriers which Nature is ever wont to place in the way of pioneers. The Weld family came to Klickitak county in 1881, Ernest accompanying. For a time he engaged with his brother Charles in the stock business, but after two years thus spent he moved to Sherman county, Oregon, where he took up land. Upon this he made his home till 1903; then he returned to Klickitak county and bought the farm which is his home at present.

In 1898 Mr. Weld married Miss Rose Venable, then a resident of Oregon. She was born in Wil-lamette valley, Oregon, August 29, 1873, the daughter of Francis and Jane (Hubbard) Venable. Francis Venable was born in Illinois in 1825. He crossed the Plains to Oregon when twenty-four years of age, and after residing in that state for seven years engaged in farming and stock raising, came to Klickitak county, arriving in 1859. At this writing he is living and in good health for one of his age. Jane (Hubbard) Venable was born in Missouri, June 5, 1836. She is now residing in Sherman county, Oregon. Mr. Weld's brothers and sisters are Frank, Ray, Alice, Hattie, Bertha, and Charles, the last mentioned deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Weld have one child, Wayland, born July 11, 1903. Fraternaly, Mr. and Mrs. Weld are associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Rathbone Sisters, respectively. Mr. Weld is a Republican and makes it a point to attend all caucuses and conventions of his county. He is a vigorous ad-vocate of all measures to the betterment of ed-ucational facilities, and at present is discharging the duties of school director. By individual own-ership and as a partner with his father and broth-er-in-law he is interested in nearly thirteen hun-dred acres of real estate, part of which is valu-able pasture land. His herd of cattle at present numbers one hundred and forty head, mostly of the Durham breed.

GEORGE W. WADE, a fruit raiser and ship- per of Columbus, Washington, is a native of Illinois, born in Adams county May 27, 1862. He was the son of Lorenza Wade, a farmer, who died when George was very young. The elder Wade belonged to a Kentucky family, and served in the Civil war, there suffering hardships which, it is thought, were partly responsible for his death so soon after. The mother, Mary (Richards) Wade, a native of Missouri, also died when Mr. Wade was a lad. Left an orphan when so young, George W. was brought up by his brother-in-law, John W. Bennet, who soon moved to Kansas, settling in Smith county, where George grew up, receiving a fair educa- tion in the common schools, and afterwards learning the carpenter's trade. Upon reaching his majority he took a pre-emption in Smith county, where he farmed for fifteen years, rais- ing corn and hogs chiefly. He was successful, but in 1889, seeking broader opportunities, sold out and came to Goldendale. Here for several years he followed the carpenter trade, afterward going into the fruit raising business on his pres- ent farm, which he leased for a term of five years. The ranch is one of the best in its locality, and comprises two hundred acres along the Col- umbia, forty of which are devoted to the raising of grapes, and twenty to berries of divers kinds. The grapes are the most profitable crop, owing partly to the less complicated operations neces- sary to handle them. From his vineyard Mr. Wade ships four thousand crates of grapes per year, principally to Spokane and Portland. That part of his farm which is in alfalfa raises three crops a year, and furnishes an excellent pasture as well. In addition to the fruits named, Mr. Wade markets peaches, pears, prunes and apples, and though he ships his own fruit exclusively he is regarded as the most extensive shipper in the county.

In Smith county, Kansas, in 1888, Mr. Wade married Miss Hattie L. Barnes, a native of Iowa, born in 1867. Miss Barnes' father was a farmer, also native of Iowa, from which state he moved to Smith county, Kansas, where he now lives.

To this marriage two children have been born—Minnie B., now residing in Oregon, and Mary Leo, who is staying at home. Fraternaly, Mr. Wade is associated with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics supports the Republican platform. Mrs. Wade is a member of the Adventist church. In every way both are deserving of the highest esteem of those who know them. By energy and thrift and the exercise of all the industrial and social virtues, they have won an honored place in the esteem of their neighbors.

MARION F. WREN is a farmer and fruit raiser residing at Columbus, Washington. He was born in Neillsville, Clark county, Wisconsin, October 10, 1868. He is the son of Sereno Wren, a farmer and sawmill owner, born in Ohio in 1842, and now residing on the old homestead in Wisconsin. The elder Wren settled with his parents near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, when a boy, and lived with them till nineteen years of age, when he left home and went to Wisconsin. His father, grandfather of our subject, enlisted in the army during the Civil war and was never heard of again. Sereno, after going to Wisconsin, worked in the pineries for years, eventually accumulating sufficient means to purchase a large farm on which, in addition to agricultural pursuits, he engaged in the sawmill business. It is on this place that he is now living. The mother of our subject was Alleda F. Wren, a native of Kankakee, Illinois, and a daughter of Earl W. Hatch, a Civil war veteran. Her death occurred at Columbus in 1891.

Marion F. grew up in Wisconsin, assisting his father on the farm and in the mill. He acquired his education in the public schools and learned engineering in the sawmill. After he had become proficient as an engineer he and his father bought a traction thresher, the first of the kind in Clark county, which they ran for several seasons. Since coming to Washington Mr. Wren has continued the threshing business with more than creditable success. He visited Washington in 1890, and two years later came to remain. After farming, working in a sawmill, and owning a third interest in the Grants ferry for several years he purchased his present farm of one hundred and fifty-two acres adjoining Columbus, in 1900, which property was known as the old Wm. Hicenbothm place. Since acquiring this place Mr. Wren has made extensive improvements in the way of building and increasing the facilities for irrigation till it has come to be without doubt one of the most valuable properties in the region.

On May 23, 1894, in Columbus, Mr. Wren married Miss Lavina C. Hope, a native of Nebraska, born near Lincoln, January 20, 1875. Her father, Samuel B. Hope, was a carpenter, architect and cabinet-maker, having learned his trade in London, near which city he was born. Upon leaving England he came to Canada, then resided for a time in Nebraska, coming thence to Klickitat county, where he landed in 1877. He now lives at John Day, Oregon. Mr. Wren's mother, Charity C. (Fuilayson) Hope, who has been dead for many years, was of Scotch descent. His brothers and sisters are: Lamont S., in Arizona; Frank W., in Wisconsin; Lemuel C., in Vancouver, Washington; Thomas E., in Wisconsin; Mrs. Nettie E. Hale, in Washington, and Earl, in Montana. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wren are: Harry, Stella, Raleigh and Chester. Fraternaly, Mr. Wren is associated with the Woodmen of the World, and Mrs. Wren with the Women of Woodcraft. He is a staunch Republican, and usually attends the conventions. His best effort is given to the betterment of his home, and to the improvement and management of his farm, but notwithstanding the engrossing nature of these matters, he is public spirited, and is invariably found to be an active participant in all things that concern the good of his community.

JOHN A. McADAMS, a farmer residing in Goldendale, was born near Highpoint, Guilford county, North Carolina, May 22, 1863. His father, Robert McAdams, also a North Carolinian, was a farmer by occupation, born in 1829. At present he is living in Ray county, Missouri. The mother, Nancy (Fonvill) McAdams, was a native of North Carolina, born in 1834. Her death occurred in 1896.

When John A. was five years old he went with his parents to Ray county, Missouri, where his father engaged in farming and dealing in land. Here he remained with his parents until sixteen, then left home to earn his own living. He went to Kansas where, in Jefferson county, he worked on farms for a period of six years, at the end of which time he returned to Missouri, where for two years he remained, buying and selling horses in Kansas City. He then moved to Arkansas City, Kansas, thence, in 1888, to Klickitat county, where for ten years he farmed in the region between Goldendale and Centerville. Good management and perseverance finally enabled him to buy the ranch which he had rented, and this farm is his present home. The Phillips & Aldrich ranch, of which he was manager, comprises nine hundred acres, and is situated twelve miles south of Goldendale on the breaks of the Columbia river.

In 1886, in Ottawa, Kansas, Mr. McAdams married Miss Eva L. Killgore, a native of that state, born in 1866. She was the daughter of Wiley Killgore, a horse raiser and farmer, born in Iowa in 1854, and now residing in Colorado. Her mother, Caroline (Phillips) Killgore, was a native of Missouri, born in 1852. Her death occurred in 1896. The brother and sisters of Mr. McAdams who are still living are: Calvin N., Mrs. Kate Whitsett, Mrs. Emma Bales and Mrs. Mary A.

Post. Another brother, William, is now deceased. The children that have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McAdams are Orville E., Verl C. and Guy S. Fraternally, Mr. McAdams is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in politics he is a Republican. His farm, comprising four hundred and eighty acres, is all under fence and in a high state of cultivation. It is well adapted to the raising of wheat and barley, as well as fruits, and under the well-directed efforts of its owner, is increasing in value every year.

MARTIN L. McCANN is a favorably known fruit raiser, residing nine miles south of Golden-dale. He is a native of Ohio, born near Zanesville, Muskingum county, May 19, 1850. His father, Samuel McCann, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, March 10, 1807, and died July 31, 1890. Samuel H. McCann in company with his father, James McCann, grandfather of our subject, came to Muskingum county, Ohio, in 1812, taking up government land, which is still in possession of the family. Grandfather McCann, while in Ireland, took part in the Irish rebellion under the noted Robert Emmet, and came to the United States with a price on his head. The McCann family traces its lineage back through Scotch ancestors for several centuries. The mother of our subject was Caroline (Irvine) McCann, a native of New Jersey, born in 1814; she died in 1874. Her father was of Scotch parentage; her mother of old Puritan stock. Martin L. McCann grew to manhood in Ohio, obtaining a common school education. He was in Kansas during the palmy days of 1873-75, when cowboys were the most numerous inhabitants, excepting Indians, and when the grassy plains were teeming with buffaloes. He rode the range and was otherwise engaged in the stock business until 1885, then coming west to Klickitat county, arriving April 12th of that year. He at once filed upon his present place and since that date has farmed and raised fruit with satisfactory results.

In Kansas, December 21, 1878, Mr. McCann married Miss Carrie Adams, a native of Muskingum county, Ohio, born July 25, 1848. Her father, Littleton Adams, a native of Virginia, was a farmer during his lifetime; he died several years ago. The Adams family has a lineal connection with the Adams family which took such an active part in freeing the American colonies from English rule. Nancy (Van Voorhis) Adams, the mother of Mrs. McCann, was of Holland Dutch stock, her father being among the earliest settlers of Ohio. Mr. McCann has six brothers: Harvey, a judge of Henry county, Missouri; Allen, residing in Garfield county, Washington; Maxwell, of Texas; Warren, Orville and Emmet, all living on the old homestead in Ohio. Three children, Nellie, Nanna and Harvey, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mc-

Cann. Fraternally, he is associated with the Masons and the Grange, being treasurer of the latter's local lodge. Politically, Mr. McCann is an active Democrat, who takes enough interest in the welfare of his party to attend all county conventions. His farm, comprising one hundred and sixty acres of excellent land, shows the results of well directed tilling, yielding abundantly every year.

ABRAHAM P. HUNTER is a genial farmer, residing two and one-quarter miles east and one north of Centerville, Washington. He is a native of Missouri, born in Jefferson county, July 18, 1837, the son of John D. Hunter. The elder Hunter was born in Tennessee, May 24, 1814. Thence he moved to Missouri in the early thirties, and lived there till the time of his death, in 1890. The mother was Jane (Hayter) Hunter, also a native of Tennessee, born May 24, 1815. Her death occurred in Missouri. Abraham P. lived on the home farm with his parents till he reached his majority, at which time he began farming independently. In 1884 he moved to Smith county, Kansas, and there farmed till 1890, when he came to Klickitat county. During the first year of his stay here he rented, but by 1892, by good management, he was enabled to purchase his present farm. In 1895, he filed on eighty acres adjoining, so that he has at the present time two hundred and forty acres of land, which he is devoting to farming and stock raising with creditable success.

In Ray county, Missouri, on May 8, 1865, Mr. Hunter married Mrs. Jane (Brody) Phillips, a widow. Mrs. Phillips was a native of Richland county, Ohio, born December 7, 1838. Her parents were Jesse Brody and Elner (Slater) Brody, both natives of Richland county, Ohio, the former born September 15, 1802, and the latter in 1806. Mr. Brody was of Scotch-Irish descent. His death occurred July 4, 1882, when he was seventy-two years old. Mrs. Brody was Scotch-Irish and Welsh, and died at the age of ninety-two, in Caldwell county, Missouri. The first husband of Mrs. Hunter lived but eighteen days after the marriage. She married Mr. Hunter when twenty-eight years of age. Their children are: James O., born December 25, 1886, in Missouri, and now living at Toppensh, Washington; Mrs. Cora Campbell, born in Jasper county, Missouri, August 10, 1877; and Mrs. Flora Merriam, who is a twin sister to the latter. Mrs. Merriam is now a widow, and with her one child is living at home with her parents. Mr. Hunter is associated with the Masons and the Grangers, fraternally, and in religious principles, supports the doctrines and faith of the Methodist church. He has now reached a period of life when men are entitled to retire from the more active toil required by the hurrying, bustling world, but notwithstanding still maintains a keen and intelligent interest in the affairs of life, both personal and relative to the commonwealth. He served honorably during the Civil war, and now, with the diminishing thousands of veterans that yet survive this awfullest of wars, from the glorious eminence of twentieth century progress views the brightening future of the nation which he once risked his life to save from the blot of slavery and disunion.

CONRAD B. YEACKEL, an energetic Klickitat county farmer and stockman, and one of the leading Germans in his locality, resides three miles south of Centerville, on his well-improved ranch of five hundred and sixty acres. He was born in Petersburg, Canada, July 3, 1850, the son of Conrad and Maggie (Fox) Yeackel. His father, a native German, was likewise a farmer. He served as a soldier in the German army, but in early life left his home for Canada, where he resided two years; then crossing to Wisconsin and settling in Manitowoc county. After having passed several years in that state, he removed westward to Swift county, Minnesota, thence in 1886 to Klickitat county, Washington. He died some twelve years later, at the age of seventy-four. The mother of our subject was born in Byrne, Germany, in 1813, and came to this country when a girl. She died in 1898, at the age of eighty-five. Mr. Yeackel, of whom we write, grew to manhood in Wisconsin, working on the farm when not in school. When he reached maturity, he went to Oshkosh, in the same state, and there drove team for several years. In 1871 he moved to Minnesota, settled in Swift county, took a pre-emption claim, and engaged in farming. During 1877 he came west to California, thence to Portland, Oregon, and thence to Klickitat county, in the fall of the same year. At the time he crossed the Columbia river at The Dalles, he had his family of three children, his wife and mother with him, and the sum of $9.75 represented his entire capital. He took up a homestead, now his present home, and with his family went into the timber to live for the first winter. The succeeding spring he sold the rails and fence posts he had cut in the timber during the winter, and found that he had a surplus capital of $50 after paying all expenses, and leaving considerable lumber to be used on his farm. With this money he obtained his start in the cattle business. He also broke wild cattle and logged some. At the expiration of two years he had saved enough money to permit him to break ground on his ranch, and he has continually devoted his time since then to improving the property. From a start of one lonely lamb he raised a band of two thousand sheep, which he afterward sold. He also ran range cattle, and now has considerable stock on the place. He started to operate a threshing machine four years after he came to the locality, and still continued this work, sometimes operating two machines at the same time. Though he came to the country during the Indian scare, when settlers were all fleeing to The Dalles for protection, he continued to work in the timber all this time, getting out logs; paying no attention to the trouble whatsoever.

Mr. Yeackel was united in marriage in Swift county, Minnesota, March 30, 1872, to Amelia Heitz, a native of Rome, New York, born June 4, 1854, to German parents. They were the first couple to be married in the county. Mrs. Yeackel has one brother, Charles, now living with her, while a brother, Joseph, and sisters, Henrietta, Lizzie and Terese, live at Oshkosh, Wisconsin. Lizzie is now Mrs. Work and Terese is married to a Mr. Lidgburg. Mr. Yeackel has one brother, Theodore, who lives quite near Centerville. Mr. and Mrs. Yeackel have eight children: Henry, married and living near-by; Mrs. Emma Crocker, living a half-mile south of Centerville; Charles, also married and living in the neighborhood; Lizzie, Fred, Nellie, Joseph and Mabel, at home. Fraternally, Mr. Yeackel is a member of the Woodmen of the World, the A. O. U. W. and the Grange. He belongs to the Presbyterian church, and in politics votes for the man who, he considers, will best serve the county, without regard to his political affiliations. He has been road supervisor for eight years. His place is all fenced and rendered convenient and homelike by the erection of a good, modern house and good out-buildings, the planting of an orchard of well selected trees, etc. He is a competent business man, full of energy, agreeable and pleasant in manner and of good standing in his community.

DANIEL JORDAN is a well-established and highly respected farmer and stockman living two miles north and one mile east of Columbus, Washington. He was born in Cabington, England, December 12, 1840. His parents were John and Sarah (Hoggins) Jordan, both of whom were natives of England, in which country they passed their entire lives. The elder Jordan was a farmer. Daniel grew to manhood in England, receiving a fair education in the common schools. At the age of thirteen he left home, and from that time till he reached his majority, he worked for different farmers, in this way earning his own living. When twenty-one years old he went to Australia, and there followed mining for five years. Thence he went to New Zealand, where he worked in the mines for another half decade. In 1870 he came to the United States, landing at San Francisco, California. He worked in the harvest field the summer ensuing, and in the fall went to Oregon, where, during the winter, he followed railroad work. The next summer, that of 1871, he went to the Cascade mountains, and in the fall arrived in Klickitat county. Here he accepted employment on a stock-ranch. In 1873, he purchased his present farm, where he has since worked independently. February 11, 1877, Mr. Jordan married Mrs. Sarah E. (Storey) Busey, the ceremony being performed in Blockhouse, Klickitak county, Washington. Mrs. Busey was a widow, her deceased husband being John D. Busey, to whom she was married when nineteen years of age. Of this marriage there were two children, William W., and Henry C. Mr. Busey died in 1872, and five years later Mrs. Busey married Mr. Jordan, of whom we write. Mrs. Jordan is a native of Hancock county, Illinois. Her father was David Storey, a native of North Carolina, and her mother was Pheba (Pugh) Storey, a native of Indiana. When a youth of fifteen Mr. Storey left his native state and went to Indiana, where he met and later married Miss Pugh. Afterwards he went to Illinois. Mr. Storey is one of the pioneer spirits of the West. He served in the Mexican war, and later crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling near Hillsboro. He is now residing with his children near Goldendale. His parents were of Irish extraction, and those of his wife, the mother of Mrs. Jordan, of German. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have but one child of their own, Nettie E., born in Klickitak county, November 20, 1877. Paul L. Jordan is an adopted son. He was born September 25, 1804. Mr. Jordan is a Methodist, and is now serving with credit as a trustee of his home church, of which Mrs. Jordan is also a member, and in which she is one of the most active workers.

By integrity, well directed industry and economy, Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have established themselves securely in the possession of a fine five hundred acre farm, and have it well supplied with all accessories that go to make an ideal farm home. They are pioneers of Klickitak county, to whom credit is due for the part they have taken in the development of the county into a prosperous agricultural community, and also for the excellent bearing they have ever maintained relative to neighborhood affairs.

HERBERT P. TRASK is a well-to-do farmer and sheep man, residing two and one-half miles northeast of Columbus, Washington. He was born in New Hampshire, February 14, 1854. His parents were David and Polly (Presby) Trask, both of English extraction. The elder Trask was a native of Maine, whence he moved, in 1858, to Wisconsin. His death occurred in that state in 1866. The mother was born in New Hampshire, August 8, 1820, and died in Wisconsin, April 19, 1862.

Herbert P. was obliged to shoulder the responsibilities of life at a very early age. His mother died when he was seven years old, and three years later his father passed away. Thus left an orphan, he was obliged to support himself, and did so by working on farms, and at whatever else he was able to do. In spite, however, of the many reverses to which he was subjected during boyhood, he managed to obtain a practical education in the common schools of Wisconsin. When fifteen years of age he went to Kansas, where he remained for three years. In 1872, he came to Klickitak county. Upon his arrival he went into partnership with his uncle, John Presby, in the fruit growing business, at which vocation he was engaged for many years. In 1875, he filed on a homestead—his present farm—and with his uncle, put in a sawmill, ten miles north of Goldendale, which became known as the Three-Mile Presby mill. They operated it jointly for four years, then sold out. Mr. Trask has since given his attention to the sheep business, and at present he owns one thousand head.

Mr. Trask was married at Lyle, Washington, August 21, 1882, to Sarah J. Bateman, a native of Sullivan county, Pennsylvania, born August 21, 1864. She was educated in the common schools of Pennsylvania and of Washington. Her father died when she was a babe of two years, and the mother later married again. She is now Mrs. Jane Bennett, residing at Baker City, Oregon. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Trask, namely, George W., Martha W., Pearl M., Lizzie M., Harry W., Wilhelmina J., Bertha G., Elmer E., John H., Hazel A. and Chester D. All were born in Klickitak county, and all, excepting John, are living. Fraternally, Mr. Trask is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, also with Enterprise Grange, No. 85, which he joined sixteen years ago; and in politics, with the Democratic party. He is a member of the Methodist church. Among those of his community who rank high in the attributes of honesty, industry and stability of intentions, Mr. Trask is one of the foremost. He is not an extremist in any line, either for wealth or community influence, but in the more reliable qualities of good citizenship he is reputed not to be lacking.

GEORGE M. BUNNELL, a sheep man and a partner in the firm of Phillips, Aldrich & Bunnell, residing at Goldendale, in Klickitak county, Washington, was born in Clackamas county, Oregon, November 13, 1864. Charles B. Bunnell, his father, a native of Illinois, crossed the Plains in 1851-2, and settled in Clackamas county, Oregon, there taking up land. He still resides on his ranch. He is of Scotch parentage, and his wife, Louise (Crow) Bunnell, was a native of Missouri. In 1849, when a small child, she came across the Plains with her parents, and settled in Oregon, where she died in the year 1873.

George M. grew to young manhood in Oregon, being educated there, and when fourteen years old learned the iron-molder's trade in the shops at East Portland. After working at that handicraft for several years, he took up dairying and ranching, following that line of work until he reached the age of twenty-eight. He first came to Klickitat county, Washington, in 1885, but returned after two years to Oregon, and for the several years following was back and forth between the two states, for a time locating on the Sound. He formed a partnership with his brother, James A. Bunnell, in the spring of 1896, and the young men leased sheep from A. R. Thompson, a large sheep man of The Dalles, Oregon, and ran them in Klickitat county for two years, feeding in the Sunnyside district. At the expiration of four years, they dissolved partnership, and George went to Yakima county, and took up land near Outlook. He spent some time in the improvement of this property. Thinking that he might do better somewhere else, he took a trip through Mexico, also looking for a suitable location in the state of Texas and Arizona, but, not finding a place to his liking, he returned to Washington, and soon after bought a band of six hundred sheep. These he kept on C. S. Childers' place. A year ago his present partners bought into the business. Altogether the three men have about one thousand six hundred head of sheep, which they winter in the Sunnyside country. His brother, James A. Bunnell, is still engaged in the stock business in Klickitat county, and two other brothers, John F. and Charles F., are ranchers in the same county. A sister, Mrs. Rillie A. Taylor, resides at Portland, Oregon, and another sister, Mrs. Manda Goetz, is living in Mexico. Mr. Bunnell thinks the state of Washington a better sheep country than Oregon, judging by the parts of Oregon that he has visited, and states that he gets better grass, and the sheep shear more, when fed in this state, and that, outside of the John Day and Grande Ronde districts in Oregon, more sheep are run in Washington. He has property in Clark county. In politics, he is a Republican, and an admirer of President Roosevelt.

FRANK ALDRICH, of the well known firm of Phillips & Aldrich, grain and real estate dealers, Goldendale, is one of the substantial business men of Klickitat county and one of the influential men of his community. A native of Michigan, he was born in Clinton county, February 11, 1850, to the union of Wells and Sarah J. (Ives) Aldrich and in one of the choicest sections of the great Peninsula state he spent the early days of his life. His father, a farmer by occupation, was born in New York state in 1834, removed to southern Michigan in 1848, becoming a pioneer of the newly born state, and with his wife is at present living in Bay City in that commonwealth. His wife, likewise a native of New York, was married in Michigan. The subject of this sketch received his education in the public schools of his native state and remained with his parents until twenty years of age, when he commenced teaching school. He followed that means of livelihood four years, then, in 1883, went to Dakota and for the next seven years was engaged in farming. During the winter of 1890, he came to the Pacific coast. He taught school in Washington county, Oregon, during the following year, and in February, 1892, came to Klickitat county. The year 1892 was passed in the school room. In the spring of 1893 he moved to Goldendale, where that year and the next he was occupied in assisting the assessor and as deputy treasurer. In the fall of 1894 he began buying grain, a line of work he has since followed with notable success, purchasing for the Pacific Coast Elevator Company and the Wasco Warehouse Company. In the spring of 1899 Mr. Aldrich entered into a partnership with H. C. Phillips for the purpose of handling grain, a business relation which is still maintained. This firm is also doing an extensive real estate business. It owns a half interest in the ferry at Grants and a two-thirds interest in the Arlington ferry. In November, 1903, it became interested in the Goldendale Milling Company, of which concern it has the management at present. Stock raising has also occupied its attention, for the firm owns two thousand acres of farm and grazing land in Klickitat county, and a year ago engaged in the sheep business, ranging about six thousand head this year.

Mr. Aldrich was married at Bay City, Michigan, July 16, 1882, to Miss Clara J. Parker, whose father, a farmer, moved to Dakota in 1886 and passed away in that state eight years ago. Mrs. Aldrich was born near the little city of Flint, Michigan, November 7, 1858, and received her education in Michigan's public schools. She was married when twenty-three years old. Three children have blessed the Aldrich home, Lee, born in Dakota, November, 1889; Harry, in Washington county, Oregon, August 27, 1891, and Wells, in Goldendale, June 24, 1893. Mr. Aldrich is connected with four fraternities, the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Artisans and the Rathbone Sisters. He is interested in political affairs, and a Republican in politics. His property accumulations show him to be a man of business ability and diversified talents, while his qualities of character have won for him the confidence and good will of his fellow citizens.

THOMAS N. CROFTON is engaged in the mercantile and hotel business at Centerville, Washington. He was born in New York City, June 13, 1862, the son of John and Rachel (Nugent) Crofton, both born in Ireland in 1833, the former in county Roscommon; the latter in county Galway. The elder Crofton came to the United States in 1848, and settled in New York City, there accepting employment of the Cunard Steamship Company, with which he worked, altogether, for thirty years. In 1873 he came to Klickitat county and took up a homestead ten miles west of Goldendale, which is now known as the Crofton Prairie. He lived on this place till 1880, then moved to the swale south of Goldendale. From this place he returned in 1885 to New York City and again entered the employ of the Cunard Steamship Company, with which he remained till his death, June 22, 1892. Rachel (Nugent) Crofton, the mother, arrived in New York City when a maid of thirteen years, having previously received her common school instruction in Ireland. She married Mr. Crofton when twenty-five years of age. Her death occurred in Klickitat county, November 5, 1879. Thomas N. began his education in the common schools of Pennsylvania, and completed it in Klickitat county, where he arrived with his parents when eleven years old. At the age of twenty he began working out, but after six months thus spent, he took up a claim and worked independently. This he farmed for two years, then sold out. In 1885 he bought his father's place, which consisted of two hundred and forty acres, situated in the swale south of Centerville. He farmed this place till 1896, then moved to Centerville and opened a hotel. Later, he and his father-in-law became partners in a general merchandise business in Centerville, which was conducted under the firm name of Gilmore & Crofton. In 1898, having left the business to the management of his wife, he went to Dawson City, Alaska. After spending a summer in that place he returned to his home in Centerville, and he has since devoted his time to his store and hotel and his large farming interests. In July, 1899, Mr. Gilmore died, then Mr. Crofton purchased his partner's interest in the business, and has since conducted the establishment under his own name. His brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Isabella Gilmore, now residing three miles west of Goldendale; George, living in Weiser, Idaho; William, of Linn, Idaho, and Catherine, now deceased.

Mr. Crofton was married in The Dalles, Oregon, June 4, 1889, to Miss Nannie Gilmore, a native of Buchanan county, Missouri, born August 22, 1870. She was the daughter of James A. and Catherine (Kline) Gilmore, both natives of Missouri. The father came to Klickitat county in 1886 and settled near The Dalles. He died in Centerville, July 31, 1889, and the mother in Missouri, June 10, 1876. Previous to her marriage, Mrs. Crofton acquired an education in the common schools of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Crofton have had six children, Raymond E. V., born September 1, 1891, died at the age of nine months; William H., March 31, 1893; James W., January 23, 1895; Estella F., February 11, 1897; Ernest H., July 18, 1899, and Isabella, January 21, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Crofton is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the A. O. U. W., the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Episcopalian church. His property interests comprise a fine farm adjoining the town of Centerville, and the hotel and store, above mentioned, together with other town property. He is one of the most substantial residents of the county, and commands the respect of all.

FRED H. VUNK is a comfortably situated farmer residing in Centerville, Washington. He was born in Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, March 4, 1854, and was the son of Horatio G. and Lucina (Wendel) Vunk, both natives of New York state, the former born in Herkimer county, in 1827. The elder Vunk was a machinist by vocation and a dentist by avocation. He came to Wisconsin in 1850 and settled in Milwaukee, where he helped build the first locomotive that ran on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. He died in Milwaukee, in November, 1854, when Fred H., the subject of this sketch, was eight months old. During his boyhood, Mr. Vunk received a practical education in the common schools of Wisconsin. When seventeen, he began working in the lumber camps of Wisconsin and remained in this employment until he was twenty-two, at which time he went to Portland, Oregon, arriving in 1876. Here he accepted employment on a steamboat plying on the Columbia river between Portland and The Dalles. The following year, February 3, 1877, he arrived in Klickitat county. He thereupon took a homestead of eighty acres four miles southwest of Centerville, upon which he resided till 1889, when he sold out and went to Oregon. There he followed freighting till 1892. He then returned to Klickitat county and took up a homestead in Cedar valley, where he lived till 1899, since which time he has been living in Centerville. He bought some property in this town in 1892. His mother married Mr. E. R. Hatch, and to this marriage six children were born. Fraternally, Mr. Vunk is affiliated with the Masons and the Knights of Pythias. He is a staunch Republican on all national issues, but in municipal affairs supports the most worthy issue largely free from partisan prejudice. He has filled the office of justice of the peace with credit to himself, and has also served as captain of the national guard. Higher offices than these he has not sought, his preference being for a quiet, unostentatious life rather than the strenuous requirements of official position. By his many friends he is termed a "good old bach," which homely characterization is easily understood as an encomium to his manly worth.

LARS MATTSON was the first Finlander that settled in Klickitat county, and now resides three-quarters of a mile west of Centerville. He was born in Finland, April 23, 1841, the son of Mat and Retta Mattson, both natives of Finland, and now deceased. The father died at the age of ninety-eight. Mr. Mattson, when a youth, received an education in the common schools of Finland. He lived at home until he was twenty-one, and afterward, when twenty-three, purchased a farm on which he lived for ten years. In 1873 he sold out and came to the United States, his objective point being Michigan. In Michigan he remained for four years, then, with three other families of Finlanders, came to Klickitat county, Washington. Upon his arrival he took up a homestead one mile north of Centerville, where he lived until 1893. He then bought his present farm near Centerville, and he has resided upon it continuously for the past ten years and more.

October 10, 1864, Mr. Mattson married Miss Annie Tamow. The ceremony was performed in Finland. Miss Tamow's parents were Lars and Sarah Tamow, both natives of Sweden, and now deceased. The father died in Finland, and the mother in Klickitat county. During girlhood Mrs. Mattson, like her husband, attended the common schools of Finland, and there received a practical education. Her marriage to Mr. Mattson occurred when she was nineteen years of age. To this marriage eleven children have been born. Those born in Finland are Mat, John, Elmer and Tilda Ahola. Ida, Minnie Neva, Frank, Arthur, Albene and August were born in Klickitat county, Annie in Michigan. In religion Mr. Mattson belongs to the Lutheran church, and in politics he favors Republicanism. He owns a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres of land, all of which is in a high state of cultivation, also live stock of several varieties. Though a Finlander by birth, Mr. Mattson is now so thoroughly Americanized that it is doubtful if there is any man in Klickitat county more ready to contend for the interests of the American republic than he.

DANIEL FINLAYSON is a well-to-do farmer residing one mile east of the town of Centerville. He was born in Michigan, near Detroit, February 25, 1850, the son of Daniel and Annie (Chase) Finlayson, both natives of New York state. Daniel Finlayson, the elder, was a sailor during the early part of his life, but eventually gave up the sea and settled on a farm in Michigan. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the army, and for a time was in active service. At the close of the war he went to Florida, and later to Nebraska, where he resided till the time of his death. He married Miss Annie Chase, mother of the subject of this sketch, during his stay in Florida. Daniel received the greater part of his education in a Montana mining camp, and its character was such as to give him a greater knowledge of men and the world than of books. Up to the age of thirteen he was partly under the care of an uncle, with whom he arrived in Montana when a child. The uncle was shot and killed when Daniel was the age above mentioned, and the boy was obliged to shift for himself afterward among scenes admittedly the roughest and toughest known in the United States. Young Finlayson, however, possessed the attribute of being able to take care of himself and mind his own business, and to this may be credited the fact that he reached the age of twenty-nine without being injuriously influenced by his environments. At the age mentioned he went to St. Louis, and there accepted employment on a small river steamer. Afterward he worked as a farm hand for different farmers, and finally, in 1876, he landed in Klickitat county. During the first five years of his stay he was a lumberman in different camps of the county, at the end of which time he purchased his present farm. Here he has since resided, giving his attention principally to the raising of stock.

Mr. Finlayson married Mrs. Mary McQueen, December 25, 1880, in Klickitat county. Mrs. McQueen was the daughter of Lewis Dopkins, a farmer, who came to Klickitat county in 1878, here residing until the time of his death. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. The mother, Emeline (Lane) Dopkins, a native of Ohio, is now deceased, her death having occurred in Wisconsin. Mrs. McQueen was born in Wisconsin, March 10, 1851. Before her marriage to Mr. Finlayson she received a practical education in the common schools of that state. Her first husband was Alex. McQueen, who died in Klickitat county in 1878. Two children were born to this marriage, Myrtle, now married to a Mr. Shoemaker, and residing in Klickitat county; James, living in the same county, near Ellensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Finlayson have had two children, Bessie, born July 22, 1882, and Jasper, in 1891. Both are natives of Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Finlayson is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in religion he adheres to the faith and practice of the Christian church. He belongs to the Republican party, and is one of the most energetic men in municipal politics in the county. His work along this line, however, is not that of an office-seeker. He has a fine farm of four hundred acres, all of which is in a high state of cultivation. The place is supplied with all necessary implements and stock and under the able management of its owner is becoming one of the most valuable farm properties in the county.

JOHN P. GRAHAM is a prosperous and highly respected farmer residing three miles east of Centerville, in Klickitat county, Washington. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, March 28, 1858, the son of John and Matilda (White) Graham, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Iowa. John Graham, the elder, went to sea when sixteen years of age and followed its fortunes for nine years, at the end of which time he gave up the life of a sailor, leaving his vessel at Portland. Immediately afterward he settled in Washington county, Oregon. During the years of his life at sea and later, in Oregon, he lost trace of his parents, and, though he has made attempts to find them, has thus far failed to obtain knowledge of their whereabouts. In 1870, he came to Klickitat county, and, after residing there for a time, moved to The Dalles, Oregon, where he is living at the present time. The mother of John P. was married to the elder Graham in Oregon. Her people crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1844, and became well known pioneers of that state. The force of circumstances under which he grew up deprived Mr. Graham of the advantages of higher education. When very young he attended the common schools of Oregon, but when he was twelve years of age his parents moved to Klickitat county and he ceased attendance at school and began riding the range for his father, who was a stockman. This vocation he followed till he reached his majority. At that time he settled on a tract of railroad land, and, after living on it for six months, sold his right. His next move was to Chamberlin Flats, where he took up a homestead, on which he lived for seven years. At the end of this time he sold out and bought the old family homestead of his father, on which place he is residing at present.

On June 6, 1879, Mr. Graham married Miss Nancy Burgen, a native of Oregon, born in September, 1859. Her father, John Burgen, was a farmer and a native of Indiana. He left the state of his nativity and moved to Missouri, and in 1852 crossed the Plains to Oregon. He settled in Klickitat county in 1859 and there resided till the time of his death in 1900. The mother was a native of Indiana, and in that state married Mr. Burgen. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Graham, namely, Minnie M., now the wife of Charles McEwen; Thomas F. and Fred E., all in Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Graham is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics with the Republican party. He has a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres, all in a high state of cultivation. The place is well equipped with buildings, implements and stock such as go to make an ideal farm home. He is spoken of by acquaintances as one of the most reliable men in the county, and those who are fortunate enough to make his acquaintance never fail to be convinced that he is worthy of such commendation.

JOHN JAEKEL, one of the old timers of Klickitat county, is in every way deserving of the high esteem in which he is held by his acquaintances. Mr. Jaekel was born in Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, April 25, 1846, the son of John and Margaret (Myer) Jaekel, the former born in Germany in 1808, and the latter also in Germany June 13, 1818. The elder Jaekel came to the United States in 1832 and settled in Manitowoc county, there residing till the time of his death in 1862. He was married in Wisconsin to Miss Margaret Myer, afterward the mother of John Jaekel, of whom this sketch is written. During his boyhood Mr. Jaekel attended the common schools of Wisconsin till he had received a practical education. He remained at home till he was sixteen years of age, and at that time enlisted in Company E, Fourteenth Wisconsin volunteer infantry. He was in active service during the Civil war from February 4, 1862, to October 9, 1865, and was mustered out at Mobile. Upon leaving the army he returned home, and afterward accepted employment on a Mississippi river flatboat plying between St. Louis and New Orleans. This vocation he followed for eight months, then bought a farm in Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, on which he lived for six years. In 1872 he sold out this property, migrated to Linn county, Oregon, and bought a farm which he cultivated for the ensuing two years. His next move was to Klickitat county. Arriving in 1874, he immediately filed a homestead claim to the place on which he is living at the present time. Later he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land additional, part of which is now under cultivation.

October 19, 1867, Mr. Jaekel married Miss Christina Linderman, the ceremony being performed in Wisconsin. She is the daughter of Nicholas and Ida (Hefka) Linderman, both natives of Germany. Nicholas Linderman was a farmer. He came to the United States in 1842 and settled in Wisconsin. His death occurred in 1868. Mrs. Linderman survives her husband, and is now residing in Wisconsin. Christina Linderman, now the wife of Mr. Jaekel, was born in Germany, June 13, 1846. She received the best education offered by the common schools of Wisconsin during girlhood, and at the age of twenty-one married Mr. Jaekel. To this marriage the following children have been born: Charles, in Wisconsin, August 26, 1868; Minnie, now Mrs. McQueen, March 4, 1877; Frank A., October 9, 1879; John A., January 15, 1881; Ida M., May 3, 1883; James R., December 19, 1885; Albert O., May 15, 1886, and Annie, April 18, 1888. Excepting Charles, the first mentioned, all were born in Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Jaekel is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the G. A. R. organizations, while in religion he is a Lutheran. His views in politics are strongly in favor of the Republican party on national issues, but in municipal politics he can be depended upon to support the most worthy issue, regardless of party. Mr. Jaekel's landholdings, in all, comprise twenty-five hundred acres of land, twenty-one hundred acres of which are used for a sheep pasture. He has been in the sheep business for the past fifteen years, at present owning a herd of thirty-four hundred head. These immense property interests have been acquired by Mr. Jaekel largely by his thrift and untiring industry. Though at an age and in the possession of property which would justify his ceasing active toil, he is yet as industrious as ever, and every year adds more—which is creditable to his achievements.

KELLEY LOE, the affable and favorably known editor of the Centerville Journal, is a native of Missouri, in which state he began his career in journalism. He was born in Mercer county, July 4, 1881, and his father, R. W., was born in the same county in 1842. The paternal grandsire of our subject came from Tennessee in 1837, becoming one of the earliest pioneers of Mercer county. He served during the Civil war for three years with the Fifth Kansas cavalry. The company of which he was a member was from Missouri, but since it was mustered in at Leavenworth, Kansas, it was credited to that state. In 1902 he came from Missouri to Klickitat county. Mary (Thomas) Loe, the mother of our subject, who was born in Ray county, Missouri, in 1842, is still living.

Kelley Loe, whose name forms the caption of this article, grew up in Mercer and Harrison counties, and during boyhood obtained a good common school education. At the age of fifteen he forsook the parental farm for the printing office of the Advance, a newspaper of Mount Moriah, Missouri. In 1900 he established the Monitor in Mercer county, but in 1901 sold out his interest in the paper and came to Klickitat county. Here he established a paper, calling it the Centerville Journal, the publication of which he has since continued.

In Missouri, January 1, 1901, Mr. Loe married Miss Maud Miller, who, like himself, was a native of Mercer county. She was born October 17, 1881, the daughter of Benjamin Miller, a druggist of Modena, Missouri, who died April 14, 1891, at the age of sixty-four. Mrs. Loe's mother, Catherine (Isenlore) Miller, born in Germany in 1851, is still living. Mr. Loe has two sisters, Mrs. Irene Ellsworth in Klickitat county, and Mrs. Isora Slover in Kansas. Of the three children, Mr. Loe is the youngest. He and his wife have one child, Zola, born October 18, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Loe is associated with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen of the World and the Grange, and in politics he is a Republican. He is enough of a politician to attend caucuses and county conventions and to keep himself well posted on the current national issues. The paper he owns is comparatively young, but its well-edited pages give it a growing popularity, as is evinced by its constantly increasing circulation. Mr. Loe owns his home and office, both of which, with his very enviable standing in his community, are the reward of his quick wit and aggressive ambition applied judiciously to the mastery of his business.

REV. LEVI CLANTON is a highly respected minister of the Baptist church at Centerville, and in addition to his ministerial calling follows the blacksmithing trade. He was born in Lincoln county, North Carolina, November 3, 1838. His father, Isaac Clanton, a farmer, was also a native of North Carolina, born in 1798. His death occurred in that state in 1890. Our subject's grandfather, Jeremiah Clanton, came from Germany to the colonies, and during the Revolution was a captain under General Marion. His mother, Sallie (Inglefinger) Clanton, was born in North Carolina in 1800. Her death occurred in 1878. She was of German descent, yet can be truly called American, as her parents were in this country at the outbreak of the Revolution. Jacob Inglefinger, her father, served throughout the struggle against the mother country. Levi Clanton grew to the age of thirteen on a farm in North Carolina. Afterward, in a factory in Lincoln county, he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for several years. From North Carolina he moved to South Carolina, locating near Spartanburg, where he worked in a roller mill for four years, after which he toiled for six years in a coach factory in the same town. In 1861, at the outbreak of the war, he enlisted in the Spartan Rifles, Sixth Regulars, on the Confederate side, serving under Captain Foster. At the end of three years he went into cavalry service under General Garry, and while thus engaged received a wound in the hand which caused his confinement in the hospital for forty-nine days. At the close of the war he returned to Spartanburg and there conducted a blacksmith shop until November 2, 1867. He went thence to Clinton, Tennessee, and there remained for four years, after which he moved to Andersonville in the same state. Having passed four years in that place he went to Fincastle, then to Jackboro, from which place, in 1882, he made his first move westward, going to Portland and a few weeks later to The Dalles. Here, in partnership with his son, he bought out a large shop which they conducted with profit for a year. They then discontinued the business and came to Centerville, where at that time there was hardly the beginning of a town. Here he renewed the pursuit of his trade, and took up again his pastoral calling. Mr. Clanton has done missionary work for a considerable part of his life, his line having been largely in establishing churches and holding revivals. He was ordained for the ministry at Oak Grove, Anderson county, Tennessee, in 1868. In Klickitat county he has established churches at White Salmon, High Prairie, Spring Creek, and Bickleton.

On April 1, 1852, in North Carolina, Mr. Clanton married Miss Frances Sanders, who was born in North Carolina in 1839. Her father, William Sanders, a native of North Carolina, was descended from one of the oldest families in Virginia. His death occurred many years ago. Her mother, who was likewise a native of North Carolina, died in 1872. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Clanton are David, Slawson, Mary A. and Catherine. Nine children have been born to his marriage with Miss Sanders, namely, William Avery, deceased; Elizabeth, John, Salina, Lenora, Emma, now county school superintendent of Klickitkat county; Edward, Nellie and Levi. Fraternally, Mr. Clanton is associated with the Grange, and in politics he is an old-time Democrat. His property interests in town are of a substantial nature, comprising two good houses, his shop and a well-established business. Though perhaps not so actively associated with ministerial work as in former years he still preaches on Sundays, and takes a keen interest in any religious work to which his influence may be helpful.

HENRY B. CARRATT lives on a farm adjoining the town of Centerville, Washington. He was born in Sabula, Jackson county, Iowa, July 31, 1870, the son of George Carratt, a native of Lincolnshire, England, born in 1838. The elder Carratt came to the United States in 1860, and settled in Jackson county, Iowa. Thence he moved to Cherokee county, Iowa, and from that place in 1887 to Klickitkat county. He is now living five miles northwest of Centerville. Rachel (Humphrey) Carratt, mother of Henry B., also was a native of England, born at Jamestown near London. Her death occurred in 1888 in the state of Iowa.

Henry B. grew up on a farm in Iowa, and during youth obtained a fair education in the common schools. At the age of eighteen he shouldered the responsibilities of life independently, coming to Klickitkat county. Here for several years he worked on farms, but when twenty-six forsook farm life and worked for a Mr. Harmon in a photograph gallery in Goldendale. Later he engaged in the same business with Eli Miller, and, upon buying his partner's share, conducted the business independently. He became expert in the production of scenic views, and one of his pictures, taken of seventy-five thousand sacks of wheat in a pile at Columbus ferry, has been reproduced all over Europe. After conducting the photograph business successfully till 1901 he sold out and retired to his farm near Centerville, where he has lived since. While in the photograph business he owned several farms, which he invariably rented to other men.

In Klickitkat county, in June, 1896, Mr. Carratt married Miss Louvina Hooker, a native of Virginia, born in Bateman county, July 18, 1877. She came to Klickitkat county in 1893. Her father, Gabriel Hooker, is a farmer living near Bonners Ferry, Idaho. The mother, Cemira A. (Anderson) Hooker, who was born in North Carolina, also lives at Bonners Ferry. Mr. Carratt has three sisters and two brothers, namely, Mrs. Elizabeth Emerson, of Goldendale; Rachel, Nellie, William and Benjamin G., now living in Kansas. Henry B. is the oldest of the family. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carratt—Patti Z., the eldest now living, born December 11, 1897; Ruby E., December 11, 1902, and two deceased. Fraternally, Mr. Carratt is a member of the Masonic order, the Woodmen of the World and the Eastern Star, while his wife belongs to the Star and the Women of Woodcraft. In politics Mr. Carratt is a Republican, and he is active in all political and municipal affairs. He has served honorably in the city council at Goldendale, and honors his citizenship enough to attend the caucuses and the county conventions. His farm, comprising two hundred and twelve acres of land, by reason of its location bordering the city limits of Centerville, promises to increase rapidly in value. It is said to be one of the best, if not the very best, in the county.

CHARLES T. YEACKEL is a favorably known farmer and stockman who resides two and one-half miles south of Centerville, Washington. He was born in Swift county, Minnesota, May 5, 1876, the son of Conrad B. Yeackel, who was born in Canada in 1850. The elder Yeackel came to Klickitkat county in 1877, and is now one of the most extensive land owners of the county. Amelia (Heitz) Yeackel, the mother, is a native of New York state, born in 1852, and is now residing in Klickitkat county.

Charles T. came west with his parents when he was but one year old. As he grew to manhood he worked on the farm which his father owned in Klickitkat county, was employed at times as a cowboy, and withal managed to secure a fair education in the common schools. After he had ceased attending school he engaged with his father in the stock business, and later ran sheep with his brother, Henry. In the latter venture, starting with a few pet lambs, the brothers eventually acquired a flock of six thousand head. Mr. Yeackel continued in the sheep business until 1898, when he sold his interest in the herd and turned his attention to farming. On June 27, 1900, in Klickitkat county, he married Miss Annie Kaderia, who was born in Klickitkat county, September 20, 1879. Miss Kaderia's father, John, was a native of Finland, who came to the United States in 1874, and in 1877 to Klickitat county, where he now lives. Her mother, whose maiden name was Maggie Karakka, is also a native of Finland and a resident of Klickitat county. Mr. Yeackel has three brothers and four sisters. The brothers are Henry, Fred and Joseph, all living at home. The sisters are Lizzie, now living at home; Mrs. Emma Crocker, living in Klickitat county; Nellie and Mabel, living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Yeackel have but one child, Ina, born August 23, 1902. Fraternally, Mr. Yeackel affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics with the Republican party. His farm comprises five hundred and eighty acres of land, of which two hundred and eighty acres are under cultivation. It is well adapted to the production of such grains as wheat and barley, and develops flattering prospects along horticultural lines. Mr. Yeackel is an enthusiastic stockman, and is now specializing in the breeding of red Durham cattle. He is inclined to favor Percheron horses, and his draft horses in this strain are said to be among the best in the county.

HENRY YEACKEL is a highly respected and prosperous stockman and farmer who lives three miles south of Centerville, Washington. He was born in Swift county, Minnesota, January 9, 1873, the son of Conrad B. Yeackel, also a farmer and stockman, who was a Canadian by birth, born in 1850. The elder Yeackel moved first to Wisconsin, and later to Minnesota. In the latter state he lived till 1877, when he came to Klickitat county, Washington, where, as has been stated in another biography, he is still living. Amelia (Heitz) Yeackel, the mother, is mentioned elsewhere in this volume in connection with her son Charles, who is a brother of Henry Yeackel, of this article.

Henry came to Klickitat county with his parents when he was five years old, and here attained early manhood. He received a practical education in the common schools, but when in his teens he forsook the schoolroom for business. For a time he assisted in the management of his father's large ranch, but later he went into partnership with his brother Charles in the sheep business, as is stated in the sketch of this brother. The two brothers, when lads, owned two pet sheep, which were so nearly alike as to render distinguishing between the two impossible. To settle the problem of possession peacefully, the boys went into partnership in the ownership of the two sheep. From this small beginning they in time acquired a herd of several thousand head. Before becoming thoroughly interested in the sheep business, Henry, with his grandmother, occupied his father's claim, the elder Yeackel being away working in the timber. These were the days when the larger stockmen were annoying the newcomers by driving off their stock and cutting fences, and of this trouble the Yeackel family received an unwelcome share. With other hardy settlers, however, the elder Yeackel held his own, and eventually overcame the obstacles imposed. As stated, he is now one of the best established farmers in Klickitat county. Henry, of whom we write, with his brother, went out of the sheep business in 1899, and invested in land, since following farming and stock raising.

In Klickitat county, October 31, 1895, Mr. Yeackel married Miss Flora Bell Bowman, a native of Nebraska, born in 1879. She is the daughter of William C. H. and Mary E. (Prall) Bowman, both of whom are now living in this county, whither they came in 1888. The former is a native of Missouri, born in 1839, and the latter a native of Ohio, born in 1849. To this marriage three children have been born—Loris, in 1896, Lizzie Irene, in 1901, and a young baby. Fraternally, Mr. Yeackel is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and, in politics, he is a Republican. He is active in matters of local interest, having served with credit both as school clerk of his district and road supervisor. His land holdings comprise, in all, one thousand acres, and much of it is of the best in the county. Such as he has in cultivation is well adapted to the growth of such forage plants as alfalfa, red-top and brome-grass, also wheat, oats and barley. Much of the land is used as pasture for the stock, and by following a wisely chosen plan of alternation from one field to the other, with cattle, hogs and horses, Mr. Yeackel has demonstrated some of the splendid possibilities of his occupation.

HENRY GARNER is a widely known farmer and stockman of Klickitat county, residing two miles west and three south of Centerville. He was born in Lester, England, January 1, 1847, the son of George and Elizabeth (Pegg) Garner, both natives of England. In the land of his nativity George Garner followed the trade of a blacksmith. He was killed by a horse when Henry Garner, of this review, was sixteen years of age. Elizabeth (Pegg) Garner lived her entire life in England, passing away in 1892. Our subject received his education in the common schools of England, and at the age of sixteen, this being the time of his father's death, engaged as an apprentice to learn the brick-laying trade. He was thus employed for five years. In 1867 he came to the United States, his objective point being New York City, and, after a brief stay in this thriving metropolis; he proceeded to Albany, there working at his trade for three years. His next move was to Chicago. Arriving in this city in 1870, he immediately found employment at his trade and for the next six years he worked steadily, during this time witnessing the great Chicago fire. His final change of residence was to Klickitat county in 1876, where he fled on the homestead which has since then been his home. During the early years of his stay at Klickitat county he devoted his attention chiefly to the raising of cattle and horses, but within recent years he has to a large extent closed out his stock raising interests in favor of farming.

Mr. Garner was married in Evanston, Illinois, May, 1875, to Miss May Jane Nelson, daughter of Benjamin and Jane (Cockfield) Nelson, both natives of England and now deceased. Benjamin Nelson was a brass molder by trade. Mrs. Garner was born in England, July 8, 1847. She was educated in the common schools of England, and when a young woman came to Canada, where for a time she lived with one of her uncles. Later she moved to Evanston, Illinois, and there married Mr. Garner. Children born to this union are: Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, born January 16, 1876; George, July 23, 1878; Ada, February 8, 1880; Rebecca, May 23, 1884; Frank, November 26, 1886, and Mary, April 24, 1891, all in Klickitak county. In religion, Mr. Garner adheres to the Presbyterian church, and, in politics, will invariably be found giving his support to what he considers the most worthy issue, regardless of party. His land holdings comprise seventeen hundred and sixty acres, nine hundred and forty acres of which are under cultivation, the balance being used chiefly for pasture, also a section of timber land. The farm upon which he lives is well equipped with buildings, stock, machinery, and all other things necessary to successful farming, and is one of the most valuable in this respect, perhaps, in the county.

JOHN A. MILLER, one of the successful young citizens of Klickitak county, living on a fine farm one and one-half miles south and two west of Centerville, was born in Atchison county, Kansas, March 9, 1876, the son of Charles A. and Sarah J. (Ketch) Miller, both of whom are living to-day. Charles A. Miller was born in Germany in 1848. When a child of six years he came to the United States with his parents, the objective point being Chicago, Illinois. Here Charles A. remained under the parental roof until thirteen years of age, when he began to work for his own living. At the outbreak of the Civil war, he was employed in the Union army as a teamster, and in this capacity he served throughout the struggle. In 1865, at the close of the great conflict, he settled in Atchison county, Kansas, where he resided till 1890, then coming west to Klickitak county. His residence at present is in Goldendale. Sarah J. (Ketch) Miller was born in Ohio in 1851, and when a young woman moved to Kansas, there marrying Mr. Miller the elder. She is now living in Goldendale.

John A., of this article, received his education in the common schools of Kansas and of Klickitak county, and in a Portland business college. He came with his parents to Klickitak county when fourteen years of age, and after taking the business course in Portland, accepted employment in a sawmill, where he remained for three years. When twenty-one years of age he opened a barber shop in Goldendale, and for three years, till 1900, followed the tonorial profession with success. Then he sold out and began his career as a farmer.

Mr. Miller was married in Klickitak county, December 7, 1898, to Miss Elizabeth Garner, the daughter of Henry and Mary J. (Nelson) Garner, whose biographies also appear in this volume. She was born in Klickitak county, January 16, 1877, and there grew to womanhood and was educated. Her marriage occurred when she was twenty-two years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Miller now have one child, Zelma E., born in Klickitak county, June 10, 1902. Fraternally, Mr. Miller is associated with the Odd Fellows, and in religion with the Presbyterian church. His political views coincide with the doctrines of the Republicans, though he is somewhat independent in his convictions. His chief property interests are comprised in the fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres, which he is now farming, and the buildings, stock and farming machinery with which it is equipped.

ROBERT MCKILLIP, a comfortably situated farmer residing two miles east and one mile south of Centerville, is a native of Callaway county, Missouri, born August 15, 1869. His parents, Daniel and Mary (Guy) McKillip, were among the early settlers in Missouri. Daniel McKillip was a native of Pennsylvania and an iron molder by trade. In the early fifties he went to Missouri, when that state was in the early stages of settlement, and resided there till the time of his death. He was of Scotch-Irish parentage. Mary (Guy) McKillip was born in Kentucky, and in that state grew to womanhood and was married. Her death occurred in Missouri many years ago. Her parents were English. Robert received his education in the common schools of Missouri, which simple institutions of learning, in that early day, offered nearly the best that was to be had in the way of education. He lived at home until he was eighteen years old. His father died at this time, and then Robert left home, working for wages the two years following. He arrived in Klickitak county in 1890, and there worked for wages till 1897, then renting a farm, which he worked for three years. In 1900, he bought his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. McKillip was married in Goldendale, July 15, 1903, to Miss Minnie Seidl, a native of Oregon, born in April, 1883. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wendelin Seidl, of Goldendale, sketches of whom appear elsewhere in this work. Mrs. McKillip is an exceptionally well educated young woman, having completed the instruction given in the common schools of Klickitak county and later taken an academic course. After finishing her education she secured a certificate and taught school for two terms. Her marriage took place when she was twenty years of age. Mrs. McKillip's brothers and sisters are: Charles, Louis, Wendelin, Josie and Emma. Fraternally, Mr. McKillip is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and in religion he is an adherent of the Christian church. He owns a farm, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, all of which is in a high state of cultivation, and in 1902 he filed on land twelve miles north of Goldendale, upon which he has not yet established a permanent residence. In his political views he is a Democrat on national issues, though in municipal affairs he gives his influence to the issue he considers most worthy, regardless of party.

HENRY STACKER, a comfortably situated stockman residing five miles east of Hartland and eighteen miles southeast of Goldendale, was born in Germany, June 11, 1839. His parents were Hans and Elsa (Lendman) Stacker, both of whom were natives of Germany, and are now deceased. Hans Stacker was a farmer and spent his entire lifetime on the farm on which he was born. Henry Stacker received his education in the public schools of Germany. He remained at home till he was twenty-one years of age, then enlisting in the army for one and one-half years' service. When discharged he returned to his home and lived with his mother till he reached the age of twenty-seven, at which time he came to California, via the Isthmus of Panama. In California, he remained for six years, successfully engaged in farming, then he returned to Germany, where he stayed with his mother for one year. He then came back to California, bringing with him his wife, whom he married during his visit. After two years more spent on a farm in that state, he moved to Hillsboro, Oregon, where he farmed for the ensuing three years, then, in 1883, moving to Klickitat county. Here he immediately filed on his present farm, to the cultivation and improvement of which he has since devoted himself with energy and success.

Mr. Stacker was married in Germany, in 1873, the lady being Miss Lena Bartram, daughter of Earnest and Lena (Getche) Bartram, both of whom died in Germany. Mrs. Stacker was born in Germany in 1849, and grew to womanhood and was educated in her native country, living the greater part of the time with her parents. She was nineteen years old at the time of her marriage. Children born to this union are Mrs. Elzie Calkins, born in California in 1874, now living at home; Magda, born in 1876, and Bodo in 1882, both natives of Oregon; Fritz, born in 1884, in Klickitat county. In religion, Mr. Stacker adheres to the Lutheran church, and in politics he favors the Republican party. His property holdings comprise nine hundred and sixty acres of fine grazing land and the cattle and horses with which it is stocked. He is favorably reputed wherever known, and among intimate acquaintances is deservedly styled a "fine old German."

DIETRICH H. STEGMAN is one of the most comfortably situated farmers and stockmen of Klickitat county. His home and principal property interests are two miles southwest of Centerville. He was born in Thedinghausen, Germany, July 4, 1853, the son of Dietrich and Meta (Buschman) Stegman, both natives of Germany. The elder Stegman was born in Thedinghausen, and after attaining his majority followed the dual vocation of wagon-maker and farmer. In 1889 he sold his extensive land holdings in Germany, came to the United States and made his home with our subject. His death occurred December 3, 1897. Meta (Buschman) Stegman was born in 1824, and died in 1885, having lived all her life in Germany. Her people for several generations before her time were agriculturists, some of them being quite wealthy. She had three brothers who came to the United States, one of whom served in the Civil war.

Dietrich H. acquired the greater part of his education in Germany before he had reached his sixteenth year. At this age he left the parental roof and came to the United States, his objective point being New York, earning his passage across the Atlantic by peeling potatoes; and it may well be noted that the potato-peeler on a trans-Atlantic passenger steamer is generally about the busiest person on the ship, even though his task does not entail great responsibility. At any rate, Mr. Stegman has never felt that he did not fully earn his passage. In New York the potato-peeler ceased peeling potatoes and accepted employment at his trade, wagon-making, having previously become skilled in this handicraft under the tutelage of his father in Germany. While pursuing his vocation, he attended evening schools, thus becoming fairly well acquainted with the English language. In 1873 he was employed in Florida by the government, his work being to cut live-oak trees for use in the United States navy. His next move was to San Francisco in 1876, where his first employment was to help a man tear up an old ship, but he soon found more lucrative employment in Oreville, Butte county, California. In the spring of 1877 he went to Portland, and there resumed his trade, working continuously for one year. At the end of that period he went to The Dalles, proceeding thence to Klickitat county, where he arrived in 1878. Here he filed upon a homestead, which is now one of his present farms, and a year later he bought five hundred head of sheep. Since coming to Klickitat county, sheep raising has been his principal occupation.

Mr. Stegman was married in The Dalles, Oregon, January 1, 1881, to Miss Anna Gelhouse, a native of Cumberland county, Virginia, born in 1858. Her father, Benedict Gelhouse, began business as a farmer and shoemaker, and at a later period of his life was one of the directors of a bank at Riverside, Iowa. He died in April, 1904, aged seventy-eight years. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Stegman established their residence on a farm, the location of which presented few attractions in the way of neighbors—Indians and wild animals excepted. Packing provisions from The Dalles on horses, herding stock from the door-yard, and guarding the sheep against the inroads of wild animals and equally ruthless Indians were trials that Mr. and Mrs. Stegman were subjected to during the first years of their married life. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stegman are Meta, now eighteen years of age; Henry D., fourteen; Mamie, eleven, and Bertha, aged two. Charles, the eldest of the children, was killed in a runaway three years ago. Mr. Stegman has a brother, John, now residing west of The Dalles. Fraternally, our subject is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the W. of W., and in politics he is a Republican. In religion he adheres to the Roman Catholic church. He is one of the most active politicians of Klickitat county, office-seekers excepted, having served as a central committeeman for years, and also as a delegate. His record in this county is that of an industrious, law-abiding citizen always ready to contend for the best interests of his community.

ROBERT D. SUNDERLAND is a prosperous ranchman, residing six miles northwest of Golden-dale. He was born near Williamsport, Pennsylvania, December 8, 1874, the son of Benjamin and Mary (Green) Sunderland, who were among the more recent settlers in Klickitat county. Benjamin Sunderland was born in 1819 and was of English parentage. His grandsires were Quakers and suffered many of the trials incident to the persecution of that sect. At the time of the Civil war he was one of the first to volunteer his services in defense of the Union, but was prevented from enlisting on grounds of disability. He came to Klickitat county in 1891, where he resided till the time of his death in 1897. Mary (Green) Sunderland was a native of Pennsylvania, and of English descent. She died in 1889 at the age of fifty-three.

The Sunderland family settled near Atchison, Kansas, when Robert D. was a child of five years. Here he grew up on the farm and received his education, first completing the studies offered in the common schools, and later taking a course in Lawrence business college of Lawrence, Kansas. At the age of seventeen the responsibility of managing his father's farm devolved upon him, and in addition he personally cared for his father, who was in poor health. In 1891, the elder Sunderland's health had improved sufficiently to enable him to accompany Robert to Klickitat county, where each filed on a homestead, afterward farming the land thus acquired in partnership. The two worked in this manner, devoting their efforts exclusively to the raising of stock, till the death of the elder Sunderland in 1897. Then the management of the entire estate devolved upon Robert D. Our subject's brothers and sisters are James A., William H., Josiah, Daniel, Hannah L., Elizabeth, Jessie A., and Maggie. Robert was the ninth and youngest of this family.

Mr. Sunderland was married in Klickitat county, November 17, 1896, to Miss Hattie E. Johnson, a native of Klickitat county, born August 24, 1878. She was the daughter of David A. and Anna (Konkle) Johnson, who were among the earliest settlers of the Pacific Northwest. When a young man the former came to Willamette valley, Oregon, and early in the seventies he arrived in Klickitat county, where he is living to-day. Anna (Konkle) Johnson died in 1892. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sunderland one child, Anna Genevieve, has been born. She is now four years of age, the date of her birth being August 7, 1900. Fraternally, Mr. Sunderland associates with the Workmen of the World, and in politics he is a Republican. At present he is road supervisor of one-fourth of County District No. 3, and is executing the duties of his office with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. His land interests comprise four hundred and eighty acres, on which he raises wheat principally, but not to the entire exclusion of stock.

THEODORE JACKEL is a comfortably situated farmer and stockman residing three and one-fourth miles south of Centerville. He was born in Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, June 5, 1852, the son of Conrad and Margaret (Fox) Jackel, both natives of Germany. Conrad Jackel was born in 1818. Upon leaving the land of his nativity he came first to Canada, where he resided till after he reached manhood. From Canada he moved to Wisconsin, and there for several years followed the dual occupation of farming and lumbering. In 1874 he moved to Swift county, Minnesota, thence coming to Klickitat county in 1889, where he resided till the time of his death. Margaret (Fox) Jackel was born in Germany in 1812, and died in Klickitat county. Theodore Jackel grew to the age of nineteen in Wisconsin and received a practical education in the common schools of that state. After reaching maturity he was employed in a sawmill in Wisconsin for five years. Then he went to Minnesota, and after living in that state for a number of years came to Klickitat county, arriving in October, 1876. Here he was first employed in a sawmill owned by Presby & Schurtz, and at this and other lines of work in the timber was engaged for four years. Then he filed on his present farm and began his career as an agriculturist.

Mr. Jackel was married in Klickitat county, September 27, 1883, to Miss Mary F. Niemela, a native of Norway, born December 14, 1865. She came with her parents to the United States in 1876, the objective point being Klickitat county. John A. and Elizabeth (Pietela) Niemela, her parents, both natives of Finland, are at present residing in Klickitat county. Children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jaekel are Lillie, Nettie, August, Edward, Arvilla and Conrad. The last mentioned child was named in honor of Conrad B., a brother of Mr. Jaekel. Besides this brother, Mr. Jaekel has three sisters, Carrie, Mary and Minnie. All are now living, one in California, one in The Dalles, and one in Seattle, Washington.

Mr. Jaekel is one of the old settlers of Klickitat county, and has experienced all the trials incident to the settlement of an undeveloped country. Farming had scarcely begun in his locality when he settled, and the consensus of opinion was that Klickitat county would be a failure from an agricultural point of view. The attitude of the Indians toward the white usurpers was then not entirely quiescent, and the pioneers more than once had reason to be thankful for the military protection available at Fort Simcoe.

Fraternally, Mr. Jaekel is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Grange. He is a member of the Evangelical Association, and is strong in his religious convictions. In politics he favors the Republican party, and is generally present at the county conventions. For many years he has been intimately associated with school affairs of his district, having served a number of terms as director, and at present being both clerk and director. His land holdings comprise four hundred acres, one hundred and fifty of which are under cultivation. It is one of a large number of highly improved farms in Klickitat county.

CHARLES F. JAEKEL is a jovial bachelor residing on a farm three and one-half miles southeast of Centerville, Washington. He is a native of Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, born August 26, 1869, the son of John and Christina (Lindemann) Jaekel, the former a native of Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, and the latter of Germany. Both are now residing in Klickitat county. Their biographies are given complete elsewhere in this volume. When Charles F. was seven years old he came from Wisconsin with his parents to the Willamette valley, Oregon. After a stay of two years in this place the family came to Klickitat county, arriving in 1878. Here the elder Jaekel immediately took up land, and this property has since then been his home. During boyhood Charles worked on his father's farm, rode the range after cattle and horses, and received his educational training in the common schools. He survived the Indian panic of 1878 without being tomahawked, though the stand he and his parents took on that occasion seemed to invite such a fate. The father was absent from home working in the timber at the time, and the mother and children remained at home.

From good luck, or a then unapparent lack of real danger, they were not molested. When he had reached the age of twenty-five Mr. Jaekel left the paternal roof and filed on a homestead. By purchase he has since then added to this original tract, until he now owns four hundred and eighty acres of land. Fraternaly, Mr. Jaekel is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and in politics with the Republican party. He has the patriotism of the true Westerner—that which holds the Pacific coast to be the best place on earth for the man of small means who wishes to build a home of his own. The eldest of a large family of children is, as a rule, expected to be somewhat more sagacious than his younger brothers and sisters, this superiority not proceeding from any particular reason, perhaps, other than that the eldest usually assists in bringing up and caring for the younger children, and hence in this manner unconsciously absorbs a certain amount of the parental wisdom. Mr. Jaekel is the eldest of a family of nine children. Whether or not his good judgment was acquired in part through his experience in assisting in the rearing of this family, it is assured that in his judgment of the possibilities of the west he is not greatly in error. He believes that the man who will rustle can be successful in the west to a greater extent than anywhere else in the United States. The brothers and sisters above referred to are: Frank, John, Ida, Emil, James, Albert, Mrs. Minnie McQueen, and George, now deceased. All, excepting the deceased, grew up and were educated in Klickitat county, and are now engaged at divers occupations in the west. The Jaekel family is thoroughly imbued with western business methods and the broad, free spirit of the west.

EMERY E. KELLEY is a prosperous ranchman residing one and a half miles southeast of Centerville. He was born near Sandusky, Ohio, June 15, 1874, the son of William and Sarah (Van Osdell) Kelley, who were among the pioneers of the middle west. William Kelley was a mechanic by trade. He was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, in 1829, and when a young man went to Smith county, Kansas, that section being then in the earliest stages of settlement. He is living in Oklahoma at the present time. During the Civil war he was in active service, participating in a number of the greatest battles. He is of Irish descent. Sarah (Van Osdell) Kelley is a native of Ohio, born in Wyandotte county in 1836. Her parents were among the earliest pioneers of Ohio, having come to that state before wagon roads were built and when pack-horses were the most generally used means of transportation. She is living today at the age of sixty-eight. Her parents were German.

GEORGE W. McCREDY.

Emery E. went to Smith county, Kansas, with his parents when a boy. Here he grew to young manhood on his father's farm, where he worked very hard at the tasks incident to home-building in a pioneer country, as Kansas was at that time. School facilities in those days were limited, but by studying at home and taking advantage of such opportunities as were offered by the common schools, Emery acquired a practical education by the time he had reached his majority. When nineteen years of age he left the parental roof. For a time he worked for wages, but soon became dissatisfied with his prospects in Kansas and went to Oklahoma. Oklahoma he found not altogether to his liking, so he returned to Galena, Kansas, where for two years he worked in the lead mines. His final move was to Klickit county, where he arrived December 31, 1896. Since the choicest of the government land had been taken up before this date Mr. Kelley preferred buying a farm to taking what was left of the government locations. The farm which he bought has been his home since the time of his arrival in this county.

Mr. Kelley was married January 14, 1899, to Miss Emily M. Eshelman, a native of Klickit county, born November 5, 1882. Her parents were Levi J. and Rosa (Tobin) Eshelman, who are written of elsewhere in this volume. Two children, Nellie M. and Clarence D., have been born to this marriage. Fraternally, Mr. Kelley is associated with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics with the Democratic party. His principal property interests are comprised in his fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres and the stock, buildings and implements that are upon it.

URIAH B. TRUMBO, a Klickit county farmer and sheep man, residing on his ranch of one hundred and twenty acres, six miles south and twelve east of Goldendale, was born in North Dakota, February 20, 1872. His father, John, likewise a farmer by occupation, was born in Ohio, but moved thence to Dakota when that country was a territory and settled near the present city of Vermillion, the county seat of Clay county, South Dakota. He resided there until 1878, at which time he removed to Oregon and settled some twenty miles west of the city of Portland, where he died in 1891. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Ruth Brady, was married in Dakota. Uriah B. received his education in the common schools of his part of the Willamette valley, Oregon. He remained at home until he reached the age of twenty-two, then followed farming on his own account for a twelvemonth. In 1894 he came to Klickit county, where for about five years he worked for various sheep men. He started in the sheep industry on his own account in 1899, purchasing his present place the following year. He is rapidly reducing his land to a state of cultivation, combining agriculture with the raising of sheep, of which he has a herd of three hundred.

On February 13, 1899, in his home county he married Rosa, daughter of James and Florence (Speer) White. Her father, a farmer and stockman, crossed the Plains at an early date and settled in Washington county, Oregon, but at present lives with Mr. and Mrs. Trumbo. Mrs. Trumbo's mother, a native of Missouri, died at the age of forty-five. Her people were early pioneers in the present city of Portland, Oregon. Mrs. Trumbo was born in Klickit county in 1874 and received her education in the local public schools. She and Mr. Trumbo have one child, Clifford U., born August 25, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Trumbo is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics he is a Republican. He belongs to the Christian church. A young man of good habits, integrity of character and ability, he seems destined to achieve a splendid success in the dual occupation he has espoused.

GEORGE W. MCCREDY, owner of the south part of the townsite of Bickleton, Klickit county, Washington, and president of the Bank of Bickleton, is engaged in the mercantile business, the firm name being Clanton, Mitty & Company. He was born about five miles south of McMinnville, Oregon, in the Willamette valley, February 22, 1854. William A. McCredy, his father, now a retired stockman, is a native of Ohio, born in 1830. He moved to Missouri and in 1853 crossed the Plains by ox team, and settled in the Willamette valley, where he lived until the fall of 1880. He then removed to Klickit county, settling at the Coil landing on the Columbia river, where for nine years he made his home, then removing to Cleveland, Washington, his present place of abode. His mother, Elizabeth (Beaman) McCredy, was born in Missouri, and crossed the Plains with her husband in 1853. She passed away on the 6th of August, 1894. George W. McCredy grew to manhood in the Willamette valley, acquiring his education in the Oregon schools. He remained at home until about twenty-four years old, attending to the stock and performing the various duties connected with the farm. He came to the Bickleton country in 1878, before there was any settlement there, only three ranches in the locality—the Huntington, the Holbrook and the Imbrie farms—being located and fenced in. Goldendale was but a small trading point, and the whole bunch-grass country was thinly populated. When he came to the locality, he brought a band of sheep with him. At that time there were no fences to interfere with his bringing them into the country. He did not take any land at first, but grazed his sheep on the open prairie, which then, in his opinion, furnished the best stock range at the time east of the Cascades. In 1890 he took a homestead a mile and a half south of the present town of Bickleton. However, he continued in the sheep business until the fall of 1900, then sold his 10,000 sheep to his brothers, John and Leland, who still own the large band. He had bought an interest in the mercantile establishment at Bickleton the year previous, and since that time has given his undivided attention to the upbuilding of his business. The country thereabouts is greatly improving at the present time and hundreds of land locations have been recently filed.

Mr. McCredy was married in 1885, the lady being Emma, daughter of L. I. Coleman. Her father came west to California during the first gold excitement in 1849, crossing the Plains with ox teams. He removed to Klickitat county in 1880, where he has since followed ranching and cattle raising principally. Her mother, Fannie (Epperley) Coleman, is also living. A biographical sketch of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman appears elsewhere in these pages. Two of Mr. McCredy's brothers, John T. and Leland W., are residents of Bickleton; another brother, Alexander E., lives at Wapato, Yakima county, and a married sister, Mrs. Pauline Varner, resides at McMinnville, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. McCredy have one child, Clarence R., sixteen years old, who lives at home with his parents. Mr. McCredy is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics a Republican, having severed his connection with the Democratic party after Cleveland's term as president. In the early eighties he was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for representative. His Bickleton property consists of about two hundred acres in and adjoining the town. Mr. McCredy has the distinction of having been the first sheep man to venture into the Little Klickitat meadows, where he went with his herd in 1885, packing his provisions from Goldendale the first year and later from Yakima City and Tampico. He was also the first man to take sheep into the Ellensburg mountains, where he went in 1887. Mr. McCredy is a big-hearted man, generous to a fault, and esteemed by the large numbers of people who know him either socially or through having had commercial relations with him.

ABRAM J. SPOON, chairman of the board of county commissioners of Klickitat county, residing at Bickleton, was born in Niagara county, New York, near the city of Lockport, October 15, 1835. His father, Abraham, a stone mason and farmer, was a native of Pennsylvania.

whence he moved to New York. He died in the year 1873. His parents belonged to two of the oldest Pennsylvania families and traced their lineage back to German ancestors. Martha (Ernest) Spoon, his mother, a daughter of German parents, was born in Pennsylvania on the 12th of January, 1804, and died on the 7th of March, 1887. She moved to Rock county, Wisconsin, with her husband in 1845, and there lived until 1860. Abram J. Spoon, of this review, worked on the farm as a boy and as a young man, attending betimes the common schools of Wisconsin, where for three years he later followed the profession of teaching. He also learned the carpenter's trade. In 1865 he moved to Plumas county, California, and engaged in the stock raising and dairy business, also farming, which occupations were his for a number of years. In 1880 he sold his California ranch and went overland to Klickitat county, his family following him by boat after an interval of a few months. Almost as soon as he arrived he bought an interest in a claim which he still owns, and engaged in cattle raising and the horse business. At that time it was the general impression that the uplands could not be cultivated, but he successfully raised wheat, oats, barley and grain hay. His land was situated two miles and a half northwest of Bickleton, where at that time a postoffice was started, and also a small store owned by C. N. Bickle. The best grain ranches of the present are located where it was then thought that rye could not be raised. He later devoted more attention to farming than to stock, putting out several varieties of fruit trees, including pears, apples and prunes, which all did well.

On the 14th of December, 1860, in California, Mr. Spoon married Josephine Alexander. Her father, Charles, was born in Illinois, March 20, 1820, and married when twenty-two, celebrating his golden wedding in 1892. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and related to the Rev. John Alexander, of Lanarkshire, Scotland, who emigrated to this country from Ireland in 1736. He settled in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and there wrote a history of the family which was later published. Charles' uncle, Cyrus Alexander, settled in California in 1832. Mrs. Spoon's mother, Achsah (Smith) Alexander, was born in New York in 1818, and died in 1894. Mrs. Spoon was born in St. Louis, Missouri, January 23, 1850. She and Mr. Spoon are parents of three children—Ernest O., deputy auditor at Goldendale; Mrs. Alice Mabel Flower, living in Bickleton; Roy M., bookkeeper in McCredy's store in Bickleton. Mr. Spoon has a number of brothers and sisters, all living in Wisconsin, namely, Mrs. Anna Strang, Mrs. Elizabeth Strang and Mrs. Mary Jeffris. Samuel, Solomon, George, Conrad and John F. Mrs. Spoon is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Spoon is a Republican to the backbone, and very active in all political matters of local concern. He was first elected county commissioner in 1886 and held the position for three terms of two years each, and in 1901 he was re-elected for a four years' term. During his first term of office the town of Goldendale was almost wiped out by fire and a portion of the town records impaired and partly destroyed, together with the courthouse, and Mr. Spoon was one of those who made the appropriation for the new courthouse. To his opposition to the liquor business and the fact that the other members of the board uphold him in this regard is attributable the scarcity of saloons in Klickitat county. It has no saloons outside of the county seat, saloons being permitted in neither Cleveland nor Bickleton. Mr. Spoon owns three hundred and twenty acres of land in one tract and six town lots with a good residence. His fellow citizens speak highly of his integrity and honor, and he is popular with all classes.

WILLIAM T. MITTY, postmaster and one of the most influential citizens of the town of Bickleton, is a member of the mercantile firm of Clanton, Mitty & Company. He is a native of California, born in Sonoma county, September 2, 1866. His father, Nicholas Mitty, was a native of Ireland, and a farmer by occupation. He left home in 1852, crossed the ocean and came around the Horn to California, in which state he remained for a period of ten years. During this time he took up mining. In 1862 he removed to Oregon, and located near the John Day river, where he mined for some time. He then returned to Sonoma county, and this time followed farming for a number of years, finally coming to Klickitat county in June, 1883. He took up land near Bickleton, but some years later removed to the Willamette valley, Oregon, where he and his wife now reside. The maiden name of the latter was Emma J. Middleton, and she was born in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1848. With her mother and two brothers she crossed the Plains in 1853 to Sacramento, California, where she met Mr. Mitty. Their marriage was solemnized at Santa Rosa, California. The subject of this article was educated in the public schools of California. He has been engaged in the sheep business the better part of the time since completing his education. Coming to Klickitat county with his parents when seventeen years old, he worked on his father's farm for two years thereafter, then for a period of twelve years was in the employ of George McCredy, a large sheep owner of this district. After leaving his service he went to the Okanogan country, but, soon returning, began operating a hay baler here. In 1900 he organized the mercantile firm in which he is at present a partner. Some time after the organization of the firm R. E. Clanton disposed of his interests to the McCredys, but the firm still retains its original name. A large volume of business is annually transacted. The firm carries a stock of goods valued at $15,000, and expects to increase its stock at a rapid rate as the excellent country surrounding the town develops.

On June 20, 1902, in Klickitat county, Mr. Mitty married Ella B. Baker, a native of New Jersey, whose parents, John and Mary Baker, still live near Cleveland, Washington, to which locality they first came in the late seventies. Mr. Baker has followed farming since his arrival. Edward, George and Mary E., brothers and sister of Mr. Mitty, live in the Willamette valley, George being a bookkeeper at Salem, Oregon. Another brother, Walter C., now makes his home at Wenatchee, Washington. Two children have been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Mitty—Mildred Grace, born March 20, 1903, and Jesse William, born May 21, 1904. Mr. Mitty attends the Presbyterian church and belongs to Excelsior Lodge No. 111, I. O. O. F. He is a Republican in politics, but not a partisan. He is held in high esteem by all as an upright, conscientious man and a substantial, thrifty citizen.

JOHN T. McCREDY, a stockman, residing at Bickleton, in Klickitat county, Washington, owns, with his brother, Leland, a band of twelve thousand sheep, which he grazes on his own property, consisting of ten thousand acres of Klickitat county land. He is a native Oregonian, born in the year 1863 in the fertile Willamette valley. His father, William A. McCredy, now living at Cleveland, Washington, also a stockman, was born in Ohio in 1830. When twenty-three years of age, he crossed the Plains, settling in Yamhill county, Oregon, where he took up a donation claim and engaged in the stock business, raising sheep principally. Some years later he removed to Washington, locating opposite the mouth of Willow creek, on the Columbia river, and there too engaging in stock raising. His mother, Elizabeth (Beaman) McCredy, was a native of Missouri, born in 1833. She crossed the Plains with her husband in 1853. Mrs. McCredy is now dead, having passed away in the month of August, 1894. Mr. McCredy, of this article, spent the first seventeen years of his life in Oregon, attending the McMinnville Baptist College for two years. On coming to Washington he engaged in stock raising. He was with his brother George at first, but later went into the same business for himself. In 1891, he, with his brother, Alex. E. McCredy, leased a band of sheep, soon after purchasing another band, and for the ensuing seven years they continued in partnership. This relation was dissolved in 1898, Alex. going to Yakima county and John remaining in Klickitat. Two years later the latter formed a partnership with his brother Leland, which is still in continuance. Besides sheep, they also handle some horses, though they have now disposed of the greater part of the band.

Mr. McCredy was married in 1896 to Eliza Flower, a native of Illinois. She came to Klickitat county in 1884 and previous to her marriage, kept house for her brothers, Samuel and Charles. Her father, Cornelius Flower, was also a native of Illinois and died in Bickleton, January 7, 1904, at the age of seventy-nine. Her mother, Edith (Collier) Flower, was brought up in the state of Illinois, and now resides in Bickleton. There have been three children born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. McCredy, namely, Harold, Rosamond, and Noble. Mr. McCredy has a number of brothers and one sister. Mrs. Pauline Varner, the sister, resides at McMinnville, Oregon, and Leland and George live in Bickleton. The other brother, Alex. E., is at present living at Wapato, Yakima county. Fraternally, Mr. McCredy is a member of the A. O. U. W. A Republican in politics, he attends all caucuses and conventions. Besides his interest in the ten thousand acres above referred to, six hundred of which the brothers cultivate to provide hay and feed for their stock, Mr. McCredy is the owner of an interest in a mercantile firm in Bickleton, also, in company with Dr. Brockman, of forty acres of the townsite, and he has one of the best residences in Bickleton. He is quite enthusiastic over the surrounding country and its adaptability for the raising of stock, grain, fruit, etc., having great faith in its future. An estimable man in every respect, he enjoys the confidence, respect and good will of a large circle of associates and acquaintances in central Washington.

RICHARD BUCKLEY, a farmer and stockman of Klickitat county, lives two miles north and nearly a mile west of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of the Quaker state, born in Philadelphia, September 16, 1862. His father, Reuben N. Buckley, is a wholesale cabinet maker and finisher of interiors, employing one hundred and twenty men in his factory, which is located at Philadelphia. He was born in Manchester, England in 1820, and came to this country when eleven years old. His wife, Emily J. (Flickinger) Buckley, a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, comes of good old German stock, though her ancestors settled in this country as early as 1680. She is still living. Richard Buckley attained the age of seventeen in Philadelphia, receiving his education in the public schools of that city. He came west in 1879 to San Francisco and after a short stay there took the boat to Portland, Oregon, from which he soon removed to Benton county in the same state. He was in Spokane, Washington, in 1879, but the town was then a mere hamlet and not liking the looks of things there, he returned to Oregon. In November, 1884, he came to Klickitat county and engaged in the sawmill business, taking a Mr. Flickinger into partnership, the firm name being Flickinger & Buckley. This business continued until 1892, when the mill was burned to the ground and another firm was organized, of which the name was Warren, Flickinger & Buckley. They built a new mill and continued in business until 1898, at which time Mr. Buckley disposed of his interests and bought seven hundred and sixty-five acres in the Bickleton country, where he has since lived, engaged in farming and raising stock.

Mr. Buckley was married in Klickitat county, in 1891, to Fannie Shattuck, a native of Lake county, California. Her father, Dickson P. Shattuck, is the son of an eminent California jurist, one of the first judges in the state. Dickson P. grew up in California, but in 1880 moved to Klickitat county and engaged in the sheep business. He still resides there, as does also Mrs. Buckley's mother, Nancy (Bones) Shattuck, a native of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Buckley have one child, Edwin Norris, a boy of twelve, and they also had a girl, Hazel, who died at the age of seven and was buried in the I. O. O. F. cemetery at Bickleton. Mr. Buckley has one brother and one sister, the former, Reuben N., residing in Philadelphia, and the latter, Laura Jane, named after Dr. Jaynes, of proprietary medicine fame, also a resident of that city. A prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and the A. O. U. W., Mr. Buckley has passed through the chairs of both orders. He is the present keeper of records and seals in the K. of P. lodge, which he represented in the grand lodge at Spokane, in May, 1902. In politics, he is a Democrat. His extensive farm, which is all in a body, is well fenced. As it lies along the reservation, he is able to use that for outside pasturage, and encouraged by the excellent opportunities thus offered, he is turning his attention to cattle raising. The improvements already made upon his place include a substantial residence, a fine barn, just completed, and a good orchard of apple, plum and pear trees. Being a man of energy and ambition, he is rapidly adding to the value and convenience of his already valuable home. His neighbors admire his business ability and thrift, and they esteem him no less for his sterling qualities as a man and citizen.

DICKSON P. SHATTUCK, a prosperous farmer and stockman of Klickitat county, lives on his hundred and twenty acre farm, three miles north of the town of Bickleton. He was born in North Carolina, on the 2nd of November, 1829, the son of David O. and Elizabeth (Sanders) Shattuck. His father, a lawyer by profession, was born in Connecticut in 1800, to which state his parents came from England. He embarked on a steamer for California in 1850, landing at San Francisco, after a voyage of ordinary length, and for many years practiced law in that city. He was elected superior judge for two terms, and was a noted man generally. His wife, Elizabeth, a native of North Carolina, died in 1898, her husband having passed away six years previously.

Dickson P. Shattuck came to California with his father and two brothers in 1850, and settled thirty miles north of San Francisco, in Sonoma county. Three years later he went east, and brought his mother west with him, coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama. In the fall of 1850 he, with his father and brothers, bought land and worked it jointly, though the greater part of the time his father and brother, F. W. Shattuck, were in San Francisco, their time taken up with their law practice. This method of life was followed until 1864, when Dickson went to Mexico for a stay of three years. At the end of that period, he returned to Sonoma county and disposed of his interests in the farm. The next twelve years were spent in Lake county, California, whence, in the fall of 1879, he came to Klickitat county, where he took up land south of the present town of Bickleton. The country was then very wild and unsettled. He devoted eight years to farming and sheep raising, running the wool-bearers in the Rattlesnake country in Yakima county. He disposed of his stock in 1887 and since that time has devoted himself to agriculture chiefly. His land is all well improved and he has a good orchard. He also owns a number of head of horses on the range.

In California, in the year 1857, Mr. Shattuck married Nancy Bones, a native of Missouri, born in 1840. Her father was also a native of Missouri and died in that state, but her mother, Ann (Patton) Bones, came across the Plains with her children in the early forties to California. Mr. Shattuck has a number of brothers now living, and also three sisters, but his brothers, Frank W., David O., John S. and Nicholas, have died within the last ten years. A sister, Mrs. Mary McLaughlin, still resides in Sonoma county, California, while his sisters, Jane and Elizabeth, also live in that state. One brother, James W., makes his home in Louisiana, and one, Robert Perry Shattuck, lives in California. Mr. Shattuck has seven children: Mrs. Gertrude Bickner, residing at Seattle; Edward Lee, living in Bickleton; Lewis H., in the Glade, near Bickleton; Hardy S., proprietor of a butcher shop two miles east of the town; Mrs. Fannie Buckley and Mrs. Florena Coleman, also residents of Bickleton, and Dickson P., Jr., who lives at Blue Light postoffice. In politics, Mr. Shattuck is a Democrat in the full sense of the word. He is hale and full of energy and vitality, notwithstanding the burden of his seventy-five summers, and is highly esteemed by his neighbors and thoroughly respected by all.

JOHN CALVIN COLEMAN, an enterprising stock raiser and farmer of Klickitat county, resides about three miles south and two east of the town of Bickleton. He was born in Sonoma county, California, May 22, 1869, the son of Ly-cander I. and Frances (Epperly) Coleman, of whom due mention is made in another place. When eleven years old, he came to Klickitat county with his father and mother, and here he almost grew up in the saddle, riding the range after cattle and horses, or giving himself to the more hazardous work of breaking in broncos. He acquired a common school education, however. Upon reaching his majority he started to work for himself. Buying some railroad land in company with his brother Joe, he began keeping sheep on the tract, leasing a band at first, but later purchasing some. About 1899 the brothers sold their sheep and started in the cattle business. He owns a section and a half of land in a body and now has about one hundred and fifty-five head of cattle, having recently traded away sixty head. He is breeding Hereford and Durham cattle and Percheron horses, being the owner of a fine, imported Percheron stallion. He and his brother also raise wheat and wheat hay on their land. They have the largest and best steam threshing outfit in the county.

Mr. Coleman was married in 1896 to Lavell Kays, a native of Oregon, daughter of William R. and Olive (Price) Kays. Her father is now a sheep owner at Prosser, Washington, but her mother died in 1888. Elton Kays, a brother of Mrs. Coleman, lives with her father at Prosser, and is engaged with him in the sheep business. Mr. Coleman has one sister and three brothers, namely, Mrs. Sarah Emma McCredy, living in Bickleton; Joseph F., still his partner; William Thomas and Hiram I., also residents of Bickleton. He and Mrs. Coleman are parents of two children, Leo C., born February 19, 1898, and Emma, September 17th of the following year. Mr. Coleman is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Democratic party, and Mrs. Coleman is a member of the Presbyterian church. A successful man in his various lines of endeavor and a man of ability, progressiveness and good principles, he has won for himself a high place in the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens.

STEPHEN MATSEN, director and vice-president of the Bank of Bickleton, and a farmer and stock raiser in Klickitat county, where he owns an improved one thousand and eighty acre farm three and three-quarters miles east of the town of Bickleton, is a native of Denmark, born March 2, 1853. His father, Matt Jensen, who was a farmer near Varde, Denmark, died in the year 1868, at the age of fifty-six. His mother's maiden name was Ida Petersen and she was also a Dane. She died in the year 1859, at the age of forty-two years. Stephen Matsen, of this article, attained the age of nineteen in his native country, and received his education in the schools of that land, at the same time putting in his spare time with his father on the home place. He came first to this country in the year 1872, and settled in the state of New Jersey, whence at a later date he moved to Chicago, going from that city to Wisconsin. In the fall of 1874 he went westward to California, locating at Truckee, and for the ensuing four years he was engaged there in the ice business. He then returned to Denmark for a six months' trip. Upon his return to the United States, he once more settled in California. In the fall of 1878 he first came to Klickitat county, and took up the homestead on which he still resides, making a trip the same winter to Oregon, but coming back to his property the succeeding spring. At the time of his arrival in the county of Klickitat, the only settlers there were Robert Graham, John D. Graham, George W. McCredy, M. J. Embree, L. G. Bailey, Ben D. Butler, and a Mr. Holbrook, there being no town of Bickleton, which was founded the next fall by C. N. Bickle and Lee Weaver, who opened a small store on the present townsite. The Indian scare in that locality was at its height a short time previous to his advent into the country, and the stockmen at that time were putting forth their best efforts to discourage settlement of the district, in order that they might continue to range their cattle over the entire country undisturbed by settlers and their inevitable fences. From a small start in the beginning, Mr. Matsen gradually raised more and more stock and grain each year, and a full measure of success has crowned his efforts. His land will permit him to keep less than a hundred head of stock and he has cattle and horses up to the limit, or nearly so. He is now making a success with shorthorn cattle and has some fine horses of Percheron blood. His land is all fenced and mostly in cultivation, and he has a modern dwelling, ample barns, a fruitful orchard, etc.

Mr. Matsen married Mrs. Mary (Gundersen) Brown, in Klickitat county, January 15, 1887, this lady being a native of Denmark, born on the 3rd of March, 1855. She came to America when twenty-nine years old. Her father, whose name was Gunde Gundersen, died in the year 1885, and her mother, whose maiden name was Maren Sorensen, is also deceased. Mr. Matsen has one brother, Peter, living in Klickitat county, and one sister, Mrs. Margaret Hensen, residing at present in Denmark, Stephen being the youngest of the family. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Matsen four children have been born, named in order of their birth, as follows: Ida M., Mary G., Annie J. and John P., while Mrs. Matsen, by her first marriage, has one child, Nels J. Brown. Fraternally, Mr. Matsen is connected with the A. O. U. W., and in religion he is a Methodist. He is a Republican in politics, though he has never been ambitious for preferment, accepting no office except that of school director. Mr. Matsen is one of the substantial and highly esteemed men of his locality, successful in business and a forceful factor in the promotion of the general progress.

THOMAS H. HOOKER, a Klickitat county farmer and stock raiser, lives on his four hundred acre ranch two miles east of Bickleton. He was born in Wayne county, Georgia, November 8, 1864, and named for his father, who was engaged in the lumber business and manufacture of turpentine. The elder Hooker's people came originally from North Carolina to Georgia, and in the Civil war, he sided with the South, serving in the Confederate army. He died in Georgia in the year 1884. The mother of our subject, Delaina Elizabeth (Harris) Hooker, who was likewise a Georgian, died in 1882. Thomas H., of this review, was one of a large family of children. He remained in his native town until seventeen, during this period attending the public schools. Being of a studious disposition, he continued to study by himself after leaving the class room, notwithstanding the fact that as he was the oldest boy, much of the work about the family home devolved upon him. At the time of his father's demise, Mr. Hooker was living in Klickitat county with his sister, Sarah, and the old gentleman was making arrangements to join them when death overtook him. Owing to this unfortunate occurrence, it devolved upon our subject to take care of the younger members of the family and he proved equal to the emergency, bringing them all west, except one brother. At this time he was working for various sheep men in the locality, one of his employers being Frank Lyons, one of the largest sheep owners in this part of the country.

About a year after his father died, Mr. Hooker married Ada Johnson, a native of Iowa. Her father, A. C. Johnson, was an early settler at Cleveland, Washington, to which town he came in 1883, but he returned east later and now lives in Iowa. Mr. Hooker had a hard tussle of it with his own family, and his brothers and sisters to look after also, but he took good care of them all. In 1890 he purchased a part of his present place and three years later the property on which he now resides. He raised some hay for his horses and cattle, of which he has always kept a number, and finally went into stock raising on an extensive scale. He is now breeding Percheron horses, and thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, some of which he has had shipped in from California. He has two brothers, Edward and Lee, who reside at Dot postoffice, and a brother, Henry, living at Tampa, Florida. Charles, another brother, lives at Bickleton, and William and Joseph J., reside at Cleveland. A married sister, Mrs. Julia Strickland, is living at Gardi, Georgia, and his sister, Sarah, now Mrs. McCredy, makes her home at Cleveland. Mr. Hooker has two children, Thomas H. and Edward H., both at home. Fraternally, he is connected with the Bickleton lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and with the A. O. U. W., while in politics, he is a Democrat. At present he is one of the members of the school board of district No. 28. He has about three hundred acres in cultivation, raising wheat, oats, barley, potatoes and fruit. He is well spoken of by his fellow citizens as an enterprising, industrious and worthy man.

JAMES E. STORY, a farmer and stockman of Klickitat county, residing about two miles north of the town of Bickleton, was born in Dutchess county, New York, April 5, 1855. His father, James E. Story, who was of English and Scotch descent, was also born in the same state, December 18, 1823. The family is one of the oldest in New York state, going back to Joseph Story, the eminent jurist, who also had the distinction of being a participant in the "Boston Tea Party" affair. William Story, grandfather of our subject, took part in the War of 1812, distinguishing himself for his valor, and his wife afterward drew a pension as a recognition of his bravery. She lived to be ninety-seven years old. The maternal grandfather of our subject's father, William Ellsworth, was an officer of the Revolutionary war under General Van Rensselaer, and in compensation for his losses, caused by the war, was given a grant of land. Jedediah Ellsworth, our subject's great-grandfather, on his mother's side, was also an officer in the Revolutionary war, and won distinction in that conflict. The singular fact that both these distinguished progenitors of the Mr. Story of this sketch had the same surname is explained when we state that his grandfather and grandmother were second cousins and both named Ellsworth. James E. Story, Sr., came to the Bickleton country in 1881 and died there in 1900. His wife, Electa L. (Ellsworth) Story, the mother of our subject, was born in Ulster county, New York, January 15, 1831, and also died in 1900, three months before her husband's demise. Her parents were of old English and Holland Dutch descent. The family settled in New York when it was still known as the New Netherlands, and held a large grant of land there. They were involved in the Revolutionary war, and somehow lost their land, although they were patriots and fought for independence.

The man whose life history forms the theme of this article remained on the farm during boy-hood and worked with his father, attending school during term time until fourteen, when, his father's health being poor, he was compelled to leave school and take charge of the family affairs, a task he nobly performed, keeping his parents with him until their death. His father took land upon coming to the Bickleton country, and he also filed on a homestead at Mabton, Yakima county, in 1891, upon which he has since made final proof and which he still retains. He devoted himself chiefly to farming it until about ten years ago, when he engaged in the stock business, also.

Mr. Story was married at Bickleton, October 3, 1888, to Rosamond Flower, a native of Edwards county, Illinois, born November 3, 1861. Her father, Camillus Flower, was born in Edwards county, the date being October 5, 1825. He was of English descent. He died on the 4th of January, 1904, after having given his life mostly to tilling the soil. His father, George F. Flower, came to Illinois in an early day and there founded the town of Albion, locating an English colony at that point—an event of note in history. Mrs. Story's mother, Edith (Prichard) Flower, was also born in Edwards county, Illinois, her parents having come there from England at the time her husband formed the colony at Albion. She still lives, a resident of Bickleton, though her seventy-fourth birthday occurred on the 28th of February, 1904. Mrs. Story has eight brothers and sisters now living, namely, Samuel P., of Mabton, Washington; George F., Philip H., of Illinois; Charles E., Edward F., Mrs. J. T. McCredy, of Bickleton, Washington; Mrs. J. H. Bristow, and Harold D., M. D., of Portland, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Story have two children, Charles F., born September 6, 1891, and Frederick C., born April 6, 1894. Mr. Story's Brother, William J., is a publisher and editor of the Klickitat County Agriculturist, a Goldendale newspaper. Fraternally, our subject is connected with the A. O. U. W., and the Modern Woodmen of America, and he and Mrs. Story are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In politics, he is a Republican. Interested always in educational matters, he is now serving as director of his district; he possesses an especially fine library. His property besides his Bickleton land, where he has a well appointed house and barn, embraces a quarter section at Mabton. An upright, honorable, energetic man of sterling integrity of character, he is certainly reflecting no discredit upon his distinguished ancestors.

LYSANDER COLEMAN, a respected citizen of Klickitat county, resides on his farm of four hundred and eighty acres about four miles south-east of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Indiana, born in Rushville, in the year 1838. His father, Ambrose Coleman, a farmer by occupation, was born in the Blue Grass state, March 4, 1783.

He came of sturdy English stock. He served under General Harrison in the War of 1812, and on account of such service drew a pension until his death. Crossing the Plains to California in 1849, the year of the first gold excitement, he mined some on Feather river, but moved to Sonoma county in the same state two years later, where he followed farming and stock raising as a business. He died in that county on the 23rd of February, 1867. Throughout his entire life, his loyalty to the Democratic party never wavered. His wife, Sarah (Iles) Coleman, was a native of Maryland, but she, too, could trace her ancestry back to England. However, her grandfather, Samuel, served eight years in the Revolutionary war under General Washington, and, strange to say, escaped without a wound. Married in Kentucky, she shared with her husband the danger and tedium of the journey across the Plains, and at Ellensburg, Washington, her death occurred in December, 1884, she being over ninety years of age at the time of her demise. She was the mother of seven sons, one of whom was named William Madison, also of a girl named Ellen and one named Elizabeth, who afterward married into the McCauley family, and Hester, who was later the wife of Joseph Wright, sheriff of Sonoma county, California, and two infants, who died while young. Lysander Coleman is the youngest of the family. He grew up in Sonoma county, there attending the common schools, and following farming. At the age of twenty-five, he married. He was with his father in business until the demise of the latter in 1867, then undertook the supervision of his affairs. Moving to Klickitat county, in 1880, he first secured a section of railroad land there, but later took up and made final proof on a homestead, which he now owns. The country was wild when he came, and there was a good deal of enmity between the cattle men and settlers, which sometimes led to trouble, but fortunately he got along peaceably with the cattle owners. His farm is now well improved, with a modern, seven-room dwelling, two large barns, a good orchard, good fences, etc. He is deeply interested in the breeding of good horses, giving special attention to Percherons.

Mr. Coleman was married on the first day of the year 1864, in Sonoma county, California, to Frances S. Epperly, a native of Randolph county, Missouri, born on the 3rd of October, 1847. She came west the year previous to her marriage. Her father, Thomas S. Epperly, was a Kentuckian, born in 1813, but when a small boy, he had removed to Missouri, and there married. He lived in Missouri until 1862, leaving home, however, in the year 1851 for a short trip to California. He was of German descent. His death occurred August 6, 1896. Mrs. Coleman's mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Lingo. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have five children, namely, Sarah Emma, now

Mrs. George W. McCredy, residing in Bickleton; William Thomas, John Calvin, Hiram I. and Joseph F., all residents of Klickitat county. Mr. Coleman is an elder in the Presbyterian church of Bickleton, and president of its board of trustees, and Mrs. Coleman also adheres to that church. In politics, Mr. Coleman is a Democrat, but he does not take an active interest in political matters. He is a genial, approachable gentleman, of sterling character, and thoroughly respected by all.

ALCANA MILLER, one of the earliest settlers in the country surrounding Bickleton, is the owner of a farm about a mile north of the town, where he has followed the occupation of a farmer and stockman for a number of years, though he is too old to do much work at the present time. He is a native of Indiana, born in Gibson county, September 10, 1828. His father, Peter Snider Miller, who was of the old Dutch stock, was born in Amsterdam, New York, in the year 1795, and took part in the War of 1812. He was an early pioneer of Gibson county, Indiana, having moved there when about all the living things in the country were Indians and wild game. He died at the age of sixty-three. His wife, Rachel (Snider) Miller, the mother of our subject, was also brought up in Amsterdam, New York. She died in 1837. The Mr. Miller of this review grew to manhood on his father's farm in Indiana and got his education in the pioneer log school house in his settlement. When twenty years old, he started to make his own living, at the same time courageously undertaking to gain a livelihood for another person, Eliza Kuntz, a native of Indiana, born in June, 1830, whom he induced to become his life partner. When the Civil war broke out, Mr. Miller quickly enlisted in Company A, Sixty-third Indiana volunteers, and he served efficiently under General McClellan and also under General Pope, in the Army of the Potomac. After his discharge, he settled in Indiana for four years, going thence to Kansas and locating in Greenwood county, where he followed farming and stock raising for the ensuing seven years. He then sold his land and stock, removed to Washington and on February 13, 1878, settled near what is now the town of Bickleton. He took up his present property at that time, as a homestead. There were only five families of settlers in the vicinity when he came, which was just prior to the Indian outbreak and scare and the Perkins massacre. Everybody was leaving for Goldendale and The Dalles at the time, but Mr. Miller bravely continued while others were fleeing. The settlers got out timber for a stockade to be erected near the present location of the Bickleton school house, but the scare dying down, the stockade was never built. About this time, Bob Burton, brother of the Mrs. Perkins who was killed by Indians, went on the warpath by himself in quest of the murderous redskins, and succeeded in capturing one of the culprits just across the Columbia, after first severely wounding him. He brought him into Bickleton trussed on the back of a horse, and later took him to Yakima City for trial.

At the time of Mr. Miller's arrival here, there was considerable enmity between the cattle men and the settlers. Prior to the advent of settlers, the cattle owners were ranging their stock undisturbed, over the entire country, and they were extremely arrogant in their dealings with the incoming settlers, who, by putting up fences, kept them from ranging over a large part of the land. Mr. Allen, of the firm of Snipes & Allen, called on Mr. Miller one day soon after his arrival, and asked him what he expected to do for a livelihood. On being told that he was going to make an honest living, the cattle owner replied, "You will starve to death, sure as h—." Mr. Miller instantly answered, "I will be here when your kind is driven out." The prophecy has since come true, as Ben Snipes is now financially ruined, and Mr. Allen, in a later conversation with Mr. Miller, of whom he purchased some grain, reluctantly admitted his surmise to have turned out correctly. The former cattle owner is now a druggist in North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have four children, namely: Mrs. Sarah Davison, living at Castle Rock, Washington; George, living at Bickleton; Clark, at Belma postoffice, and Rachel, now living in Kansas. Mr. Miller is an avowed Democrat. He was once threatened with hanging for his views, while residing in Indiana, in the early part of the last century. He is also a pensioner. An Irishman located a claim on what is now the town of Bickleton, for Mr. Miller, and put up a notice to that effect, but on his arrival the latter decided to take up his present land instead and to let the original location go. C. N. Bickle, the founder of Bickleton, and LeRoy Weaver wanted to build the town on Mr. Miller's property, but he would not entertain this proposition. A vigorous, hale, old gentleman, though in his seventy-sixth year, and possessed of a genial disposition, Mr. Miller is a favorite with all who meet him, while those who knew him before old age compelled him to retire respect him for his well known integrity in all the relations of life.

CHARLES E. FLOWER, a prominent and successful stockman of Klickitat county, who makes his home at Bickleton, is a native of Illinois, born in February, 1856. His father, Camillus Flower, was also born in Illinois, where he followed farming until 1891. He then came to the far west, and at the time of his death, January 4, 1904, was a resident of Klickitat county. The mother, Mrs. Edith (Pritchard) Flower, also a native of Illinois, is now living in Bickleton. Mr.

Flower has several brothers and sisters: Samuel P., at Mabton; Fred, in Grayville, Illinois; Philip H., living in Albion, Illinois; Mrs. Eliza McCredy, Mrs. Rosamond Story and Edward F., all of Bickleton; and Mrs. Alice Bristow and Harold H., residents of Portland. Mr. Flower received his school education in the public schools of Albion, Illinois, and in that community attained man's estate. However, in the spring of 1879 he came to Washington territory, and homesteaded a quarter section lying between Bickleton and Arlington, living upon that farm until 1884. At that time he engaged actively in the stock raising industry, to which he has since given most of his attention. In this business he has been unusually successful. At present he owns a herd of 500 cattle, considerable other stock, and 2,000 acres of land, farming and grazing. He also conducts a meat market in Bickleton, under the name of Flower & Coleman, Mr. Coleman being his business associate. In the organization of the Bank of Bickleton last year Mr. Flower took an important part, and he is now serving as one of the board of directors of that institution. In all matters of public concern he is invariably active, being known as a public spirited citizen. He is a member of the Masonic, Odd Fellow and United Workmen fraternities, and politically is a Republican, attending all conventions and otherwise laboring for the advancement of his party. Mr. Flower has been closely identified with the Bickleton region for the past quarter of a century, and is still numbered among its respected and successful pioneer citizens.

RALPH COSENS, an industrious farmer in Klickitat county, is the owner of a farm of 320 acres of tillable land, about two miles east of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Canada, born in the province of Ontario, on the 14th of March, 1848. His father, Cornelius Cosens, was a farmer by occupation. Born in Manchester, England, he came thence to Canada as a young man, later moving to North Carolina, where he died in 1874, at the town of Greensboro, in Guilford county. He was sixty-five years old at the time of his demise. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Emily Turner, was likewise a native of England, born in Manchester and married in Canada. She passed away years before her husband did, after having become the mother of fourteen children, of whom Ralph is sixth in age. Six besides him are still living, namely, Stephen, in Michigan; George, in California; Mary Ann, in Canada; Silas, also living in Canada, in British Columbia; Isaac, in California; and Emily in British Columbia, with her brother Silas. Ralph was eighteen when he left Canada and settled in California, which state he reached by the Nicaragua route. He lived in that state for a period of thirteen years, farming and teaming. In 1878 he removed to Klickitat county, and took up some railroad land near Cleveland, but soon afterwards sold the improvements on it and purchased property north of the present town of Bickleton, in which locality there were only a handful of settlers when he arrived. During the Indian scare of 1878, he remained on his place near Cleveland. He continued his residence on his land near Bickleton until five years ago, when he bought his present home. He devotes his time and energies to wheat raising, principally, though he keeps considerable stock. A year or two ago he was unfortunate in having his large residence totally destroyed by fire, and he is now living in a smaller home and preparing to build again this spring. He pays strict attention to his farming and is achieving the success which his industry merits.

On March 18, 1883, Mr. Cosens married Mary A. Martin, a native of Colorado, born in 1867. Her father, Samuel Martin, a farmer by occupation, was born in Manchester, England, in 1841. He crossed the ocean to this country in the fifties, becoming a pioneer of the state of Colorado, and also of Klickitat county, to which he moved in the fall of 1877, settling near the present town of Cleveland. He now resides in Wyoming. His wife, Mary (Campbell) Martin, was likewise born in Manchester, England, in the year 1842, and died in this country in 1873, her daughter, Mary, being the only child now living. Mr. and Mrs. Cosens have eight children, namely, Josephine, George, Samuel, Ernest, Edmund, Stanley, Lester and Emily. Mr. Cosens is a member of the Yeomen and politically is a Democrat. His standing in the community is an enviable one, the respect and good will of all his neighbors being his in abundant measure.

LELAND McCREDY, a stockholder in the Bank of Bickleton and engaged in the sheep business with his brother John, lives on his twelve sections of land located a mile and a half south of the town. He is a native of Oregon, born in Yamhill county, June 22, 1873. William R. McCredy, his father, was born in Ohio in 1831 and emigrated to Missouri in the early days. He crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1853, traveling with ox teams, and finally settling in the Willamette valley. He resided there for a period of twenty-seven years, coming to Klickitat county in the year 1880. At present he is an influential business man of Cleveland. The mother of our subject, Elizabeth (Beaman) McCredy, a native of Missouri, also crossed the Plains in the early fifties. Leland McCredy, of this article, was seven years old when he came to Klickitat county with his parents. He attended the local public schools until sixteen, then went to McMinnville, Oregon, and took a three years' course in the college there. While in school he had some cattle, horses and sheep on the range, and on completing his education he turned his attention to the stock business, also purchasing some land. In 1900, he formed a partnership with his brother, John, and they engaged in the sheep business, to which industry they are still devoting their energies. They have 12,000 head of sheep and 2,000 of horses, and they farm about 400 acres of their land to provide feed for the stock.

On December 24, 1899, Mr. McCredy married Cora M. Peters, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1879. Her father, Craig W. Peters, is also a native of the Keystone state. He came to Klickitat in 1880, and engaged in cattle and sheep raising, but has since retired from active work. At present he lives across the Columbia river from Arlington, Oregon. Her mother, Anna (Fry) Peters, is also living. Mr. and Mrs. McCredy have two children, Lowell C., born November 29, 1900, and Cecil L., born May 14, 1903. Mr. McCredy owns an interest in the mercantile establishment at Bickleton. He is one of the most enterprising and successful young men of Klickitat county, and has already achieved a success in different lines of endeavor of which many men twice his age would be proud. Politically, he is a Republican.

JACOB PIENDL, a carpenter by trade and a farmer by occupation, resides on his ranch, two miles north and one mile east of Bickleton. He is a native German, born in the province of Bavaria, July 24, 1850. John Piendl, his father, was a farmer by occupation, born in Germany in the year 1815. The elder Piendl, after serving in the German army, as required by law, immigrated to this country in the year 1853, and settled in the state of Iowa, where he died three years later. His wife, Anna Maria (Brabeck) Piendl, the mother of our subject, was also of German nativity, born in 1822. She was the mother of eight children, only two of whom are now living; John, the youngest, at Portland, Oregon, where his mother died in 1888; and Jacob, the subject of this review. The latter grew to manhood in Iowa, there attending the public schools, and in spare hours working on the farm. His father had died when he was six years old. He learned the carpenter's trade in Iowa, and followed it for a time, contributing his spare earnings to the support of his widowed mother. He lived there until 1877, then removing to the Willamette valley, Oregon, where he devoted a number of years to the pursuit of his trade. Some time later he returned to Iowa, brought his mother to Oregon, and settled with her at Castle Rock, on the banks of the Columbia river, just across from Klickitat county. After a residence of two years there, he came to the Bickleton country in December, 1886, rented a place and went to stock raising, also following his trade a portion of the time. He bought his present place in 1894, increasing its acreage by homesteading adjoining land, and since that time he has made this property his home, raising stock and grain. His land holdings now aggregate a section, and among the many improvements upon them is a good orchard of well selected fruit trees. He is also engaged in the threshing business on quite an extensive scale.

On the 23d of November, 1880, in Salem, Oregon, Mr. Piendl married Emilie McCarty, a native of Iowa, born March 27, 1858. Her parents came to Iowa from the state of Maryland in the early days, though her father, James A. McCarty, was born in the Quaker state, the date being 1825. He was a miller by trade and for some years operated a mill in Village Creek, Iowa, where he died in 1864. Mrs. Piendl's mother, Sarah (Wilhelm) McCarty, was of German descent, born in Maryland in 1835. She died in 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Piendl have had eight children: Mrs. Chloe Walling, in Klickitat county; Mrs. Pearl Wattenberg, now deceased; Mrs. Ida Shattuck, in Bickleton; Mark, Belle, Henry, Velma and John, with their parents at home. Mr. Piendl is a member of the Catholic church, and he and Mrs. Piendl are both connected with the fraternal organization of Yeomen. In politics, he is a Democrat. Always interested in the securing and maintenance of good schools, he has served efficiently as a member of the school board of his district, but other preferment he has never sought. He is one of the substantial and progressive men of the community, and belongs to the great class which forms the real strength of state and nation—the men who quietly and assiduously perform the work nearest their hands, contributing their mites to the development of latent resources.

GOTFRED PETERSEN, an enterprising citizen of Klickitat county, Washington, and a farmer and stock raiser by occupation, resides on his ranch of four hundred acres adjoining the townsite of Bickleton. He is a native of Denmark, born on the Langeland Island, April 5, 1844. His father, Gotfred Petersen, was a Danish farmer, born in 1811; he died at the age of ninety. His mother, Frederika (Olsen) Petersen, was likewise born in Denmark, and was nine months her husband's senior. She died about the same time that her husband did. The twain had been married for a period of sixty-one years and had a family of seven children, six of whom are still living. Gotfred Petersen reached the age of twenty-five in his native land, remaining at home until fourteen years old, and attending school, the laws of his country compelling attendance between the ages of seven and fourteen. While quite young, he learned the wagon maker's trade and at that handicraft he wrought continuously afterward until he left Denmark. He had numerous friends in the United States who wrote him frequently, describing the advantages of the new country, and persuaded by them, he crossed over in 1869 and settled in Racine, Wisconsin, a city famed for its large manufacturing plants, the greater part of which were devoted to wagon making. Unfortunately, the establishments were temporarily closed at the time of his arrival, so he engaged in farming near-by, but he soon gave it up and went to Minnesota, where for a time he followed his trade. His next move was to Leavenworth, Kansas. From there he went to Chicago, and from that city he journeyed to San Francisco, California, in 1874. There he readily obtained employment. In 1877 he moved to Portland, Oregon, thence to Tacoma, Washington, and in the spring of 1878 he came to the district surrounding the present town of Bickleton. There were few settlers in that country at the time, and no town was started until the succeeding year. The year 1878 will be remembered as the date of the Indian scare, and most of the settlers around the site of the present town removed to Goldendale and The Dalles, and the few who remained gathered together and hauled logs to build a stockade where the Bickleton school-house now stands. The fort was never completed and Mr. Petersen used some of the timber to build a stable. During the preceding spring he had built his log cabin, after having completed which he went to the coast and helped to build a steamer. In the spring of 1879 he assisted in the erection of the first sawmill on Pine creek, hauling the timber from a distance. He also helped to set up in the mill the engine, which had been hauled from the banks of the Columbia river, about fifteen miles away. The mill was later moved to the vicinity of Cleveland, where it burned some years later. Though the engine passed through the fire, it still does duty in a flouring mill in the town. When Mr. Petersen first settled in the district, he took a homestead and a timber culture claim, also bought eighty acres of railroad land. He was married in 1889 to Lenora Martinsen, a Danish girl, who passed away two years after their marriage. Of his brothers and sisters still living, the following account may be given: Oline Johansen, the oldest, lives with her husband in Denmark, and a brother, Hans Gotfredsen, resides at Greenleaf, Kansas. Rasmus Gotfredsen lives near Bickleton, and another brother, Peter Gotfredsen, makes his home in the vicinity of The Dalles, Oregon. The other sister, Carantine Gotfredsen, is now keeping house for him. The fact that Mr. Petersen's brothers and sisters have not the same surname as he is explained in this way: When taking out his naturalization papers in this country, Mr. Petersen changed his name for the sake of convenience, while his brothers still retain the family name, which, according to Danish custom, is formed by adding "sen" to the father's given name. Mr. Petersen's old country name was Gotfred Petersen Gotfredsen. Mr. Petersen is a member of the Lutheran church, and in politics he is a Republican. His land is mostly under cultivation. He raised considerable grain and has some cattle, also some fine Norman and Percheron horses, as valuable animals as can be found in the country. He had a hard time during the first few years of his residence in the district, conditions being then unfavorable to settlers on account of the enmity of the cattle men, and for a while he had to work in the car shops at The Dalles to make both ends meet. He has since done well, however, and is making a success of his business from both a financial and an agricultural view-point. He is one of the most popular citizens of the locality, standing high in the estimation of all with whom he is associated.

JOHN JACOB GANDER, now deceased, was a stock raiser and lived on his well kept ranch, about five miles northeast of the town of Bickleton. He was a native of Switzerland, descended from an ancient family that fought for liberty in their country among its cantons and mountains. He was born in Canton de Berne on the 4th of April, 1854. His father, John Jacob Gander, by occupation a farmer, was a native Swiss, born in the year 1819. At the age of seventy-eight he was living in the southern part of French Switzerland, where he died in the year 1897. His wife, whose maiden name was Anna Marie Millener, was also the daughter of an old Swiss family of means, and distinction as patriots, and was born in the year 1824. She passed away at the age of sixty-seven. John Jacob, of this review, was educated in the schools of his native country. He was of a studious disposition, bright, quick and eager to learn. He came to the United States in April, 1884, being then a few days over thirty years of age. He did not stop in the eastern part of the country, but came direct to Washington, and settled near Bickleton, where he bought some land, built a house and engaged in stock raising. He had some capital when he came to this country, and he succeeded, after some years of difficulty, in a financial way. For the last few years of his life he was very sickly, but, assisted by his family, he continued to farm his land and raise his stock until his death, which occurred April 13, 1901. He was a very careful farmer, and one of the first successful wheat raisers in this locality. He spoke German and French fluently, and English quite well.

Mr. Gander was married two years before coming to the United States, at Geneva, Switzerland, on the 18th of March, 1882, to Leah Berney, who survives him. She was a well-educated lady of Swiss parentage, born March 17, 1860. Frank Henry Berney, her father, a watchmaker by trade, was born in Switzerland, December 29, 1829, and belongs to a well-known French (Huguenot) family. He still lives in his native land, in the Canton de Vaud, and still follows his trade. Her mother, whose maiden name was Zelie Rochat, was also of Huguenot parentage, and born in the Canton de Vaud, in 1833. She passed away in 1900. Mrs. Gander has raised a family of nine children, all living but her daughter Mary, who was born March 9, 1891, and died while a young child. The eldest boy, Samuel, was born in Switzerland, March 16, 1883, and the next of age, Fred, was born at Bickleton, September 23, 1885. Elizabeth was born on the 3d of February, 1887, and Martha, April 16, 1888. George was born in 1889, September 30th, and Mary on the 8th of April, 1893. The two other children, Harry and Joseph James, were born on the respective dates of December 31, 1894, and July 20, 1897. Mrs. Gander and the children attend the church of the Brethren. The boys run the farm, which consists of an entire section of land. They had been raising cattle, but a few years ago sold the greater part of the band. They still have, however, some good Percheron horses. Last year they harvested over six thousand bushels of grain. Mrs. Gander has two brothers living in the state; one, Michael E. Berney, who came to this country before her husband, resides at Walla Walla, engaged in the market gardening business; the other, Frank Berney, is a cattle man and farmer at Mabton, and has been in this country since 1884. Her cousin, Ulysses H. Berney, a native Swiss, is at present one of the leading business men of the city of Walla Walla, Washington. Mrs. Gander is a woman of good education, speaking both French and English, as do also her children. While Mr. Gander was alive, he held the respect and esteem of the entire community, and his fellow citizens greatly regretted his demise, and sympathize with Mrs. Gander in her bereavement.

HENRY SCHAEFER, owner of a ranch of over eight hundred acres of fertile Klickitat county land, situated four and a half miles east of the town of Bickleton, was born in Saransk, Russia, on April 13, 1868. His father, Jacob Schaefer, who is also a farmer, was born in Russia, to German parents, in the year 1835. His people have lived in the domain of the czar for nearly two centuries. He (Jacob Schaefer) left his native land in 1891, emigrating to the United States, and settling in the state of Washington, near the town of Bickleton, in Klickitat county, where he still lives on the land he bought originally, situated near the home of our subject. His wife, Elizabeth (Kip) Schaefer, was likewise born in Russia to German parents, in the year 1839, and is still living. Henry Schaefer, of this review, was educated in a German school in Russia, where he spent his early youth on his father's farm. He came to this country four years previous to his father's arrival, and for four years herded sheep for Theodore Stegeman, near Bickleton, where he had settled. At the expiration of this period, he bought his present place. He has raised considerable stock during the years which have since elapsed, hogs, cattle and horses, also has farmed the land to some extent. His place is all fenced; not a little of it is under cultivation, and among the improvements on it are a good orchard and a fine barn, 56 by 90 feet, built in 1892.

On May 16, 1891, Mr. Schaefer married Kate Stegeman, the ceremony taking place in Klickitat county. Miss Stegeman was born in Prussia in October, 1864, the daughter of Theodore R. and Anna (Stegman) Stegeman. Her father, who is also a native of Prussia, came to this country in 1872, and was one of the first settlers in the Bickleton district of Klickitat county, where he has followed the sheep business ever since his arrival. He now lives near Mr. Schaefer's place. Her mother, whose maiden name was almost the same as her married name, was also a native of Prussia. She died in the year 1895. The subject of this article has two brothers, Jacob and George, living in the state, the former at Ritzville; also a sister, Margaret, living near his home. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer have been born five children, Henry, Oulis, Nicholas, Ludwig and Benjamin, the last named a baby of a few months. Both parents are members of the M. E. church, and politically, Mr. Schaefer is a Republican. An industrious, careful man, awake to all the interests of his business, and at the same time possessed of all the qualities of good citizenship, he is looked upon as one of the most substantial and worthy men of his community.

JOHN M. HENDRICK, a progressive and well-to-do stockman and farmer of Klickitat county, resides on his well improved ranch four and a half miles east of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Missouri, born in Carroll county, June 4, 1857. His father, Thomas Hendrick, who is likewise a farmer by occupation, is a native of West Virginia, born in the year 1830. He crossed the Plains to California in the days of '49, during the gold excitement, and mined some, then returned east and married, coming west again in 1859 with his wife. After spending a year in the Golden state, he removed in 1860 to Oregon, where he resided continuously for eighteen years. He came to the Bickleton country in November, 1878, becoming one of the earliest settlers in this district, and he has followed farming and stock raising principally since. At present he resides near the city of Goldendale. His wife, formerly Miss Mollie Hawkins, was born in Kentucky in the year 1836, and belonged to a pioneer family of that state. Her father became a merchant in Missouri, and she married in that state, coming to California with her husband on his second trip across the Plains in 1859. John M. Hendrick, of this review, is the oldest of a family of five children. He crossed the Plains with his parents when almost a baby, and grew up in Folk county, Oregon, whither his parents moved from California when he was three years old. His education was obtained in the common schools of the Webfoot state, and upon completing it, he worked on his father's place until he had attained his majority, then removed to Klickitat county, arriving in the fall of 1878. He took up a homestead about three miles south of the present town of Bickleton, also purchased some railroad land, and engaged in farming. The town of Bickleton was started in the spring of the year following that of his arrival in the district, by C. N. Bickle and Lee Weaver, who then opened a small store on the site of the present town. Mr. Hendrick proved up on his land, and worked hard to improve it. In 1894 he disposed of it to good advantage and bought his present place, to the cultivation and improvement of which he has since devoted himself assiduously. His father lived near him for some years, then removed to the Goldendale district and there bought property. Of our subject's five hundred acres of land, he farms three hundred and sixty acres, raising various farm products, besides his stock, which consist of cattle, sheep, hogs and horses. He has set out two orchards of plum, apple, pear, apricot and other trees, and they are both bearing excellent fruit. At present he is starting to raise strawberries and also raspberries and blackberries on irrigated land, the water being taken from a spring. On his land there are two substantial barns, and his residence is supplied with all modern conveniences.

On April 3, 1881, in Klickitat county, Mr. Hendrick married Olive M. Hopkins, a native of Washington county, Oregon, born in 1865, the daughter of Edmond S. and Mary S. (Flack) Hopkins. Her father was an Oregon pioneer, and also a pioneer of Klickitat county, where he settled in the early seventies. He took as a homestead land near the site of Goldendale, thereby acquiring title to realty which was afterward laid out in lots and denominated the Hopkins addition to Goldendale. He died in 1878. Mrs. Hendrick's mother belonged to a family of Ohio pioneers. Mr. Hendrick has one brother and three sisters living, namely, Budd; Mrs. Susan White, whose husband, R. D. White, resides near Arlington, Oregon; Ellen, now Mrs. J. H. Sellers, living near Goldendale; and Mrs. Louise Moulds, at Moscow, Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Hendrick have six children, all at home with their parents, namely, Thomas E., aged twenty-two; Charles H., three years younger; Pearl, slightly over sixteen; John, fourteen years old; Emma, aged twelve; and Laura, who has lately passed her seventh birthday. Mr. Hendrick is a Republican in politics. He takes an active interest in educational matters, and is, indeed, a public-spirited man in all other respects. Upright, conscientious and not slothful in business, he has acquired and still retains the confidence and esteem of a large circle of people in Klickitat county and its vicinity.

HARMON TRENNER, formerly a school teacher and now a Klickitat county farmer, resides on his ranch east of the town of Bickleton. He was born in Santa Rosa, California, on the 5th day of January, 1875. His father, Henry M. Trenner, a native of Ohio, born in the year 1835, came west to California the first time in the fifties, crossing the Plains, and for some years he mined in the Golden state, then returned east. About 1857 he again came west and for some years thereafter he followed mining in various parts of the Pacific states. He went to the Salmon river country in Idaho, during the rush to that section, also was one of the first to join the rush to the Montana gold fields. On his trip to the Idaho country, he passed along the south border of Klickitat county, Washington, where he settled in 1878, years after he had first seen its shore. At present he lives at Washougal, Washington. His wife, whose maiden name was Mattie Helstrom, was born in Sweden, in the year 1837. She came to this country with her parents, who were also Swedish, in 1840 and settled in Illinois. Her father served in the Civil war and after the cessation of hostilities returned home to Illinois, where he later died. The man whose name initiates this article was three years old when he came to Klickitat county with his parents. The family arrived during the Indian scare of 1878, but he was too young at the time to remember any of the occurrences, although his parents in after years often spoke of those exciting times. The family settled near Goldendale, and young Harmon grew to manhood in that locality, attending the Goldendale schools, and working on his father's farm at times. Going later to Forest Grove, Oregon, he completed his education in Pacific University, of which that town is the seat. After leaving school, he taught a term, but not finding this vocation to his liking, he engaged in farming, taking his brother Oliver into partnership. The two bought a place a mile east of Bickleton, in which our subject recently purchased his brother's interest, and he now continues the operation of the ranch by himself. He has several brothers and sisters, namely, Arthur, who resides with his father at Washougal, Washington; Oliver, his former partner, now farming near Bickleton; Mrs. May R. Hadley, wife of a Methodist minister; Willis, an electrician in the city of Tacoma; and Emma, living with her father at Washougal. Mr. Trenner owns a homestead six and a half miles east of Bickleton, besides his three hundred acres of land near the town. He is now engaged in improving his homestead property, sinking a well, putting up a residence, breaking up the ground, and otherwise developing it. In politics he is independent. He is a young man of good abilities, energetic and successful in business and in all respects a worthy citizen.

JOHN DUCEY, one of the earliest settlers in Klickitat county, is now the owner of a well improved farm located about four miles east of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Cork, Ireland, born July 7, 1849. His father was also Irish and likewise a farmer by occupation. He died in his native country several years ago. His mother, whose maiden name was Abina Welsh, was Irish, too, and she is also deceased. Our subject was educated in the schools of his native land, likewise on his father's farm, where he learned the ins and outs of a farmer's life. Before becoming of age, he heard of the many opportunities a young man would have in the United States, and wishing to better his condition, he early emigrated to the United States, settling first in California. For ten years and more he lived in the Golden state, engaged in agricultural pursuits, but in the year 1879, when he was thirty years of age, he removed to Klickitat county. He immediately took up land as a homestead, and on the tract to which he thus obtained title he has since made his home, improving the property and raising both agricultural products and live stock. This locality was wild and practically unsettled when he first arrived, and it was not considered a good grain country, but he believed it would become adaptable to grain raising in a short time, and his belief has since turned out to be correct. The cultivation of the surrounding country has increased the rainfall, with the result that the entire district has become a fertile and productive land. He had to start in the cattle business in a small way at first, but he increased his stock rapidly, and now has over two hundred cattle, also many hogs of the Poland-China species. He takes pride in the breeding of Durham cattle and sturdy draft horses. His place is well improved and his outbuildings are ample for the storage of his farm products. His land consists of a section and a half, all in a body, six hundred acres of which are in cultivation and employed in part in producing feed for his stock; he also has two orchards in full bearing. He is greatly impressed with the country from an agricultural standpoint and has implicit faith in its future as one of the most productive wheat and grain sections of this western country. Mr. Ducey was one of a family of four, of whom only one, besides himself, is still alive. Her name is now Mrs. Abina Shaw. In religion, Mr. Ducey is a Catholic, and in political persuasion a Republican. He held the office of school director in his district and is greatly interested in good schools, and willing to pay taxes accordingly. Mr. Ducey is an energetic and successful farmer, a good business man, a public-spirited citizen, and a forceful factor in the upbuilding of his community and county.

HANS C. TRANBERG, one of the many well-to-do farmers and stock raisers of Klickitat county, owns an extensive ranch of one thousand three hundred and sixty acres situated three and a half miles east and one mile south of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Denmark, born in the town of Varde, July 7, 1846. His father, for whom he was named, was also a native Dane, and likewise a farmer by occupation. He was born in 1810, and died in his ninetieth year. Our subject's mother, Ingeborg (Knutson) Tranberg, was of Danish parentage. She died many years ago. Hans C. Tranberg grew to manhood in his native land, acquiring a common school education, and receiving many valuable lessons in the art of farming. He later moved to the town of Varde and engaged in the live stock business, which he followed for the ensuing six years. He owned considerable land in his own country. Coming to the United States at the age of thirty-three, he settled in California for a brief stay, then removed to Klickitat county, arriving in October, 1879, and settling on land adjoining his present property. He did as most homesteaders do in a new country—remained on his land part of the time only, being compelled to gain a livelihood by following various pursuits at intervals. For some time he was employed in a sawmill. He also herded sheep, thus gaining experience that proved of great value to him afterwards, for he soon purchased five hundred. He continued to increase his flock until he had in the neighborhood of four thousand head, when he sold a portion of the band. The remainder, however, were allowed to increase as before. In 1899 he sold all his sheep except a few for his own use and turned his attention to cattle raising. He gives much attention to the breeding of Percheron horses and Shorthorn cattle, raising both successfully and profitably. Mr. Tranberg has seven hundred acres of his mammoth farm in cultivation, and some of the rest is leased to good advantage. Among the numerous improvements on his ranch is a splendid, beautifully furnished house, with books, pictures, piano and many other things to render it attractive and pleasing to the esthetic sense.

On June 19, 1900, at Goldendale, Washington,

Mr. Tranberg married Mrs. Christine (Sorensen) Matsen, a native of Denmark, who came to this country with her first husband, John Matsen, in 1887. By that marriage she had eight children: Mrs. Edith Jensen, Meta, Mrs. Martha Martinson, Soren, George, Nelson, Rosa and Henry. Mrs. Tranberg's father, Soren Rasmussen, and her mother, Mata Marie Jensen, were both natives of Denmark, and are both deceased. She has two brothers now living, Chris and Rasmus Sorensen. Mr. Tranberg is a Republican in politics. That he is a firm believer in education is evinced by the fact that two of his step children are attending the business college at North Yakima, and four are in the high school in that city, Mr. Tranberg bearing the expense of their maintenance at so great a distance from home. The success he has had in building up so large a property and so excellent a home speaks volumes for his thrift, energy and business ability, while his neighbors bear testimony to his integrity and worth as a man and citizen.

GEORGE VAN NOSTERN, a farmer and stage owner of Klickitat county, resides in the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Oregon, born in Linn county, February 7, 1872. His father, David G. Van Nostern, was a native of Virginia, born in the year 1843, and was left an orphan in early life. Crossing the Plains from his native state in 1853, he settled in Linn county, Oregon, near the present city of Albany. He bought land there on which in after years the city was located, but which he had given to the family with whom he crossed the Plains. He came to Klickitat county in the fall of 1883 and took up land near the town of Cleveland, where he died January 13, 1891. His wife, whose maiden name was Melissa J. Thompson, belonged to a pioneer family of Oregon, in Linn county of which state she was born. She died in the year 1882. The subject of this review was twelve years old when his father moved to Klickitat county, to which place he followed the older Van Nostern after an interval of a few months. He grew up in the locality, helping his father on the farm until the death of the latter, and attending the public schools. He also rode the range for a number of years for Cal. Coleman and Leland McCredy. His father was in the habit of keeping horses upon the range and, following his example, George eventually secured a band of his own and started in the business in which we now find him. He was one of the bidders for the government contract for the transportation of the United States mails from Bickleton to Arlington, Oregon, and he fortunately secured the contract and now runs a stage between these towns. The mail and passengers are ferried across the Columbia to Arlington, which is on the other side of the river from Klickitat county. He has lately bid for another mail route contract.

Mr. Van Nostern was married at Cleveland, Washington, December 12, 1897, to Lulu Beck, a native of Kansas, born in Linn county, August 4, 1878. She came to Klickitat county with her parents in 1883 and settled with them on the farm adjoining the home of her husband's family, so the two children grew up together. Her father, Charles Beck, is a pioneer of the state and a merchant at Cleveland, where her mother, whose maiden name was Etta M. Johnson, also resides. Mr. and Mrs. Van Nostern have a family of four children: Lila, born November 4, 1898; Lela, born the following year on the 28th of December; Charles, born April 5, 1902; and a boy, born March 1, 1904, not named. Mr. Van Nostern has three brothers: William, Isaac and James, all residents of Cleveland, William being a farmer, Isaac a merchant and James the proprietor of a store. He also has three half-brothers: John, David and Rodell Van Nostern. Fraternally, he is connected with the Knights of Pythias, Simcoe Lodge No. 113, and politically he is a Democrat. Besides his property and stage line he has a hundred head of horses on the range. He is among the most popular of the young men of the community and enjoys the esteem of all who know him intimately.

GEORGE SCHAEFER, an up-to-date farmer and stock raiser of Klickitat county, lives with his father on a farm five miles east of the town of Bickleton. He was born at Saransk, Russia, on the 18th of July, 1880. His father, Jacob Schaefer, also a farmer by occupation, was born in the same place in 1834, and is descended from an old German family. His ancestors settled in Russia one hundred and seventy-two years ago, at the time of the German colonization, the settlers being given a grant of land at Saransk with the understanding that their sons were to be exempt from service in the Russian army for a period of a hundred years, and that at the expiration of that period every other boy only was to be demanded by the government for army service. Mr. Schaefer, the elder, came to the United States in the year 1891, bringing his children with him, the principal reason of their immigrating to this country being to evade army service, though he was also attracted by what he had heard of the possibilities for settlers in this land. He settled in Klickitat county, where he still resides with his son. His wife, whose maiden name was Lizzie Kip, was also born in Russia to German parents, and still lives at the family home with her husband and two children. George Schaefer, the subject of this sketch, attended a German school in Russia until he was eleven years old, at which time he came to this country. His father sent him to Walla Walla for a two years' course in the schools soon after settling here, but he evidently did not like the school, for he ran away and went to herding sheep. His father did not find this out until the following fall; then young George came home. He has since that time been engaged in business with his father, farming and raising stock and hogs. Part of their land was bought in 1897, but they later purchased a half section adjoining, and at present own four hundred and eighty acres together. They have built a commodious house and a large barn, and otherwise extensively improved their property. They own a number of horses and cattle and one of the best Percheron stallions in the country, also over fifty hogs. A year ago a two-legged colt was born on their place, and this freak was exhibited at the state fair held at North Yakima, where considerable money was obtained from the gate receipts. It was also placed on exhibition at Spokane, where, unfortunately, it was in some manner poisoned and died. Mr. Schaefer has it mounted, and intends to place it on exhibition at the World's Fair in St. Louis.

In the month of July, 1899, Mr. Schaefer married Anna Stuhr, a native of Nebraska, born in 1881. Her father, Henry Stuhr, died in 1891. Her mother, Katie (Stegeman) Stuhr, is the daughter of Theodore Stegeman, the pioneer sheep owner of this county. Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer have a family of three young children: Clarence, born on July 10, 1900; Theodore, born two years later, on the 5th of March; and Alvina, born October 13, 1903. Mr. Schaefer has one sister, Maggie, who lives with him, and two brothers, namely, Jacob, residing in Ritzville, and Henry, in Klickitat county. Fraternally, he is connected with the Bickleton camp of Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in politics he favors the Republican party. He is an energetic farmer and a thrifty, capable young man, speaking the English as well as the German language with facility, and withal an excellent citizen.

WILBUR C. S. NYE, proprietor of the Grand Central hotel, at Bickleton, is a native of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, born July 5, 1858. His father, a Christian minister, was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, a descendant of the ancient Nye family, one of the oldest in the Quaker state. His people have a historical society of their own. His name is Seth S. Nye, and he was a soldier in the Mexican war, but was discharged for disability. He made two attempts to re-enlist, and was rejected in both instances on account of heart trouble. He was a Methodist circuit rider for almost twenty years, and later became a minister of the Christian church. At present he lives in the city of Corydon, Indiana. His wife, whose maiden name was Kate Christley, is a native of Harrison county, Indiana, born in 1838. Her mother belonged to the Kendall family, noted for the number of steamboat and flatboat men it furnished for carrying on the Ohio river traffic, and her uncle, William Kendall, ran the blockade at Vicksburg, for General Grant, during the Civil war, taking the "Reindeer" through with supplies for the Union army. He was pilot of the vessel. Mrs. Nye was a scion of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family that lived for many years in Mercer county. She removed from the Keystone state with her husband and child in 1863, settling in Trumbull county, Ohio, for a residence of five years, then going to Harrison county, Indiana, where they bought a farm. Wilbur C. S. was about ten years of age at this time, and he grew up in the neighborhood, attending the public schools in the winters and helping with the work about the farm when not in the school room. He afterwards took a two years' course at Marengo Academy, preparing himself for the vocation of a school teacher. Graduating early in life, he taught his first term of school when only eighteen years old. He continued to teach in the state for twelve years, then moved to Cass county, Nebraska, settled in the town of Murray, and once more took up teaching for a number of years, also farming on a small scale. He continued to reside in Nebraska until the year 1901, at which time he came west to Bickleton, Washington, and engaged in the hotel business, which he still follows. Since taking the hotel he has enlarged it considerably, also has built a large livery barn near-by, the only one in the town. He has a number of excellent teams and spirited horses, and they are kept busy most of the time.

Mr. Nye was married in Indiana in the spring of 1880, to Emma Eckart, a resident of Harrison county, that state, born June 5, 1859. Her father, William Eckart was likewise born in Harrison county, in 1840, but belonged to an old pioneer North Carolina family. His grandfather, Levi Gilham, served in the War of 1812, and he was a member of the Home Guards in his native state during the Civil war. He still resides on the family place in Harrison county. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Neely, was born in Indiana in 1839, her parents being formerly of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Nye have a family of six children, namely, Virgil Lee, born April 23, 1884; Olive H., born March 26, 1886; Edna E., on the 27th of February, 1888; Kate W., Ruth and William, born November 1, 1891, January 30, 1894, and October 26, 1897, respectively. Mr. Nye has two brothers living, Austin A., in Georgetown, Indiana, and William S., with his father in Corydon, Indiana; also a half-brother, H. M. Nye, in Nebraska, and a sister, Mrs. Helen S. Keller, in Corydon. Mrs. Nye has two brothers and two sisters, namely, Charles, Lafayette, Anna and Adeline Eckart. Mr. Nye is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to a Nebraska camp, and politically, he is a Democrat. In former years he was active in all campaigns, but now he does not take much interest in politics. He formerly served six years as assessor in Nebraska. At present he devotes his whole attention to his hotel and livery business. He is a generous, genial citizen, highly esteemed as a friend and neighbor, and successful in his business enterprises.

SIDNEY G. DORRIS, publisher and editor of the Bickleton News, is a native of Oregon, born in Lafayette, Yamhill county, March 18, 1861. Felix G. Dorris, his father, was a stockman by occupation and a resident of Illinois, born in Knoxville, Knox county, that state, on the 4th of February, 1823. Some time before reaching manhood, he moved to St. Joe, Missouri, and on the 13th of June, 1845, was one of a party consisting of Daniel D. Bayley, "Old Sol" Tetherow and others to cross the Plains by ox teams to Portland, Oregon, where they arrived exactly six months after leaving home. They crossed the Columbia river to the Washington side, while traveling in bateaux from The Dalles to the Cascades, the Indians having made numerous friendly overtures, and thus induced the party to remain. The treachery of the red men was soon made apparent, however, as they pilfered everything the settlers possessed in the line of eatables. Mr. Dorris finally settled in the Chehalam valley, where the following spring he was united in marriage with Caroline Bayley, a member of the party. He died in the year 1901, a week before Christmas. Mrs. Dorris was born in Springfield, Ohio, March 2, 1827, the daughter of Daniel D. and Betsey (Munson) Bayley. She is of Scottish ancestry, and can trace her family history back to the fifteenth century. Mr. Dorris was the first settler in Oregon to introduce Texas cattle into the state. Sidney G. Dorris, of this review, started to learn the printer's trade when eleven years old, his apprenticeship being served with the Lafayette Courier. After several years' hard work on this paper, he removed to Salem, Oregon, and during the ensuing two years he was employed in the service of the Statesman. His next newspaper work was on the Oregonian, at Portland, whence he removed to Albany, on the papers of which city he wrought for the ensuing fifteen years. In 1896 he removed to The Dalles, going thence to Arlington, Oregon, for a short stay, and finally coming to Bickleton on the 1st of August, 1902, where he has since taken up his residence. The News has been a success from the start, and has done good work toward the upbuilding of the town. It also has the distinction of being the first newspaper venture launched in the eastern part of the county. Mr. Dorris has two children by a marriage, in 1885, Albert, employed on his paper, and Ione. Fraternally, Mr. Dorris is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, the A. O. U. W. and the Order of Washington. He attends the Evangelical church, and in politics is a Republican. At present he is serving as constable of the Alder Creek precinct. Besides his business property, he owns a homestead some nineteen miles southeast of Bickleton. He is an enterprising business man, held in high esteem by the people of the surrounding country.

ROBERT M. GRAHAM, a well-known stockman, residing in the town of Bickleton, is one of the very earliest pioneers of eastern Klickitat, to which he came in 1872, and one of the few remaining early settlers in the county. He was born in Holmes county, Ohio, May 18, 1845. His father, William, was also born there in 1818, and also followed farming and stock raising. He crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1852, settling in Benton county, where he took a half-section donation claim. In 1859 he moved east of the Cascades to the Des Chutes river, and for the ensuing fifteen years he followed stock raising. In 1874 he moved to Dayton, Washington, where he resided until his death, twenty years later. He furnished considerable data to the Washington Historical Society at various times during his later years. His people originally came from Scotland, and his wife, Harriet (Duncan) Graham, was likewise of Scotch descent, but by nativity a Pennsylvanian, born in 1822. She crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents in 1852, and from that time until her death, in 1891, continued to be a resident of the west. The subject of this review was one of a family of eleven children. He was between six and seven years old when he came to Oregon with his parents, and the educational advantages he was permitted to enjoy were such as the pioneer schools of that state afforded. However, it was his privilege to finish his education under the tutorship of a good instructor in The Dalles, Oregon. He taught two terms, but between the ages of twenty and twenty-three he gave his time to freighting from The Dalles to Canyon City, Oregon; then until 1872 he was in the cattle and horse raising business on the Des Chutes. Coming to the Alder creek district of Klickitat county in the year mentioned, he gained the distinction of being the second man to file on land in that section, B. D. Butler having made the first homestead entry. At that time various cattle men, including Fisk and Walker, Ben Snipes and Allen, ranged their stock over the country, unmolested, and he was told that the winters were too cold for anyone to remain, and that the uplands were of no value but for ranges; in fact it was many years before the uplands were fairly tried, and still longer before efforts to farm them proved successful. Mr. Graham brought his horses and cattle into the country and began raising stock, combining farming with this industry. He busied himself thus until 1878, when he sold his cattle, and embarked in the sheep business with his brother, John. After the formation of this partnership both the brothers enlarged their places and farmed more extensively. In 1885 our subject sold his sheep and engaged in the mercantile business at Bickleton, which town had been started in 1879 by C. N. Bickle. Mr. Graham bought out a Mr. Chamberlain, who had been in the mercantile business at Bickleton two years. April 29, 1887, his establishment was burned, and he did not rebuild, choosing rather to return to farming. He and his brother, John, had the first threshing machine ever owned in eastern Klickitat county, and the second that ever threshed there. This was in 1883, previous to his entering the merchandise business. After taking up farming again, Mr. Graham gave special attention to the rearing of horses, though he kept some cattle. He continued to farm until a few months ago, but in 1902, he took a mail contract to carry the mails between Mabton and Bickleton for four years, and recently he has been giving much attention to the operation of a stage line between the two points.

Mr. Graham was married on May 30, 1875, to Almeda Lancaster, and to this union eight children have been born, seven now living, namely: Mrs. Edith May Burnwell, born in November, 1876, now living at North Yakima; Robert M., in April, 1878, at Toppenish; William L., in January, 1881, and Roy S., born in May, 1883, both at Bickleton; Ruth Mabel, Greta S. and Edna Marie, born on June 27, 1892; April 3, 1897, and January 6, 1900, respectively. Mr. Graham's brothers and sisters are: John D., at Nez Perce, Idaho; Thomas B., at Dayton, Washington; Mrs. Mary Bailey, at Cleveland; and Mrs. Marie L. South, at Prosser, Washington. Mr. Graham belongs to the Brotherhood of American Yeomen and he is at present correspondent and deputy organizer of this fraternity. He attends the Methodist church. During the eighties, he served as county commissioner for a term of four years, and after his term of office as a commissioner, he was nominated by the Republican party for the state senate, but was defeated in the election, his opponent getting a majority of only thirty-two votes. For six years he served as justice of the peace, and so satisfactory was his discharge of the duties of this office, that pressure was brought to bear upon him to accept it for a longer period, but he declined. He was census enumerator in 1890. Many times he has been called to serve as central committeeman of his precinct, and in numerous other ways his party has honored him and expressed its confidence in his abilities. Indeed, he stands well among all classes in the county. Mr. Graham has devoted considerable attention to an investigation of local history, and to him the author of the historical part of this volume acknowledges indebtedness for much valuable information and assistance.

HENRY A. HUSSEY, proprietor of the billiard hall in the town of Bickleton, was born in Bradford, Maine, March 15, 1838. His father, Robert Hussey, was a native of Maine, and by occupation a farmer. He belonged to an ancient American family, and his father, grandfather of Henry A., was in the War of 1812. Robert Hussey was born in the year 1815, and died in his native state in 1880. The mother of our subject, Susan (Clark) Hussey, was born in Lebanon, a city in the Green Mountain state, and died in August, 1900. Had she lived three months longer she would have reached her eighty-sixth year. Her grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution. The subject of this review grew to manhood in his native state, at the age of eighteen starting out in life for himself as an operative in a cotton mill at Lowell, Massachusetts, where he remained until the spring of 1861. When the war broke out he at once volunteered, becoming a member of Company D, Twenty-second Maine volunteers. He served his year's time, then re-enlisted for a term of three years in Company A, Veteran Reserve Corps, under Captain Hill. This time he did not see the field of operations, having been detained in Washington, District of Columbia, as messenger for the President. At the close of the war he returned to Maine, whence after two years he came west to Boone county, Iowa, going thence, after a year's residence, to Kansas, various parts of which state were visited by him. He then moved to the Indian Territory and passed four years in Stringtown. Going next to Colorado, he located at Canyon City, where for some time he was engaged in freighting and running a grocery store. In 1883 he came to the Bickleton country, took land two miles south of the town, and engaged in farming. It was a wild country at that time, with little grain growing and hardly any fences, the stockmen being in almost absolute control of everything. He continued farming until the year 1901, then sold his place and moved into the town, where he has since lived. In 1902 he opened the billiard hall in which we now find him.

Mr. Hussey was married April 30, 1859, at Lowell, Massachusetts, to Josephine L. Gordon, who was born in that city in 1834. Her father, Samuel F. Gordon, a merchant tailor, was a native of New Hampshire, where his family settled in 1860, his ancestors coming from Scotland originally. Her mother, Dorothy G. (Beede) Gordon, was also born in New Hampshire of English parents, and died in the year 1853 at the age of seventy-six. Mrs. Hussey's two brothers, George and Henry Gordon, were both soldiers in the Civil war. She and her husband have had seven children, two of whom are living, namely: Mrs. Florence E. McClain, residing at Bickleton, and Arthur S., a sheep man at Mabton. Mr. Hussey is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and since 1902 has drawn a pension from the government. In politics, he is a Republican. Besides his business, he owns some town property and two residences. He is a respected member of the community.

CHARLES W. McCLAIN, partner in the firm of Miller, McClain & Company, blacksmiths, Bickleton, Washington, is a native of Oregon, born near the historic town of Jacksonville, October 6, 1855. William J. McClain, his father, was of Scotch descent and a native of Kentucky, born in 1822. He came of a pioneer family of the Blue Grass state. For a time after leaving Kentucky he lived in Iowa, then crossed the Plains by ox team in 1852 to Oregon, taking up a donation claim on Little Butte creek, near Jacksonville. As a volunteer, he served under Major Lupton in the Indian wars of 1855-56. He came to Klickitat county about 1872, and died at Columbus in 1898. His wife, Martha A. (Tuttle) McClain, the mother of Charles W., was born in North Carolina in 1827, and came of English and German parentage. She crossed the Plains in 1852 with her husband and two children, and is still living at Columbus. Charles W. McClain was educated in the common schools of Oregon and worked with his father until 1872, afterward traveling extensively throughout the states of Oregon, California and Idaho. He learned his trade in Boise, Idaho, and owned the second shop erected in Spokane, establishing it in 1879. Two years of his life were spent in railroad service on the Southern Pacific in Texas and the Mexican Central. In 1886 he established a shop at Cleveland, Washington, and later one in North Yakima, the latter of which he operated six years with good success. He finally sold the North Yakima shop and invested the proceeds in a ranch situated near Roseburg, Oregon. However, in 1894, he returned to North Yakima, where he labored at his trade until 1899, then spent two years in Seattle, and in 1901, with Charles Flower, opened a shop at Bickleton. This they sold in November, 1903, to Wommack & Richardson, since which time Mr. McClain and George Miller organized the present firm. Mr. McClain was married January 4, 1887, to Mrs. Florence E. (Hussey) Miller, the ceremony being performed at Goldendale. She is a native of Maine, born in 1860, and the daughter of Henry A. and Josephine L. (Gordon) Hussey, brief biographical mention of whom is incorporated in this work. Mr. and Mrs. McClain have two children: Llewellyn, and an adopted daughter, Ethel J. Mr. McClain is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen; politically, he is a Republican, and he has served as constable at Goldendale. He bears the reputation of being an industrious, capable workman and a good citizen.

GEORGE MILLER, a blacksmith residing in the town of Bickleton, in Klickitat county, and a partner in the smithing firm of Miller, McClain & Company, was born in Gibson county, Indiana, November 6, 1852. Alcana Miller, his father, is a German, and a pioneer of Indiana, born in Gibson county, in the year 1827. He was a soldier in the Civil war, serving with the Indiana volunteers. In February, 1878, he moved westward to Klickitat county and took up his present farm north of Bickleton, where he still resides. Eliza (Kontz) Miller, mother of our subject, who was born in Knox county, Indiana, to English parents, is still living in their Klickitat home. George Miller, of this review, remained in his native state until he reached the age of eighteen, attending the public schools and also working on his father's farm. In 1870, he moved to Greenwood county, Kansas, where he remained for a space of seven years, following farming and stock raising, returning then to Indiana, and again engaging in farming. He followed this business uninterruptedly until 1878. He then came to Klickitat county and took some railroad land joining the town of Bickleton on the north, and he has since devoted himself to the development of this farm and to cattle and grain raising principally. In 1892, he homesteaded a place near Mabton, which he still owns. When he came to this locality the country was almost given over to coyotes, Indians and the stockmen, they ranging their cattle promiscuously over the entire country, there being no fences at that time to prevent the practice, and only about seven or eight settlers in the section surrounding what is now the town of Bickleton.

Mr. Miller married before coming west, the marriage being solemnized in the state of Illinois, in August, 1875, and the lady being Susanna Jones, a native of Knox county, Indiana, born in 1857. Her father, Thomas Jones, a native of the same state, was a farmer by occupation, and had the honor to be a Civil war veteran, having served three years and been with General Sherman on his famous march to the sea. He passed away in 1902. Her mother, Sally, was also born in Indiana; she died in 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have four children: Ezra, a stockman on the Yakima river; Ira, Byron and Vesta, at home. Mr. Miller's sister, Rachel, resides in Kansas, while another sister, Mrs. Sarah Bemis, lives near the Cowlitz river, in Washington. His brother, Clark Miller, lives at Sunnyside. Mr. Miller was school director at Bickleton for a period of six years, and has also held the same office at Mabton. He is independent in political matters. His present blacksmith shop was opened by him alone in 1900, but before the year was passed Mr. McClain bought in with him, forming the present firm. They are now putting in a machine shop, all the machinery being ordered and part of it already on the ground. Mr. Miller, besides his half interest in the business, owns the building, and three hundred and sixty acres of land; also a number of cattle. He is an industrious, hard working man, popular with his fellow citizens and respected by all for his industry and many manly virtues.

MARK CRIDER, a prosperous sheep man of Klickitat county, lives on his ranch five and a half miles east and four and a half miles south of the town of Bickleton. He was born in Knox county, Ohio, at the city of Mt. Vernon, September 13, 1853. His father, Robert, was a blacksmith by trade, and also a farmer. He was born in Pennsylvania, in 1828, and died in 1886. He served in the Mexican war, under Generals Scott and Taylor, and was one of the soldiers who captured the City of Mexico. His wife, Lavina (Townsend) Crider, a native of Malone, New York, died when our subject was very young. Her father was in the War of 1812. The man whose name forms the caption of this review started out in life for himself at the age of thirteen, going to Illinois and working on a farm near Rochelle. He then visited Kansas and Texas, and finally moved to Colorado, where he worked in the Bassick mine, and later in the Ouray mine at San Juan. Leaving Colorado in 1888, he came to Klickitat county and took a homestead, also bought a section of railroad land. He devoted his energies to agriculture, principally, until 1903, when he engaged in the sheep business also. His holdings include eight hundred acres of land, all under cultivation, and about twelve hundred sheep. Recently he has given some attention to locating homesteaders.

In 1878, at Lincoln, Nebraska, Mr. Crider married Lizzie Smith, a native of Iowa. Her father, M. M. Smith, came to Klickitat county in the year 1886, and there engaged in the dual occupation of farming and preaching for the Methodist church. He passed away in 1902, and his wife, Sirilda (Ralston) Smith, a native of Iowa, died two years previous. Mr. and Mrs. Crider are parents of seven sons, namely: William, Walter, Charles, Lloyd, Carl, Jewell and Calvin, all of whom live with their parents. Mr. Crider has two older brothers, Joseph and William, and three sisters, Hattie, Roxina and Sarah, all living in the east. Mr. Crider has served as road overseer in the Bickleton district for several terms, and at present is an active member of the school board of district No. 60. In politics, he favors the Republican party. He is a public-spirited, liberal man, fully awake to the best interests of his community; in business, he is energetic and successful, and in all the relations of life he so deems himself as to merit the esteem and respect of those with whom he is associated.

GEORGE W. JORDAN, a carpenter residing in the town of Bickleton, was born in Shasta county, California, in the year 1859. His father, John S. Jordan, was a minister of the Methodist church, and also a farmer, born in the year 1818, in the state of Virginia. He crossed the Plains to California during the first gold excitement there in 1849, and mined for three or four years in various parts of Placer county, then returned east and married, coming west again in 1859. After spending the years from 1859 to 1871 in California, he settled in Lane county, Oregon, where he engaged in farming. He also built the first sawmill in the town of Wendling. Coming to Klickitkat county in 1886, he took up a homestead near Bickleton and followed farming there until his death, in 1903. He was of German-Irish descent, as was also his wife, Mary M. (Worley) Jordan, who was born in Iowa in 1836 and crossed the Plains with her husband in 1859, and now lives at Bickleton. Mr. Jordan, of this review, attended school in California and Oregon, also learned the business of sawyer. In 1886 he removed to Moscow, Idaho, where he worked in a sawmill, going then to Baker City, Oregon, where for two years he rode the ranges. He next came to Klickitkat county, and worked a year for Bickle & Flower, then going to the Willamette valley, Oregon. There he again went to work in a mill, also hunting for the logging camp and supplying the camp and mill hands with game. At this he remained for a space of two years. The three years from 1889 were spent in Eugene, Oregon, as head sawyer in the Upper Willamette Lumber Company's mills, then he conducted a butcher shop in Eugene for the ensuing five years, after which he removed to Seattle and put in another year at the same business. Returning thereupon to Eugene, he once more accepted employment in the mill, remaining until 1897, when he came to Bickleton and engaged in carpenter work, an occupation he still follows. He also leased some school land. In June, 1889, at Creswell, Lane county, Oregon, Mr. Jordan married Emma F. Reed, a native of that place, and he and Mrs. Jordan are parents of three children: Vivian D., Lena L. and Gladys Thelma. Fraternally, Mr. Jordan is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically, he is a Republican. He has held the office of justice of the peace since coming to this locality. He attends to his business closely, which he thoroughly understands, and is making a success of his work, at the same time winning the esteem of his fellow citizens, not alone by his industry and thrift but by his integrity of character and uniform square dealing.

GEORGE H. ELLIS, a Klickitkat county farmer and stockman, resides on his ranch, six miles south of the town of Bickleton. He was born in Jefferson county, Iowa, May 10, 1861, the son of Enos and Sitnah A. (Hiatt) Ellis. His father, who was likewise a farmer and stockman, was a native of Tennessee, born in 1820. He early removed to Iowa, whence he crossed the Plains to California and Oregon, first in 1852, returning, however, after a short stay. Ten years later he again came west, by team as before, and this time he settled in Linn county, Oregon. He resided there and in Lake county, California, for eighteen years, coming, at the end of that period, to Klickitkat county in the fall of 1880. He took up land six miles south of Bickleton, and there farmed and raised stock until his death, which occurred July 21, 1900. He was of German descent, but his family were old settlers and pioneers of the state of Tennessee. He had two brothers who served in the Civil war. Our subject's mother was of Irish parentage, though she was herself born in Iowa, in March, 1835. She also had two brothers who served during the War for the Union. Her death occurred when she was fifty-three years old. When only a year old the subject of this article accompanied his parents to Oregon, this being on his father's second trip. He received his education in the schools of Lake county, California, and during his minority worked with his father on the farm, looking after his sheep and also riding the range. When the time came for him to take up independently the struggle of life, he likewise engaged in the sheep business, but after giving the greater part of six years to this industry, he engaged in the cattle business, as a partner of his father. He had taken a claim soon after coming to the county, but had later sold it and purchased other land. A few years before his father's death he bought out the interest of the old gentleman, and he has ever since followed the stock business alone.

On the 18th of November, 1885, in Klickitkat county, Mr. Ellis married Viola Wristen, who was born in Kansas but brought up in the state of California, where she received her education and graduated. Her father, Milton W. Wristen, a farmer by occupation settled in Klickitkat county in 1883. He came originally from Iowa. He and her mother, Jane (Harris) Wristen, now live in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have six children: Lellia, aged seventeen; Ina, George, aged thirteen; Jane, aged eleven; Carl, aged nine; and Juanita, aged seven. Mr. Ellis has one brother, William H., living at Mission, in Chelan county, Washington, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Cloninger, also a resident of Mission. Fraternally, Mr. Ellis is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen, and politically, he is a Republican, sufficiently active to attend caucuses and conventions. The owner of a section of land, he is cultivating successfully three hundred acres, raising wheat and hay, and also stock of various kinds. Like all other industrious men of good judgment, he is finding Klickitat county an excellent place in which to acquire a competence, and he is well pleased with his own prospects and those of the section in which his lot has been cast.

CONRAD G. WATTENBARGER, a Klickitat county stockman and rancher, living in the town of Bickleton, was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, in the year 1849. Adam Wattenbarger, his father, who was also a stockman and farmer, was a native of the state of Tennessee, whence, at an early age, he removed to Missouri. He came across the Plains to California in 1862, and settled in Yolo county, buying some land. Two years later he sold out and went to Mendocino county, where he spent two years, going thence to Lake county, in which was his home for a period of fourteen years. He owned considerable property in the east and was quite well off, but the war hurt him in a financial way, destroying the many improvements which he had at great pains placed on his land. Coming to Klickitat county in 1880, he lived near Bickleton until February 23, 1887, when he passed away, having reached the age of sixty-eight. He was of German descent, but his forefathers had lived in Pennsylvania for several generations. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Smith, was a native of Tennessee, born in the same town that her husband was brought up in. She died February 27, 1891, having survived her husband only four years. Conrad G. Wattenbarger was thirteen years old when he came to California with his parents, and in the common schools of that state he was educated. He early exhibited a mechanical bent, also a liking for good horses, the latter a Southern trait. He was at home until reaching man's estate, but before he left the parental roof he had learned the blacksmith's and the carpenter's trade, acquiring the skill very easily on account of his great natural ability in mechanical lines. Upon attaining his majority, he engaged in freighting, also in buying and selling stock to the near-by mines; and in this manner he made considerable money. On coming to Klickitat county in 1880, he took up land just north of town—part of the tract as a timber and the rest as a pre-emption claim. He had brought a band of horses into the county with him, and he continued to range these and raise more, doing well in this line, also, until the panic of 1893 came. He continued farming until 1900, when he moved into town and built a residence, allowing his boys to have charge of the farm.

In 1874, while still in California, Mr. Wattenbarger married Mary Brophy, who was born at Snika Humboldt, in 1854, while her parents were crossing the Plains. Her father, Thomas Brophy, who was a stockman and dairyman in the Golden state, lost heavily in a big flood there, his cattle being all drowned. He died many years ago. His wife, Frances (Rouse) Brophy, a native of Tennessee, of German parentage, still lives in California. Mr. and Mrs. Wattenbarger have four children living: Mrs. Alice Howsington, residing near Bickleton; Adam and Grover, living in Yakima county, and Mrs. Amanda Campbell, living with them. They had six other children until 1900, when they all, unfortunately, succumbed to that dread disease, diphtheria, and their loss is still very deeply mourned by their parents. Their names were: Cyrus, Thomas, Buel, Lulu, Sylvia and May. Mr. Wattenbarger has a number of brothers and sisters still living, namely: Jacob, at Butter Creek, Oregon; Samuel, at Fossil, Oregon; Frederick, in Lake county, California; Mrs. Mary Bailey and Mrs. Sarah Eckle, in California; and Thomas, in Mendocino county, in the same state. Another sister, Mrs. Lizzie Bromley, is deceased. In politics, Mr. Wattenbarger is a Democrat, but while he takes an intelligent interest in public affairs, he always refuses public office. Besides his ranch, he owns some town property. He is an honest, upright man, highly esteemed by all who know him.

JAMES C. NELSON, a progressive farmer and stock raiser of Klickitat county and a stockholder in the Bank of Bickleton, lives on a 320-acre farm about a mile and a half northwest of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Denmark, born July 19, 1853. His father, Nels P. Christisen, a Danish farmer, was born in 1800, and died at the age of seventy-five. His mother, whose maiden name was Johanna Jensen, was also a native of Denmark, and died the year after his father's death. James C. Nelson grew to man's estate in his native land, there receiving his education and working with his father on the farm. When eighteen years old, he served in the army of his country for six months. He immigrated to this country in the year 1878, going to San Francisco, California, thence to Monterey county, in the same state, and working there for a space of three years. The following five years were spent in Lassen county, at various occupations, then Mr. Nelson removed to Reno, Nevada, in which he lived for an additional three years. Coming to Klickitat county in 1889, he bought part of his present land from the railroad and he has since farmed the land continuously, raising grain and hay, and also engaging in the cattle business. At present he gives special attention to the Shorthorn breeds. Upon his place is a good, modern dwelling, a fine orchard of apple, pear, plum, cherry and apricot trees, and other improvements denoting thrift and energy.

Mr. Nelson has been twice married, his first wife being Annie Christisen, whom he married in 1892, and who died on the 8th of December, 1898, leaving two children, Tena and Dora. His second marriage took place July 9, 1900, the lady being Anna Boyson, a native of Denmark, who came to this country at an early age. By this marriage, Mr. Nelson also has two children: Ernest W., born February 24, 1901, and Elizabeth M., April 28, 1903. Mrs. Nelson's father, Christensen Boyson, is a business man in her native country, where Mr. Nelson has two sisters, Sine and Stine. Fraternally, our subject is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to him belongs the distinction of being past grand master of Bickleton lodge No. 111. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and belongs to the Lutheran church, but there being no congregation of his denomination in the neighborhood, he lends his support to other churches. In politics, he is an active Republican, frequently attending caucuses and convention. He is greatly interested in furthering the educational facilities of the locality, and is in all respects public-spirited, meriting the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens.

ISAIAH CAMPBELL is a Klickitat county ranchman living two miles north and two east of Bickleton on a farm of four hundred and eighty acres of fertile land. He is a native of the Quaker state, born in Butler county in 1848. His father, James Campbell, was also a farmer and a native of Pennsylvania, where he spent most of his lifetime and where he died in 1893. He was of Scotch descent. The grandfather of our subject, Joseph Campbell, was with Commodore Oliver H. Perry, during the maneuvers on Lake Erie, and his great-grandfather was one of the soldiers who served with General Washington during the desolate winter of 1777 at Valley Forge. His mother, Elizabeth (Lykins) Campbell, was of German descent, but was brought up and married in the state of Pennsylvania, and died there when Isaiah was a boy. Our subject acquired his education in the common schools of the Keystone state, and until he reached the age of eighteen, remained at home, assisting his father on the farm. In 1867 he went to Missouri, where for the ensuing fourteen and a half years he followed farming continuously. In the spring of 1882 he moved to California, whence a little over a year later he came to Klickitat county. Upon arrival he immediately took up a homestead and a timber culture claim, and to cultivation and improvement of this land he has devoted his time and energies ever since. He now owns four hundred and eighty acres, most of it in excellent cultivation. A successful devotee of diversified farming, he not only raises the cereals but also several kinds of live stock, especially fine Berkshire hogs, of which he has ninety head at present.

In Missouri, on the 25th of December, 1873, Mr. Campbell married Mary A. Hill, whose father, Ambrose B. Hill, a Virginian, was a millwright and farmer. When a young boy, he had gone to Missouri, and there married, bringing up a family of thirteen children. He died in 1892. His wife, Elizabeth (Williams) Hill, mother of Mrs. Campbell, was a native of Virginia and a daughter of one of the early pioneers of Missouri. She died in the latter state. Mrs. Campbell was born in Missouri in 1847 and was reared and educated there. She and Mr. Campbell are parents of four children, namely: Alexander C., born in Missouri September 22, 1874, living in Yakima county; Mrs. Janella V. Collins, now on her homestead adjoining her father's farm; Mrs. Elizabeth E. Smith, born February 12, 1880, residing in the Glade, Yakima county, and Jessie D., born in Washington September 2, 1886, living with her parents. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Missionary Baptist church. A man of strict integrity, he enjoys a very enviable standing in his community, the fullest confidence of all his neighbors being his.

WALTER BAKER, proprietor of a harness store at Bickleton, was born in Davisville, Yolo county, California, August 24, 1876. His father, John Baker, is a tinsmith by trade, but also follows the occupation of a farmer. He was born in England, in 1847, and when eight years old immigrated to the United States, settling in New York. His father, grandfather of our subject, came to this country with him, and died two years after his arrival. John Baker grew up in the east and moved to Colorado in 1873, going thence two years later to California. He came overland to Klickitat county in 1879, and settled on his present place, which he has improved extensively, giving his attention to the related pursuits of farming and stock raising. He was the first man to experiment in fruit raising in this locality, and soon had a large orchard. It is worthy of mention that some of the peach trees that he set out over twenty years ago are still alive. His wife, Mary (Burner) Baker, is of the old Holland Dutch stock that settled in New York in the early days, and she is a native of the Empire state, born in 1850. Her paternal grandfather fought in the War of 1812 and lost his life in that struggle. Walter Baker came to Klickitat county with his parents when three years of age, and attended the local public schools, going later to the Portland Academy, at Portland, Oregon, where he took a two years' course, working for his tuition before and after school hours. At the time of the first gold excitement in Alaska

he went there and for a while he freighted over the White Pass, from Skagway to Lake Bennett, at the same time prospecting some. Returning to Bickleton, after some experiences that taught him the delusions of the Alaskan country, he soon went thence to Portland and started to learn the blacksmith's trade, but gave it up and returned home once more. Purchasing some timber land, he then engaged in cutting wood. During this stay at home he tried his hand at making a set of harness for his farm and so well did he succeed that he resolved to learn the harness maker's trade. Again he went to Portland, this time to serve a three years' apprenticeship with the firm of George Lawrence & Company, wholesale harness and saddle makers. Having thoroughly learned the trade, he returned to Bickleton, bought and enlarged a harness shop, replenished the stock and began operations. This was in February, 1903. He is still in the harness business and meeting with a success which justifies abundantly his choice of a handicraft. He is a first-class workman, the best the town ever had, and carries a stock which is a credit to so small a town.

At Portland, November 23, 1899, Mr. Baker married Matilda Kanne, a native of Waterville, Minnesota. She came to Oregon with her father, August Kanne, and mother, Wilhelmina (Rose-nan) Kanne, in 1888. Her father, a native of Germany, born in 1844, came to this country when thirteen years old, and now lives at Portland, as does also her mother, who is likewise of German birth. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have one daughter, Margaret, born March 20, 1902. Mr. Baker has one brother, Ralph E., living with his father, and a married sister, Mrs. Ella Mitty, also a resident of Bickleton. Mr. Baker is a member of the Presbyterian church and belongs to the Woodmen of the World. In politics, he is a Prohibitionist.

ONNA J. WOMMACK, of the firm of Wommack & Richardson, blacksmiths, Bickleton, was born in Greene county, Illinois, April 26, 1875. His father is William Streetman Wommack, a farmer and merchant, and a native of Illinois. He removed to Klickitat county in 1883, settled near Bickleton and engaged in farming and stock raising. At present he is residing at Mabton. During the Civil war he served three years with the Illinois volunteers. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Matilda Renner, was of German parentage, but a native of Illinois. She died in 1899 at the age of sixty-seven. Mr. Wommack, of this review, came west with his parents when eight years old, and grew up in the country, working with his father and attending the public schools of the state when possible. At the age of eighteen he started out to make his own living, and for some time he was employed as a sheep shearer, and in general work. In due time he engaged in farming, at which he continued for several years. During this period he had on some land in Yakima county, just over the line from Bickleton, and to the improvement and cultivation of this property he has given much attention since. He learned the trade of a blacksmith in the shop of McClain & Flower, and in the fall of 1903, he, with his present partner, bought out this firm, and began building up their present extensive blacksmithing business.

On the 22d of October, 1899, in Yakima county, Mr. Wommack married Lucy M. Miller, a native of Switzerland, who came to this country with her parents in 1891. Her father, Christian, a farmer by occupation, and her mother, Matilda, are still living. Mr. Wommack has brothers and sisters as follows: Cyrus O., living at Mabton; Mrs. Tillie Smith, living in Klickitat county; William, a Yakima county farmer, and Mrs. Hattie B. Shattuck, a resident of the Glade district of Yakima county. Mr. and Mrs. Wommack have two children: Virgie, born July 17, 1900, and Ethel, March 18, 1902. Fraternally, Mr. Wommack is affiliated with Bickleton Camp No. 6,249, Modern Woodmen of America, and Simcoe Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican. Besides his shop, with house and lots in town, he owns a three hundred and twenty acre ranch in the Glade district of Yakima county.

JAMES C. RICHARDSON, a partner in the blacksmithing business of Wommack & Richardson, a firm engaged in business at Bickleton, was born May 27, 1872, on his father's ranch, about four miles south and one mile east of the city of Goldendale, Washington. His father, Jesse H. Richardson, a farmer and stockman, was born in Ohio, in 1829, his parents being pioneers of that state and also of the state of Illinois, to which they later removed. He crossed the Plains in 1871, settling near the location of the present city of Goldendale, and taking up land in that locality. At that time the district was nothing but a wild stock country and the Indians were quite troublesome; in fact, he had several skirmishes with them during the first years of his residence there. He has since continued to farm and raise stock, and now lives about a mile from the city. Lydia J. (Groves) Richardson, mother of our subject, was also a native of Ohio, born in 1836. She crossed the Plains with her husband, with whom she still lives. James C., of this review, was born on the claim his father first took up, and worked on the farm while young, at the same time attending school at Goldendale. After leaving school he rode the range for several years and then took up the barber's trade for a period of two years, but not finding this employment congenial, he engaged in driving stage from Bickleton to Arlington. After a year at this, he decided to learn the blacksmith's trade and accordingly, in 1895, entered the shop of James C. Sigler, at Bickleton. After spending eighteen months with him, he went to Goldendale, and put in four years there at his trade, also working a year at North Yakima. He returned to Bickleton in 1901, and resumed work at his trade there in 1903, buying in with Mr. Wommack and forming the present firm of Wommack & Richardson. This firm is the successor of McClain & Flower.

Mr. Richardson was united in marriage with Maud Watson at Goldendale, February 28, 1897. She is a native of California, born in 1878, the daughter of Robert Watson, one of the early California settlers, now a North Yakima farmer. He is still living, as is also her mother, whose maiden name was Ferguson. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson have one child, Lavern, born May 27, 1903. Mr. Richardson has a number of brothers and sisters living: Jacob, a government surveyor, living near Goldendale; Mrs. Katie Lacey, also living near Goldendale; Jesse and Lyman, both residents of Klickitat county, the latter being a blacksmith at Goldendale; David, a Bickleton farmer; Lewis, a blacksmith at The Dalles, Oregon; Sarah Pearl, living at home. Mr. Richardson is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics, he is a Republican and he takes an active interest in all matters of public concern. A young man of industry and intelligence, he certainly has a bright and promising future.

HENRY GOLAY, a farmer and stockman, living half a mile south of Blue Light postoffice, is a native of Switzerland, born in 1862. His father, Henry Golay, a Swiss watchmaker, passed most of his life in his native land in the pursuit of his trade, and died there in 1901. His mother, Clara Golay, who was also of Swiss birth, died when Henry was two years old. Our subject was educated in the common schools of his native land and in the college of Brassus. Upon completing his education, he started to learn watchmaking, but he did not serve out a full apprenticeship, though he remained at the trade three years. April 2, 1884, he left for the United States, and the same spring he reached Washington territory and took up a pre-emption and a timber culture claim in Yakima county. This land was his home for a number of years, but he eventually sold his improvements to Charles Berney, and bought a place south of T. Beckner's farm. Two years were spent on this place in the business of stock raising, then two years on the Naches, above North Yakima, after which Mr.

Golay moved around considerably, spending a summer in Walla Walla and short periods in the Palouse country, Weston, Oregon and the Nez Perce country in Idaho. Returning to Klickitat county in 1893, he took a homestead claim, and upon it he lived until the spring of 1903, when he purchased his present place, consisting of three hundred and twenty acres, most of which is in an excellent state of cultivation. A believer in diversified farming, he keeps stock of various kinds, and divides his attention between that and agriculture proper. Mr. Golay has two married sisters, Mrs. Julia Droz, in her native land, and Mrs. Mary Crook, in London, England; two brothers, Jules and Paul, both railroad engineers in Switzerland, and two unmarried sisters, Frances and Emma, at the family home in the northern part of Switzerland. In politics, Mr. Golay is a Republican, actively interested in local affairs. An agreeable, approachable gentleman, he makes friends of all who become acquainted with him, while his integrity and square dealing have won him the confidence and esteem of his neighbors and associates.

JULES MARTINET, a farmer at Blue Light postoffice in Klickitat county, was born in Switzerland on the 22nd of March, 1861, the son of Jules and Julie (Addor) Martinet. His father is a native of Switzerland, where he still lives. His mother, born and married in Switzerland, was the mother of nine children; she passed away in her forty-fourth year. Mr. Martinet received his education in the common schools of his native country, and remained with his parents until he reached the age of seventeen, then took up the trade of a blacksmith and followed it for one year. For the next six years, he followed stage driving as a means of gaining a livelihood. In the spring of 1885, he emigrated to this country, settled in Klickitat county and took up a pre-emption claim, upon which he lived for six months; then he filed on a homestead, and upon it the next seven years were spent, his time during this period being given to placing his land under cultivation and to raising stock on the ranges. In 1893, he bought a place a mile southeast of Blue Light, upon which in 1903 he seeded three hundred and fifty acres of wheat, obtaining a good crop. His farm contains one of the best springs in the county, affording him an unlimited supply of excellent water.

Mr. Martinet was married in Walla Walla in the early part of 1898, the lady being Miss Fannie Desponds. Her father, Frank Desponds, was of Swiss parentage and a farmer; he died in May, 1901. Her mother, Sophie (Berger) Desponds was also of Swiss extraction; she died when Mrs. Martinet was a small child. Mrs. Martinet was brought up in Switzerland, and educated in the common schools of that country, coming to America and settling in Walla Walla in February, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Martinet have had three children: Alice, born October 31, 1898; Mary, on the 21st of December, 1901, and Albert June 14, 1902. The two last mentioned died in infancy. Mr. Martinet is a member of the Church of Switzerland, and in politics he adheres to the principles of the Republican party. He has always taken an active interest in educational matters and has filled the office of school director in his home district for one term. He is a respected member of the community, popular with all classes.

FRANCIS W. SANDERS, one of the prosperous farmers of Klickitat county, lives a mile southeast of Blue Light postoffice, and seven miles east of Bickleton, on a farm of three hundred and twenty acres of tillable land. He is a native of Ohio, born December 14, 1860. His father, Joseph Sanders, a shoemaker and farmer, was brought up and married in England, came to this country in 1854, and settled in New York, where he remained eighteen months. He then removed to Ohio, and from there to Illinois, spending two years in the latter state, then going to Minnesota in the fall of 1857. He was one of the pioneers of that state, and for over twenty-five years made his home there. He died in 1901 in Cleveland, Washington, to which town he had moved from Minnesota in the fall of 1884. His wife, Ellen (Lymer) Sanders, mother of our subject, was also born in England. She died at Cleveland in 1891, after having become the mother of five children. The subject of this review received his early education in the schools of Illinois and Lyon county, Minnesota. Starting at the age of thirteen, he served a seven years' apprenticeship in the brick layer's trade, spending the winter months of this period with his father, assisting him with the work on the farm. Coming to Washington at the age of twenty-three, he soon after filed on a homestead in Klickitat county. This was his home for the ensuing five years, and farming and stock raising were his principal business, although he was absent from his place quite frequently brick laying in Goldendale, Portland, Heppner, Hillsboro and other places. In 1890 he sold his homestead, moved to Cleveland, purchased a farm there, and again engaged in agriculture and stock raising. He also bought and operated a wood saw. In February, 1899, after a residence of nine years at Cleveland, he moved to his present location near Blue Light. He has been running a threshing machine in this district for a number of years.

In Minnesota, in 1880, Mr. Sanders married Annie McCormick, daughter of John and Margaret (Comer) McCormick. Her father, a farmer by occupation, was raised in Ireland, but came to this country in 1835, settling at Boston, Massachusetts. Five years later he moved to Wisconsin, and he died in Dakota in 1897. His wife, the mother of Mrs. Sanders, was born in Canada in 1824. She is still living, a resident of Marshall, Minnesota. Mrs. Sanders is a native of Wisconsin, born in 1861, and educated in the schools of her native state and of Minnesota. She and Mr. Sanders are parents of six children, namely: Mrs. Ellen Cunningham, born in Minnesota, February 6, 1881; George, December 6, 1884; Maggie, October 18, 1892; John, August 28, 1893; Bessie, January 28, 1895, and Francis, June 6, 1897, all at home except the first. Mr. Sanders is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Yoemen; in religion he is a strict Catholic, and in politics, an active Republican. He was deputy treasurer of Klickitat county for two years under Charles Morris, and deputy collector of delinquent taxes for another two years' term, serving under A. C. Chatman. He also served as a deputy under Sheriff Stimpson. He has been a member of the school board for the last twelve years, and for six years was a constable in his district. He has two hundred and eighty acres of his farm under cultivation. A man of energy, public spirit and strict integrity, he holds a high place in the esteem and confidence of the community in which he lives.

ALFRED BYZE, a resident of Klickitat county for the past twenty years, is a well-known citizen living near Blue Light postoffice and following the vocation of a farmer. He was born in Illinois, March 18, 1857, the only son of John and Jeanette (Teripod) Byze, his parents both being of Swiss descent. He has one sister, Mrs. Alphonce Beguelin. In the early forties the family immigrated to this country and settled in the northern part of Illinois, where for a number of years they devoted themselves to agricultural pursuits. Unfortunately, when our subject was an infant, his mother was left to fight the battle of life alone. She and her child took up their abode with a near-by neighbor, John Charles, who adopted the boy and gave him a home, allowing him the advantages of the village school. On attaining his majority, he left his mother and adopted father and journeyed to Texas, where he rented a farm and for the space of a year devoted his time principally to raising corn and cotton. In the fall of 1878, he returned for a visit with his people in Illinois, and the following summer he started west, finally halting in Oregon. That same fall, however, he moved northward to Walla Walla, Washington, in the vicinity of which town he was engaged in various lines of business until 1884. During this time he was employed by Dr. Blalock and others. Early in January, 1884, he came first to Klickitat county and immediately filed on a homestead and timber culture claim, doing the necessary preliminary work for making it his home. Returning then to Walla Walla, he spent the better part of the next four years, making frequent trips to his homestead, however, and doing as much improvement work as he could. In 1880, he established his residence permanently on his Klickitat homestead, where he has ever since resided, placing over two hundred acres of land under cultivation, making extensive improvements, setting out an orchard, etc. In politics, Mr. Byze has always been a Republican. A public-spirited man, he has devoted a good part of his available time to works of general concern, serving as road supervisor of his district for the term of four years, also as one of the members of the school board for District sixty-seven, which position he is capably filling at the present time. Mr. Byze is held in the highest esteem by his neighbors, who have great respect for his industry and integrity.

JOSIAH SMITH, residing near Blue Light postoffice, has spent the past twenty-three years in farming in Klickitat county. He is a native of Ohio, born in the year 1857. His father, James H. Smith, was a Pennsylvanian, who moved to Ohio when a small boy, and there, at the age of twenty-four, was married to Mary E. Tribby. The parents of our subject removed to Nebraska in 1862, where they lived for four years. They then sought the milder climate of California, driving across the Plains in company with several families of settlers and finally making their home in the eastern part of Lake county, where Mr. Smith is still living. His wife passed away after having spent a twelve-month in their new home. The subject of this review received his education in public schools of California, and at the age of nineteen took up farming on his own account, having rented a desirable place near his father's home. This occupation he followed for two years, after which he was engaged for twelve months in other pursuits. In the summer of 1880, he moved northward to Oregon, going in the fall of the same year to Bickleton, Klickitat county, Washington, where he spent the ensuing winter. Next winter he took a pre-emption claim, which he sold later, having proved up on it. In the spring of 1883, he filed on a homestead and a timber culture claim, and he has ever since been continually improving the property to which he thus obtained title. At this writing, he has placed more than two-thirds of the land under cultivation.

In 1885, Mr. Smith married Tillie Wommack, also of Klickitat county. Her father, William F. Wommack, was brought up in Illinois, but later moved to Kansas, and spent four years there; visiting then Colorado, Utah, Idaho and Oregon, and eventually coming to Bickleton in the fall of 1882. He is at present living at Mabton, Washington. The mother of Mrs. Smith was Matilda (Renner) Wommack, an estimable woman, born in Missouri. She was married in Illinois and accompanied her husband on his travels until they finally settled in Yakima county, Washington, where she died. Mrs. Smith was born in Illinois in 1860, and in that state and Washington territory she received her educational discipline. She was married at the age of sixteen, and to her union with Mr. Smith have been born six children, namely: Elnora, May 7, 1887; Cyrus, on St. Patrick's Day, two years later; Wommack, on the 14th of June, 1892, deceased April 10, 1904; Onna, on the 10th of December, 1894; Frank, December 30, 1896, and Clyde, July 20, 1902. All the children were born at the family homestead in Klickitat county. In politics, Mr. Smith is a staunch Republican. He takes a lively interest in all affairs of public concern, both local and national, and in all the relations of life he has proved himself a man of uprightness and principle.

ELISHA S. CARRELL, one of the well-to-do farmers of Klickitat county, living in the city of Bickleton, was born in Iowa, February 8, 1849, the son of John and Margaret (Smith) Carrell. His father, a farmer, was raised in Tennessee, but moved to Missouri in the early forties, staying there a few years and then going to Iowa, where he opened up a number of different farms. In 1857, he again moved, going to Nebraska, where he acquired possession of fourteen hundred acres of fine farming land. At this time the Indians thereabouts were very troublesome, and the settlers were frequently constrained to band together for mutual protection, but Mr. Carrell fortunately came out unscathed from his numerous encounters with them and lived to a good old age. He passed away in 1901. Margaret, the mother of our subject, was born in Michigan, but removed with her people to Missouri when still a young girl and was educated in the schools there. She married at eighteen. She is still living in Nebraska, though she has reached her seventy-fifth year. Elisha S. Carrell received his educational training in the public schools of Nebraska. When twenty-two years of age, he took a trip south, visiting New Orleans and other points of interest. Upon his return home, he engaged in farming, his father having given him a place near the parental home. Three years later he made a trip to Texas, where he remained for a space of twelve months, returning home then and staying there until 1897, when he came to Bickleton. Here he purchased his present home, consisting of five hundred and sixty acres, one hundred and fifty of which are under cultivation, and one hundred and sixty of which are heavily timbered. He also filed on a homestead early in March last year, where he expects to take his family the coming spring.

Mr. Carrell has been twice married. His first wife was Mary Foster, a native of Nebraska, daughter of James O. and Jane (Cobble) Foster. Her father, a native of Indiana, was a mechanic and a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars. She was educated in Nebraska, and in that state she died in 1885, leaving three children: Orris O., John and Mrs. Edna Shadduck. The lady who became Mr. Carrell's second wife was Olive, daughter of James and Sarah (Rakes) Walton, born in Virginia, October 25, 1867. She moved to Nebraska when eight years old, and there received her education. She was married when only eighteen years of age and is now the mother of seven children, four boys and three girls: Ralph and Harry, born in Nebraska; Joy and Clarence, in Bickleton, the former December 24, 1902; Ella and Gracie, born in Nebraska, and Margie at Bickleton, on the 2d of December, 1899. All the children are still living. Mr. Carrell is a member of the Methodist church and in politics an active Democrat, quite deeply interested in local politics. As a man and citizen he stands high in his community.

ISAIAH F. WOOD, living a few miles southeast of Blue Light postoffice, in Klickitat county, is a prosperous young farmer, twenty-eight years of age, a native of the state of Nebraska. His father, Wiley Wood, was raised in Colorado, but when still a young man removed to Nebraska, where he followed farming as his principal occupation, although by trade he was a mason. He is still living in the northern part of that state. Our subject's mother, Mary (Pifer) Wood, a native of Ohio, died in Nebraska when Isaiah was only thirteen years old. The subject of this article received his education in the common schools of Nebraska, then worked for a time as a farm hand there, but when still quite young he removed to Washington, locating in Klickitat county, where, for a year or so, he followed various occupations, part of the time being employed by Hans Tranberg. In the spring of 1899, he filed on a homestead three miles southeast of Blue Light postoffice, where he has since made his home, devoting his time to the cultivation and improvement of his hundred and sixty acres of fine farming land. He is one of a family of twelve children, all of whom are still alive. His sisters, Mrs. Ida Campbell, Mrs. Ella Campbell, and Mrs. Dosha Carrell, Mary, Eva, Rose and Dovie, and his brothers, Edgar and Samuel, reside in Nebraska. He has one brother, William, living near him in Klickitat county, and one, Clarence B., at Kennewick, Washington. In political affairs, Mr. Wood takes great interest, being an active worker in the Republican party. To get a start financially has cost him a struggle, as it does almost all young men, but he is industrious and thrifty and possessed of qualities which win him esteem and respect, and a promising future is his.

EDGAR J. MOREHEAD, one of the energetic young agriculturists of Klickitat county, resides in the rich Bickleton wheat country, seven miles northeast of the town of Bickleton. Like many other men who are contributing to the development of the West, he was born in Iowa, the year of his advent upon the stage of life being 1876. His father, James H. Morehead, was a native of Pennsylvania, from which state he removed to Iowa in 1856. For twenty-nine years, he farmed in that state, but in 1885 he decided to try the West, so came to Klickitat county and settled on a homestead. He was thereafter numbered among the devotees of agriculture in the country until 1901, when he passed away. Mary (Palmer) Morehead, mother of our subject, is likewise a native of the Keystone state. She shared the vicissitudes of farm life in Iowa and later in the state of Washington, where she resided, her home being in Yakima county until the time of her death, which occurred July 25th, 1904. Mr. Morehead, of this article, received his early education in Iowa, having reached the age of eleven at the time his parents started westward. For three years after his arrival here, he remained under the parental roof; then he entered the service of John Roberts as a sheep herder. Soon, however, he returned home, and for the ensuing year he worked for his father, thereafter engaging in herding for Dan Hildreth. For several years he followed the vocation of sheep herding principally, working for Stagerman, Cunningham, Stone and other wool growers, and a part of the time at home. After his father's death, in 1901, he assumed charge of the parental farm, and he has devoted himself assiduously to its culture and improvement since. He is not married. His brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Nancy Ellis, living in North Yakima; John, in Wyoming; Mell, in Arkansas; George, at The Dalles; Milton, in the Horse Heaven country; Leonard, in Klickitat county, and Mrs. Laura Van Nostern, at Cleveland. Mr. Morehead is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is one of the thrifty and progressive citizens of the county and possesses a congeniality of disposition and an integrity of character which make all those with whom he is associated his friends.

CONRAD ECKHARDT is a ranchman of Klickitat county, owning a farm of three hundred and twenty acres of cultivated land, three miles east of the town of Bickleton. He was born in Russia on the 1st of September, 1865, the son of John and Annie (Schaefer) Eckhardt. His father, who was also of Russian parentage and a farmer by occupation, died in his native land in 1881, and his mother, who was likewise of Russian birth, died when our subject was but seven years old. He was educated in the common schools of his home town. Left an orphan at sixteen, he began then the struggle for life and until he reached the age of twenty-six he followed farming at various places near his old home. In 1891, he put into execution a determination to come to the United States. Arriving at Baltimore, he immediately set out for Hastings, Nebraska, where he remained for the ensuing three years. April 1, 1894, he removed to Klickitat county, and, for a year after his arrival, he worked for Conrad Schaefer on the farm. Purchasing his present place in 1894, he moved his family there the following year, and there he has since lived, engaged in stock raising and farming. He brings to his dual occupation a degree of energy and good judgment which cannot fail to win for him a splendid success.

Mr. Eckhardt was married in Russia in 1888 to Anna Getz, whose father, Hans Jacob Getz, a Russian farmer, died just previous to her birth. Her mother, Barbara (Schaefer) Getz, was also born in Russia. She is now Mrs. Hill, of Walla Walla, Washington. Mrs. Eckhardt was born in 1867 and was educated and married in Russia, the latter event taking place when she was nineteen. She and Mr. Eckhardt have had nine children: Annie, born in the old country, June 18, 1889; Katie, born in Alma, the county seat of Harlan county, Nebraska, on the first of November, 1891; Emma, born in Chester, Thayer county, Nebraska, September 11, 1893; Clara, Esther, Liddie and Julia, all born in Klickitat county, March 27, 1895, May 28, 1899, May 15, 1901, and July 3, 1903, respectively; also two boys, one born December 17, 1896, and one November 28, 1897, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Eckhardt is a member of the Lutheran church, and politically he favors the principles of the Republican party.

JOSEPH J. HOOKER, a prosperous Klickitat county ranchman, resides on his farm of three hundred and twenty acres a mile south of Blue Light postoffice. He is a native of Georgia, born in Wayne county, June 14, 1869. His father, Thomas H. Hooker, a native of Greene county, North Carolina, was a sawmill man and farmer. He removed to Georgia some time before the Civil war, and he married and passed the remainder of his life there. He was of English descent. His wife, whose maiden name was Delana Harris, was born in Georgia and passed her entire life within the confines of that commonwealth. Joseph Hooker, of this review, received his early education in the common schools of North Carolina and Georgia. At the age of fifteen, he started to learn the engineer's trade, and he worked as an apprentice in North Carolina for a period of four years, going then to Brunswick, the county seat of Glynn county, Georgia, to take charge of an engine in the local fire department. He remained there two years, but in 1889 came thence to Washington, settled near Cleveland and accepted employment from Mr. Shelneck in the sheep business. He was a year at that, then he traveled throughout Oregon and Washington, farming in most of the wheat sections of both states. In 1899, he took up a homestead a mile south of Blue Light postoffice, and upon this he has since lived, except when the need of a good school for the children has compelled him to be in Cleveland.

On the 17th of December, 1899, Mr. Hooker married Mrs. Frank Johnson, whose maiden name was Emma Fletcher. Her father still lives in Iowa, at Spirit Lake. She was born in that state in 1867, was educated in its common schools, and there married Mr. Johnson. To that union, four children were born, of whom three are now living, namely: Frank, Charles and Blanche. Mr. Johnson died in Klickitat county, some years previous to her second marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Hooker have one child, John, who was born in Yakima county, October 19, 1901. Mr. Hooker fraternizes with the Knights of Pythias. In politics, he is a Democrat, actively interested in all campaigns, local and national. Besides his three hundred and twenty acres of Klickitat county land, he also owns one hundred and sixty acres in Yakima county. He is an enterprising farmer, and success is crowning his efforts, while by uniform fair dealing he has won the confidence and esteem of his neighbors.

RASMUS GOTTFREDSON, a prosperous farmer of Klickitat county, resides two miles south of Bickleton. He is a native of Denmark, born on Langeland Island, August 28, 1851. His father, Gotfred Petersen Godfredson, who was likewise a Dane and a farmer by occupation, passed away in 1900. His mother, whose maiden name was Georgia Fredrake, was also born in Denmark, and was married in her native country, where she died within nine days after the demise of her husband, at the age of eighty-nine years. Rasmus Godfredson received his education in the schools of his native land. Upon reaching the age of fourteen, he left home and for six years thereafter he worked for various farmers in Denmark. In 1871, shortly after he had passed his twentieth year, he came to the United States. He settled first in Kansas, at Fort Leavenworth, and worked twelve months for the government; then removed to Atchison, in the same state, where he was engaged in the confectionery business for a period of seven months. Going then to Michigan, he worked in a logging camp there until the spring of 1874, when he came west to California, in which state he was employed on a ranch for four years. In 1878 he came to Klickitat county, and took up a homestead near Bickleton, upon which he has made his home ever since. He also bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, and of the half section he has succeeded in putting one hundred and seventy-five acres into cultivation. He keeps considerable stock.

In Arlington, Oregon, on November 8, 1888, he married Lottie Hull, daughter of James and Mary A. (Lewis) Hull. Her father, who was a native of Alabama, and by occupation a merchant, died three months before she was born. Her mother, also a native of Alabama, in which state she was married, now resides in the city of Montgomery. Mrs. Godfredson was born in Alabama, December 6, 1861, and educated in the schools of Montgomery, also graduating in a music course.

She is an accomplished musician, and still teaches the art some, and before leaving her native state taught three terms of school. Mr. and Mrs. Godfredson have had seven children, namely: James, born near Bickleton, March 27, 1890, and died May 31, 1903; Charles, born in Klickitat county, April 10, 1891, also deceased, passing away at the age of five months; Georgia M., in Klickitat county, June 23, 1892; Harry, born April 4, 1894; Albert, Lizzie and Gotfred, born in Klickitat county, on October 4, 1896, August 22, 1899, and February 20, 1904, respectively. The five living children are all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Godfredson are both members of the lodge of Yeomen, and the former is a member of the Lutheran church. In politics, he is a Republican. A competent, energetic farmer, a good citizen and an honorable man, he is highly esteemed and respected by his neighbors and all who know him.

PETER MATSEN, a prosperous Klickitat county ranchman, resides on his fine six hundred and forty-acre farm, three miles north and two miles east of the town of Bickleton. He is a native of Denmark, born in 1849, the son of Mat Jensen Matsen, who was born in Denmark in 1818, and who passed the whole of the fifty-four years of his life there, his occupation being farming. Ida (Peters) Matsen, mother of our subject, was also born and brought up in Denmark, and also died there. Mr. Matsen, of this review, was educated in the public schools of his native land. He remained at home with his parents until he reached the age of sixteen, then, his father having passed away, he began working at such jobs as he could find. For four years he wrought for others, then he resolved to seek larger opportunities, and in 1871 immigrated to America. His first place of residence was in New Jersey. After a year's stay there he went to California, and engaged in mining for a time, also in teaming in the city of Oakland and other places. Six months were spent in the quicksilver mines, after which he returned to Oakland, where the ensuing year and a half were passed. He then betook himself to the mountainous district of Nevada, and worked as a woodsman for eighteen months. Returning to Denmark in 1875, he served eighteen months in the army, as required by law; then he went to work in a gun factory in Copenhagen, a line of employment which he followed continuously for fifteen years. In the fall of 1893 Mr. Matsen again came to this country, this time settling in Klickitat county and buying a half section of land, his present place of abode. A year later he filed on a homestead, contiguous to his half section, and upon it the next five years of his life were spent. In the meantime he purchased an additional two hundred and forty acres adjoining his other land, thus acquiring a splendid farm of generous proportions. By industry and perseverance he has reduced four hundred acres of it to a state of cultivation, the remainder being so far retained as a pasture for his more than a hundred head of stock.

Mr. Matsen has been twice married, his first wife being Matilda Johnson, whom he wedded in Denmark in 1886. This lady died in 1899, after having borne him five sons and one daughter. His second marriage was solemnized in Klickitat county, February 2, 1901, the lady being Anna Margaret Stumer, whose father, the late Claus Stumer, was a German shoemaker, who had removed to Denmark when twenty-four and had married and spent the remainder of his life there. Her mother, Julia A. (Hoch) Stumer, a native of Denmark, died in 1898, leaving three children. The present Mrs. Matsen was born in Denmark in 1870, and received her educational discipline in the common schools of that land. She made a trip to the United States when fifteen, soon returning, however, but in 1900 she came to stay. Mr. Matsen's children by the first marriage were the following: Edith, born June 14, 1888; Albert, on the 27th of January, 1890; and Edwin, born September 24, 1893, all in Denmark; Alfred, born September 13, 1894; Robert, born October 24, 1896; and Roy, born June 7, 1899, all in Klickitat county. His second wife has borne him a son and daughter: Lewis, who was born October 10, 1901, and died when four months old; and Ella, born on September 28, 1903. Mr. Matsen fraternizes with the Improved Order of Foresters and the Yeomen and has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1874. In religious persuasion, he is a Lutheran, and in politics, a Republican. He is one of the most industrious and successful farmers in the locality, and is held in high esteem by the people of the surrounding country, who respect his thriftiness and pluck and honor him for his virtues as a man.

JOHN BAKER, a resident of Klickitat county for over twenty-five years, lives on his four hundred and eighty-acre farm at Cleveland, Washington. He was born near London, England, on the 3d of April, 1847, the son of Mathew Baker, an English carpenter. His father came to the United States in 1859, settled in the state of New Jersey and there followed his trade for two years, then passed away. Priscilla (Skinner) Baker, the mother of our subject, was also of English birth. She died in her native land, when John was quite young. Our subject was the only child of this marriage. He received his education in the schools of his native country, and while a young man learned the trades of tin-smithing and sheet iron working, acquiring his skill in both in the shops of Paterson, New Jersey. In the fall of 1873, when he was twenty-six, he moved to the state of Colorado, and for a year and over he followed his trade there, then going to California, in which state he worked as a journeyman for the ensuing four years. Coming to Klickitat county in 1879, he filed on a homestead there, and turned his attention to farming, but not being yet in a position to make his living as an agriculturist, he moved the next spring to Goldendale. For about three years he continued to be a resident of that town, making frequent trips, however, to his home near Cleveland, during all this time following tinsmithing. In 1884 he established a permanent residence on his homestead, and there he still lives with his family. Twice only in the twenty-six years has he been away from home for any considerable period of time, once at Arington, and once at Hood River, in both of which places he worked at his trade.

In Paterson, New Jersey, April 27, 1871, Mr. Baker married Mary Burner, whose father, Nathan, a merchant and farmer, was a native of Dutchess county, New York, and a descendant from old German stock. He died in the state of his nativity, in 1861. Mary (Jolly) Burner, her mother, was born in England, but married in New Jersey, in which state she still lives, though seventy-nine years old. Mrs. Baker was born in New York City in 1850, and began her education there, but completed it in the New Jersey schools. She and Mr. Baker are parents of three children: Ella Mitty, born November 27, 1873, now living at Bickleton; Walter, born in California, in 1876, now running a shop in the same town; and Ralph E., born in Goldendale, Washington, in 1882, at present with his parents. An energetic and successful farmer and in all respects a good citizen, he is esteemed and honored by all who have known him intimately in the county, and they are legion, for his residence here has been long and continuous. In politics, he is a Republican.

CHRISTEN V. ANDERSON, a farmer living two miles northeast of Bickleton, is a native of Denmark, born December 18, 1867. His father, Christen L. Anderson, is still living in Denmark, his native land, where he has followed farming the greater portion of his life, and his mother, Monam (Thompson) Anderson, also a native of Denmark, born in 1845, is still with the elder Anderson there. Christen V. attended the common schools of his native country until about fourteen, then obtained employment in a flour-mill. He worked assiduously and steadily at this for three years, but was finally compelled to desist on account of being troubled with catarrh, caused by the dust in the mill. The succeeding five years were spent in farming, his time being divided between two employers, then he served a year in the army, as a private soldier. Another year was then spent on the farm, at the end of which he emigrated to this country, coming direct to Klickitat county, where he was employed the first summer by Stephen Matsen. Soon he purchased a half section of railroad land, which was, however, later disposed of to Mr. Stagerman. His next investment was in a place three miles south of Bickleton. Upon this he lived for seven years, engaged in general farming, but at the end of that period he sold his farm to Chris Larsen, and with his only child, his wife having died, visited his parents in the old country. The spring of 1899 found him again in Klickitat county, but after a short stay he departed for Wilbur, Washington, two miles south of which town he lived for the ensuing year upon the land he had bought. Selling this land, he once more came to Klickitat county and purchased a half section five miles east of Bickleton. This also he disposed of to advantage a year later, and the following twelve months was spent in traveling over the state, looking for another desirable location. Not finding anything that pleased him so well as the country surrounding Bickleton, he came back and bought Jake Ostrich's place, two miles northeast of the town, where we now find him. His farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres of fertile land, two hundred and thirty of which are under cultivation. Mr. Anderson's first marriage was solemnized at Bickleton, in 1890. Catherine Veuxelson then becoming his wife. She passed away in 1895, leaving one daughter, Lenora C., born December 3, 1892. Her father, Vensel H. Veuxelson, was a Danish farmer, and her mother, Anna, was also a native of Denmark, where she is still living, though Mr. Veuxelson is now deceased.

May 18, 1903, Mr. Anderson was again married, the lady being Johanna, daughter of Frederick Hoch, who has been all his life and still is a Danish soldier. Her mother, Johanna (Terkelsen) Hoch, is also still living in Denmark, where Mrs. Anderson was born, May 18, 1872, and where she passed her early years and acquired her education. Fraternally, Mr. Anderson is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious persuasion, he is a Lutheran. He is a staunch Republican at all times, but now that Roosevelt, whom he especially admires, is the party's candidate for the presidency, he is unusually warm in his loyalty to it. An industrious, progressive farmer and a worthy citizen, he is esteemed and respected by all who know him.

LOUIS J. LARSEN is a well known farmer residing two and one-half miles southeast of Bickleton, Washington. His parents, now deceased, were Lars and Minnie (Peterson) Jorgensen, both natives of Denmark. Lars Jorgensen was killed in the German-Danish war before Louis J. was born. Minnie (Peterson) Jorgensen was born in 1825, and resided in Denmark till the time of her death. Louis J. Larsen was born in Denmark, September 14, 1850, and attained young manhood in the land of his nativity, receiving a fair education in the common schools. At the age of fifteen years he left the parental roof, and has since then taken care of himself. When twenty years old he went from Denmark to Australia and there followed mining for six years. Thence he went to San Francisco, California, arriving in 1877, with no money, and one shirt his surplus clothing. From San Francisco he proceeded to Victoria, British Columbia, with the intention of going from the latter town to Alaska, but upon arrival he changed his mind and took a steamer for Tacoma. Thence he went to Portland, Oregon, and after a short stay in that place, to Hillsboro, that state, where he accepted employment on a farm. In the fall of 1877 he arrived in Goldendale, Klickitat county, and after a stay of one month returned to Portland, where he spent the winter. In the spring of 1878 he engaged for a time in fishing on the Columbia river, but quitting this vocation, again returned to Portland, there accepting employment of the Oregon Transfer Company, with whom he remained for five months. His final move was to Klickitat county, where he arrived in the fall of 1878. For a time after his arrival he herded sheep for George McCredy, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this volume. The following year, 1879, he filed on his present farm, which has since then been his home.

Mr. Larsen was married in Denmark, February 6, 1885, to Miss Karen Larsen while on a visit to his old Denmark home, from which he had been absent for fifteen years. Miss Larsen was the daughter of Lars Larsen and Karen (Ekertsen) Larsen, both natives of Denmark. Lars Larsen is an engineer in the old country, having retained his present position for twenty-five years. The mother, Karen (Ekertsen) Larsen, is living at the present time. Miss Karen Larsen, now the wife of L. J. Larsen, was born in Denmark, June 13, 1864. She received her education in the common schools of Denmark, and she was married there at the age of twenty-one. Children born to this marriage are Minnie, Lewis P. and George W., all in Klickitat county. Fraturnally, Mr. Larsen is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, in which order he stands very high. He is a member of the Lutheran church, and in politics, a Republican. His land holdings comprise, in all, three hundred and twenty acres, some of which is said to be as good as the best in the county, and he has a splendid little herd of cattle, twenty-five in number, and five good horses. He allows his stock to increase to no greater number than his farm will support comfortably, and to this policy, applied in other lines also, may be attributed the excellent appearance of all his property.

THOMAS HANSEN, whose farm lies a mile east of Cleveland, Klickitat county, is one of the wheat belt's successful Danish citizens. He was born at Helsing, Denmark, May 15, 1855, the son of Godfred and Lena (Peterson) Hansen, both of whom lived and died in the old country. The father's death occurred in 1901, in his eighty-eighth year. His wife was born in 1818 and died in 1868. She was the mother of ten children, of whom Thomas is next to the youngest. He received his education in the common schools, remaining at home on the farm until he was seventeen years old; then he crossed the ocean and settled near Cleveland, Ohio. After a few months spent there he went to St. Charles, Missouri, and was employed near-by on a farm for five years. In 1877 he took up his abode in Texas, worked a time in a brickyard there and then began farming for himself. Texas continued to be his home state until 1883, when he went to California. A year and a half in sawmill work followed. His residence in Klickitat dates from the year 1885, at which time he filed on a pre-emption claim twenty miles southeast of Bickleton. However, six months later he abandoned this claim and filed a timber culture claim to a quarter section near Cleveland. After proving up on it he purchased his present home, which was then owned by the railroad company.

Mr. Hansen was married in Grayson county, Texas, November 28, 1877, to Lizzie Lundorff, also a native of Denmark, born in 1856. Her parents were Matthew and Mary Lundorff, the father being a farmer; both spent their entire lives in Denmark. Mrs. Hansen received a good education in her native land, after which she joined her brother in Texas and was there married at the age of twenty-one. She died June 28, 1903, mourned by all who knew her and leaving, besides her husband, one child, Mrs. Lena Van Nostern, born in Texas, June 23, 1880. Mr. Hansen is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and of the Lutheran church. In politics, he is a Republican. Of his four hundred acres of land, one hundred are in cultivation, the balance being pasture and timber; he also owns considerable stock. Mr. Hansen has labored faithfully with highly satisfying results and because of his true worth has attained to an influential position in the community.

JOHN COPENHEFER is a favorably known farmer residing four miles south of Cleveland, Washington. He was born in Huntington county, Indiana, October 23, 1850, the son of John M. and Elizabeth (Crull) Copenhefer, the former of Swedish extraction and the latter of German. John M. Copenhefer was a farmer of Pennsylvania, and moved from that state to Indiana in 1854. Later he went to Wisconsin and resided there till the time of his death. Elizabeth (Crull) Copenhefer was born in Ohio. When a young woman she moved to Indiana, and in that state was married. Her death occurred many years ago in Wisconsin. Mr. Copenhefer grew to manhood on the home farm. When twenty-one years of age he forsook the paternal roof and purchased a farm on which he spent four years, at the end of which time he went to Linn county, Kansas, where he followed farming for three years. His next move was to Klickitaw county, Washington, where he arrived in the spring of 1882. Here for a time he worked at logging for D. S. Sprinkle, and after quitting this vocation established his residence on a tract of railroad land which he later purchased. In 1888 he filed on a homestead, afterward making the place his home until 1903, when he moved to his present home in Klickitaw county.

Mr. Copenhefer was married in Richland county, Wisconsin, January 9, 1872, to Miss Harriet J. Snyder, a native of Indiana, born March 16, 1854. Her parents were John E. and Mary A. (Polk) Snyder, the latter now deceased. John E. Snyder was born in Pennsylvania March 16, 1816; emigrated to Indiana when a boy and from there went to Wisconsin. Upon arrival in the latter state he engaged in farming and he has since continued at this vocation. Mary A. (Polk) Snyder was born in Indiana December 9, 1823, and died in Wisconsin in 1858. She was of Irish and Dutch extraction. Mrs. Copenhefer grew to womanhood in Wisconsin, receiving her education in the common schools. She married Mr. Copenhefer when seventeen years of age. Children born to this marriage are: Ethan A., in Richland county, Wisconsin, September 28, 1875, and Nora, who died when two years of age. In religion Mr. Copenhefer is an adherent of the Church of Christ, and in politics supports the Republican principles. He is a prominent man in county affairs, having served as a county commissioner in Klickitaw county from 1897 to 1898. His land holdings comprise, in all, two thousand acres, a section of which is leased school land, the balance being held in fee simple. Three hundred and fifty acres of the land are in cultivation and the rest is used for grazing purposes.

GEORGE W. HAMILTON is a comfortably situated farmer residing two miles southeast of Dot postoffice, Klickitaw county. He was born in Huntington county, Indiana, July 12, 1853, the son of Thomas and Nancy (McCrumis) Hamilton. Thomas Hamilton, a farmer and blacksmith, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1828. When a boy he came to Canada, and thence, during early manhood, he proceeded to Indiana, and later to Kansas, arriving in the latter state in 1857. There he followed blacksmithing for several years, then took up a farm on which he lived for a time. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted and during service was in the command of Captain Vansickle. In his capacity as blacksmith he afterward was foreman of the government shops at Fort Scott, Kansas. His present place of residence is Mapleton, that state. Nancy (McCrumis) Hamilton was born in Ireland in 1811, and died in 1884 at the age of seventy-three.

lic schools. He remained at home until twenty-two years of age assisting his parents in the management of their farm, but at the age mentioned he moved to Caldwell county, Missouri, where he farmed for three years. In 1887 he came west, his objective point being Cleveland, Klickitaw county, Washington. Here he arrived with a family of five children, with seventy-five dollars in money, and with prospects rendered unpromising by his being in very poor health. He secured a small tract of land, and, during the time he could spare from improving it, worked in the timber. Later, he filed on his present farm, which has ever since been his home.

Mr. Hamilton's marriage occurred November 26, 1874, Miss Margery Nogle being the bride. She was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, April 10, 1857, the daughter of David and Mary (Harlan) Nogle. David Nogle, a farmer, was born in Ohio in 1804, the son of German parents. His death occurred in 1887. Mary (Harlan) Nogle was born near Dayton, Ohio, December 17, 1811. She was of English descent and had the distinction of being a cousin of Justice Harlan, well known, in his time, as one of the greatest lawyers in the United States. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton are Mrs. Ethel (Hamilton) Smith, now a teacher; Anna, recently graduated from the Goldendale high school; Clyde, Thomas, Fay, Zelta, Edwin and Hollis. In religion, Mr. Hamilton supports the Church of Christ, while politically, he espouses Republican principles, though not to the extent of being unduly prejudiced in municipal politics. In school affairs he is prominent in his support of progressiveness, and he has served creditably as a director. His land holdings, in all, comprise three hundred and twenty acres. His home is comfortable, his property interests are well taken care of, and everything about his premises speaks in language unmistakable of thrift, industry and good judgment.

JOSEPH GADEBERG is a prosperous farmer and stockman living two miles northwest of Dot postoffice, Klickitaw county. He was born in Denmark, October 7, 1849, at the time of the Danish-German war. His father, Peter Gadeberg, was born in Hadersleben, Denmark, October 15, 1815, and during his life time was first a common sailor, and later captain and owner of a vessel plying mainly in the coast trade of western Europe. His death occurred in 1896 in Denmark, the greater part of his life having been spent at sea, many of his trips being to Greenland, and later along the coast of Denmark and Europe. The mother, Helena M. (Hansen) Gadeberg, was also a native of Hadersleben, Denmark, born about 1825. She died in 1880. During the early years of his life Joseph was a sailor. Up to the age of sixteen his maritime trips were made wholly along the coast of Denmark, but at that age he shipped to Hamburg, acting on his own responsibility. Later, he returned to Denmark, proceeding thence to the East and West Indies, and Hongkong, during his cruising on this part of the globe, touching at divers points in the Pacific and on the Asiatic coast. From Hongkong he shipped to Portland on an American vessel, arriving July 4, 1871, which date marks the end of his life at sea. From Portland he proceeded to Yamhill county, Oregon, and there settled on a farm. After a year, he proceeded thence to eastern Oregon, where he engaged in the stock business. This occupation he followed the greater part of the time until 1879, his residence up to that date being in Wasco county. Quitting the stock business, he fished for three seasons on the Columbia river, being employed on a river steamer part of the time. His next move was to Goldendale, where he lived for two years. At the end of this time, in 1881, he took up his present farm, upon which he settled permanently that fall. Two years prior to this he married Mary E. Phipps, who died January 4, 1894, leaving no children. October 16, 1895, Mr. Gadeberg married Miss Cora A. Enyart, a native of Clay county, Illinois, born February 15, 1873, the daughter of Samuel and Frances Maria (Vail) Enyart. Samuel Enyart was appointed by President Cleveland (first administration) superintendent of the Indian school at Fort Simcoe, and his daughter Myrtle, who later married Dick Lyons, matron. Frances Maria (Vail) Enyart was born March 25, 1839, near Hamilton, Ohio. She is still living, her home being in Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Gadeberg have three children: Wallace Edward, born August 14, 1896; J. Monroe, April 6, 1899, and Joseph Lloyd, July 29, 1902. Fraternally, Mr. Gadeberg is affiliated with the Knights of the Royal Guards, and, in religion, he adheres to the Presbyterian church. In politics, he strongly favors Democratic principles. Mr. Gadeberg is one of the pioneer settlers of Klickitat county, and has met with many of the unpleasant experiences incident to the settlement of a new country. He made his start in the sheep business in 1882 with one not extremely healthy looking pet sheep obtained of a neighbor, George Lymer by name. The sheep lived till it reached the age of twelve years, and Mr. Gadeberg gave it a burial such as is seldom accorded to a common sheep. He cut his first crop with a cradle, and as no threshers were then to be had, used horses to tramp the grain out, as was done in olden days. Now his affairs are managed differently. His farm comprises sixteen hundred acres, every acre of which is good tillable or grazing land and is yielding satisfactory returns.

CHRISTIAN LARSEN, one of Klickitat county's prosperous wheat farmers and stock raisers, resides upon his fine ranch, five miles southeast of Bickleton. Like many other of Washington's successful men, he was born in Denmark, July 23, 1861. His parents were Lars and Johanna (Christiansen) Sorensen. The father was born in 1812, followed farming during his life, and died in his native country in 1885. The mother was born in 1820; she died in Denmark, also. The subject of this sketch received his education in the schools of his native country and when nine years of age, began working out summers. When he reached the age of fourteen he left the parental home and worked for different farmers until he was twenty-five years old, or until 1887, when he came to America. He first settled near Cincinnati, where he resided two years, then moved to Schenectady, New York, in which city he was employed two years in the electric light works. In 1891 he came to Washington, landing in Tacoma in May. Thence he went to Ellensburg and in June he commenced work for Coffin Brothers in Klickitat county. He was with them two years before filing on his present place, which has since been the field of his labors.

Mr. Larsen was married in Reading, Ohio, in 1887, to Marie P. Peterson, a daughter of Paul and Eliza (Bro) Peterson, natives of Denmark. Mr. Peterson died when Marie was a child, but her mother is still living in the old country. Mrs. Larsen was born in Denmark March 6, 1858, received her education in the schools of Copenhagen and came to America in 1881. Her marriage took place when she was nineteen years old. To this union have been born eight children: Sophia, in 1880, died at the age of six months; Paul, in New York state, in April, 1890; Sophia, in Klickitat county, August 25, 1892; Elizabeth, August 17, 1894; Johanna, August 13, 1896; Emma, August 20, 1898; Christina, December 15, 1900; and Milner, June 8, 1904. Mr. Larsen is connected with the Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and, politically, is a Republican. At present he holds the position of school director in the district. He owns seven hundred and sixty acres of land, of which three hundred and fifty are under cultivation, has a herd of sixty cattle, a large band of horses and is leasing a quarter section of school land. He is one of the most substantial and progressive of the agriculturists of the Bickleton country and one of its most highly esteemed citizens.

GEORGE W. ALEXANDER is a prosperous farmer and stockman residing four and one-half miles southeast of Bickleton, Washington. He was born in Walworth county, Wisconsin, February 19, 1846, the son of George and Martha V. (Knapp) Alexander. George Alexander, the elder, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1816. When twenty-four years of age he went to Wisconsin, settling in Kock county, but later he moved to Whitewater, Walworth county. At this time the localities mentioned were but sparsely settled and the elder Alexander was obliged to meet the many adverse conditions incident to the settlement of a new country. His death occurred at Whitewater in 1888. Martha V. (Knapp) Alexander was born in Sandusky, Ohio, in 1822, and died in 1890. From his father, George W. derives German blood, and from his mother, Scotch-Irish. He grew to young manhood in Wisconsin amid surroundings that contributed more to his knowledge of pioneer customs and the robust elements so active in the promotion of undeveloped enterprises than to his store of book-learning. In 1864, he enlisted in Company H., Thirteenth Wisconsin volunteers, and he was in active service till the close of the Civil war. Then he returned to the Wisconsin home and took up farming, following this vocation till 1869, at which time he went to California. In Nevada and Colorado he remained for ten years, engaged principally in stock raising and mining. His final move was to Klickitat county, in 1879. At the time of his arrival the region about Bickleton was a great stock range controlled by stockmen who discouraged any attempt of settlers at home-seeking. Nevertheless, Mr. Alexander took up a quarter section of land and began farming, his resources to begin with consisting of seventy-five dollars and two horses. Later, he devoted considerable attention to the raising of cattle and horses, though not to the exclusion entirely of strictly agricultural pursuits. During his residence at his present location he has experienced reverses which made more difficult his task of home-building, but during recent years of good health, hard work and favorable circumstances have contributed toward making him one of the most happily established residents in his community.

On September 16, 1878, Mr. Alexander married Miss Beatrice E. Thacker, who died in 1882, after she had become the mother of two children, Frank E. and Hattie. The latter died in infancy. Frank is now living at home with his father, and is said to be one of the steadiest young men of the community in which he resides. Mr. Alexander's second marriage occurred January 10, 1886, the lady being Miss Lucy A. Embree, a native of Cass county, Missouri, born February 28, 1852. She was the daughter of Thomas and Phoebe E. C. (Butler) Embree, who were among the early settlers of Klickitat county. During the continuance of his present residence Mr. Alexander has been actively interested in the municipal affairs of his community. He has served fourteen years as road supervisor, and during this time has assisted to make the greater part of the principal roads of his locality, among which was the road from Coyle's Landing on the Columbia river to Fort Simcoe. His farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres of land, all of which is in a high state of cultivation. This ranch is reputed to be one of the most valuable farming properties in the county, and its increasing valuation promises to make excellent returns for the years of toil that have been spent in its improvement.

SAMUEL A. BULLIS, a Klickitat county farmer and stock raiser, resides on his farm of one hundred and sixty acres, six and a half miles southeast of Bickleton. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in Rock county, on the 11th of August, 1862. His father, Samuel Bullis, is a native of Ohio, born December 16, 1836, and by occupation a farmer. He served throughout the Civil war in the Twenty-first Wisconsin volunteers, and now draws a pension on account of such service. His wife, whose maiden name was Lydia Crosby, was born in the middle west, February 7, 1846, and lives with her husband in Oregon. Samuel A. Bullis, of this review, removed to Iowa with his parents when seven years old and received his education in the common schools of Butler county, that state, assisting his father out of term time and out of school hours with the work about the farm. When eighteen years old, he left the parental fireside and from that time until he reached the age of twenty-four worked at various places as a farm hand, though part of the time he farmed places of his own. Removing to Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1886, he lived there for a period of six years, engaged continuously in the transfer business. He then spent two years in Princeton, Idaho, a town of Latah county, thereafter removing to Eugene, Oregon, a pretty little Willamette valley town, which he made his place of residence for an additional six years, farming all the time. In 1901, on the 3d of June, he came to Bickleton county and took up the homestead upon which he has since lived. He has improved and fenced the land, gaining a livelihood the while in the dual pursuits of agriculture and stock raising, principally. A good orchard, about ready to bear, and many other improvements testify to his industry, progressiveness and thrift.

In 1887, Mr. Bullis married Ida E. Newby, a native of the state of New Jersey, born February 7, 1869. Her father died when she was but an infant, and her mother, Madeline, married again, becoming Mrs. Osborn. She now lives in New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Bullis have a family of five children, as follows: Jarvie, Mattie, Melville, Lydia and Cora. Mr. Bullis has five brothers living in the Willamette valley, Oregon, namely: William, Charles, Jesse, Harvey and Frank, while a sister resides in Minnesota. In politics, Mr. Bullis is a Republican. Although he has not lived in the locality long, he has already won a place in the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens, and already given earnest of his ability to contribute his full part toward the general development.

WILLIAM A. McCREDY, a farmer and hotel man of Cleveland, was born in Richland county, Ohio, February 20, 1830. His father, Alex. McCredy, was a native of the Quaker state, but of Scotch descent. He settled in Ohio about 1820, becoming one of the pioneer farmers of that state. He died in 1834. Our subject's mother, Effie (Van Nostrand) McCredy, also a native of Pennsylvania, came with her parents to Ohio when she was a young girl, and in that state grew up and married. She died the same year that her husband passed away, after having become the mother of six children. Thus it happened that he whose name forms the caption of this article was left an orphan when four years old. He was brought up by an uncle, David Urie. At the age of twelve he began attending school in Ohio, and his education was completed in the public schools of Missouri. When twenty years of age, he left his uncle's home, began farming on his own account, and for two years he was thus employed, but on April 25, 1853, he started across the Plains with an ox team, and five months later was in Yamhill county, Oregon, where he took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. He lived upon this property for twenty-seven years, devoting his time to farming and stock raising. In the fall of 1880, he moved to Klickitat county, and took a timber culture claim, but this he later abandoned, after having made it his home for two years. However, his son, John T., filed a pre-emption on it, complied with the law and secured his patent and later sold it to our subject. In the spring of 1892, Mr. McCredy moved to Cleveland, and two years after his arrival he bought the townsite from the original locator, R. Dodge, who had taken it up as a homestead.

Mr. McCredy has been twice married. His first wife, Elizabeth R. Beaman, was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, January 19, 1834. She was educated in the common schools of that state, and married there in 1851, being a little over seventeen years old at the time. She died on the 6th of August, 1894. Her father, Enos Beaman, a native of North Carolina, born August 10, 1808, was a farmer. He moved to Missouri in the early days and there resided until his death in 1851. He was of German parentage. His wife, Paulina (Butler) Beaman, was also born in North Carolina, March 27, 1810, married there, but later moved to Missouri, where she raised a family of six children and where she died in 1866.

The second marriage of our subject took place on January 12, 1896, at which time he took to wife Mrs. Sarah A. Van Nostern, a widow. Her father, Thomas Hooker, was born in North Carolina, in 1821, and in due time became a mill man. He later moved to the state of Georgia, where he passed away September 28, 1884. Her mother, Delana (Harris) Hooker, was born in Liberty county, Georgia, October 21, 1841, and was educated and married in that state. She died in 1882 after having raised a family of eleven children. The present Mrs. McCredy was a native of Georgia, born November 1, 1857. She was educated for a school teacher, and taught for some time, but came to Washington Territory in 1882 and there married David Van Nostern, two years after her arrival. Three children were born to this union: John, October 22, 1884; Rodell, February 7, 1891, and David, January 28, 1888. Mrs. McCredy has a number of brothers and sisters, namely: Mrs. Julia A. Strickland, born September 7, 1861, now living in Georgia; Jane M., born December 7, 1859, who died when nine months old; Mary E., born April 14, 1866, deceased at the age of eight; Thomas H., born November 8, 1864, now in Klickitat county; Joseph J., born June 14, 1869, residing at Cleveland; William F., born September 8, 1871, at present in Klickitat county; James H., born November 9, 1873, now in Florida; Charles O., and Robert L., born on the respective dates of August 30, 1878, and February 18, 1882, both in Klickitat county; and Travis E., born on the 4th of February, 1876. The names of Mr. McCredy's children are as follows: Paulina Varner, a married daughter, born in Missouri, December 20, 1852, now living in Oregon; George, born in Oregon, February 22, 1855, living at Bickleton; A. Jackson, born in Oregon, January 24, 1857, died April 13, 1859; Benjamin J., January 20, 1861, died November 22, 1884; William R., May 9, 1859, died January 17, 1862; John T., May 6, 1863; Alexander E., May 3, 1868; and Leland N., June 23, 1872. Mr. McCredy is a member of the Christian church; in politics, a Democrat, taking an active interest in all political matters. A very early pioneer of the Northwest, he has witnessed events and conditions such as can never again happen or exist; the narration of which would be interesting indeed. He tells us that when he first came to Yamhill county he paid twenty dollars a barrel for flour, thirty cents a pound for bacon, and a dollar and a half a bushel for potatoes. He has all the virtues of the honored class to which he belongs, and his declining years are rendered happy by the fact that he enjoys in an unusual measure the fullest confidence and hearty good will of those of his own generation who still live and all of the younger generation with whom he is associated. It is his pleasure to witness the splendid financial success that his sons are achieving in the goodly land that he and his fellow pioneers have redeemed from savagery to civilization.

HENRY C. HACKLEY, an engineer and carpenter by trade, residing at Cleveland, Klickitat county, Washington, is an Oregonian, born in Linn county, September 4, 1854. His father, Dewitt C. Hackley, a minister of the gospel and a teacher, was a native of Indiana. He moved to Keokuk, Iowa, in 1839, living there until 1852, at which time he crossed the Plains by ox team to Linn county, Oregon, where he spent the next four years. He was several months on the way to Oregon, and soon after his arrival, took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. In 1856, he removed to Piety Hill, California, and spent nine years in that locality, mining and preaching, also giving some attention to raising cattle. He then removed to Mendocino county, in the western part of the state, and engaged in the hotel business, remaining there until 1873. He then moved to Sonoma county, and there farmed for another two years, at the end of which period he again returned to Mendocino county, where he spent the succeeding four years in the hotel business. In 1879, he moved to Klickitat county, Washington, and took up a homestead, making his home thereon for a space of four years, but did not prove up on his claim. He also engaged in the sheep business. In 1889 he sold out his interests, and the next year built the Cleveland grist-mill, operating it for three years. In 1901 he again returned to Mendocino county, California, where he still resides. He is of Scotch-Irish parentage. His wife, Sophia W. C. (Vangorkon) Hackley, was born in Amsterdam, Holland, in 1827. She came to this country in 1844, married two years later, and died in Klickitat county, Washington, September 12, 1888. Mr. Hackley was educated in the common schools of California, his parents having removed to that state when he was two years old, and he remained at home with his parents until reaching the age of thirteen. He then started to fire an engine in a mill, and there learned the engineering trade, devoting four years to the work in the mill. He next worked three years in a smelter located near the city of Oakland, and then entered the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company, working for them two years, being employed at line building. The following four years were spent in various positions with threshing outfits, etc., in the capacity of engineer. He came to Klickitat county in 1879, and started to run the engine in a saw-mill owned by E. McPharland, remaining in his service for two years. He next put in three years in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, this time being mostly occupied in bridge building at various points. After his marriage at Seattle, in 1884, he returned to Klickitat county, and since that time he has made it his home, following various lines of work. His brother Millard lives in California, and his father resides with him. Another brother, Edwin S. Hackley, now lives in Alaska, and a married sister, Laura M. Betts, lives at Wilcox, Whitman county, Washington.

His marriage in Seattle on November 5, 1884, was with Effie L. Twichell, daughter of Hiram and Maria (Dodge) Twichell. Her father was born in New Bedford, Maine, in 1821, and followed farming for a living. He moved to Wisconsin in 1842, and thence to Minnesota, and in 1876 went to Oregon, located in Linn county, and after three years' residence there removed to Klickitat county, Washington. The years 1882 to 1884 were passed at Seattle; then he again returned to Klickitat county, where he died in 1895. Her mother was also born in the town of New Bedford, in the year 1822. She married in Maine and died in Klickitat county in 1898. Mrs. Hackley was born in Pine Island, Minnesota, on the 17th of September, 1862. She was educated in that state, and married at the age of twenty-three. She died December 18, 1903, at Cleveland, Washington. She has a married sister now living at Zillah, Washington, Mrs. Malinda Mason; and Mrs. Mary Mason, another sister, now resides at Cleveland. Her brother William makes his home at Elmira, Washington, and Mrs. Annie Wilson and Mrs. Helen Merton, also sisters, reside at Goldendale and Zillah, Washington. She was the mother of five children. Nina, the oldest, was born June 12, 1888; Harold F., now dead, born on July 11, 1890; Bessie, also dead, born May 11, 1892; Vivian, born May 30, 1898, and the youngest boy, Edwin, born September 27, 1903, all the children being born in Klickitat county. Mr. Hackley is a member of the Presbyterian church and an active Republican in politics. His real estate comprises four lots and a dwelling house in Cleveland, and he is a substantial citizen of that town.

WILL G. FAULKNER, United States Land Commissioner and justice of the peace at Cleveland, where he also runs a mercantile establishment, was born in Waupaca county, Wisconsin, March 10, 1860. His father, George L. Faulkner, who was born in Broome county, New York, in 1832, was a mechanic. He moved to Wisconsin in the early fifties, was married there, and made his home in that state for a number of years, afterward going to Minnesota. Twelve years were passed there, then four in Nebraska, and in 1881 he moved again, this time to Yellowstone valley, Montana. In the spring of 1882, however, he proceeded to Klickitat county, Washington, and took up the land on which he now resides. He was of English descent, and his wife, Albertine (Gruhlkie) Faulkner, was of German birth. In 1845, when but four years old, she was brought to this country and was educated in the schools of Wisconsin. At present she and her husband reside at Cleveland. The subject of this review was educated in the public schools of Minnesota. His father early taught him the carpenter's trade, and he followed it all the time he remained in Minnesota, as a contractor. Coming to Klickitat county with his father when he was twenty-two years old, he immediately took up a homestead four and a half miles south of Cleveland, upon which he made his home for the next half decade, at the same time taking a timber culture and a pre-emption claim and acquiring other tracts. During this period, he combined the pursuit of his handicraft with the stock business. He opened his present store in the spring of 1895, and has conducted it successfully and profitably since.

At North Yakima, Washington, October 24, 1894, Mr. Faulkner married Lettie M. Mason, whose father, George W. Mason, was a native of Pennsylvania. He came to Yakima county, Washington, in 1888, and now lives near Zillah. He is of Scotch extraction. Her mother, Malinda (Twitchell) Mason, was reared in the state of Maine, but moved to Wisconsin, and thence to Minnesota, where she met and married Mr. Mason. She now lives with her husband near Zillah. Mrs. Faulkner was born in Minnesota, and finished her education in the public schools of Washington. She was married at the age of twenty-five. She and Mr. Faulkner are parents of four children: Reita E., born February 1, 1897; Mildred B., born two years later; George P., born in July, 1900, and Luella M., born in 1902, also in the month of July, all natives of Cleveland. Mrs. Faulkner has the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Belle Sprague, in Zillah; Ralph and Jesse, both married and living near that town; Bertie and Ethel, living with their parents; and Artemus, residing at Cleveland and clerking for Mr. Faulkner. Mr. Faulkner has one brother and three sisters: Bert H., a farmer near Cleveland; Ida L. Blair, of Chicago; Carrie L. Krause, of Albion, Nebraska, and Ellen E. Lilly, of Hot Springs, Washington. Fraternally, Mr. Faulkner is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Order of Washington, and in religion he is a prominent Presbyterian, being an elder in the local church and superintendent of the Sunday school. He is also school director of district number thirty, and he holds a commission as a notary public. He is one of the directors of the Bank of Bickleton. An upright, energetic business man, he is thoroughly respected by his fellow citizens.

DANIEL C. COURTNAY, a mining man, residing two and a half miles from the town of Cleveland, was born in Warren county, Illinois, September 2, 1837. John B. Courtney, his father, was a carpenter and farmer, born in Indiana in 1797. He removed to Illinois when thirty-two years of age and in 1845 crossed the Plains from that state to Oregon, where he died two years after his arrival. Agnes B. (Ritchie) Courtney, our subject's mother, who was two years her husband's senior, was also born in Indiana, and married there. She died in Oregon in 1880, after having become the mother of twelve. Daniel C. Courtney was educated in the common schools of Oregon, having been only eight years old when he came to that state with his parents. He remained at home until nineteen, learning the carpenter's trade from his father, then went to Walla Walla, from which city he made two trips into the Frazier river country. Returning to Oregon in 1863, he ran a saw and grist-mill there for two years, then followed mining in Grant county for two years, then spent a twelvemonth in Linn county. For the ensuing twenty-seven years, he traversed all parts of Josephine and Douglas counties in mining pursuits, a part of this time being spent at Coos Bay, Oregon. He came to Klickitat county in 1900, rented the farm on which he is now living and engaged temporarily in agriculture. It is, however, his intention to remove to Mexico soon and resume his mining.

Mr. Courtney has been twice married. His first wife, the widow of Dr. Colwell, a Jackson county physician, he wedded in 1876. Her father, Ben McCormick, a native of Alabama and a farmer by occupation, crossed the Plains to Oregon in the year 1863, and later died in that state. Her mother was also a native of Alabama, born September 2, 1832. She died in Jackson county, Oregon, after having become the mother of two children, Hugh and Luella, both born in Linn county. Both are dead. Our subject's second marriage was performed in Douglas county, Oregon, in 1885, Mrs. Daily then becoming his wife. She was a daughter of William G. Woodard, a native of Ohio and a saddler by trade, now living at Roseburg, Oregon, having crossed the Plains in 1863. Her mother, Sela (Shaw) Woodard, died in Oregon. Mrs. Courtney is a native of Virginia, born in 1852. She spent her early youth there and was educated in the local common schools. Mr. Courtney is a member of the Presbyterian church, and a Democrat in politics. Like most miners, he has had a varied and interesting career, the details of which, could they be told, would make an interesting story. He has won many friends since coming to Klickitat county, and should he carry out his intention of leaving, many will be sorry to see him go.

JAMES D. VAN NOSTERN, postmaster in the town of Cleveland, where he also runs a mercantile establishment, was born in Oregon on the 20th of April, 1874, the son of David and Elizabeth (Thompson) Van Nostern, natives of Missouri. David Van Nostern, father of our subject, who was born in 1841, was of German descent. Left an orphan at the tender age of six or seven, he was taken charge of by his sister, who took him to West Virginia. Crossing the Plains to Oregon at an early age, he acquired his educational discipline and grew to manhood there. In 1883, he came to Klickitat county, where he resided until his demise in 1891. His wife, Elizabeth (Thompson) Van Nostern, was educated and married in Oregon, and died in that commonwealth in 1882. Our subject was educated in the Oregon and Washington schools, having accompanied his parents to the latter state when ten years old. He remained at home until his father's death in 1891. Then, being only seventeen years old, he went back to Oregon, and for four years attended school there. Upon completing his education, he returned to Cleveland and learned the blacksmith's trade. Later, however, he engaged in the stock business. In 1901, he opened a store for Clanton, Mitty & Company at Cleveland, and the succeeding year he purchased the business. He had charge of it alone for seven months, then took his brother, Isaac, into partnership with him, and the establishment has ever since been under the control of the Van Nostern Brothers. Mr. Van Nostern is also interested in the business of stock raising.

At Bickleton, Washington, in 1901, Mr. Van Nostern married Laura Moorehead, whose father, James, was a farmer, born in Ohio in 1825. He also lived in Iowa, and that state was his starting point when he came to Klickitat county. He died here in 1901. His wife, Mary (Palmer) Moorehead, is a native of New York, but she now resides at North Yakima. Mrs. Van Nostern was born in Iowa in 1876. Coming to Washington with her parents at the age of eight, she attended the schools of that commonwealth. She married at the age of twenty-four. Two children have been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Van Nostern: Arvilla, May 5, 1901, and James, October 10, 1903, the birthplace of both being Cleveland. Fraternally, Mr. Van Nostern is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Loyal Guard and the Order of Washington, while in politics, he is a Republican. A public-spirited man, he has never evaded the responsibilities of citizenship, but is cheerfully performing the duties of such unremunerative offices as school director, school clerk and constable. His duties as postmaster are always discharged conscientiously and with painstaking care. Besides his mercantile establishment he has a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, with nearly seventy head of horses thereon. With experience and commercial ability his, he can hardly fail to win abundant success in life's conflict.

CHARLES M. BECK, a merchant and farmer at Cleveland, was born in Shelby county, Illinois, August 31, 1852. His father, Paul Beck, was also born in the same state, but in Fayette county, in the year 1825, and also is a farmer. In 1856 he removed to Kansas, locating in Linn county, where he resided continuously for twenty-seven years. In the spring of 1883, he came to Klickitat county, and established himself about four miles south of Cleveland, where he still resides. He is of Scotch extraction. His wife, Rosannah P. (Walters) Beck, is of Scotch-Irish descent, but a native of Kentucky, born in 1828. She was married in Illinois, to which state she moved with her parents while young. She came to Washington with her husband and still lives at their home near Cleveland. The subject of this review remained at home with his parents until twenty-four, working on the farm and receiving his educational discipline in the schools of Kansas. For seven years after leaving the parental roof, he was successfully engaged in farming and stock raising, but, in the spring of 1883, he put into practice a determination to try the West, so came to Klickitat county and took up a piece of railroad land. This property afterward went back to the government. He filed on it as a homestead, and for seven years he resided upon it continuously. In 1900, however, he bought another piece of railroad land and moved onto it, and two years later he came to Cleveland, where, in 1903, he engaged in the general merchandise business, having formed a partnership with his son, Chester, for that purpose. His realty holdings consist of three hundred and ten acres, one hundred and sixty of which are in cultivation.

Mr. Beck was married in Kansas, December 7, 1876, the lady being Etta Johnson, daughter of Seneca Johnson, a native of the Green Mountain state, and a farmer by occupation. He was an early settler in Kansas, and died in that state nine years ago. Eleanor (McCrae) Beck, his wife, is a native of Canada, but was married in the state of Illinois, and now lives in Kansas. Mrs. Beck was born in Illinois, on the 31st of January, 1838, and was educated in the state schools of Kansas, where she taught successfully one term of school. Her career as a teacher was cut short, however, for at the age of nineteen she married. She and Mr. Beck have five children: Chester, born in Kansas, in 1877, now engaged in the mercantile business with his father at Cleveland; Mrs. Lulu Van Nostern, whose husband is the owner of the Bickleton-Arlington stage line, who was also born in Kansas; Mrs. Myrtle Bailey, at present living near Cleveland, her birthplace; Oscar and Bernetta, at home with their parents. Mr. Beck belongs to the Baptist church and in politics, is an active Republican. He has been constable in Cleveland for two or three terms. He is highly esteemed as an industrious, agreeable man and a public-spirited citizen.

FRANK SINCLAIR, a young ranchman at Cleveland, was born in Linn county, Kansas, June 28, 1876. His father, John Sinclair, a native of Ireland, came to this country in the early days, and settled in Kansas with his family. He enlisted for service in the Civil war, and participated in numerous engagements, serving through the entire strife. He came to Klickitat county, Washington, in the spring of 1882, and still makes his home there. His wife, Maria, was a native of Missouri. She grew to womanhood and was married in that state, but accompanied her husband to the West and died in Klickitat county in 1896. Frank Sinclair was educated in the public schools of Cleveland, to which town he had come with his parents when less than seven years old. On reaching the age of sixteen, he commenced to earn his living, his first employment being as a sheep herder, and for four years he was in the employ of different wool growers. In 1896, after his mother's death, he engaged in the sheep business with his brother Samuel, forming a partnership which lasted five years. Samuel then bought Frank's interest in the business, and the latter gave himself to farming. In 1901 he took up his present homestead, and since then he has wrought assiduously in its development and cultivation. His brother Samuel is at present living at Dot, Washington, and his married sister, Mrs. Jennie Bellington, is the present postmistress there. Mrs. Annie Highfield, another sister, now resides at Lone Spring, Washington.

At Goldendale, Washington, in 1901, Mr. Sinclair married Nora Zumault, whose father, John Zumault, was a resident of Kansas for a number of years, but afterward removed to the Sound, whence he came to Klickitat county in 1899. Here he still lives, as does her mother, Jane (Hinkle) Zumault. Mrs. Sinclair was born in the state of Kansas in 1883, but received her education in the schools of Mt. Vernon, Skagit county, Washington. She and Mr. Sinclair have one child, John F., born at Cleveland, June 12, 1902. Mr. Sinclair is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and also belongs to the Knights of the Loyal Guard. In politics, he is an active Republican. An enterprising young man, with ability to perceive his opportunity and the courage to seize it, he can hardly fail to win fortune and standing in the rich country where his lot has been cast.

ZACHARY T. DODSON, M. D., a physician and druggist at Cleveland, Washington, was born in McMinn county, Tennessee, May 9, 1849. His father, McMinn Dodson, though of Scotch and English extraction, was also born in McMinn county, Tennessee. By occupation, he was a farmer and stockman. He crossed the Plains by ox teams in 1853, settled in Polk county, Oregon, took up a donation claim there, and resided upon it until his death in 1892. The mother of our subject, Sarah D. (Cunningham) Dodson, was a native of Missouri, of Irish extraction, born in 1831. She married in Tennessee, at the age of nineteen, crossed the Plains with her husband, and is now living in Polk county, Oregon. Dr. Dodson received his preliminary education at the Willamette University, at Salem, Oregon; also took his medical course in the same institution, from which he graduated at twenty-seven. When nineteen years old, he taught his first term of school, and five years of his life were devoted to the pursuit of that profession. After completing his medical course, he began practice at Eugene, Oregon, in partnership with J. C. Shields. He was thus engaged for a year, but in 1878 he removed to eastern Oregon, and opened an office at Rock Creek, whence, after practicing a short time, he removed to Whitman county, Washington, and established himself at Pine City. He remained there four years, during which time he was married. His next move was to Weston, Oregon, but his stay there was short, as it was also at Rock Creek, his next place of abode. He afterward spent seven months in Dallas, Polk county, Oregon, and eight at Myrtle Point, Case county, then went to San Francisco. At a somewhat later date, he opened a drug store in Anderson, Shasta county, California, in company with Dr. S. Gibson, and remained in this business until June, 1885, then selling out and moving to Scotts Valley, Oregon, where he opened an office and remained for five months. Returning then to Rock Creek, he practiced there for the ensuing five years. His next field of labor was the Indian reservation in Klamath county, Oregon, where for eighteen months he held a position as physician. He resumed the general practice in Rock Creek, his former place of abode, but soon moved to Lone-rock, in Gilliam county, Oregon, where the ensuing two years of his life were spent. Removing then to Mayville in the same state, he practiced there a year. In 1903 he came to Cleveland, Washington, opened a drug store and engaged in the dual occupation of dealing in drugs and practicing the healing art.

Dr. Dodson was married at Pine City, Oregon, February 28, 1881, to Frances V. Jackson, a native of Johnson county, Missouri. Her father, John Jackson, farmed in the states of Illinois and Kansas for a number of years, and in 1874 became a resident of California. Five years later he located in Whitman county, Washington, where he still resides, as does also his wife, Sarah (Bowse) Jackson, a native of Missouri. Mrs. Dodson was educated in the California schools. She and Dr. Dodson have five children: Mrs. Mabel Notridge, born in Pine City, February 25, 1882, and residing at Mayville, Oregon; Sarah, born at Anderson, California, May 9, 1885; McMinn, born in Oregon, September 7, 1889; John, born at Klamath Falls, Oregon, October 4, 1893; and Gold, born on the 17th of October, 1898; all at home. Fraternally, Dr. Dodson is connected with the Knights of the Maccabees, and in politics, he is an active Republican. He owns considerable property in Cleveland besides his business. A well educated, thorough physician, with long experience and an honorable record, he enjoys a measure of confidence and respect in his community such as is accorded to none but those who are in earnest in their battle for professional success and their desire to benefit and bless mankind.

THOMAS M. TALBERT, a prosperous farmer living on his eight-hundred-acre ranch a mile and a half south of the town of Cleveland, was born in Pike county, Illinois, January 28, 1850. His father, William J. Talbert, born in Washington county, Virginia, July 12, 1818, was a farmer by occupation, and a tanner by trade. Moving to Missouri in 1835, he made his home near Joplin, in a settlement of French people, for two years, going later to Pike county, Illinois, where he was married in 1844. He was of Holland Dutch descent. He joined the Methodist Episcopal church early in life, and, until his death, in 1897, continued to be an influential and active member of it, holding various positions in the church at different times. Elizabeth (Hull) Talbert, his wife, was of English parentage, but a native of Randolph county, Illinois, born March 20, 1825. In 1840 she moved with her parents to Pike county, and there she was married four years later, as already stated. There also she died in 1887, after having become the mother of nine children. The subject of this review attended the public schools of Illinois, but completed his education after coming to Klickitat county. He remained at home with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-eight, then, on October 6, 1878, went to Portland, Oregon, but the next spring he came back to the section of country that had been his home so long. For four years he followed teaming at Goldendale. Then he bought a ranch near town, and was engaged in farming for four years. In 1886 he moved to a place a mile and a half south of Cleveland, took up a homestead, bought another hundred and sixty acres of land, and resumed, in a new location, his former business, namely, agriculture and stock raising. Success has crowned his efforts. At present he is the owner of eight hundred acres, two hundred of which are in cultivation and producing bountifully. He also rents and farms a section of school land.

At Goldendale, Washington, January 1, 1883, Mr. Talbert married Nellie M. Ballington, daughter of Charles Ballington, a native of Maine, born November 8, 1842; by occupation a farmer. When nine years of age, her father migrated to Waupaca, Wisconsin, where he married and where his home was until the spring of 1878, when he removed to Oregon. After a stay of six months, he came to Klickitat county. He settled near Goldendale, resided there four years, and then moved to a location five miles south of Cleveland, took up a homestead and made his home upon it for seven consecutive years. He then sold his ranch, removed to Caldwell, Idaho, and followed the confectionery business there for a year. At present he is living at Portland, Oregon, where he practices as a cancer specialist. His wife, whose maiden name was Louisa Roberts, was one of a pair of twins. She died in Klickitat county in 1880. Mrs. Talbert was born near Waupaca, Wisconsin, December 20, 1863, and in the public schools there she took her first steps in the pursuit of knowledge. Her education was completed, however, in the Goldendale High school. She has a brother, Fred, in Klickitat county, the present postmaster at Dot; a sister, Jessie, in Seattle, and a brother, Henry, in Oregon. She and Mr. Talbert are parents of four children, namely: Geda E., born at Goldendale, June 6, 1884; Walter I., born at the same place, on the 18th of November, 1887; Myrtle, born near Cleveland, December 13, 1890; and Harry W., born at Cleveland, on Independence day, in the year 1893. Mr. Talbert is a member of the Presbyterian church, in which for sixteen years he has been ruling elder, and in which he has at different times held numerous other offices. He was commissioner of the general assembly from his church at the meeting at Los Angeles, California, in 1903. In politics, he is an active Republican. He has capably filled the position of deputy sheriff of Klickitat county and for a year he was city marshal of Goldendale. His life in public and private is considered above reproach. As an officer, as a citizen and as a man, and in all the varied relations of life, he has so demeaned himself always as to cement to himself the respect and esteem of those with whom he has been associated.

GEORGE W. LYMER, a prosperous stockman of Cleveland, is a native of the state of Ohio, born in Wyandotte county, in the year 1843. His father, William Lymer, who was of English birth, followed farming as an occupation. In the early thirties he came to the United States and settled in Ohio, whence he moved to Missouri, when our subject was a young boy. After six years' residence in that state, he moved to Illinois, where he died in 1893. Our subject's mother, Clarissa, who was also English, was married in her native land, but soon after came to the United States, and she died in Ohio. George W. Lymer received his education in the public schools of the states of Ohio and Illinois. He remained at home until twenty-five years of age, working on the parental farm. The three succeeding years were spent in work for various farmers in the neighborhood, but in the spring of 1872 he determined on a radical change of residence, so came to the territory of Washington, and located in Goldendale. He there worked for Mr. Alexander for three months, then for J. J. Golden, the founder of the town of Goldendale, for three months more, after which he worked several months for Benjamin Butler as a sheep shearer. He then went into the stock business with his brother-in-law, near Goldendale, and this partnership lasted for ten years, being dissolved in 1882. His next venture was made in the neighborhood of Cleveland, where he continued in the horse business for a number of years. In 1891 he took up a homestead, also bought a half section of railroad land, and fixed the property up for a stock ranch. He lived on it until 1901, then disposed of it and moved to Cleveland, where he is still engaged in the buying and selling of horses. He has shipped many carloads of horses to eastern points, principally Chicago, and has made a financial success of the business. In 1892 he purchased the Cleveland grist-mill, which he operated successfully, in addition to attending to his other business, for six years, but in the fall of 1898 he sold out. That he possesses good business abilities is evinced by the fact that he has succeeded in a line in which many fail, namely, in the handling and shipment of horses. He is still the owner of a hundred and sixty acres of fenced land, sixty acres of which are plowed, and there are two substantial barns on the property, besides a dwelling and a small orchard. Mr. Lymer has a married sister, now living in Christian county, Illinois, Mrs. Mary Spates, and a brother, James Lymer, also residing in Illinois. Mr. Lymer is a member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics he is an active Republican. He has served on the school board of his district and in every way discharged the duties devolving upon him as a good citizen. His standing in the community is an enviable one.

EDWARD MORRIS, a Klickit county farmer and stock raiser, residing a mile north of the town of Cleveland, is a native of New York state, born in Wyoming county, June 14, 1848. His father, Pattock Morris, of Irish extraction, but likewise a native of New York, was a merchant and farmer. In 1854 he removed to Wisconsin and settled at Oak Groves, where he resided for eight years, engaged in farming, then removing to Minnesota. In 1862 he enlisted in Company K, Seventh Minnesota infantry, and served until 1865, when he was taken down with a disease contracted in the service and died. His wife, whose name was Lucy Bedow, was born, brought up and educated in New York, in which state she married. She now resides with our subject on his farm near Cleveland. Her parents were English. Edward Morris, whose life is the theme of this article, received his early education in the common schools of the state of Minnesota, removing to that state with his parents when about seven years old. He remained at home with his mother and father until the time of his father's death, in 1865, then with his mother for four years. Removing to California in the fall of 1869, he there followed teaming and farming for a period of nine years. It was in the year 1878 that he first came to the Cleveland country, in Klickit county, but as the Indians were on the warpath at that time, he remained there only a little while. Almost all the settlers in the surrounding country were moving with their families either to The Dalles, Oregon, or to Goldendale, and he helped some of the families to get to these places. Returning to Cleveland soon after the scare subsided, he was employed that summer in putting up hay; the fall and winter of the same year he spent in the timber at work. In 1879

he took up his present homestead, and upon it he has since lived with his mother, engaging in farming and also, since 1880, in raising and handling horses. His farm comprises one hundred and sixty acres, partly in cultivation, and he also owns one hundred acres of timber land. To the cultivation and improvement of his property and to the horse business he devotes himself with assiduity and zeal, and he has won an enviable success in both lines, at the same time gaining and retaining a place in the esteem and regard of his neighbors. In politics, he is a Republican.

CHARLES L. TALBERT, the owner of a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of agricultural and forty acres of timber land, a mile and a half west of the town of Cleveland, was born in Pike county, Illinois, October 20, 1859, the son of William J. and Elizabeth (Hull) Talbert. His father, a Virginian, born July 12, 1818, was a farmer by occupation. He moved to Missouri at the age of twelve, and resided in that state for a period of two years, going thence to Pike county, Illinois, of which state he became a pioneer settler, passing there the remainder of his days. He was of Scotch and Irish parentage. His wife was likewise a Virginian, and her people were likewise pioneers of Illinois, having moved to Pike county among the earliest immigrants. She died there in the year 1890. Charles L. received his education in Illinois, graduating from the grammar and high schools with honor. He was at home with his parents until thirty years of age, farming in partnership with his father, who gave him an interest in the home place. In 1888 he moved to Springfield, Missouri, where he learned the trade of a carpenter, spending three years in house building. He was married during this time. In April, 1892, he returned to Illinois and again engaged in farming, but in the fall of 1893 came to Klickit county, located a mile and a half west of Cleveland, rented a place there for four years, and once more took up the life of an agriculturist. In 1897 he homesteaded the land that is now his home, and the ensuing years have been employed in improving and cultivating it. He is interested, also, to some extent in mining stock. Mr. Talbert is one of a family of nine children, the others being: Thomas, living near him; Mrs. Etta Clark, in Pike county, Illinois; Edward, George and Hattie, deceased in Illinois; Sarah, who died young; Mrs. Martha E. Courtney, who passed away in Cleveland; and Mrs. Mary I. Dille, who died in Denver, Colorado.

In Springfield, Missouri, June 5, 1889, Mr. Talbert married Ellen Green, a native of Missouri, born in 1858. She was educated in the Illinois schools. Her father, Lemuel Green, was a Missouri farmer, who moved to Illinois in 1861, and died in that state some years later. Mrs. Talbert has a brother, Henry, who lives in the Indian Territory, and a married sister, Mrs. Eliza McCune, whose home is in Kansas City, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Talbert have four children, namely: Irene, born in Missouri, March 26, 1890; Anita, born in Illinois, May 30, 1892; Mary L., born in Klickitat county, September 26, 1894; and Ralph V., also born in Washington, August 24, 1896. In religious persuasion, Mr. Talbert is a Presbyterian, and in politics, a Republican. He is an energetic farmer, and an upright, honorable man, highly esteemed by all who know him intimately.

ISAAC B. COURTNAY, one of the oldest pioneers of Klickitat county, resides on his farm two and a half miles west of Cleveland. He was born in Clark county, Indiana, June 18, 1821, making him now eighty-three years of age. John D. Courtney, his father, a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, was a farmer. He crossed the Plains in 1845 with his wife and son, and was accidentally killed in Oregon by a falling tree. He married in Indiana a native of the Quaker state, Agnes Ritchie by name, who died in Oregon several years after the demise of her husband. The subject of this review was educated in the schools of Illinois, to which state his father removed from Indiana. The family settled first in Fulton county, but in 1833 went to Warren county, where Isaac B. grew up. He remained with his parents until their death, taking charge of the rest of the family at the time his father was accidentally killed. During all these years, he followed farming principally. Going to Umatilla county, Oregon, in 1858, with cattle, he remained there for five years, then settled in the Willamette valley. In 1878 he came to Goldendale, and spent six years in that locality, but in 1884 in partnership with Tom Talbert, he bought a place near Cleveland. This they farmed for several years, Mr. Courtney eventually selling out to his associate. He fled on his present homestead in 1900, and has since made it his home.

Mr. Courtney has been married three times. His first wife's maiden name was Elizabeth Wagner and the ceremony which joined her to him was performed in Henderson county, Illinois, in 1844. She died in Oregon, January 10, 1846. She was the daughter of Frederick Wagner, a farmer born in Pennsylvania, who passed away in the state of Indiana. The second marriage of our subject took place in the year 1862, and the lady who then became his wife remained by his side for twenty-six years, then died at Goldendale, Washington. Mr. Courtney was married a third time in 1893, when Martha E. Talbert joined fortunes with him, but she passed away a half decade later, leaving him again alone. He has one child by his first marriage, Samuel M., born in Henderson county, Illinois, January 10, 1845, and now living in Oregon. Mr. Courtney is a member of and an elder in the Presbyterian church. One of the earliest pioneers of the Northwest, he has participated in the development of more than one section of it, and has witnessed its gradual settlement, subjugation and civilization, contributing always his mite to the general progress. While he may not have retained for himself so much worldly treasure as some, he is rich in the esteem and confidence of his neighbors, and the consciousness of having lived a life of honor and stainless integrity.

EDGAR E. MASON, a prosperous ranchman of Klickitat county, resides on his hundred and sixty acre farm, three miles west of the town of Cleveland. He was born in Wisconsin, near the city of Fond du Lac, in the year 1847. His father, Jacob Mason, a native of the Quaker state, and likewise a farmer by occupation, moved to Wisconsin in 1845, becoming a pioneer of that state. He went to Minnesota in 1855 and died there some years later. He belonged to an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. His wife, whose maiden name was Amanda Harroun, was born in the Green Mountain state, to English parents, removed to Pennsylvania in the early days, and was there married. She died at her son's home in Klickitat county, in the year 1895. Edgar E. received his education in the common schools of Minnesota. He remained at home until twenty-two years old, but in 1878 journeyed westward to California, in which state he followed the occupation of a gardener for two years, going then to the Willamette valley in Oregon, where he farmed for an additional two years. In 1882 he came to Klickitat county. A few months were spent in Goldendale and Cleveland, in various kinds of work, but that fall he took a piece of land, on which he lived for three years. Going to Seattle in 1885, he worked in that city for a twelvemonth, then returned to Cleveland, and homesteaded his present land, buying the improvements which were on the place at that time. He has since continued to reside on the property, engaged in farming and stock raising.

At Albany, Oregon, Mr. Mason married Mary E. Twitchell, a daughter of Hiram and Maria (Dodge) Twitchell, whose father, a farmer, was born in the state of Maine. By 1853, however, Mr. Twitchell had moved to Wisconsin, and later he had lived in Iowa and Minnesota. In 1878 he migrated to California, whence he came to Linn county, Oregon, and his earthly pilgrimage was terminated at Cleveland, Washington, in 1896. His wife, who was brought up and married in the state of Maine, also died in Cleveland. Mrs. Mason was likewise born in Maine in October, 1845, but grew to womanhood and was educated in Minnesota. She has a brother, William Twitchell, living in the state; a sister, Mrs. Malinda Mason, at Zillah; another, Ann, now Mrs. C. F. Williams, near Goldendale, and still another, Mrs. Helen Merton, also at Zillah. One sister, Mrs. Effie L. Hackley, died in Cleveland during the month of December, 1903. Mr. Mason has five brothers and sisters now living, namely: George W., at Zillah; David, in Gilliam county, Oregon; Mrs. Cornelia Sanborn, in Portland; Mrs. Lucinda Mills, and Mrs. Hattie Baker, in Lake county, California, and Swift county, Minnesota, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Mason have two children, both born in Cleveland, Ivy and Bruce, the daughter born October 10, 1885, and the son February 11, 1889. In religious persuasion, Mr. Mason is a Presbyterian, and in politics, an active Republican. His daily walk is upright and irreproachable; his dealings with his fellow men are invariably characterized by honor and integrity, and as a citizen he is sufficiently public-spirited to bear willingly his share in the furtherance of whatever he conceives to be for the promotion of the general welfare of his community.

ALEXANDER HIRONIMOUS, proprietor of a sawmill on Spring Creek, located three and a half miles from the town of Cleveland, a machinist by trade, was born in Walla Walla, April 17, 1873. His father, Zachariah W. Hironimos, was a native of Missouri, born in the year 1842. When six years old, he crossed the Plains to California with his parents, and lived in the Golden state until 1871, in which year he wedded Adeline Louder, a native of Iowa, born in 1856. He passed away in Walla Walla in the latter part of 1879. Mrs. Hironimos is still living, on Pine creek, near Cleveland. She crossed the Plains when a young girl to California, whence she removed to western Oregon, and later to Klickitat county. Mr. Hironimos, who is one of a family of three children, received his education in the public schools of Walla Walla, later taking a business course in the Fresno Business College, of Fresno, California. He was but six years old when his father died. At the age of fifteen, he left home to enter the employ of the Washington Creamery Company, for which firm he worked for a period of five years, then entering the employ of Mr. Hunt in his machine shops. He spent sixteen months at this, then removed to California and secured work with the Sanger Lumbering Company. After a service of nine months, he left them to take a position in the Fresno machine shops, in which he was employed for three years. He was also employed by the Union Iron Works for a short time. Coming to Cleveland in 1902, he opened, in connection with his present partner, S. L. Warren, a sawmill on Spring creek, and this he has ever since operated, achieving an enviable success in his business, which is prospering, especially at present, owing to the activity in building, the country surrounding him being settled more and more each year. He has one brother, Henry, working for him in the mill, and a married sister, Mrs. Nancy Walling, living in Mabton. Fraternally, Mr. Hironimos is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in politics, he is a Republican. A shrewd business man, a competent mechanic, and an indefatigable worker, he has already acquired some valuable interests in Cleveland and on Spring creek, and, with the start already gained, the skill already acquired, and the abilities with which nature has endowed him, he is certainly in a position to grasp his share of the prizes which the future may bring before him.

SIMEON L. WARREN, a prosperous millman, the owner of a half interest in the mill of Warren & Hironimos, on Spring creek, near Cleveland, is a native of Maine, born in Franklin county, March 8, 1844. His father, Samuel, a merchant and farmer, was likewise born in the Pine Tree state. He moved to Canada in after years, and lived there for some time, then recrossed the line into New York, where he resided several years, eventually, however, returning to Canada, where he died in the year 1898. His wife, whose maiden name was Joan Lamkin, was born and married in the state of Maine, and died in Canada eight months before her husband's demise. Our subject attended the common schools of his native state, remaining with his parents until he reached the age of nineteen. He worked for his father while in Canada, hewing ship timbers, but on leaving home he entered the employ of a railroad company as brakeman, an occupation which he followed about a year. Then he went to work for his father again, this time, however, in New York state, for the elder Warren had crossed, in the meantime, the Canadian border. He remained with him in the shipbuilding business for eighteen months, then tried farming a year in Maine, then to Canada once more. For eighteen months he ran a planer in his father's mill, for the elder Warren was again in Canada. At the end of this period, our subject went once more to Maine and was there married. He lived in the state four years, then, his wife having died in 1875, moved alone to California, in which state he arrived in the summer of 1876. His first year in the Golden state was spent on a ranch. In 1877, however, he engaged in the wholesale liquor business, remaining therein a little over a year and a half, whereupon he went back to farm work. In the fall of 1879 he removed to Washington (then a territory), settled in Klickitat county, near Bickleton, rented a place and engaged in farming. He spent three years on this, his first home in Washington, and the succeeding two on his father-in-law's farm, then worked one year for Dave Sprinkle in the mill business. He then purchased the mill and continued to run it alone until 1900, when he sold out to Harshbarger & Clanton, by whom he was employed for the ensuing nine months. His next employer was Mr. Highfill, in whose service he remained five months. In 1903 he put up his present mill on Spring creek, in company with Alexander Hironimos, and the two have operated the plant successfully ever since.

Mr. Warren has been twice married. In 1870, in the state of Maine, he wedded Lucinda White, who bore him one child, Clara May, now Mrs. Joseph Riggs. This Mrs. Warren died in Maine, after having lived with him for three years. His second marriage occurred in Klickitat county, in 1883, the lady being Augusta Jane Noblet, a native of California, the daughter of William B. and Elizabeth (Young) Noblet, the former of German descent, but a native of Tennessee. He was a carpenter by trade. He moved to Missouri when a young man, and thence to California in 1856, crossing the Plains with ox teams in a company of emigrants. He settled in Nevada county, where for twenty years he worked at mining and freighting. He came to Klickitat county in 1879 and died there in 1897. Mrs. Warren's mother, also a native of Tennessee, was married in Missouri, to which state she moved when a child. She crossed the Plains with her husband and is now living on the Yakima Indian reservation. Mrs. Warren was born in the Golden state, August 14, 1859, and was educated in its schools. She and Mr. Warren have six children, as follows: Mrs. Lillie B. Cunningham, living near Dot postoffice, born July 8, 1884; Samuel B., born July 21, 1888; Joseph F., on November 29, 1889; Lulu D., Flora S., and Emma A., born August 1, 1891, September 4, 1893, and April 28, 1896, respectively, all at home. The children were all born in Klickitat county. Mr. Warren is a member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics, a Democrat. Besides his interest in the sawmill, he owns a house and lot in Cleveland. A very generous, benevolent man, he has freely given of his lumber at all times to assist in the construction of churches and public buildings in the neighborhood. In many substantial ways, he has given proof of his interest in the development and general welfare of Klickitat county, whose citizens respect him as a man of industry, integrity and worth.

WILLIAM S. LONG, a prosperous Klickitat county farmer, resides on his three hundred and twenty-acre ranch a half mile east of the town of Cleveland. He is a native of Oregon, born in Linn county, March 2, 1862, the son of Lewis Long, a native of Ohio, of German parentage. Moving to Illinois when a young boy, the elder Long became a pioneer of that state, but in 1854 he crossed the Plains with his wife, whose maiden name was Sarah A. Hesser, and settled in Linn county, Oregon. He there took a donation claim, on which he lived for over forty years, or until his death in 1894. His wife, a native of Ohio, likewise passed away on the old homestead in Linn county, on the 10th of July, 1902. She was descended from an old German family. She became the mother of nine children, of whom seven are still living. William S., of this review, was educated in the public schools of Oregon. He remained at home on the farm until twenty-four, at which time he married, rented a place near the family home and engaged in agriculture on his own account. He followed that life in the same locality for a period of nine years, but in the fall of 1895 removed to Klickitat county, and took a homestead about five miles southeast of Cleveland. He lived on the place seven years, putting part of the land into cultivation, but in 1903 he sold the tract and bought his present ranch, only a half-mile from town, and to the cultivation and improvement of this, he is now devoting himself with assiduity and success. Of the brothers and sisters of our subject: Jonathan and Ransom died in Oregon; Alonzo now lives in Baker county, that state; Mrs. Phoebe Owens makes her home in Linn county, Oregon; Mrs. Mary J. Ross resides at Baker City; Peter also lives in Oregon, and Gabriel and Columbus live together six miles southeast of Cleveland. William is the youngest child of the family.

The marriage of our subject took place in Linn county, Oregon, in the year 1886, the lady being Olive Wegle, a native of Oregon. Her father, Jacob Wegle, crossed the Plains with his parents in 1848, when he was a very small child. He grew up in Oregon, was married there, and still makes his home there. His daughter Olive is the oldest of his five children; the others being: James E., Mrs. Catherine Owens, Nellie and Oscar, all living at present in Linn county, Oregon. Mrs. Long's mother, Miranda (Kenney) Wegle, also crossed the Plains to Oregon with her people in 1848. She grew up and married in that state, and still lives at the family home with her husband. Mrs. Long was born in 1869, educated in the schools of Linn county, her birthplace, and, after leaving school, learned dress-making, but an early marriage prevented her from following her handicraft as a business. Fraternally, Mr. Long is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Order of Washington, while in politics, he is an active Democrat, greatly interested in all campaigns, local and national. An energetic and successful farmer, a substantial, public-spirited citizen and an honorable man, he has gained for himself an enviable standing in his community and in the county.

RICHARD D. WHITE. The privilege of having assisted in the progress and been an eye-witness of the development of the great Northwest from almost its very beginnings is a rare one, and its possessors may well feel proud of the honor. To have been born in the Willamette valley within six months after Oregon became a territory, to have descended from one of its oldest pioneer families, and to have spent his whole life in this rich section of the United States are privileges possessed by the subject of this sketch, now residing in this county, seven miles northwest of Arlington, Oregon. He was born January 6, 1849, in Washington county, and is the son of Richard and Caroline (Rider) White, natives of England. The elder White came to Canada in 1836, removed to Missouri in 1843, and in 1844 crossed the Plains, with one of the earliest emigrant trains to make that hazardous journey. In 1880 he left Oregon for California, and in that state his death occurred in 1882. During his life he was a farmer, stock raiser and real estate man. He built the St. Charles hotel in Portland. Richard D.'s mother died when he was but eighteen months old.

Our subject attended the public schools of Oregon, remaining at home until he was twenty-one. His father and he opened a shoe store in Portland in 1867, which they conducted until 1870. Then the son mined awhile, operated the St. Charles hotel six months, and finally, in March, 1871, came to Klickitat county, locating four miles south of Goldendale. For five years he was in the cattle business; then he sold out and took up his residence east of Rock creek, where he lived three years before removing to his present home. This he acquired by filing a timber culture claim to the land. He took up the sheep industry in 1894, and is now one of the leading sheep men in the county.

Mr. White was married on the Walker ranch in 1877, the lady being Miss Ada Purvine, whose parents are pioneers of Klickitat county. She was born in Washington county, Oregon, in the year 1860, and reared in that state. After sixteen years of married life, she passed away, leaving, besides her husband, five children to mourn their loss: Mabel E., born in Oregon, August 4, 1878, now teaching school; Thomas, Horace, Lizzie, who recently finished a course in a Portland business college; and May, all born in this county. One son, Richard, is dead. Mr. White was again married, at Goldendale, March 25, 1898, the bride this time being Mrs. Susan Hopkins. She is the daughter of Thomas Hendricks, an Oregon pioneer, who is still living, a resident of the Klickitat valley. Susan Hendricks was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, in February, 1865, was educated in Oregon's schools, and, at the age of twenty-five, was married to James Hopkins. Three children were born to this union, of whom only one, Robert, is living. Mr. Hopkins died in 1895. Mr. White is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, belongs to the Presbyterian church, and, in politics, is an active Democrat. His ranch, consisting of two thousand six hundred and forty acres, of which five hundred are in crop, is one of the largest in southern Washington and is well equipped. At present he owns two thousand one hundred head of sheep, from which he derives a goodly income. Mr. White commands the good will and the sincere respect of every one who knows him, is making a most gratifying success out of his business, and is an honored son of the West.

ISAAC CLARK is a well-known farmer and stockman, with present residence eight miles north-east of Arlington, Oregon. He is a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, born March 10, 1839, and in the Quaker state received a common school education. When he was a babe of two years his father died, and later, when seven years old, his mother placed him for care with a family, and from that time to the present day he has been on his own responsibility for a livelihood. At the age of sixteen he commenced working as an apprentice at the harness making trade, but after a year and a half in this vocation, failing health caused him to go to sea. He cruised on whaling voyages for four years, during this time being on the vessel all the while, except occasionally when in port. At the end of this time his health was so improved that he could leave the sea. He went then to Illinois, and later to New York, where he was employed for five years on a farm. In 1864 he enlisted in Company K, First New York Dragoons, and served till the close of the war. He was mustered out of service at Cloud's Mill, Virginia, and received his discharge at Rochester, New York. After being released from military service he accepted work on the farm with his former employer for one year, then, in 1866, went to Minnesota. Here he bought land and followed farming for five or six years. After coming west, Mr. Clark was appointed by President Grant in 1873 instructor in farming on the Nez Perces reservation in Idaho. He served in this position for slightly more than a year, and then was obliged to resign on account of poor health. Under the advice of physicians, who pronounced his complaint to be rheumatism of the heart, he started to California with hopes of bettering his health. While en route he stopped at Goldendale to visit Mr. G. W. Lymer, his wife's cousin, and, finding the climate entirely beneficial to his health, decided not to go to California. In accordance with this decision he filed on a homestead near Centerville, in October, 1874. In 1883 he filed on a timber culture, and in 1885 on his present farm. Since arriving in Klickitat county he has been engaged in farming chiefly.

Mr. Clark was married in Minnesota, February 24, 1869, to Miss Emily A. Sanders, a native of England, born April 12, 1849. She came from England to the United States when six years of age, her objective point being Ohio. In Ohio she received a common school education and afterwards taught very successfully. She married Mr. Clark at the age of nineteen. Her parents were Joseph and Ellen (Lymer) Sanders, both of English birth. Joseph Sanders was born in 1822, and was a shoemaker by trade. He came to the United States in 1855 and settled in New York, where he lived for several years. From New York he moved to Ohio, thence to Illinois, and later to Minnesota. His next and final move was to Klickitat county, arriving in 1880. He first took up a homestead, then, after four years of residence on the place, moved to a farm near Cleveland. His death occurred in 1900. Ellen (Lymer) Sanders was married in England, and came to the United States with her husband in 1855, as just stated. Her death occurred in 1894. Mr. Clark's parents were William and Mary (Bell) Clark, the former of English extraction and the latter of Irish. William Clark was born in Virginia, and after attaining manhood followed the trade of a mechanic. His death occurred in Philadelphia. Mary (Bell) Clark was born in Pennsylvania, in which state her death occurred in 1852. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Clark are: Aquila E., born in Minnesota, January 1, 1870, now residing in Goldendale; Grace E., born on the Lapwai reservation in Idaho, November 9, 1873, now Mrs. Furey, with residence in East Portland; Melvin J., born in Klickitat county, February 19, 1876, deceased at the age of twenty-five; June, born in Minnesota, in June, 1871, deceased at the age of fourteen months; Francis H., born in Klickitat county, December 18, 1881; James L., born in Klickitat county, October 2, 1883, now residing at home, and George W., born in Klickitat county at the present home, January 4, 1886. In religion, Mr. Clark is an adherent of the Presbyterian church, and he has served as a deacon in the Dot church of that denomination for several years. He has membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, and no one in Klickitat county is more deserving of the honors of this organization than he. During his life time he has served his country, not only as a soldier risking life and fortune in the defense of national honor, but as a pioneer striving to plant the emblems of civilization in an undeveloped wilderness whose latent resources, turned into the channels of commerce by sturdy hands, add wealth and renown to our nation.

MARTIN FUHRMAN, a sheepman and landowner residing twenty miles east of Goldendale, on Rock creek at Fuhrman postoffice, is a native of Hungary, born in 1845, the son of Martin and Barbara (Barack) Fuhrman, both natives of Hungary, though of German parentage. Martin Fuhrman, the elder, was a farmer. He was born in Hungary in 1814 and came to the United States in 1858, settling first in Indiana, and later in Independence, Iowa. Thence he moved to the Black hills, where his death occurred. The mother, Barbara (Barack) Fuhrman, died in Hungary. Martin Fuhrman received the greater part of his education in his native land. After coming to the United States he lived with his father in Iowa until twenty-eight years of age, at which time he married and took up farming independently, in Iowa. After farming in that state for three years, he came to Klickitat county, arriving in 1877, and took up a timber claim on the north side of the Columbia river, fifteen miles from The Dalles, at what is known as Daily Station.

He later filed a homestead claim closer to The Dalles, on which he lived for a time, then sold out and moved into The Dalles, where he accepted employment from the Northern Pacific Company. For three years following he worked at carpentering for the company in Tacoma and Portland. Then he bought a band of sheep and settled on land ten miles west of Goldendale. In 1890 he moved into the Rock creek country and purchased an extensive tract of land, where he has run sheep ever since. He also raises cattle and horses, having nearly sixty head of the former.

Mr. Fuhrman was married in Iowa, August 24, 1873, to Miss Mary N. Maloney, a native of Iowa, born November 25, 1856, of Irish descent. Her father, Patrick Maloney, a farmer living five miles from Independence, was quite well-to-do. Her mother's maiden name was Mary Murray. Both parents are now dead. Children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Fuhrman are Frederick, Thomas, Martin, Winifred, James, Margaretta and Charles. In politics, Mr. Fuhrman is a Republican, and he is active enough in support of his political faith to attend the caucuses and county conventions. His land holdings comprise four thousand acres, some of it suitable for farming purposes, and the balance for grazing. Besides horses, cattle and hogs, he has a herd of four thousand sheep. He and his wife are prominent in neighborhood affairs and have the highest esteem of a wide circle of associates. Mrs. Fuhrman is postmistress of the Fuhrman postoffice, the establishment of which in 1900 she was instrumental in bringing about. In this capacity she has come to be as widely and favorably known as has her husband in his special line pertaining to the management of land and stock.

JAMES A. SMITH is a highly-respected citizen of Klickitat county, with residence one and one-half miles northwest of Kuhn postoffice and twelve miles southeast of Bickleton. He was born in Buckinghamshire, England, February 10, 1842, the son of Richard and Ann (Robbins) Smith, natives of England. Richard Smith lived his entire life time in England. He was a veterinary surgeon. Ann (Robbins) Smith lived from childhood to old age there, residing the greater part of the time in her native shire. Both parents are now deceased. James A. grew to manhood in England, and, during youth received his education in the public schools. When fifteen years of age, he left home and went to London, where he followed various occupations for twenty-five years. In 1882 he came to the United States, his objective point being Dekalb county, Illinois. He worked at tile draining there for two years, then, in 1884, went to Nebraska, where he engaged in farming. His final move was to Klickitat county, Washington, in the fall of 1886. Upon his arrival, he filed on a quarter section of land, and since, by purchase, has added to his land holdings till he now has over three thousand acres, some of which is the most valuable grazing land in the county. In 1866 he went into the sheep business, continuing in the same until within the last year, when he sold out.

In November of 1870, Mr. Smith married Miss Sarah Ann Wallis, the ceremony being performed in London. Miss Wallis was a native of England, born near Lincolnshire, February 25, 1844, and she received her education in the English schools. Children to this marriage are: Arthur J., born December 31, 1872; Bertrie, February 25, 1879, and Percy, August 4, 1881, all natives of London; Daisy, born in Illinois, May 3, 1884, and Lillie A., now deceased. In religion, Mrs. Smith is a Methodist. Mr. Smith is a Republican in politics. He is held in high esteem by all his acquaintances, and is popularly reputed to be a man of integrity and worth. He has served his community as justice of the peace, and his discharge of the duties of that office is said to have been creditable to himself and satisfactory to the public at whose instance he administered justice. He is spoken of by his many friends as "a fine old Englishman."

ARTHUR J. SMITH, who is a resident of the vicinity of Kuhn, Klickitat county, Washington, was born in England, December 31, 1872. His father, James A. Smith, is also English, as is the mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Sarah A. Wallis. When Arthur was ten years of age, his parents moved with him to the United States, settling in Dekalb county, Illinois, where they remained for four years. There he completed his education, though the greater part of his school training was acquired before leaving the old country. In 1886, the family came to Klickitat county, Washington. When Arthur J. became a young man he accepted employment as a sheep herder, from Ezra Camp, who at that time resided near Prosser, Washington, and at various times afterward he worked for other men who were engaged in the sheep business. With the experience he thus acquired, and with his earnings, a large part of which he retained, he was enabled, in 1893, to go into the business of wool growing on his own account. He is still an earnest devotee of the sheep industry, as is also his father, who is interested with him. He now owns two sections of land, all of which is fenced and a part of which is under cultivation, the remainder being used as a pasture for his sheep, of which he has about two thousand one hundred head. He is very much opposed to the government's proposed shutting out of stockmen from the forest reserves, a policy which cannot but injure the stock industry and work a hardship upon all stockmen, rendering useless the foothill pasture lands. He says that while it formerly cost but fifty cents to maintain a ewe for a year, the cost has now increased to nearly three times that amount, or about a dollar and a quarter. Being diligent in business, and a careful student of everything relating to his industry, he is well posted on this important subject.

In the Bickleton church, in Klickitat county, on April 24, 1898, Mr. Smith married Dora Myers, a native of Iowa. Her father, Thurston Myers, and her mother are residents of the state of Kansas. Mr. Smith has two brothers, Bertrie and Percy, both engaged in the sheep business in Klickitat county, and one sister, Daisy M., the youngest of the family, living at home. In politics, Mr. Smith is a Republican.

ALFRED O. WOODS, one of the most highly-esteemed pioneers of Klickitat county and the Northwest, and one of the most successful farmers and stockmen of the vicinity of Dot postoffice, can claim for his birthplace the famous Willamette valley. To be able to do so is a distinction which few of his age enjoy, for settlers were few in the west in 1847, on the 20th of June of which year Mr. Woods was born. His father, Joseph W. Woods, is a native of Westborough, Massachusetts, born in 1813. At an early age he took to the sea, and for seven years he served before the mast. When at length he decided to try his fortunes on terra firma, he left his ship at the Sandwich Islands, where he remained for nine months, coming then direct to Oregon City, Oregon, which town he first saw in May, 1842. Three years later, he married Martha J. White, a native of England, who had come to the United States when six years old, had grown up in Canada, and had crossed the Plains with her parents in 1844. This honored pioneer couple are both living, Mr. Woods being at the home of our subject, and Mrs. Woods with a niece. Alfred O. Woods received such educational advantages as the pioneer schools of Oregon afforded. When seventeen, he enlisted in Company D, First Oregon Infantry, and for fourteen months he served with that regiment, performing such military duties as the Civil war rendered necessary in Oregon. Upon receiving his discharge, he went to Portland and engaged in clerking in a general merchandise store. In 1871 he came to Klickitat county, settled near Centerville, and engaged in farming, which occupation was followed by him with assiduity for half a decade. Returning then to his old home in Oregon, he made his home there for four years, then, in the fall of 1880, he returned to Klickitat county, and took up the place where he now lives. Until 1892, he gave much attention to cattle raising, but in that year he turned his mind more especially to sheep, and at the present time he has three thousand three hundred of these animals. He keeps, now, only a few head of cattle and horses. His land holdings consist of twelve hundred acres, much of which is used only for pasturing his stock.

At Oswego, Oregon, on the 18th of November, 1872, Mr. Woods married Martha C. Soper, who was likewise a native Oregonian, born in Multnomah county, July 4, 1854. Her father, Rheuben Soper, was a native of Ohio, but of German descent. In 1850 he crossed the Plains to California, but the next season he became a resident of Oregon, in which state he spent the remainder of his life time. Mrs. Woods' mother, Melissa (Powers) Soper, was born in Oneida county, New York, her lineage being Scotch. When quite young she accompanied her parents across the Plains to Oregon, and in Jackson county, that state, she is still living. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Woods, with the birthplace and date of birth of each, are: William W., Klickitat county, December 5, 1873; Richard A., Klickitat county, November 6, 1875; Ada, now Mrs. L. B. Moser, Oregon, December 7, 1877; Ellis L., Oregon, July 19, 1880; Maud, now Mrs. J. C. Trumbo, Klickitat county, July 16, 1885; Orrin L., Klickitat county, August 26, 1892. In politics, Mr. Woods is a Republican. In 1884 his district honored him with a call to the office of county commissioner, and for two years he served faithfully as such. In 1896 he was again elected a commissioner for the term of a year. It may with truth be said that both in public and in private life Mr. Woods has always so demeaned himself as to win the esteem of his associates and neighbors, by all of whom he is regarded as one of the most substantial and progressive men of Klickitat county. The son of pioneer parents and himself a pioneer all his life, he has developed the many independence, resourcefulness, force of character and other sterling virtues for which frontiersmen as a class are universally honored.

JAMES UNDERWOOD CHAMBERLIN, a Klickitat county farmer, residing on his three hundred and sixty-acre ranch, fifteen miles east and three miles south of the city of Goldendale, was born in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, June 29, 1838. His father, Martin Chamberlin, was a lumberman by occupation, born in the Bay state in 1799. He passed his life in that commonwealth and died in 1854. His mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Underwood, was of the same age and a native of the same state. She passed away in Massachusetts in 1875, after having raised a family of nine children.

James received a high school education, graduating early in life. When he was sixteen his father died and the family was broken up. Two years later he went to Mississippi and obtained employment in a mercantile establishment, where he served as clerk until the opening of the Civil war. At the first outbreak, he joined the Confederate army. For two years he campaigned under General Lee, then he was captured by the Union forces and took the oath of allegiance. That was in 1864. After his release he went into the oil regions of Pennsylvania, where he remained until 1888, with the exception of two years spent in the city of New York. He was employed as conductor on the Fourth avenue car line for twelve months during his stay in the metropolis. Mr. Chamberlin came west to Klickitat county in the fall of 1888, and for two years thereafter he lived with his brother Griffin. He then went to live with another brother, Timothy B., who died two years later, and since that time he has lived on his brother Timothy's place, which he acquired from the heirs. Timothy was born and educated in the Bay state, and when a young man started to California, by way of the Isthmus of Panama. At New Orleans he changed his route, going overland through New Mexico, and he arrived at his destination in 1850. He resided in the Golden state four years, then came north to Klickitat county. Soon, however, he went to Canyon City, Oregon, for a two years' stay, at the end of which time he came back to Klickitat county and became one of its earliest pioneers. Chamberlin Flat was named for him. He took up the ranch upon which James now lives, that being the first homestead filed upon in what is now known as the Goodnoe hills. In October, 1902, he passed away.

James married in Pennsylvania, in 1868, Almena P. Acken, who died in 1883, leaving no children. He was again married, in 1898, the lady being Mrs. Esther M. Richmond, daughter of John and Hannah (Hanks) Rodgers. Her father, a preacher, was born in Venango county, Pennsylvania, in 1822, and became a resident of Michigan, his present home, in 1882. Her mother, a native of New York, had the distinction of being a second cousin to Abraham Lincoln. She was likewise a native of the Quaker state, born in 1847, and in its public schools she received her education. There also she was married the first time. Her first husband died some years ago, leaving six children, namely: Addie, Mary, Edwin, Myrtle, Ione and Lena. Mrs. Chamberlin has a brother, David, living in the county, a sister, Mrs. Cynthia Sparks, in Michigan, and one, Mrs. Orris Sparks, in Ohio. A third sister, Mrs. Marrilla Randall, passed away some years ago. Mr. Chamberlin's brother, Henry W., lives in East Orange, New Jersey, and his widowed sister, Mrs. Carrie Raymond, is a resident of Evanston, Illinois. Mrs. Louise C. Rowe, another sister, lives in Los Angeles, California, and his remaining brother, Griffin, died in this county in 1900. One brother, Martin, met his death in the Civil war, as a Confederate soldier. Another sister, Mrs. Eliza Craig, also passed away during that strife. Mr. Chamberlin is a member of the Methodist church, and politically, is a staunch Democrat. He has served as justice of the peace. Of his large holding of land, some two hundred and fifty acres are in cultivation. Mr. Chamberlin stands high in the esteem of the entire community, because of his benevolent, sunny disposition, and his many other sterling qualities.

JAMES H. BEEKS, one of the prosperous farmers of Klickitat county, resides on his ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, some six miles south and nineteen east of the city of Goldendale. He was born in Lee county, Iowa, December 19, 1853, the son of Samuel and Hannah (Beel) Beeks. His father, who was born in Ohio, in 1812, to English parents, was likewise a farmer by occupation. He moved to Missouri in 1855, resided there until 1874, then moved to Iowa and thence the succeeding fall to Washington county, Oregon. He came to Klickitat county in 1876, and died April 9, 1891. His wife, who was born and raised in Ohio, also died in Klickitat county. James H. received his education in the common schools of Missouri. He remained at home until twenty-three, then came west and secured a piece of railroad land in Klickitat county, which he sold after a year's residence on it. He filed a pre-emption claim in 1885 to land in the Goodnoe hills, later commuting it to a homestead entry. Purchasing his present place in 1902, he at once improved it substantially by the erection of an especially good farm residence. Besides his own land, Mr. Beeks farms another half section adjoining, which he holds under lease. Half of the section he thus controls by lease and ownership, is devoted to wheat raising. On the remainder he keeps stock of various kinds.

Mr. Beeks was married, April 24, 1877, in Pleasant valley, Klickitat county, the lady being Miss Mary Hearn. Her father died when she was a small child, and her mother, whose maiden name was Fannie Coach, and who was a native of Missouri, died in Lewiston, Idaho. Mrs. Beeks was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1861. She and Mr. Beeks have had fifteen children: Albert and Alfred, twins; Nora, Edith and Marie, deceased; Samuel N., Cora, Luella, now Mrs. Miller, a resident of Goldendale; Dora, Bertha, Riley T., Blanche, May, Etta and William A. Mr. Beeks is a member of the Church of Christ, and politically, he is a Republican.

While he has never shown any special ambition for political preferment, he has discharged the duties of such local offices as justice of the peace and school director. He stands well in the community, enjoying in full measure the esteem and good will of all who know him. Recalling the stirring Indian war times, Mr. Beeks relates that in 1877 his folks started to go to Goldendale, but came back, and that in 1878 they started to build a fort on his father's place, around the house, but did not complete it, as the scare passed over too soon. This was on Pleasant Prairie.

WILLIAM O. VAN NOSTERN, a prosperous young agriculturist of Klickitat county, resides on his farm, a quarter of a mile south of Cleveland. He is a native of Oregon, born in Linn county, September 28, 1867. His father, David G. Van Nostern, who was born in the state of Missouri, June 13, 1843, was left an orphan at the age of six or seven years, and was taken to West Virginia by his sister. He lived with her until ten years of age, then ran away from home and went to Missouri, whence he crossed the Plains to Oregon the same year. He lived in Linn county until he was forty years old, and was educated and married there, the latter event occurring January 8, 1866. Removing to this county in 1883, he secured a piece of railroad land, and from that time until January 13, 1891, when he died at Cleveland, he was a resident of Klickitat county. He was of German descent. His wife was a native of Missouri, of Scotch and German descent, her maiden name Melissa J. Thompson. Born October 16, 1849, she crossed the Plains to Oregon some time during the fifties. She was married in that state at the age of nineteen, and died there on the 6th of April, 1883. William O., of this review, received his education in the common schools of his native state, also attended the schools of Klickitat county. He made his home with his father until the time of the latter's death, in 1891, though after he was a little past sixteen he worked out part of the time. The summer of 1884, he spent in the employment of Harry Patterson, driving a band of horses to Wyoming for his employer. Coming home in the fall, he rode the ranges for his father for the two succeeding years, then for two years more he followed the same work for Mr. Smith, then until 1891, he worked on the family place. In that year he went into the stock business on his own account, also doing some farming, and in 1892 he filed on a homestead. He lived on this for five years, in the meantime purchasing the land on which he now makes his home. His realty holdings at present consist of four hundred acres, of which one hundred and fifty have been reduced to a state of cultivation. He has a hundred head of horses and a number of cattle. Mr. Van Nostern has three brothers living in Klickitat county, namely: Joseph I., near Cleveland; James, the present postmaster of that town, and George, near Bickleton. His sister, Mrs. Aivilla Elizabeth Macy, died in Cleveland some years ago, and a brother, David C., passed away at the age of eight months. Mr. Van Nostern was married at Dot, Washington, December 18, 1898, to Almeda B. Collins, daughter of Aretus R. and Estella (Rogers) Collins. Her father, who was born in Rochester, New York, in 1845, is a farmer by occupation. He moved to Minnesota in the early days of that state, and thence to Oregon in the seventies. Soon, however, he made his home in Seattle, Washington. In 1881 he came to Klickitat county, where he resided until the spring of 1902, then going to Arlington, of which town he is still a resident. His wife, a native of Minnesota, born in 1855, passed away in Klickitat county, June 9, 1900. Mrs. Van Nostern was born in Seattle, September 18, 1876, and grew to womanhood and was educated in Klickitat county. She has two sisters and one brother living, namely: Mrs. Odella Darling, residing at Arlington; Mrs. Ethel Jackson, at Dot, and Fred, also living in Arlington. She and Mr. Van Nostern have three children: Dean, Isaac and William G., born in Cleveland, August 28, 1899, July 8, 1901, and April 14, 1903, respectively. Fraternally, Mr. Van Nostern is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and in politics, he is a Democrat. He has been constable of the district for several terms. A thrifty, industrious farmer, he is achieving a splendid success in a business way, while his many good qualities as a man have won him a high place in the esteem of his neighbors.

ROLAND L. RICKETTS, a Klickitat county farmer, lives on his two hundred and eighty-acre ranch, two and a half miles south and a mile east of the town of Cleveland. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, in 1862. His father, William Ricketts, a native of Maryland, born in 1804, moved to Missouri some time in the forties, and was in Kansas City at a time when he could have purchased land where the central part of the city now stands, at the insignificant price of seven dollars an acre. After a residence of nearly forty years in Missouri, he died in Kansas City, in 1881. He was of Irish birth, and his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Hoffman, was of German extraction, though born in Clay county, Missouri, in 1828. Her people were pioneers of the state. She died in Klickitat county in 1889, after having resided for eleven years in the west. Roland L. Ricketts was educated in the schools of Jackson county, Missouri. He remained at home with his parents until eighteen, working, when not at school, on the parental farm. He was then employed by farmers for a period of six years. He was fourteen years old at the time his parents moved to Ottawa, Kansas, and sixteen when they moved to Fort Scott, where they resided a year and a half, returning then to Jackson county, Missouri, in which was their home until 1889. Mr. Ricketts came west to Klickitat county in 1889, and two years later moved into Walla Walla county, where he farmed for three years. Returning to Klickitat in 1895, he spent the ensuing six years in various parts of the county, going back then to the Walla Walla country for another eighteen months' stay. In November, 1902, he removed to Pendleton, Oregon, and engaged in the confectionery business, but the next spring he sold his establishment, and returning once more to Klickitat county, purchased the place upon which he has since made his home.

In Pendleton, Oregon, on the 21st of December, 1902, Mr. Ricketts married Mrs. Narcissa Wiley, daughter of Thomas B. and Ann Elizabeth (Stephens) Marr. Her father was a Missouri pioneer, of Scotch parentage, and a Civil war veteran; he died in the state of his nativity several years ago. His widow, Mrs. Marr, is likewise a native of Missouri, and she still lives in that state, in the city of Warrensburg, the county seat of Johnson county. Mrs. Ricketts was born in that county, May 3, 1862. She was educated in the common schools there, and later married Frank Wiley, of that locality, who passed away five years ago, leaving four children, as follows: Anna and Liddie, twins, the former now deceased; John and Grace. The last mentioned, now Mrs. Frank Beagle, resides at Walla Walla, Washington. Mrs. Ricketts has also two brothers, James and Seth Marr, both living in this state. Mr. Ricketts is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In religion, he is a Presbyterian, though his wife belongs to the Christian Church. An energetic and skillful farmer, he has already reduced half his place to a state of cultivation, and his energies are being steadily and judiciously applied to its further subjugation and improvement.

PAUL P. CHAMBERLAIN, a well-to-do farmer, of Klickitat county, resides on his ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, three miles east and two south of the town of Cleveland. He is a native of Oregon, born in Washington county, May 16, 1863. His father, James L. Chamberlain, a native of Nebraska, crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1852, was married in Marion county, that state, and is at present living at North Yakima, Washington. At one time he owned a store in Prosser, the first started in that town. His wife, a native of the Blue Grass state, whose maiden name was Christina Kincaid, also still lives, and is with him at North Yakima. She crossed the Plains with her parents to Oregon in the early days. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain have had eleven children, seven of whom are still living. The subject of this review attended school in Oregon, and later in Klickitat county, he having been but fourteen years old when he came to the latter place with his parents in 1877. His father and mother located eight miles east of Goldendale, and lived there four years, but, in 1881, they moved to Cleveland. Until he was a year past his majority, he worked on his father's farm, though on becoming of age, he took a pre-emption claim. In the spring of 1885, he changed this to a homestead. In due time he proved up on it and he has ever since made it his home, following farming principally, although he has also raised some stock. At present he is giving much attention to the raising of hogs. Mr. Chamberlain has six brothers and sisters living, namely, Mrs. Jennie Hamilton, in Goldendale; Mrs. Mary E. Grant, at Scappoose, Oregon; Joseph, at North Yakima; Lee, near Toppenish; Mrs. Emma White, on the Naches; and James, in North Yakima.

At Goldendale, on the 18th of November, 1886, Mr. Chamberlain married Alverdia, daughter of Milton W. and Jane (Harris) Wristen, the former a native of Illinois, and a farmer by occupation. He early removed to Kansas, and thence to California, where he still resides, as does also his wife, who is likewise a native of Illinois. Mrs. Chamberlain was born in Illinois, November 1, 1865, but received her education in the common schools of California. Her people came to Klickitat county in October, 1874, but later returned to the Golden state. Mrs. Chamberlain's brothers, Oliver and Don, also her sisters, Hannah L. and Liddie, now Mrs. Smith, reside in California, while her sister, Mrs. Mamie Ellis, lives near Cleveland, and her brother, Emmet, at Bickleton. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain have had one child only, Alta, born near Cleveland, August 22, 1890. Unfortunately she died when still an infant. In religion, Mr. Chamberlain is a Methodist; fraternally, he is a Modern Woodman, and in politics, he is an active Democrat. An early pioneer of Klickitat county, he is well known to most of its citizens who esteem him as a progressive farmer and a worthy man.

WILLIAM L. LEWIS, owner of a six hundred and forty acre ranch three miles east and three south of Bickleton, is a native of the state of Alabama, born June 7, 1849, at Tuskegee, Macon county. His father, William L. Lewis, a native of New Brunswick, New Jersey, was a carpenter and contractor. He fought in the War of 1812, as captain of a company of soldiers raised by himself in Georgia. Going later to Macon county, Alabama, he died there in 1863. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and his wife, whose maiden name was Charlotte Peel, was of English extraction, but a native of North Carolina. She was brought up on a farm in that state, and was also married there at the age of twenty. She raised a family of seven children, one of whom was killed in the Civil war, while serving in General Lee's army. The others are still living. The subject of this article was educated in the common schools of Alabama. He began to help his father and mother when eleven years old, earning his first money by carrying newspapers, and at fourteen he entered a general merchandise store in which he was employed for the ensuing two years as clerk. Upon reaching the age of seventeen, he bought a stock of goods and opened an establishment in the city of Montgomery, Alabama, where he was in business for a number of years, succeeding well. During this time he was appointed deputy sheriff of Montgomery county, which position he held for two years. In 1877 he sold his store and migrated to California, whence after a residence of four years, he came to Klickitat county, where he took a homestead three miles south of Bickleton, also purchasing some railroad land. This has been his home since that time and to its cultivation and improvement he has brought the same energy which characterized him as a boy merchant and enabled him to succeed. He cultivates one hundred and twenty-five acres of his farm, keeping the remaining five hundred and fifteen acres for pasture. Mr. Lewis has five sisters, namely: Mrs. Mary A. Hull, Mrs. Josephine Debarlaben and Elizabeth, in Alabama; Mrs. Georgiana Holley, in Dallas, Texas, and Mrs. Narcissa Howard, in California. The marriage of Mr. Lewis was solemnized in Klickitat county, on the 13th of November, 1889, the lady being Miss Maggie Ely, a native of Iowa. Her father, John Ely, was born in the Quaker state, and removed successively to the states of Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, coming from the last mentioned to Klickitat county, in 1888. He is of Dutch ancestry. He now lives with his son-in-law, and though eighty-three years old, is still hale and hearty. Mrs. Lewis was born June 1, 1859. She received the principal part of her education at Carthage, Missouri, and after completing her school training, taught in that city for some time. She also taught a number of terms in Klickitat county. She and Mr. Lewis have two children: William E., born June 16, 1892, and John H., on the 28th of August, 1897. Mrs. Lewis is a member of the Methodist church. In politics, Mr. Lewis is an active Republican, and that he is public-spirited and interested in the cause of education is evident from his having served several terms as clerk of the school board. Indeed, he holds that unremunerative position at this time. He is a capable, progressive man in his business, and as a citizen and member of society, he holds an honored place.

JOHN W. WEER, a well-to-do farmer of Klickitac county, lives on his ranch of five hundred and sixty acres, situated one mile east of the town of Cleveland. He was born in McDonough county, Illinois, in the year 1855, on the day before Christmas. His father, William Weer, a native of North Carolina, born in Davidson county, in 1825, is a farmer and blacksmith. He moved to Illinois when a young man, during the pioneer days of that state, and made his home there until 1869, in which year he removed to Kansas. He settled in Linn county, which was his home for a period of almost seventeen years. In March, 1886, he came to Klickitac county, Washington, and established himself five miles southeast of Cleveland, where he still lives. He is of German descent. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary L. Wier, was likewise a native of North Carolina, born in 1820, making her four years younger than her husband. She moved to Illinois with her parents when a small girl, and was later married in that state. The subject of this review was educated in the common schools of Illinois. He remained at home on the farm until his majority was attained, then rented a place, and went to farming and stock raising on his own account. He followed those occupations until 1886, then came west, settling in Klickitac county on Christmas Day of that year. The next twelve months were spent in various parts of the county in various kinds of work, Mr. Weer meanwhile keeping a sharp lookout for a location. Finally, in 1888, he filed a homestead claim to his present place, paying a man for the improvements thereon, six hundred dollars. He has lived on the property since that time and followed farming and stock raising with success, increasing his realty holdings as he has been able, until he has now nearly six hundred acres, of which he has placed one hundred and sixty acres under cultivation, devoting the rest to the pasturing of his stock, for he has a number of cattle and nearly seventy hogs. He is continually improving his land.

Mr. Weer was married in Kansas, in 1876, to Mary J. Beck, daughter of Paul and Rosannah (Walters) Beck. Her father, who was born in Illinois, in 1825, is a farmer by occupation. He moved to Linn county, Kansas, in 1856, and for twenty-six years followed farming and stock raising there. Coming to Klickitac county in 1882, he settled five miles south of Cleveland, where he and his wife still live. He is of German extraction. His wife was born in the Blue Grass state, in 1829, but removed to Illinois with her parents in the early days. She and Mr. Beck have had six children. Mrs. Weer, who was the second oldest child, was born in Shelby county, Illinois, February 15, 1856. Her parents moved to Kansas when she was one month old and in the common schools of that state she received her education. Her brothers and sisters are: Charles, now living in Cleveland; Mrs. Frances A. Hosfelt, living four miles south of the same town; Mrs. Josephine Johnson, residing three miles south of Cleveland; Mrs. Isabel Ellis, in Chelan county, Washington; and John L., who died at Cleveland during the year 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Weer have two children, namely: Mrs. Dora B. Laslie, born in Linn county, Kansas, August 27, 1879, now residing one mile south of Cleveland, and Bertha L., born in Klickitac county, October 17, 1889. Mr. Weer has one sister, Mrs. Alice Gaines, living five miles south of Cleveland. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics an active Republican. He is one of the members of the present school board and has held that position for several years. As a man and citizen he stands well in his community, while his energy and industry have enabled him to win a splendid success as an agriculturist and to contribute his full share toward the general progress.

ANTON DUUS, a Klickitac county farmer, resides ten miles southwest of the town of Bickleton, Washington. He was born in Denmark on the 2d of February, 1867, the son of Hans Duus, who was also a Dane. His father followed farming as a means of gaining a livelihood until his death, which occurred in his native land in the year 1888. His mother, Mary (Petersen) Duus, also a native of Denmark, was three years younger than his father. Married in 1859, she became the mother of two children, Anton and Peter, with the former of whom she is now living.

Our subject received his education in the common schools of his native land, after which he served an apprenticeship of six years at the weaver's trade. In 1887 he left the land of his nativity and came to this country, settling at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he remained for nearly eleven years. In the fall of 1898, he removed to Washington and took a homestead in Klickitac county, upon which we find him at this time. It consists of one hundred and sixty acres, half of which is in cultivation. Mr. Duus is a member of the Lutheran church and in politics is an active Democrat. As a man and citizen, his standing is good and his neighbors speak of him as a representative of that class of Europeans who are always welcomed to our shores. Mr. Duus was married at The Dalles, Oregon, September 12, 1901, the lady being Julia Hoch, whose father, Frederick Hoch, is a native of Denmark, born in 1833. He has followed the life of a soldier since young manhood, never leaving his native land. Mrs. Duus's mother, Johanna (Terkensen) Hoch, was also born in Denmark and still resides there. In that country, also, Mrs. Duus was born on the 13th of August, 1869, and there she received her education. She came to the United States in 1900, in which year she was married.

STEPHEN A. JORY is a blacksmith and wagon-maker of Cleveland, Washington. He was born in Marysville, Yuba county, California, January 5, 1864, the son of Henry and Martha (Van Pelt) Jory, the former a native of England. Henry Jory came from England to the United States with his parents when he was six years old. The family settled in Ohio in 1830. Thence they moved to California in 1861, crossing the Plains with ox teams, and in this state Stephen A. was born. His father died in California in 1886. The mother, Martha (Van Pelt) Jory was born in Ohio, November 12, 1829, and died January 12, 1878. Stephen A. received his education in the common schools of California, remaining at home until he was twenty years of age. He arrived in Klickitat county, September 12, 1884, and went to work for his sister, Mrs. H. J. Sanders, remaining thus engaged for eight months near Dot postoffice. He then purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, and a timber culture claim comprising one hundred and sixty acres from A. Beldin. For a time he farmed this property, but later discontinued farming and built a blacksmith shop at Dot, which was the first establishment of the kind at that place. He worked at the blacksmithing trade until 1899, when he sold out to Frank Copenhefer. After the sale, he took up farming for a year near Dot, at the end of which time he went to Cleveland, where he accepted employment in a shop, working from March 19, 1901, to September 12, 1902. He returned then to his farm and for a time attended in person to farming interests in conjunction with his blacksmithing work, but in May, 1904, he opened the shop he is now conducting in Cleveland.

Mr. Jory was married at Dot, Washington, February 14, 1892, to Miss Barbara E. Walker, a native of Missouri, born March 26, 1875. Her parents were Wilburn and Susan (Barrett) Walker, both natives of Missouri. Wilburn Walker is a farmer now residing near Jersey postoffice, having come from Missouri to this point in 1891, bringing with him his family. Susan (Barrett) Walker, the mother, attained young womanhood in Missouri, and in that state was married. Barbara E. Walker, her daughter, now the wife of Mr. Jory, received the greater part of her education in Missouri. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Jory are: Oliver F., born January 7, 1893; Henry A., March 26, 1895; Ethel M., November, 1897; Edith V., November, 1899, and Elsie, December 6, 1902, all in Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Jory is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in religion he adheres to the Christian church. His farm comprises one hundred and sixty acres of land, all of which is in a high state of cultivation, and is well stocked with all accessories that contribute to successful farming. At his trade he is said to be an unusually good workman and deserving of the lucrative patronage he now enjoys.

ELISHA S. MASON was, prior to his death, which occurred August 14, 1899, a prominent farmer and stockman residing four miles south of Cleveland, Klickitat county. He was born in Tennessee, June 7, 1834, the son of William W. and Polly (Headlie) Mason, both natives of Tennessee. The elder Mason moved from Tennessee to Missouri in 1846, and there resided till the time of his death. He was of Scotch descent. Polly (Headlie) Mason, the mother, grew up and was educated in Tennessee, and in that state married Mr. Mason, the elder. Her death occurred many years ago in Missouri. Deceased was but twelve years of age when his parents moved to Missouri. He remained at home, following farming pursuits mainly, till he was twenty-seven years of age, then, in 1861, enlisted in the Union army. For the two years following he was in active service. At the close of his experience as a soldier he settled on a farm, to the cultivation of which he gave his attention until 1874, also being engaged part of the time as a carpenter. In that year, however, he emigrated to Indian Territory, leased a tract of land there and began its cultivation. He moved thence three years later to northern Texas, where he resided for two years. His final change of residence was to Klickitat county in 1884. Upon arriving he took up a homestead which, until the time of his death, he devoted to stock raising and farming, principally. Death came unexpectedly, resulting from heart trouble.

In 1859, Mr. Mason married Miss Tabitha A. Ezell, then residing with her parents in Missouri. Miss Ezell was a native of Kentucky, born in 1841, and came of one of the oldest established families of that state. Her father, William Ezell, was a farmer and one of the pioneer spirits of Kentucky when that grand old state was but sparsely settled. The mother's maiden name was Loving, and she, too, was born in Kentucky. Her death occurred many years ago.

To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Mason thirteen children were born. Those now living, seven in number, are: John F., William W., Samuel H., Charles A., Emmett W., Benjamin L. and Victor W. A niece, Miss Jennie Mason, was adopted and raised as one of the family. Fraternally, Mr. Mason was affiliated with the Masonic order. In religion, he belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. On political questions, he was independent, voting his principles always without fear of party lash. Intensely public-spirited, he was invariably found active in the promotion of educational enterprises. While residing in Missouri for several years he served as justice of the peace with credit to himself and satisfaction to the community that he served. His will left the estate of which he was in possession at the time of death to his wife, free from all save a few minor incumbrances which were assumed by Mason Brothers (William and Charles Mason) as a firm. Charles and William have since become the sole managers of the place, having devoted it for ten years to stock raising, their efforts in that line being given almost exclusively to sheep. Within the last year, however, they have sold out the sheep and invested in cattle, and now they are in possession of a herd of two hundred head, which they range in the mountains in summer and on their one-thousand-acre ranch on Chapman creek in winter. This farm, known as the old Dick Lyons ranch, the two brothers own. Until about a year ago they were in partnership with their three other brothers, but they then bought them out, and took full charge. William was born in Greene county, Missouri, September 16, 1866, and Charles, in the same state, August 1, 1873.

GEORGE W. GRANTLY is a favorably known farmer residing one and one-half miles southeast of Dot postoffice, in Klickitaw county, Washington. He is the son of Thomas and Phoebe (Gould) Grantly, the former a music-teacher and bookkeeper, born in Maryland in 1809, the son of English parents. His death occurred in 1845. Phoebe (Gould) Grantly was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, and came of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. She died in 1872. George W. grew to manhood in Ohio on a farm, and during youth, received an education in the common schools. Left fatherless at the age of four years he learned at an early age to assume the responsibilities of life, and as he attained early manhood he gave his best efforts toward helping his mother discharge the duties devolving upon her, on account of the loss of her husband. When eighteen years of age he forsook the parental roof and independently assumed the burdensome responsibilities of life. At the beginning of the Civil war he responded to the first call for volunteers by enlisting for three months' service with Company E, Fifteenth Ohio volunteers. He was immediately sent south to Virginia, where he served in the engagements at Laurel Hill and Phillipe, the first fought in that state. At the end of the three months' service he re-enlisted, this time joining Company A, Sixty-eighth Ohio, and later he served under General Grant at Fort Donelson and at the battle of Shiloh. During the latter part of the war he belonged to the command of "Pap" Thomas, justly renowned for his service in the great conflict. Beyond a wound at the battle of Shiloh, Mr. Grantly received no serious injury throughout the war, though he took part during his service in some of the greatest engagements. When the war was over he went to Texas and for two years following lived on the Gulf. His next move was to Bourbon county, Kansas, where he filed on a tract of government land, and where, for thirteen years, he farmed and raised stock, meeting with fair success. In March of 1882, however, attracted by the opportunities offered by the developing country, he came to Klickitaw county. Immediately upon arrival he filed on his present farm, on which he has resided continuously since.

In 1871, in the state of Kansas, Mr. Grantly married Mrs. Rebecca McKhann. She died in 1900, leaving two children by her first marriage and three by the second. Mr. Grantly's second marriage took place January 25, 1903, in Klickitaw county, the lady being Mrs. Margaret (Adams) Conell, a widow, as was his first wife, and a native of Illinois. She was born in 1858. Politically, Mr. Grantly is a Republican, and in religion, he belongs to the Baptist church. Deeply interested in school affairs, he has served with marked efficiency as a member of the local school board. His farm, comprising two hundred and forty acres of land, is well stocked with all things necessary to make profitable the cultivation of land.

GASTELL BINNS is the owner of a fine farm situated four miles south of Dot postoffice, on which place he is at present residing. He is a son of "Old Kentucky," born in Cumberland county, June 2, 1862. He lived at home with his parents until he reached the age of nineteen, securing a common school education, then went to Texas, where for two years he was employed as a cowboy. In 1884 he moved to Washington and immediately upon his arrival accepted employment in a logging camp. After working at this for a month, he proceeded to Goldendale, where he worked a year on a farm. Going then to the Dot locality, he filed on his present farm in 1886, and began building up the splendid home of which he is now possessed. He has since lived the life of a thrifty and successful agriculturist and stockman.

Mr. Binns was married in Klickitaw county in March, 1894, to Miss Marie Nelson, a native of Sweden, born in 1869. She received her education in the old country, and there reached the age of twenty-five, then came to the United States. Her parents did not accompany her. Christen Nelson, the father, was a gardener in Sweden. His death occurred several years ago in that country. The mother, Boel (Boman) Nelson, was born in Sweden, December 3, 1840. She has never left her native land, but is residing in it at this date. Mr. Binns' parents were William and Jennett (Baker) Binns. The former was of English descent and a native of Kentucky, in which state he died. He was a farmer by occupation. Jennett (Baker) Binns was likewise a native of Kentucky, and lived the greater part of her life time in that state, finally passing away there. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Gastell Binns are: Archie, born in 1804; Walter, in 1805; Hurchell, in 1807; Elam, in 1809, Chester, in 1900, and Albert D., in 1903, all in Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Binns is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, and in politics, allies himself with the Democratic party. His land holdings comprise in all nine hundred and sixty acres, five hundred of which are under cultivation. He at present owns fifty head of cattle and is making a specialty of the Hereford breed. Among acquaintances and neighbors he is regarded as a capable and well-meaning citizen. That he is a thrifty, energetic man of good judgment and abilities, is abundantly proven by the splendid success he has had in building a home and extensive property for himself and family in Klickitat county.

WILLIAM W. WOODS is a citizen of good reputation residing three and one-half miles south and three and one-half west of Dot postoffice, Klickitat county, Washington. He was born in Klickitat county, December 7, 1874, the son of Alfred O. and Martha C. (Soper) Woods, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. William W. grew to manhood and received a common school education in Klickitat county. At the age of eighteen he became interested with his father in the sheep business, and still retains the holding then acquired. In 1901 he bought a half section of railroad land, and one hundred and sixty acres of land that was deeded. The following year he filed on a tract of government land (and has since then made this place his home), though by dint of energy and thrift he has been able to add greatly to his original holdings.

Mr Woods was married near Dot postoffice, August 20, 1901, to Miss Jennie Loftin, a native of Washington, born in Waitsburg, Walla Walla county, September 13, 1884. She moved to Klickitat county at an early age and here grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. Her parents were Wesley and Emma (Johnson) Loftin, who were among the early arrivals in Klickitat county. Wesley Loftin was born near Kansas City, Missouri, in 1856. Upon reaching manhood he farmed for a time in Missouri, then, in 1886, came west, his objective point being Klickitat county. Upon his arrival he located near Dot, and after a residence of nineteen years at that place moved to his present home in Arlington, Oregon. He is of Irish parentage. Emma (Johnson) Loftin was born in Linn county, Kansas, in 1857. She married Mr. Loftin in Kansas, afterwards coming west with him, as mentioned. Mr. and Mrs. Woods are parents of the following children: Claude C., born in Arlington, Oregon, June 5, 1902, and Delmar H., also in Arlington, May 29, 1903. The latter named child died at the age of eight months and twenty-nine days. Mr. Woods is a member of the Presbyterian church. In politics, he is an adherent of Republicanism, though not to the exclusion of occasional departures from the Republican standards in municipal elections, where, in his judgment, the opposite issue is the more worthy. His land holdings comprise six hundred and forty acres, one hundred and thirty of which are under cultivation. His home farm is well equipped with all stock, implements and buildings that add to the comfort of farm life, and each year, under the capable management of its owner, is becoming more attractive as a dwelling place. Few men of his age have attained a more enviable success than has Mr. Woods, even in the Northwest, where energy and thrift are almost invariably well rewarded.

FRANK P. VINCENT. Among the many thriving industries of the west at the present time, none is paying larger returns on the capital invested than the sheep business, in which the Klickitat citizen whose name commences this article, is heavily interested. Since 1886 he has been connected in one way or another with this important branch of the stock industry, so that his experience has been a valuable one to him. His fine ranch is located nine miles southwest of Dot. Mr. Vincent was born in Washington county, Ohio, July 28, 1853, the son of George and Rachael (Wilson) Vincent, of Welsh and Irish extraction respectively. Their families have been residents of Washington county for nearly a century back. George Vincent was born in 1812 in southern Ohio on the same farm which was the birthplace of his father; he died at the age of eighty-four in Washington county. Mrs. Vincent, the mother, was born in Washington county in 1810, the daughter of Ohio pioneers; she died in that county. Frank P. attended school and worked on the farm until he was twenty years old, then rented the place from his father and operated it three years. After his marriage, about that time, he farmed four years on his own place, but in the spring of 1882 came west to Milton, Oregon. Four years of farming followed. Then, in 1886, he came to Klickitat and looked after the sheep of George Donald a year. Next he and Joseph Thomas entered the business and ranged sheep three years, after which Mr. Vincent worked three years for A. Smythe. In the fall of 1898 he went into the industry on his own account and he has been very successful since that time. He and his two sons are partners in the business. In 1889 Mr. Vincent filed on the ranch which is now his home and by purchasing other land, father and sons now own a section of excellent farming and grazing land.

Mr. Vincent was married July 3, 1875, in Washington county, Ohio, to Miss Sybil D. Coley, a daughter of George and Laura (Sherman) Coley, both of whom were born in Washington county. The father was born in 1818 and died at a mature age in his home county. Mrs. Coley was born in 1830; she is now living with her son in Goldendale. Mrs. Vincent is also a native of Washington county, born in 1856, August 30th. After attending the public schools and receiving a thorough education, she was married, being twenty years of age at the time. Their children are: Fred, born in Washington county, November 2, 1876, living at home, a partner in the sheep business and ranch; Arthur, born in the same county, October 6, 1878, likewise a partner in the business and ranch; Hubert, born in Klickitat, July 22, 1890; Mabel, also born in this county, October 15, 1896. One hundred and fifty acres of the ranch are now being cultivated; the balance is used for pasture. There are two thousand sheep in the Vincent herds, besides which they own a considerable number of horses, cattle and hogs. Mr. Vincent is one of the most popular men in the county, held in high repute by his neighbors and he and his sons are known as capable stockmen. In religion, he is a Methodist.

GEORGE W. SMITH. Among those hardy pioneer stockmen who sought the luxuriant range of Klickitat in its early years is he whose name stands at the beginning of this sketch, one of the county's present prosperous farmers and stockmen. Mr. Smith came to Klickitat in 1872 and since that date has been prominently identified with its growth and development. His home is on the Columbia river four miles north of The Dalles. Born in South Bend, Indiana, February 20, 1842, he is the son of Jacob D. and Sarah (Grissold) Smith, who became pioneers of Oregon in 1852. The elder Smith was born in Ohio in 1810. He crossed the Plains in 1852 to Yamhill county, Oregon, where he filed on a donation claim and there followed farming and stock raising. Subsequently he removed to Salem and was a resident of that city when his death occurred in 1884. His wife was a native of New York, born in 1807; she died in 1893. When a child she was taken to Indiana by her parents, who were Germans. Mrs. Smith never learned to speak her native tongue, being reared in an English settlement. Jacob Smith's father was also of German ancestry. He was born during the turbulent times incident to the Revolution and while a middle-aged man served in the War of 1812. George W. Smith accompanied his parents from Indiana to Janesville, Wisconsin, at an early age, and when he was nine years old the westward journey was continued across the Plains to Oregon. There the lad lived until he was sixteen years old, then boldly and bravely struck out for himself. When the Idaho mines were discovered, he was among the first to reach Oro Fino creek, and in that district he spent two years in developing property of his own. Then he participated in the rush to Boise basin and for more than a year mined in the vicinity of Boise City. Later he was employed as a carpenter in that town. The occupation of freighting then appealed to him so strongly that until 1865 he was engaged in packing on the trails between Walla Walla, Helena and Boise City and in freighting between Wallula and interior points. From this occupation he went to Owyhee county, Idaho, where for two years he was employed in the Golden Chariot mine, then he spent a year at the carpenter's trade in Salem, Oregon, and finally, in 1872, became a pioneer of Klickitat county, in which he has since resided. At that time the region was but sparsely settled and the few hardy pioneers who were there had scarcely come to a realization of the resources awaiting development. Sheep raising first appealed to Mr. Smith as a lucrative industry, so he acquired a small herd, filed on a claim and began life as a stockman. While Goldendale was yet but a trading post, Mr. Smith ranged his sheep over the site. Later Mr. Smith built the first schoolhouse erected in Goldendale. It was only a rough board structure, unattractive in appearance and with walls not entirely proof against the harsh breath of winter, but withal its erection was one of the long steps which the pioneer takes in securing the perpetuation of the civilization which he founds. This homely institution is known to Goldendale pioneers as "the old schoolhouse;" it stood on the flat near the creek. Mr. Smith continued to follow stock raising and accumulate herds and land with commendable and gratifying success until he is today one of the leading stockmen of this region.

Mr. Smith and Miss Augusta M. Purdy, a native of Salem, Oregon, were united in marriage June 15, 1873. She was born March 12, 1849, to the union of Aaron and Belinda (Bucklew) Purdy, who were prominently known as among the early pioneers of Oregon. The father was born in Pennsylvania, November 30, 1806, and when forty-one years of age crossed the Plains to Oregon, arriving about the time of the Whitman massacre. He was a miller by trade, though he devoted much of his attention to other business,

His death occurred in 1866. By descent, Mr. Purdy was a German. His wife was a native of Virginia, born in 1810; she died in 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have five children, namely: Mabel, born October 31, 1874; Ada, born May 25, 1877; Fritz G., born April 10, 1879; Edna, born April 23, 1881; and Regina, born January 11, 1889, all of whom are natives of this county. Mr. Smith is connected with one fraternity, the Masonic; politically, he is an ardent Republican, though an independent one, free from party prejudices. He devotes his entire time to the management of his extensive stock and land interests, his holdings comprising between four thousand and five thousand acres on the Columbia river.

ALONZO H. CURTISS. To this worthy pioneer, whose home is at Grand Dalles, on the Columbia, belongs the distinction of being Klickitat's oldest resident citizen; only one other settler preceded him and that one left the county more than a quarter of a century ago. But since the fall of 1858, forty-six years ago, nine years before Klickitat county came into permanent existence, Mr. Curtiss has called Klickitat "home," and in that vast stretch of time has witnessed the organization of three powerful states out of the great Northwest and the development of this erstwhile wilderness into one of the busiest and richest sections of the Union. Born July 19, 1831, at Granville, Massachusetts, Alonzo H. Curtiss is the son of Samuel and Sallie (Fairchild) Curtiss, both of whom were also natives of the Old Bay state. The Curtiss and the Fairchild families came over to the colonies from England many generations ago and in the New England states soon attained to positions of influence and affluence. Samuel Curtiss, who spent most of his life in agricultural pursuits in Hampden county, Massachusetts, died at the age of sixty-eight; his wife died ten years ago in her seventy-ninth year. Alonzo H. remained on the farm and in school until he was twenty years old. He attended the Granville Academy and the public schools, thus receiving a good education. In 1851, with the characteristic longing of youth to get to the front in life's battle, he went to Ohio, and learned the carpenter's trade. He then made up his mind to seek what fortune might bestow upon him in the far west and accordingly, in 1853, came to the Pacific coast by way of the Isthmus. He soon became satisfied that he could do better in Oregon, so he went north to Portland, then a straggling village and there and in Washington county he followed his trade until 1855. At that time he came to The Dalles and laid the foundation for his present prosperity. In the fall of 1858, he crossed the Columbia and filed upon a tempting tract of land situated along the shore just north of the Rockland ferry landing, and upon this pleasant place Mr. Curtiss and his estimable wife have lived continuously since the day they moved into their pioneer home. For many years Mr. Curtiss followed stock raising and contract work, ranging large herds and becoming one of the builders of The Dalles. He is still a prominent stockman, though this portion of his business is now looked after by his son, Leon W. After investing considerable money in the erection of dwellings in The Dalles, Mr. Curtiss, in 1889, erected the first roller mill ever built in that city, The Diamond Roller Mills, there being at that time only two old burr mills there. It cost $40,000 and is one of the best equipped plants in Oregon. Mr. Curtiss still owns this fine property, but leaves the active management of it to his son-in-law, James S. Snipes. Besides some valuable city property, Mr. Curtiss also owns between three thousand and four thousand acres of grazing and farming land in Klickitat county, opposite The Dalles, an interest in the steam ferry operated by The Dalles & Rockland Ferry Company, and his valuable home ranch, which is highly improved, and one of the best for its size on the river.

Miss Lizzie Gould, the daughter of John and Anna Gould, became the bride of Mr. Curtiss, January 10, 1858. The parents as well as the daughter were born in Ohio, the date of Mrs. Curtiss' birth being March 24, 1834. Her father was a millwright by trade and a very successful business man. He died when she was a child. The romance in the life of Mr. and Mrs. Curtiss began before he came west and when he had prepared a home for her occupancy, he went back east and brought her to it. Her mother accompanied them to The Dalles, and there was subsequently married to John A. Murdy; she died in 1889. Four children have come to the Curtiss home: Jennie, born in 1859, now the wife of James Snipes, of The Dalles; Leon W., born March 4, 1861, a prominent Klickitat stockman who has represented this county in the legislature; Orlando H., who died when a child; and Joseph S., whose death occurred in 1890. Mr. Curtiss has one brother living, Elizer, an Ohio farmer. Politically, Mr. Curtiss is a staunch Republican, and in years gone by has served his county as county commissioner and in other official capacities. Both he and his wife are held in the highest esteem by all who know them and, though well advanced in years, are yet apparently far this side of life's sunset.

LEO F. BRUNE, a large sheep owner and stockman of Klickitat county, Washington, resides on a farm five miles north of Grand Dalles. He has the distinction of being a native of south central Washington, the place of his birth being Grand Dalles and the date, April 19, 1873. His father, Charles H. Brune, was born in Pomerania, Germany, near the Baltic sea, in 1840. Being an adventurous spirit and of a roving disposition, the elder Brune early took to the sea, sailing on a German merchantman to New York, where he shipped on an American vessel for a second voyage. Later he was with the noted Captain Sewell, famed for his exploits as a blockade runner, and became mate of the vessel. He came to California in 1864, and thence after a few months' residence to The Dalles, Oregon. For some time he operated boats on the Columbia river, the principal business of which was the transportation of wood, and for several years he had charge of a ferry boat there. He married in The Dalles in 1867. In 1877 he took up a pre-emption claim five miles north of Grand Dalles, in Klickitat county, this being the first land filed upon so far back from the river. At the same time he purchased two hundred head of sheep, thereby getting a start in a business to which he devoted his best energies for several years afterward. He and his brothers, Henry and William, were the first men to take a band of sheep into the Mount Adams grazing district. He continued to follow sheep raising until his death, which occurred at the ranch near Grand Dalles, July 29, 1894. He was deputy sheriff at one time and also clerk of school district No. 1, which at the time took in almost the whole of Klickitat county. His wife, whose maiden name was Rosario Romero, is a native of Mexico, born in the province of Sonora, in 1850, to Spanish parents. She came to California with her parents when a small girl, and in 1863 came overland to The Dalles. Her father died in California; her mother, Jane Romero, still lives with her daughter and son-in-law. Leo Brune, of this article, grew to manhood at the old home ranch, attending the district school, and from 1890 to 1893, the Bishop Scott Military Academy at Portland, Oregon. He learned the sheep business as a boy. At the time of his father's death in 1894, he went to Kennewick, Washington, with a sheep man, and bought the old Leeper spring, with eighty acres of land, to secure water for the sheep. He then entered the wool growing business with his uncles, Henry and William Brune, forming a partnership which remained in force for a space of two years. After its dissolution, Leo F. continued the business alone. In the fall of 1902 he bought six thousand acres of land near the spring. He sold it later, however, also his band of sheep, then bought a band of four thousand five hundred at Heppner, Oregon, which he still has.

At Hartland, Washington, in the fall of 1897, Mr. Brune married Bertha Isham, an Oregonian, born near Salem, June 22, 1880. Her father, James Isham, is an old Oregon pioneer, and has lived in the vicinity of Salem for many years. Her mother, whose maiden name was Sina Pittman, is likewise a native of Oregon and a member of an old pioneer family. Her father and mother, A. J. and Louise Pittman, are still living, though aged seventy-six and seventy-three years respectively. They crossed the Plains in 1850, and while en route, were stricken with the Asiatic cholera, hence were deserted by the other members of the party, and narrowly escaped from the Indians. Mr. Brune has eight brothers and sisters: Rose, now Mrs. J. M. Cummins, a resident of Sprague, Washington; Josephine, a professional nurse at Portland, Oregon; Grace, now the wife of Dr. D. M. Angus, a physician at Prosser, Washington; Minnie, now Mrs. Alex. Angus; Jean, a stenographer in Portland; Victoria and Alma. Mr. and Mrs. Brune have two children: Charles H. and Bernice, born September 23, 1899, and September 30, 1901, respectively. In politics, Mr. Brune is a Republican. Public spirited and enterprising, one of the most capable young men in the county, eminently successful in business, and possessed of qualities of character which win for him the esteem and regard of those with whom he is associated, Mr. Brune enjoys a very enviable standing in south central Washington, and his prospects for future achievement are bright indeed. He owns an interest in two thousand five hundred acres of land, besides his large stock holdings.

JAMES O. LYLE is a retired farmer residing at present four miles northwest of Lyle post-office, at what is known as the "Hewitt" place. He was born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, June 4, 1831, the son of Charles and Sarah (Johnson) Lyle, both deceased many years ago. Charles Lyle was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1799. In 1847 he moved to Ottumwa, Iowa, at which place he resided at the time of his death. His people were of Scotch-Irish descent and among the colonial settlers of the Atlantic coast. Hannah (Croford) Lyle, his paternal grandmother, was related in some way to General Anthony Wayne. Sarah (Johnson) Lyle, a native of Pennsylvania, was born in 1812, and died in 1859. James O., of this review, moved with his parents to Indiana when six years of age, they later proceeding to Iowa and settling near what was later known as Agency City, the Indians having been removed from this place to their reservation but a short time before. In Iowa, he remained on the home farm with his parents until twenty years of age, then taking up stage driving between Mount Pleasant and Oskaloosa, his employers being Frink & Walker, of Chicago. He was thus employed until 1853. Then with a few thousand other fortune seekers he got the "gold fever" and started to California with an ox team. The consideration of his passage was one hundred dollars, he in addition driving a team all the way, missing only one day during the five and a half months required to make the trip. In Fiddle Town, California, the tiresome journey terminated and here Mr. Lyle began mining, remaining thus engaged until April, 1856. Then he took passage on the Golden Age, bound for Iowa, via the Panama route. Ill luck attended his journey. The Golden Age was wrecked two hundred miles from Panama on an island and here the hapless passengers lived several days, scantily supplied with the necessities of life, until rescued by another vessel. After this narrow escape, Mr. Lyle proceeded to Iowa as best he could and arrived safely. He lived in Iowa until 1863, during which time he was married. In the year mentioned he again crossed the Plains, his objective point this time being The Dalles, Oregon. Shortly after his arrival he rented a place at Rowena, a short distance down the river from The Dalles, where he lived two years, then buying of a squaw man, a farm situated on the Washington side of the Columbia river. This property afterward became the townsite of Lyle, and long before there was much of a town there, a postoffice was established, of which Mr. Lyle was postmaster for eight years. In the spring of 1892 Mr. Lyle sold this property to the Balfours, English capitalists. He then purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land on Camas prairie and a quarter section a few miles northwest of Lyle, which he has since divided between his daughter, Mrs. I. B. Hewitt, and son, G. B. Lyle, himself retiring from the more wearing activities of farm life.

In 1857, Mr. Lyle married Miss Martha Snipes, then a resident of Iowa. She was a native of North Carolina, born in 1834; she died in 1887. Ben Snipes, a noted cattleman of Klickitat county during the early days, is her brother. Her parents were Elam and Acenith (Rosson) Snipes, pioneers of this country, the former a native of North Carolina, in which state he attained manhood. He came to Klickitat county in 1863, and resided there until the time of his death in 1894. Acenith Snipes was a native of North Carolina, also, born in 1818. Her death occurred in 1896. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle are: Charles E., deceased; George B., and Sarah A., now Mrs. I. B. Hewitt. Fraternally, Mr. Lyle is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and the Grange. In politics, as in all else, he is independent, but he expects to vote for Turner for governor and the rest of his ticket shall be Socialist. No man now residing in Klickitat county is better entitled to the honors due old settlers than is Mr. Lyle. This county, when he first saw it, contained little evidence of the civilization that was to follow his arrival. Indians were the only established inhabitants; their crooked trails the only roads across the unplowed prairies, and life and property were safe or otherwise according to the strength of the persons who defended them.

D. E. WITT, merchant, farmer, hotel man, and livery stable owner, is one of the foremost citizens of Klickitat county, and the leading business man of Lyle, in which he resides. Since his arrival there three years ago, he has been interested in every considerable enterprise of a business nature that has been developed, and in addition to dealing in town interests has bought and sold twenty farms. At present he is engaged in the diverse pursuits first mentioned, also is an extensive buyer and shipper of stock. This energetic business man is a Missourian, born in Neosho county, September 17, 1861. the son of James Witt, also a native of Neosho county, born in 1816. The mother, Amanda (Rush) Witt, was born in middle Tennessee. She is still living though seventy-seven years old, and is enjoying exceptionally good health for one of that age. James Witt crossed the Plains to California in 1849, but stayed only a short time, returning to the east. He made a second trip to the Golden state in 1852, and this time remained there working in the mines until he accumulated considerable money. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he was promptly upon the scene of action, and like tens of thousands of other brave men, died in battle for the sake of country and posterity.

The subject of this review was, at that time, a babe of three years. Fatherless as he was, he grew to young manhood under the load of responsibility which usually rests upon the head of a family, since he was obliged to assist in the support of his mother and the other children. The family moved to Kansas City, Kansas, when he was sixteen years of age, and here for several years he worked hard at whatever he could find to do that was sufficiently remunerative. These were hard years for D. E. Witt, yet, doubtless, did much to fit him for the successful business career he has since had. In 1885 Mr. Witt went to Texas and there engaged in buying and shipping cattle, Austin being his principal shipping point. He followed this business for ten years, then returned to Kansas, where he remained for two years. His final move was to Lyle, Klickitat county, in 1890, and at this location he has since been engaged in business continuously and successfully.

Mr. Witt was married, February 20, 1886, to Miss Lizzie Pool, then residing in Missouri, her native state. George and Mary (Spencer) Pool, her parents, were among the pioneer settlers of Missouri. Both are now deceased. One child has been born to this marriage, namely, Charles, who is at present fourteen years of age. Fraternally, Mr. Witt is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and in politics, he is a Republican. In political and fraternal affairs, he is as energetic as in his business, and in everything he so deems himself as to command the respect of his fellow citizens. Mr. Witt is a Klickitat county enthusiast. His particular locality he asserts to be one of the best fruit-growing regions in the state, fully as good as the White Salmon, or the Hood River sections, and he claims that the entire country abounds with choice opportunities waiting to be taken hold of by the man of business ability and industry. In accordance with his views he is centering all his efforts in the development of his Klickitat county property, and he is always alert in seizing opportunities to add to the reputation of his community.

CAPTAIN ALBERT T. HIGBY, the respected justice of the peace and notary public of Lyle, Washington, was born in Allegany county, New York, October 22, 1833, the son of Ira and Ruth (Fuller) Higby. Ira Higby was born in Rutland, Vermont, April 27, 1784, and was afterward closely associated with the pioneer history of New York. He participated in the War of 1812. He was one of the first settlers to occupy the Holland purchase in western New York in 1818. He resided in this region till 1848, then moving to Crawford county, Pennsylvania, where he resided till the time of his death in 1868. He was of English descent. Ruth (Fuller) Higby was born in New York state. Her father and uncles all were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and served also in the Indian wars immediately before and after the Revolution. They were of the oldest colonial stock in the state of New York. Mrs. Higby's death occurred in 1857.

Captain Albert T. attained the age of nineteen on his father's farm in New York, and in addition to completing the common school studies took an academic course. At the age mentioned he left the paternal roof and went to Virginia, thence to Rock Island, Illinois, where in addition to serving as sheriff, he studied law and was admitted to the bar. At the beginning of the Civil war he was among the first to respond to the call for troops, and in May, 1861, he received a commission as second lieutenant in the Thirtieth Illinois infantry. During the war he served under General Steele in Missouri and was in the command of General Grant at the siege of Vicksburg, where he was officer in charge of a picket line. After the battle of Wilson Creek he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, his real duties being those of a major. However, he was not commissioned in the latter rank.

After being mustered out of service in June, 1864, Captain Higby returned to Rock Island, Illinois, where he engaged in the practice of law till 1870, when he went to Montgomery county, Kansas, and practiced law there. After two years thus spent he went to Prescott, Arizona, where he engaged in business of a commercial nature and in mining. His next move was to California in 1872; thence he went to Puget Sound in 1875, and he was a resident of Whatcom county till 1888, spending a part of the time, however, in California. In 1888 he went to Rochester, New York, where he remained till the fall of 1891; then he came to The Dalles, Oregon. A year later he bought a farm three miles from Lyle, which property he brought to an excellent state of cultivation, then sold in 1903. This property comprised three hundred and twenty acres, and is now reputed to be one of the best farms in the county.

Mr. Higby has been married twice. His second marriage occurred July 29, 1888, in Rochester, New York, Miss Mary L. Maltby being the bride. She was the daughter of Seth M. and Abigail (Grannis) Maltby, both of the old colonial stock of New York. Seth M. Maltby was born July 31, 1791, and died July 23, 1873. His mother's father was the redoubtable Brigadier General Seth Murray of Revolutionary war renown, who was for twenty-eight years in the service of the United States government. His forefathers were among the famous Scotch Covenanters who were driven from Scotland to America by religious persecution. His father, Isaac Maltby, is known to readers of United States history as General Isaac Maltby, who commanded the Elite Brigade of Boston in the War of 1812. He himself—S. M. Maltby—was a paymaster in that war. Abigail (Grannis) Maltby was born in Wallingford, Connecticut, April 11, 1800, and died in December, 1846. She was of English extraction, and her forefathers were among the first settlers of colonial America. Two of Mrs. Higby's brothers are now living. They are: George B. Maltby, of Aurora, Indiana, and John W. Maltby, of Rochester, New York. Mr. Higby's family history, as will be noticed, justifies him in laying claim to being an American of the truest stock. His forefathers, as well as those of his wife, were in America when what is now the mightiest nation on earth consisted of a few oppressed colonies whose strength lay not in wealth or population, but in the indomitable spirit and unflinching courage of a few hundred thousand hardy colonists scattered along the Atlantic coast. These brave spirits, reckoning in the face of what was perhaps the most overwhelming odds ever confronted by a similarly actuated people, threw off the yoke of oppression and founded the American nation.

JOHN KURE, an energetic farmer and stockman residing six miles northeast of Lyle in Klickitat county, was born on Bornholm Island, Denmark, February 6, 1861, the son of Ola Sonne and Catherine (Holm) Kure, both subjects of the Danish kingdom. Ola Kure was a farmer. He was born in Denmark in 1814 and died in the land of his nativity at the age of fifty-six. Catherine (Holm) Kure was born in 1830 and died at the age of sixty-six, having resided in Denmark all her life. John attained young manhood in Denmark, being in the city till he was fourteen years of age, after which he resided with one of his uncles on a farm for several years. At the age of twenty he came to the United States, his objective point being Ohio, and in Akron, that state, he accepted employment in a manufacturing establishment. After two years thus spent he came to San Francisco, where, for a time, he was employed in a restaurant. This work, however, was not entirely to Mr. Kure's liking, so he quit it and for a short time worked on a farm in Napa county. His next move was to Klickitat county, where he arrived in 1885, and the claim he then filed on is his home today. Klickitat county, when Mr. Kure first saw it, gave little evidence of being a land of promise—unless, indeed, those promises were of Indian massacres, and prolonged remoteness from the marts of civilization. Indians were his most frequent visitors, and, as a rule, social intercourse with the Siwash is not greatly to be desired by the white man. The squirrels ate his crops; the coyotes joined the Indians in pillaging his hen roost, of the two being possibly the fairer-minded, since the coyote stole only what he could eat, while the Indian took all he could carry; white neighbors were few and far between, and so steadily occupied in meeting the difficulties incident to pioneer life as to be drawn away from attention to neighborly functions. Notwithstanding all drawbacks, however, Mr. Kure began improving his land. He built fences, a house, farm buildings, managed to obtain a start in cattle, and by the employment of divers resources, some inherent within himself and others which he forced from his surroundings, at length succeeded in establishing a home for himself and family as comfortable as any in Klickitat county.

Mr. Kure's acquaintance with the lady who afterward became his wife began in the old country, where he was employed by her father in a grocery store and bakery. She and her parents came from Denmark to Wilmington, North Carolina, in 1889, from which place, upon the request of her betrothed, she came to Klickitat county, where the marriage ceremony was performed. Mrs. Kure's maiden name was Henrietta Sorensen. She was born in Denmark, November 10, 1872, and married Mr. Kure November 5, 1890. Her parents, Corfix and Catherine Sorensen, are both now living in Klickitat county. Children that were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Kure are Kamma, Henry and Hildor. After his marriage Mr. Kure took his bride to the farm, where they resided till 1899, then building a hotel at Lyle. It was called the "Riverside." They conducted this establishment for only two years, then sold out and returned to the farm. Mr. and Mrs. Kure are members of and active workers in the Lutheran church. In politics, Mr. Kure is a Republican, but he has no political ambitions other than to discharge the duties of a good citizen. He has, however, served his community as school director, as road supervisor, and his party as central committeeman, always, it is said, with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public whom he served.

JOHN DAFFRON, a genial hotel keeper of Lyle, Washington, was born in Platte county, Missouri, July 24, 1855, the son of Joseph and Mary (Vinyard) Daffron, the former now living in Portland, Oregon, and the latter deceased. Joseph Daffron is of French parentage. He was born in Tennessee, and there resided till he attained manhood, then moving to Missouri, where he arrived in 1850. In 1883 he came to Portland. John Daffron grew to manhood at his home in Missouri, and during youth received an education in the neighborhood school. He lived with his parents until twenty-one years of age, then became a runner for a hotel at Edgerton, Missouri, a vocation which he followed for six years. In 1883, he sold out and came to Portland, Oregon. Later he moved to The Dalles, and there for three years was in the employ of the O. R. & N. Company. After this he was engaged for two years in the meat market business, then in 1890, he filed on a homestead twelve miles north of Lyle, Washington. After residing on this place for five years he moved to Lyle and opened a hotel and livery stable, both of which he is conducting at the present time with a considerable degree of success.

Mr. Daffron was married in Missouri, February 13, 1876, to Miss Hester Doney, daughter of Jefferson and Rodey (Burnett) Doney, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Missouri. Jefferson Doney moved from Indiana to Missouri in an early day, and resided there till his death in the spring of 1903. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Rodey Doney, who now resides in Missouri. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Daffron are: Mrs. Mary McNaughton, born in 1877; Mrs. Alva Bradford, in 1879, and Owen in 1883, all in Missouri. Fraternally, Mr. Daffron is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and in religion he is a Baptist. His property interests comprise three hundred and fifty-nine acres of land, two hundred of which were bequeathed by will to his wife. The land is well stocked with horses, cattle, buildings and farming implements, and under the capable management of its owner is rapidly developing into one of the most valuable of its kind and size in the county.

SAMUEL CONNER ZIEGLER is a prosperous fruit grower, residing at present near White Salmon, Washington. He was born near Mount Aetna, Pennsylvania, June 26, 1862, the son of

Daniel P. and Mary (Conner) Ziegler, both of whom still reside in Pennsylvania. Daniel P. Ziegler was born in that state, March 17, 1822. The family of which he is a descendant has been established in Pennsylvania since colonial days, and is affiliated with the German Baptist (Dunkard) sect, well known in the history of Pennsylvania. The elder Ziegler, during his younger days, was a Dunkard proctor. At present he is farming. Mary (Conner) Ziegler is a native of the Keystone state, and now, at the age of seventy-four, is enjoying good health. Her forefathers were among the colonial settlers of Pennsylvania. Samuel C. spent the first eighteen years of his life on the home farm in Pennsylvania, receiving a fair education in the common schools. At the age mentioned he went to Illinois—then considered in the remote west by Pennsylvanians—and there took up the carpenter's trade. He was thus occupied for two years and a half. Dissatisfied with his prospects in Illinois, however, he continued westward, arriving at Los Angeles, California, January 17, 1882, and there finding employment at his trade. After spending nine months there, he went to Spokane, Washington. That city was his home most of the time for the succeeding ten years, during which he was employed at divers occupations, usually at his trade and in railroad construction work. He also fled on a land claim, and in partnership with a man named Jones, attempted to fulfill the requirements of the law by living upon it, and did so until Jones became involved in an affair which resulted in his being shot and killed. Mr. Ziegler then left his claim and returned to Spokane. This was in 1887.

In Spokane Mr. Ziegler returned to his trade as contractor and builder, also followed the hotel business, prospering in each line. Finally he established a house furnishing business at the corner of Main and Post streets of which he made a success until the fire of 1889 destroyed his entire stock, valued, it is said, at $16,000. After this reverse, he went back to his humble trade, investing all his earnings in real estate, only to lose all once again. Mr. Ziegler then came to the conclusion that Spokane was not the place for him, and so it happened that May 16, 1894, he arrived in White Salmon in search of fields less fraught with ill fortune. In Klickitat county, Mr. Ziegler, shortly after his arrival, identified himself with the Jewett colony, a co-operative enterprise, which was then flourishing, but this organization eventually failed, again bringing financial ruin to our subject. Unfortunate, but plucky as ever, Mr. Ziegler then engaged in the sawmill business on White Salmon river, and he continued to labor with steadily mending fortunes until August 16, 1895, then purchasing the farm on which he is at present living. It was about this time that fruit raising became recognized as a lucrative industry in the White Salmon section of Klickitat county, and Mr. Ziegler immediately fell in line with the new idea. Since then he has devoted himself so assiduously to the horticultural business that he has brought himself into repute as an enthusiast on the fruit question. He was the first to introduce commercial fertilizers in the White Salmon locality, and in other ways he has been likewise progressive. Today his orchards and berry plots are among the best, if not the very best, so far as appearances and quality of products are concerned, of all those in Klickitat county.

Mr. Ziegler was married in Spokane, January 19, 1890, to Miss Anna Beemler, a native of Germany, born April 12, 1866. She came to the United States with her parents in 1878, consequently the greater part of her education was received in this country. Both parents are now dead. They were Carl and Wilhelmina (Wemox) Beemler, the former an engineer by profession. He was rendered helpless by a stroke of paralysis during the latter years of his life, remaining so until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Ziegler are the parents of seven children: Earl C., born December 16, 1893; Helen, November 29, 1896; Laura, March 22, 1899; Herbert, May 12, 1901; Harry, twin brother of Herbert, deceased when young; Mary A. and Monroe A., twins, born July 16th and July 17th, respectively, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Ziegler is connected with the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, United Artisans and the Grange. In the Modern Woodmen of America, he has held the position of venerable consul for a number of years. Politically, he is a Socialist, though of an independent type. He is esteemed by all who know him as a man of worth to any community, for the strength of character and profound honesty of which he is possessed, as well as the ability and energy which make him a forceful factor in the upbuilding of the community.

CLINTON M. WOLFARD is a merchant and all-around business man of White Salmon, Washington, reputed to be both honest and prosperous. He was born in Silvertown, Marion county, Oregon, August 7, 1858, the son of Lewis and Mary (Smith) Wolfard, both of whom are now residing near White Salmon. The elder Wolfard has followed divers occupations during his lifetime, generally, however, as a farmer or in the mines, though at one time he was a merchant. He was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, November 4, 1838. His parents were foreigners, coming from Alsace-Lorraine, France, to the United States in 1815, their objective point being Ohio, which was then in the early stages of settlement. In 1854 they crossed the Plains to Oregon, in which state the senior Wolfard took up a donation claim in partnership with John B. Wolfard, his father. Here he lived till 1873, then moving to Washington and settling in Colville. During ten years of his residence at this point he was commissioner of Stevens county. The next move was to Colfax, in Whitman county, and thence to Klickitat county, his present residence being in this county near White Salmon. Mary (Smith) Wolfard, his wife, is a native of Arkansas, born in 1839, and at present residing at the home near White Salmon.

On August 15, 1880, Mr. Wolfard married Miss Callie McCoy, who, at the time of marriage, was residing at Moscow, Idaho. She was the daughter of Isaac McCoy, a typical western pioneer. His parents were killed in Texas by the Indians, after which he—little more than a well-grown boy—"rustled" the necessities of existence in divers parts of the west, sometimes as a cowboy, frequently as an Indian fighter, finally, however, settling in the Hood river valley, his present home. The mother is now deceased. Her maiden name was Trimble. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wolfard are: Mary, Anna, Belle, Geneva, Jay and Clinton. All are now living, some at home and others in different parts of the west. Before marriage Mr. Wolfard spent the years of his life amid changing scenes. As a boy he crossed the Plains with his parents, afterwards traveled with them in a "prairie-schooner" in Idaho and California, the line of travel usually being in such parts of the west as were entirely unsettled or just beginning to be. At all times, however, he strove to secure an education and was so successful that in his sixteenth year he was qualified to teach school. This vocation he followed for seven years without missing a term. Upon desisting from school-teaching, he engaged in the mercantile business at Colton, Washington, where he remained for four years. Next he moved to Hood River, Oregon, where he established a mercantile concern under the firm name of Wolfard & Bone. He was in business there for ten years. His final move was to White Salmon in March, 1889, where he had already established a branch store to the Hood River concern. He has since devoted his entire attention to the management of the White Salmon store, which is now being conducted under the firm name of C. M. Wolfard & Company. In addition, he is present postmaster of White Salmon. Fraternally, Mr. Wolfard is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Artisans. In politics, he is a Republican, but though enthusiastic in adherence to his party principles is not an office-seeker, and has no use for those who consider patriotism the desire of place and politics the art of getting it. Mrs. Wolfard is a member of the Congregational church. She is fully as public-spirited as her husband, and takes a keen interest in all social affairs of her church and community, being in this respect a leader. Husband and wife stand for education, believing in the merits of higher education as well as common, which convictions are not prevalent among those who have spent their lifetime in meeting the untheoretic requirements of the business world. Mr. Wolfard was one of the most active promoters of the new schoolhouse at White Salmon; has been a member of the school board for years; and, being an experienced school teacher, is always among the first to recognize new and worthy methods of teaching.

CAPTAIN HOWARD C. COOK, a retired sea captain, a veteran of the Civil war and for many years a civil engineer in the government's service, is he whose life history is here chronicled. Notwithstanding his exciting and interesting past career, replete with adventures on land and sea, of which he tells in a fascinating manner, Captain Cook is now quietly managing the affairs of his well kept fruit ranch, situated a mile west of White Salmon, Washington. His career as a soldier was cut short by a wound received in battle during the Civil war, causing him to be confined in a hospital nearly a year, and he forsook the perilous realms of Neptune many years ago. Born October 27, 1844, in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, he is the son of Henry W. and Caroline (Emery) Cook, both of whom died long ago. Henry W. Cook, of Holland Dutch descent, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1818, and became a sailor. He fought through the Mexican war as a captain, in an engagement of that war receiving an injury that resulted in the loss of his eyesight. After the conflict was over he engaged in business of a commercial nature in Delaware. His death occurred in 1861 in the latter mentioned state. Caroline E. Cook was born in Germany and was six years old when brought to the United States by her parents. The family settled in Pennsylvania, in which commonwealth Caroline grew to womanhood and was married. She died in 1873. Howard C. Cook spent his early years in Pennsylvania, there receiving a good education. His first venture in life was as a civil engineer, having begun the study of this subject when only fourteen years of age. By the time he had mastered the principles of his profession, however, the Civil war broke out. Young Cook was among the first to respond to the call to arms, enlisting first as a soldier. He joined the navy in 1862, at Pensacola, Florida, and later was transferred to a gunboat in a squadron operating on the Mississippi river. In this service he was promoted to the position of ensign, in which capacity he served ten months on the same ship with George Dewey, afterwards of Spanish-American war renown, who was then in command of the squadron. This vessel was blown up in one of the many engagements in which it participated in the Mississippi river, and the injuries Ensign Cook received caused his confinement in a hospital for four months. However, upon recovering, he served in the navy another year and a half, but then received injuries in battle which placed him in a hospital for a year, as heretofore mentioned.

After the war Mr. Cook renewed his study of civil engineering and finally was able to complete the course. Then, in 1867, the adventurous young engineer sought his fortunes in India. In this land of tigers, pestilence and jungles, he formed an acquaintance with His Royal Highness, the king of Oude, and for two years was master of the imperial yacht. Subsequently, however, he returned to the land of his birth and took charge of a freighting vessel. For the ensuing twenty-two years he sailed the seas in charge of many different ships. He was sent to the Pacific coast by the war department in 1878 on a mission relating to the engineering enterprises with which this government was concerned. As a result of this appointment Captain Cook laid aside the charts and compass and again became a landsman, serving the government with honor. Subsequently the captain resigned his commission and after making a trip through the Pacific coast region, in 1880, decided to locate in Klickitat county. Accordingly he filed a claim to his present place and since then has given most of his attention to fruit growing and farming, meeting with excellent success and achieving an enviable reputation as a horticulturist. His fraternal relations are with the Masons, the Artisans, the Grange and the Odd Fellows, and of the last named order he was recently elected district deputy grand master. Politically, he is a Republican and sufficiently interested in public affairs to attend all state and county conventions. In 1868 he was married in York county, Pennsylvania, to Miss Ediline M. Stemmer. The following year she was drowned in Delaware Bay and since then Captain Cook has remained single. It is doubtful if any citizen of Klickitat is more popular than this hale sea captain, who is withal a man of influence and excellent standing in his community.

A. H. JEWETT is one of the pioneers of Klickitat county, as well as being one of its most commendable citizens, worthy of respect from the dual view-point of his business success and uprightness of character. His present residence is in the vicinity of White Salmon, and is probably one of the most beautiful spots along the shores of the Columbia river. He was born November 4, 1845, in McHenry county, Illinois, the son of Christopher and Arabella (Kent) Jewett, both of whom are now dead. Christopher Jewett was born in Massachusetts, and in after life was a harness maker. He went to Illinois during the early settlement period of that state, there discontinuing his trade and taking up agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in Illinois in 1850. Arabella (Kent) Jewett was a native of Ohio, and in that state was educated and grew to womanhood. She married Mr. Jewett when she was twenty-two years old; she died in Wisconsin. A. H. Jewett received his education in the common schools of Illinois and the high school of Kenosha, Wisconsin. He remained at home until sixteen years of age, then took up work of a commercial nature, which he followed for one year. About this time the Civil war began, and young Jewett was one of the first to enlist. His experience in actual warfare commenced in 1863, with the Thirteenth United States infantry. After a short term of service he was discharged, but later re-enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Thirty-second volunteers. He was again discharged, in 1864, but again re-enlisted, joining Company H, One Hundred and Fifty-third Illinois volunteers, serving under this enlistment until 1865. At the close of the war he returned to his home in Illinois, where he remained until the spring of 1866, then, in company with his mother and brother, going to Sparta, Wisconsin, where he established a nursery. He continued in this business until 1874. In the spring of that year he sold out, and came to Klickitat county, Washington, settling at White Salmon. Mr. Jewett was one of the first to perceive the richness and numerous other advantages of the uplands along the Columbia, and accordingly chose to make his home there rather than on the lowlands. His first place was about two miles north of the river, but, two years later, he took up his permanent abode on his present farm. After the expenditure of much money and time, he has converted this into a veritable beauty spot, unusually rich in natural scenery, as it is also in fertility. He is an expert horticulturist, and has achieved notable success as an orchardist and a berry grower.

Mr. Jewett was married in Wisconsin, March 13, 1870, to Miss Jennie Waters, a native of Wisconsin, born January 16, 1847. Miss Waters was a highly accomplished lady, having received an excellent education in her native state, and at the time of her marriage was a school teacher. Her parents were Charles and Mary (Spencer) Waters, the former of whom is now residing in Klickitat county. Mr. Waters was born in Illinois in 1820, the son of pioneers of that state. When they came to Illinois settlement had scarcely begun. Peoria not even being laid out as a townsite. He came to Klickitat county in 1884, and has since lived much of the time with his son-in-law, A. H. Jewett. Mrs. Waters was born in Cincinnati, Ohio; she died in Wisconsin. Mrs. Jewett is one of seven children born to that union. Two children have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jewett, namely: Mrs. Lena Thompson, now a resident of Portland, her husband being superintendent of the Portland General Electric Company, and Eolus, whose death occurred July 17, 1904. Both children were born on the White Salmon homestead. Fraternally, Mr. Jewett is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In politics, he is a Socialist. Mrs. Jewett is a member of the Congregational church, and is an enthusiastic supporter of the benevolent concerns which are identified with that denomination, being seconded warmly along these lines by her husband. The Jewett farm consists of three hundred and seventy-five acres, of which one hundred are in cultivation, eight acres being in strawberries, twenty-five acres in orchard and ten acres in grapes. Besides this property, Mr. Jewett owns most of the townsite of White Salmon. Mr. and Mrs. Jewett command the highest esteem of the community and for many years have been prominently identified with its progress.

JOHN P. EGAN, a leading fruit grower of the White Salmon district, is of Irish parentage and an Australian by birth, born in New South Wales, January 24, 1843, the son of Patrick and Ellen (Davern) Egan, both of whom are dead. Both parents were born in Ireland. They immigrated to Australia in 1841, settlement of that far-away English colony having just begun, and resided there until the time of their death. John P. Egan grew up amid the environments of the Australian stock ranges, and while educational facilities there were then limited, he was nevertheless enabled to attend school and obtain a fair education. By way of digression, it may be here noted that the policy of England in sending her exiles to Australia, prior, however, to the time of John P.'s birth, in many instances caused persons of the highest educational qualifications to be deported to that remote continent. These exiles, being thus removed from the environment which perhaps led to the crime incurring punishment, adopted better ways of living, and in many instances are known to have been the promoters of enterprises which afterward became important in the development of the Australian commonwealths. Thus it was that schools were founded in Australia within a comparatively short time after the exiling policy was adopted. At the age of twenty-one, John left the parental roof, and, during the ten years following, he was occupied with mining and stock driving. Then, in 1874, he came to the United States, his objective point being San Francisco. In this city, he was employed as a teamster until 1880, when he made his final move to Klickitat county, settling on his present farm near White Salmon.

July 14, 1878, Mr. Egan married Miss Margaret Hoben, the event taking place in San Francisco. Miss Hoben was born in Ireland, in 1856, and is the daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Mannon) Hoben, both of whom lived and died in Ireland. Patrick Hoben was a farmer. Mrs. Egan came from the old country to San Francisco in 1874, and for several years after arrival lived with her brother, who had preceded her to that city. She was married, as mentioned, in 1878. To this union have been born the following children: William, in San Francisco, April 29, 1879, died at the age of sixteen months; John J., November 14, 1880, drowned in the Columbia river, March 25, 1902; Frank P., April 15, 1882; Edwin J., November 20, 1883; Ellen M., August 22, 1885; and Leslie M., December 11, 1889. All except William were born on the farm near White Salmon. In politics, Mr. Egan is a Republican; religiously, he is a member of the Catholic church. He has served his community as school director for the past twelve years and eight years as justice of the peace. He possesses the Irish temperament of wit and good nature, and because of these attributes, combined with industry and integrity, holds a position among his fellow men worthy of the most deserving.

HALSEY D. COLE is a comfortably situated farmer, residing one mile east of Fulda postoffice, in Klickitat county. He is a native of New York state, born in Lewis county, September 14, 1842, the son of Lansing W. and Pedy (Dennison) Cole, both now deceased. Lansing W. Cole was born in New York state in 1808, and in after life was a farmer. His death occurred in Lewis county. Pedy (Dennison) Cole, also a native of New York, was born in 1814, and died in 1868. She was the mother of twelve children, ten of whom are still living. Of the boys in this family, Halsey D., of this biography, is the youngest. He grew to young manhood in Lewis county, where he was born, remaining at home with his parents until he was eighteen years of age. When the Civil war began, he was among the first to enlist in defense of the union. His career as a soldier began with the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery, with whom he served for three years, lacking a few days. Upon receiving an honorable discharge, at Sackett's Harbor, he returned to his home in Lewis county, where he engaged in cheese-making. After six years thus spent, he moved to San Francisco, California, arriving in the spring of 1875. In California, he followed the business of cheese-making for several years, then, in 1879, came overland by wagon to Klickitat county. Shortly after his arrival, he filed on his present homestead, to the cultivation of which he has ever since devoted his time and talents. In all, Mr. Cole now owns three hundred and twenty acres of land. Sixteen acres of his original homestead are now cleared of heavy timber, this work having been done by Mr. Cole personally, while one hundred and twenty acres of the tract he owns are fine meadow land. The entire farm is under fence and well supplied with buildings, stock and machinery, etc. All improvements are the results of Mr. Cole's personal labor. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Cole are: Lvsander, Madison A., Lansing W., Samuel M., Mrs. Adeline Hoskins, Mrs. Jane Dennison, Mrs. Angeline Tiffany, Mrs. Pedy Smith, Mrs. Eleanor Allen and Mrs. Medora Snyder. Fraternally, Mr. Cole is affiliated with the Masons, and in politics, he is a Republican, quite prominent in municipal affairs. In the fall of 1890, he was elected to the office of commissioner of the First district for a term of two years. At present he is acting as road supervisor, in the duties of which office, as in all other matters, he is displaying skill, good judgment and the ability to do the right thing at the right time.

GUY G. CROW is the affable and efficient druggist of White Salmon, Washington, and a westerner by birth and preference. He was born in Waitsburg, Washington, January 7, 1882, and is the son of Wayman and Nancy (McCoy) Crow, who were among the pioneers of the Northwest. Wayman Crow was born in Owensboro, Kentucky, in 1850. In an early day he came west to Idaho, where he filed on a claim not far from Kendrick, on the Potlatch river. To say that this country was then unsettled by white men would be expressing the matter very mildly, in view of the conditions then existing. Indians were the only neighbors the few white settlers had, and their crooked trails were the sole avenues of travel. After farming his claim on the Potlatch for several years, Mr. Crow moved to Waitsburg. This was in 1882. He lived in Waitsburg for a few months only, however, then returned to his farm in Idaho, where he resided until the time of his death. Nancy McCoy Crow died when Guy G. was but ten years old, hence he remembers but little of her. Thus left motherless, Guy lived with his uncle, Jacob Taylor, for several years, afterward going to Hood River, Oregon, where he worked as delivery boy in the store owned by C. M. Wolfard, another uncle. Later, when Mr. Wolfard established his mercantile concern at White Salmon, Guy accompanied him, as a clerk, and in this capacity remained until 1903. Then, in partnership with Dr. Gearhart, he opened a drug store in White Salmon, and this is his present business. Now, however, he owns the entire business, having bought his partner's interest soon after the partnership was formed. Mr. Crow has two sisters and one brother: Lydia, Virginia and Roy, all residing in White Salmon, and all of them westerners by birth. Fraternally, Mr. Crow is an Odd Fellow, a Modern Woodman and an Artisan. He is independent in politics, always giving his support to whatever issue is the most worthy, regardless of party lines. Mr. Crow and Miss Ethel I. Johnston were married at White Salmon, June 1, 1904. The bride is the daughter of George and Victoria (Woods) Johnston, the former of whom died when Mrs. Crow was but a year old, and the latter of whom is now Mrs. William McCoy, of White Salmon. Mr. Johnston was a native of Rego county, Iowa, where his death occurred, and was a farmer by occupation. Mrs. Johnston was born in Indiana.

Ethel (Johnston) Crow is a native of Ringgold county, Iowa, born January 11, 1883. When four years old she was brought by her mother to Oregon, and in that state her school education was begun. She attended high school in Seattle, Washington, and previous to her marriage taught three terms. Mr. Crow is one of the successful and popular young men of the county.

RALEIGH ADAMS is engaged in the dual vocation of fruit raising and the real estate business, his home being half a mile west of White Salmon. He was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, May 2, 1870, the son of Henry B. and Luvenia (Hunter) Adams, both of whom are now residing at Keystone, Indiana. The elder Adams was a native of Ohio, born in 1806. Grandfather Adams was in Ohio not long after the close of the Revolution, the state then being, as Daniel Webster afterward said of Oregon, "a wilderness infested with wild animals and wilder men." He was killed in the War of 1812. Luvenia (Hunter) Adams was born in Yellow Bud, Ohio, in 1816. She was of German parentage, and her husband of English. The subject of this review grew to young manhood on the old farm in Ohio, during boyhood receiving such education as was available in the common schools to which he had access. He left the parental roof when nineteen years of age, going to Green county, Pennsylvania, where he farmed for six years. Then he returned to his native state, and, after a few years spent there, came west, arriving at his objective point, White Salmon, May 12, 1893. During the journey he had charge of a carload of Jersey cattle for Judge Byrkit, a prominent stockman of Klickitat county, by whom he was employed for three years after his arrival. In 1900, he decided to establish a home and business of his own, and accordingly began clearing and developing the farm which he occupies at present. Such of the land as is now cleared is set out in apple and cherry trees and strawberries.

On June 10, 1894, Mr. Adams married Miss Marion Overbaugh, the ceremony taking place at The Dalles, Oregon. Miss Overbaugh was born in New York state, in 1874, and is the daughter of James W. Overbaugh, also a native of New York, born in 1826. The mother died many years ago, when Marion was a child. J. W. Overbaugh came west to California in 1877, and later to White Salmon, where he is at present living. Five children have been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Adams: Luella Mary, William Henry, Jesse and Andrew, twins, and Edward, all of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Adams are both members of the United Artisans. In politics, Mr. Adams is a Republican, though not to the extent of being prejudiced in municipal politics or in any line except where national issues are in contest. In the latter instances he adheres strictly to the Republican platform. Both he and his wife are strong advocates of good schools, and are ever ready to lend support to whatever improvements may be introduced.

JOHN PERRY is a pioneer stockman and rancher, residing four miles northeast of Pine Flat postoffice and thirteen miles northeast of White Salmon, in Klickitat county. He was born in Oswego county, New York, March 4, 1841, the son of George and Ann (Gravelly) Perry, both of English descent. George Perry was a merchant. He was born in England in 1808, and came to the United States when twelve years old. Our subject's mother was born in St. Lawrence county, New York. John remained under the paternal roof in New York state till he was thirteen years of age, then struck out to rustle for himself. He first went to Gardner's Island in Lake Ontario, and there had a chance to join the navy, but he disregarded the opportunity. Rafting on the Mississippi river suited him very well, however, so he engaged in this work for a time, then proceeded to Galveston, Texas, where he was at the beginning of the Civil war. About this time John concluded he could serve his country as well were he a thousand miles farther west. Accordingly, he put to sea on a ship under the command of one Captain Smith, and after hair-raising experiences in blockade running fully worthy of Captain John Smith of colonial fame, the ship made the journey around Cape Horn and landed at Portland in 1862. From Portland Mr. Perry made his way to the gold-producing sections of California, and after a survey of the country in which he saw nothing that suited him especially well that was within his reach he went to The Dalles, Oregon. He arrived at this place in 1866, and in the same year came to Klickitat county. For some time after arrival he worked at farming and in the timber, but in 1870 he filed on his present place. The manner in which he came to choose his present location is worthy of note. A boat that capsized on the Columbia river emptied its occupant, James Cook, into the water. Cook would have drowned had he not been rescued by Mr. Perry. After the rescue he and Cook were hunting together one day, and came upon the tract of land which Mr. Perry then and there decided he would make his future home. Mr. Cook is at present residing in North Yakima. In the development of his land into a crop-bearing farm Mr. Perry suffered, if anything, more than the usual number of hard experiences that fall to the lot of homeseekers in a new country. The Indians were his chief annoyance, but he also suffered for lack of fences to protect his crops. However, by administering a sound trouncing to all Siwashies who dared to encroach upon his rights, and preserving a strict surveillance over his fields, he managed to get along very well. He has followed stock raising principally—both sheep and cattle—since being in Klickitat county.

In 1874 Mr. Perry married Miss Julia Crate, a woman of French and Indian parentage. Her Indian blood she derives from the Wasco tribe through her mother, and French from her father. Children born to this marriage are John, Edward, William, Daniel, Mrs. Rosa Shellenberg and Mary. In politics Mr. Perry is a Democrat, but has no aspirations in the field of politics other than those of an every-day, law-abiding citizen. He bears a good reputation wherever known.

WILLIAM H. OVERBAUGH lives one mile west of White Salmon, his occupation being that of a fruit grower. He was born in Catskill, New York, April 15, 1863, the son of James W. and Ella F. (Comifort) Overbaugh, the latter now deceased, and the former now residing on his farm near White Salmon. The elder Overbaugh was born in 1828 in Westcamp, New York, on the Hudson river. When a young man he went west to Wisconsin, which was then considered far west by the Atlantic coast people. Later, however, he returned to New York, not finding pioneer Wisconsin greatly to his liking. In 1873 he made another trip westward, this time going to California. After spending two years in divers occupations in California, he went to Oregon, where he lived two years near the Cascade locks. His final move was to Klickitat county in 1879, where, upon arrival, he filed upon the homestead near White Salmon where he is living at present. He is of German descent. Ella F. Comifort was born in Catskill, New York, as was her son, William H. She died at the White Salmon home sixteen years ago. Her parents were English. William H. Overbaugh grew to manhood and acquired an education in different portions of the United States: New York, California, Oregon and Klickitat county. At the age of twenty-one, he left the paternal roof and from then until 1895 he worked in various sawmills much of the time. In the year mentioned he filed on a homestead which was his home during the next eight years. The fruit farm of forty acres on which he now lives, however, is a gift from his father.

On May 16, 1888, Mr. Overbaugh married Miss Loreta Dawson, a native of Kansas, born May 15, 1871. Mrs. Overbaugh does not remember her father, he having died when she was an infant. The mother, Serena Osborne Dawson, was born in North Carolina, in which she grew to womanhood and was married. She is at present making her home with her daughter and son-in-law, the latter of whom is the subject of this biography. Mr. and Mrs. Overbaugh are the parents of six children: Bert C., Ethna C., Robert, Hazel, Mildred and Doris, all of whom were born at the home near White Salmon. Mr. Over-baugh's fraternal connections are with the Odd Fellows, the Artisans and the Grange. In religion, he is a Methodist. He is one of the many residents in this part of Klickitat county who are devoting attention to the raising of fruit, berries, etc., and in this enterprise he is winning deserved success. The farms in this locality are not, as a rule, very large, but it is noticeable how extremely well kept they are. Each small ranchman seems to vie with his neighbor in keeping his property up in the best possible condition, this spirit undoubtedly being more characteristic of fruit raisers than of any other class of agriculturists.

NATHON M. WOOD, a prosperous fruit-grower residing two miles north of White Salmon, was born in Crawford county, Indiana, April 19, 1831, the son of Lewis B. and Mira (Hall) Wood, both now deceased. Lewis B. Wood was born in Kentucky, and after reaching manhood went to Indiana, a state then in the earliest stages of settlement. His death occurred there in 1864. Mary (Hall) Wood, mother of Nathon M., was also a native of Kentucky, in which state she grew to womanhood. Her marriage to Mr. Wood, the elder, occurred in Kentucky, after which she, with her husband, went to Indiana, there residing till the time of her death.

Nathon M., the subject of this review, received his education in the common schools of Indiana. When twenty-one years of age he accompanied his parents to Kentucky, where for two years he was engaged at the carpenter trade, and later conducted a butcher shop in Cloverport. After two years spent in the butcher shop he sold out and returned to Indiana, where, for the twelve years following, he farmed. From Indiana he went to Illinois, in which state he farmed for seven years, after which, in 1885, he came west, his objective point being Klickitat county. The year after his arrival he filed on his present farm, which, since the time of filing, he has resided upon continuously.

Mr. Wood was married in Crawford county, Indiana, April 5, 1855, to Miss Elizabeth Sheckells, the daughter of Silas and Elizabeth (Walker) Sheckells. Silas Sheckells was born in Kentucky, and after attaining his majority followed farming there. He moved from his native state to Indiana, where he resided till the time of his death. Elizabeth (Walker) Sheckells was born in the Hoosier state and lived there till her death. Her parents were among the earliest pioneers of Indiana. Mrs. Wood was born October 17, 1835. During girlhood she received a common school education in her native state, and at the age of twenty-one she married Mr. Wood. The children born to this union are Mrs. Maggie Cooper, in Indiana, June 22, 1862, now residing near Tacoma; Mrs. Victoria E. McCoy, born June 23, 1864, in Indiana, now residing near White Salmon; John M., in Illinois, now living in Iowa; Silas and Ellen, deceased at the ages of three and two, respectively. Fraternally, Mr. Wood is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, and in religion, he adheres to the Christian church. He has been a staunch Republican ever since he reached the age at which he began to understand politics, and his first vote was cast for General Winfield Scott, then a nominee for the presidency. During 1864 he served in the Union army. After retirement from the service he acted as city marshal in the town of Alton, Indiana. Mr. Wood's property interests comprise one hundred and sixty acres of land with the stock, buildings and machinery upon it. Thirty acres of the land is under cultivation, fifteen acres of the cultivated tract being set out to orchard and one and one-half acres to strawberries. He is one of the most worthy citizens of Klickitat county, highly respected wherever known, and commonly called "a fine old man."

MORDECAI JONES is a popular citizen of Klickitat county, residing at "Hunter's Hill," near Husum postoffice, eleven miles north of White Salmon. He was born in Brecon, Wales, September 17, 1865, and was the only son of Mordecai and Margaret (Price) Jones, both of whom are now deceased. The elder Jones was magistrate in his native county for some forty years, and in addition performed other public duties involving equal responsibility, at one time being solicited to enter parliament, but absolutely refusing to do so. He died in 1880, having spent the greater part of his life in public service. Margaret (Price) Jones was born in Wales in 1824, and died in 1885, her entire life-time having been spent in the land of her nativity. Her mother was a direct descendant of King Frydach, a ruler famous in the history of Wales. Mordecai grew to the age of eighteen in Wales, receiving an excellent education at Christ College, Brecon, which was calculated to fit him for service in the army. When he was eighteen his mother died, after which he decided to renounce the military career open to him and come to the United States. Being in possession of means he did not find it necessary to engage in business in America, but gave himself to the pursuit of pleasure. For five years following his arrival he hunted continually. His hunting expeditions led him from Montana to the Pacific coast, and thence into British Columbia, where he spent some time on the Canoe river. Discontinuing this pastime he returned to England, where for several years he was busily engaged in making disposal of property, the care of which devolved upon him. After effecting adjustment of these affairs he was prevailed upon to enter the army. Thus it happened that, in spite of the decision of his youth not to mingle in military affairs, he experienced six years of service with the First South Wales Border Volunteer Battalion, receiving a commission as an officer, and at the time of discharge being captain. Immediately upon his release from service he returned to the United States, arriving in October, 1896. Though his predilection for hunting was as strong as ever, he did not this time engage in the pastime on quite so large a scale as formerly, but purchasing his present farm, he immediately began to get it into shape for cultivation. He now has fifty acres cleared, and a fine apple orchard set out, the fruit being of the valued commercial varieties.

Mr. Jones was married, November 23, 1892, to Miss Gwennlian Price, residing at the time of marriage in Wales. She was born in Wales in 1863, the daughter of Rev. John Price, a clergyman of the Church of England, and Harrett (Parry) Price. The father was born in 1836 and is still living, being at present the rector of Llanveigan parish. He traces his ancestry as far back as the fifteenth century, several of his progenitors being persons well known in the history of England and Wales. Harrett Price, the mother, was born in 1846, and is living today. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jones are Ion, born November 23, 1893; Felix Temple, April 9, 1895; Guy G., July 31, 1896. Fraternaly, Mr. Jones is affiliated with the Masons, and in religion with the Church of England. He is somewhat independent in politics, usually granting his influence to that cause which he deems most worthy. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jones are naturalized citizens of the United States, Mrs. Jones being the first woman to take out naturalization papers at The Dalles, Oregon. Though a farmer and horticulturist, Mr. Jones is a hunter as well, never having in the least relinquished his preference for this pastime. He keeps a kennel of hounds, and is always on hand when a hunt is projected. Mrs. Jones is a marksman of no mean ability, and has personally slain two bears. Her husband has a little the best of her on this score, however, he having killed one hundred and forty-three.

CHRISTIAN GULER is a genial native of Switzerland at present keeping a summer resort and hotel at Trout Lake, Klickitat county. He was born in the canton of Grisons, Switzerland, at the foot of the famous Glacier Silvretta, March 3, 1866, the son of Christian and Margarita Guler, both of whom are now deceased. The elder Guler was born in 1819 in the little hamlet of Klosters, which nestles amid a world of mighty peaks four thousand feet above the level of the sea. He was a harness-maker and farmer from early manhood till the time of his death in 1886, and spent his entire life-time in Switzerland. The Guler family is descended from a line of noblemen who were among the foremost fighters in the numerous wars incident to the forming of the nations, Italy, Austria, Switzerland and Germany, into independent governments as they are today, their greatest achievements being in the strenuous conflict which resulted in the freeing of Switzerland from the dominion of Austria. During the thirteenth century the Gulers were Italians, really, since Italy was the land of their nativity, but after this date, they became identified with Switzerland, and in the course of several generations became thoroughly Swiss. Margarita Guler was born in Switzerland in 1825, and died in 1875, she too living all her life-time in Switzerland. When nineteen years of age Christian decided to come to the United States. By this time he had learned the harness-making trade from his father. In Winona, Minnesota, the point where he first stopped after arriving in the United States, he was employed for two and a half years in a sash and door factory, also working part of the time in a blacksmith shop. Next, he determined to come west. In La Grande, Oregon, he accepted employment in a logging camp, but shortly afterward he went to Seattle, where he was seized with an illness which caused him to be confined in the hospital for seven weeks. After recovery he proceeded to The Dalles, Oregon, where one of his brothers lived, and the two decided to take up homesteads. The homestead on which Christian Guler filed was in Bear Valley. Here he "bached" for four months, during the time possibly undergirding more hardships than are usual to the lot of celibates. There were no roads, and he was obliged to pack all his supplies; neighbors were few, and lived too far distant to be of benefit socially; however, Mr. Guler "toughed it out," the required four months. Then he returned to The Dalles, where he was employed for a year in the machine shops, then returning to his farm, taking with him his newly wedded wife. The first winter of their residence at the new home was fraught with trials sufficient to prove the mettle of the bravest. Potatoes and flour were the chief articles of diet; torches were used for lighting the humble cottage at night; Mr. Guler was obliged to deny himself the luxury of even an occasional pipeful of tobacco, and for months they did not have money enough to purchase postage stamps for letters. Common sense and determination prevailed over all adversities, however, and now Mr. Guler and his wife are in position to speak jokingly of these days of privation and want. In 1896 the settlers succeeded in having a mail route established to White Salmon, and Mr. Guler got the first contract of mail-carrying, also taking charge of the first stage line that touched this point. Winter and summer he was obliged to leave home before five in the morning in order to make the arduous journey as mail carrier, but as ever he was persevering. During the time of his service as mail carrier and stage driver Trout Lake and vicinity became popular as a resort for those desiring to hunt and fish. Mr. Guler saw his opportunity. First by renting and later by purchase he acquired property on Trout Lake, which he has since developed into the popular summer resort it is at present. The property in question was first owned by Peter Stoller, who fled on it some twenty-five years ago, this fling being the first recorded in the Trout Lake locality. Stoller was a Swiss, not inclined toward the summer-resort business. Since acquiring the property, Mr. Guler has erected a commodious hotel upon it, and in many other ways made the place attractive, till at present his hotel is reputed to be by far the most popular resort of the kind in Klickitat county. The brothers of Mr. Guler are Leonard, now a guide in Switzerland; Anton, residing at present in Portland. He has a sister, Burge, who is living in Switzerland. His wife, before her marriage, July 11, 1889, was Miss Philomena Hammel, who was born in the western part of Switzerland in the canton of Soloturn, July 5, 1868. When eleven years of age she came to the United States with her parents, settling in Minnesota. Later she moved to The Dalles, Oregon, where she married Mr. Guler. One child, Margaret, has been born to this marriage. Fraternaly, Mr. Guler is affiliated with the Masons, and in politics is independent. He is at present justice of the peace at Trout Lake, and can be relied upon for strict justice in his decisions.

JAMES F. BLEW is a favorably reputed merchant of Trout Lake, Washington. He was born in Princeton county, Missouri, June 15, 1856, the son of Alfred and Isabella (England) Blew, the former deceased, the latter at present residing at Junction City, Oregon. Alfred Blew was a native of Missouri, born February 8, 1827, his parents being among the earliest pioneers of Missouri. In 1862 he crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in Lane county. After spending several years on a farm there, he went to Umatilla, where he engaged in the sheep business. His death occurred February 18, 1901. He was of Scotch-Irish parentage. Isabella (England) Blew was born in Tennessee, November 17, 1827, and as above noted, is still living.

James F. crossed the Plains with his parents in 1862, he at that time being six years of age. In Lane county, where the family settled, he spent the earlier years of his boyhood, during the time receiving a very good education in the schools near his home and in a business college of Portland. After completing his education, he was engaged with his father in the stock business until 1887, at which time he accepted employment in a store as clerk. This was in Umatilla county. In 1897 he came to Glenwood, this county, where he likewise followed clerking until 1903, when he came to Trout Lake and purchased the mercantile establishment of the Chapman Brothers. The transaction was consummated in February, 1904. He is at present conducting this establishment, and is said to be doing very well.

Mr. Blew was married August 30, 1899, to Miss Mae Robbins, then a resident of The Dalles, Oregon, where the marriage was solemnized. Miss Robbins was a native of Onaga, Kansas, born in 1871. Her parents, William D. and Margaret (Kelly) Robbins, are now living in Kansas, of which state they were pioneer settlers. One child has been born to this marriage, Lucy Mae, now in her fourth year, her birth having occurred June 16, 1900. Fraternaly, Mr. Blew is associated with the Odd Fellows, and in politics he is a Republican. In religion, he is a Methodist, and Mrs. Blew a Congregationalist. Though recently established in this locality, Mr. Blew has already made many friends, and his business bids fair to increase rapidly as he becomes better acquainted with the needs and tastes of the people. As a man and citizen, his standing has been good wherever he has lived.

HON. WILLIAM COATE is one of the best known citizens and politicians of Klickitat county. At present he is residing on a fine farm, one and one-half miles northwest of Trout Lake postoffice. He is a native of Miami county, Ohio, born December 29, 1860, the son of James and Mary J. (Pearson) Coate, the former now living in Miami county, and the latter deceased. The elder Coate is a native of Miami county, born in 1838, his parents being of Scotch-English descent. Grandfather Coate was a native of North Carolina, of which state his parents were pioneers. He moved to Ohio in an early day, afterwards residing there till the time of his death. The family is of Quaker origin. Mary J. (Pearson) Coate was born in Ohio, in 1836, and resided there till her death in the seventies. Like her husband, she was a descendant of Quaker forefathers.

William grew to maturity in Ohio, receiving, during early boyhood, instruction in the common schools and in a business college. His father owned a large merchandise establishment in Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and in his store William was employed as a clerk until he had reached his twenty-fifth year. Then he went to Troy, Ohio, where also he was employed as a clerk. Having spent two years at this point, he came, in 1887, to Klickitat county, and settled in Trout Lake valley, to which locality his wife's father had preceded him. The following year he homesteaded a tract of land, with the intention of building a home of his own. The land was thickly grown with timber and underbrush, necessitating months and years of hard toil to make it arable, but nothing daunted, Mr. Coate supplied himself well with axes and went to work. Five years later he and his brother and brother-in-law put in an irrigation ditch on his place, the first in the valley. Then, with water facilities at hand, the wonderful fertility of the land became evident. The farm is now to be depended on for a yield of from four to seven tons of hay per acre, of quality the finest imaginable.

October 12, 1885, Mr. Coate married Miss Nancy A. Byrnett, a resident, at the time of marriage, of Miami county, Ohio. She was born in Miami county, in 1865, the daughter of Harvey J. and Sarah A. (Fenner) Byrnett, both of whom are living today. The father was born in Miami county, Ohio, in 1836, and, after attaining manhood, came west to Hood River, Oregon. Later, in 1885, he settled in Trout Lake valley, where he resided till 1902. At present he is living in Hood River. Sarah (Fenner) Byrnett is a native of Miami county, Ohio, born in 1835. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Coate are: James H., Charles F. and Bessie G., all residing at home. Fraternally, Mr. Coate is affiliated with the Masons and the United Artisans. In politics, he is a Republican. During his residence in this county he has served the public as school director and clerk for nine years; as justice of the peace for two terms; as county commissioner in 1899, and as a member of the state legislature in 1903. During the last year he was a delegate to the state convention. His property holdings comprise one hundred and eighty-two acres of land, one hundred and seventy of which can be irrigated. The improvements on this place are of the best, fully in keeping with the fine quality of the land. In the live stock line, Mr. Coate favors the Shorthorn strain, and his herd is one of the best in Klickitat county. A fine young orchard is now thriving on the farm, though at present it is not in full bearing.

WILLIAM F. STADELMAN, a worthy farmer and stockman, residing one and one-half miles southeast of Trout Lake, Klickitat county, was born in Hanover, Germany, November 10, 1850, the son of William and Dora (Hector) Stadelman, both of whom are now deceased. The elder Stadelman was born in Germany in 1829, and in after life was a brickmason. His death occurred in 1887, his entire life time having been spent in Germany. Dora (Hector) Stadelman was born in Germany in 1820, and died in 1888.

William F. resided in Germany till in his twentieth year, then attempted to enlist in the German army for service in the Franco-Prussian war, but was rejected on account of his weight. Disappointed in his aspirations for the career of a soldier, he came to the United States, his objective point being Chicago, Illinois, where relatives had preceded him. The great city of Chicago was not entirely to his liking, so, leaving it, he obtained employment on a farm in Randolph county. He was thus engaged for six years; then he returned to Germany on a visit. He was immediately arrested by the German authorities, but, being a citizen of the United States, could not be imprisoned; so was allowed to complete his visit. After returning to the United States, he settled in Klickitat county, taking up land, which he farmed till 1884, when he moved to his present location near Trout Lake. Peter Stoller was at that time the only settler living in the Trout Lake country, his residence being on the place which is now a summer resort, owned by Christian Guler. Other settlers arrived during the year, but it was several years before the country assumed the appearance of prosperity. The first comers were poor, and, by necessity, obliged to depend largely on their crops for a livelihood. The crops at first were insufficient, and the hardy settlers were furthered hampered by a remoteness from desirable markets. Game and fish were abundant. No pioneer was so poor but that his larder could be well supplied with venison or mountain trout, had he the energy to hunt or fish. Mr. Stadelman, however, was as incapable as a hunter as he was capable otherwise, so failed to find the taking of wild game a satisfactory method of making a living. His small herd of cattle during the early years of his stay was his principal source of income, and as the years went by the herd became larger. His neighbors likewise owned cattle, and with the increasing size of their herds the dairying business came into prominence. First, Mr. Stadelman started a creamery of his own, which he conducted till 1903, then discontinuing and joining with other citizens in establishing a co-operative creamery. This is now being managed by an expert in the creamery business formerly of Portland.

June 15, 1880, Mr. Stadelman married Miss Maggie Stoller, the ceremony taking place in Salem, Oregon. Miss Stoller was the daughter of Peter and Margaret (Ritter) Stoller, previously mentioned as among the pioneer arrivals in the Trout Lake country. The father was born in the canton of Berne, Switzerland, September 11, 1830, and came to the United States in 1865. His parents were German. After arriving in America he lived for several years in Illinois, then settling in the Trout Lake valley. Later he moved to Silverton, Oregon, where he is residing at present. Margaret (Ritter) Stoller, also a native of Switzerland, is now living at Silverton. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stadelman are Mrs. Mary Hoke, now residing in Trout Lake valley; William H., Amelia, Sophia, deceased May 7, 1904, and Leo. Fraternally, Mr. Stadelman is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in religion with the Lutheran church. In politics, he is a Republican, and, officeseekers excepted, he is one of the most active politicians in Klickitat county. He has served ten years as central committeeman, and is usually in attendance at caucuses and conventions. In school affairs his interest is as lively as in politics, his work in this line being generally as a member of the local school board. His property interests comprise eight hundred and forty acres of land and the buildings and stock with which it is supplied. He has fifty head of cattle, and makes a specialty of fine dairy cows. His property is extensive and valuable. Mr. Stadelman was among others who upon arrival in Trout Lake valley were undaunted by the pioneer roughness of the country they found, but had the pluck to overcome the obstacles in their way to success. But for such men commonwealths would be slow in building.

LEVI J. ESHELMAN is a well-to-do stockman and farmer residing two miles and a half south of Centerville, Washington. He was born in Scotland county, Missouri, June 24, 1850, the son of Frederick and Emily (Caves) Eshelman, who were among the pioneer settlers of Klickitat county. Frederick Eshelman was a native of Pennsylvania, born June 10, 1824. When a boy he went to Missouri, where he lived until 1875, then going to California, and thence, after a stay of two years, to Klickitat county. Here he filed on a tract of land which he afterwards made his home till he sold out and began living with his children as at present. Emily (Caves) Eshelman was born in Ohio in 1828. She died at the age of seventy-four in 1902.

Levi J. grew to the age of twenty-three in Missouri on the farm which was owned by his parents. At this age he went west to Nevada, where he mined for two years, going thence to California and farming for two years. His final move was to Klickitat county in 1877. Upon arrival he immediately filed upon a tract of land situated a few miles south of the site of the present Centerville. He farmed this place till 1888, then selling out and purchasing his present farm.

Mr. Eshelman was married July 5, 1881, to Miss Rosa A. Tobin, a native of Canada, born April 26, 1866, the daughter of John and Hannah (Hall) Tobin, who were among the early settlers of Klickitat county. John Tobin is a son of Erin's isle. He came to the United States in 1876, and after sizing the country up from several points of view in different states and at divers occupations finally decided that Klickitat county was the part of the United States for which he was looking. At present, however, he is residing in The Dalles, Oregon. Hannah (Hall) Tobin was also born in Ireland. She is still living, though sixty-eight years old. Mr. Eshelman's brothers are three in number: Thomas J. and Frederick D., both residing in Tacoma, and Greenberry C., at Salem, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Eshelman are parents of the following children: Singleton C., George W., Mrs. Mercy E. Kelly, Mrs. Lillie Dooley, Lulu and Jacob O., all of whom are residents of Klickitat county. In politics, Mr. Eshelman is a Democrat. He is one of the most active politicians in Klickitat county, office seekers excepted. His land holdings comprise five hundred and twenty acres of land, four hundred and fifty of which are arable. The land is well adapted to the production of all grains which grow in the Northwest, as well as fruits of the hardier varieties.

CHARLES PEARCE is a venerable and much respected farmer and stockman residing four miles southeast of Centerville, Washington. He was born in Scotland county, Missouri, in 1840, the son of Kinney and Osie (Dunn) Pearce, who were among the earliest settlers in Missouri. Kinney Pearce was a farmer. He was born in Ohio in 1800, and in 1836 went to Scotland county, Missouri, where he resided till the time of his death in 1884. His forefathers were Hollanders. Osie (Dunn) Pearce was born in Ohio in 1820, and died at the age of thirty. She was of Scotch-Welsh descent.

Charles was the first white child born in Scotland county, Missouri. His time was a few years earlier than that of the outlaws and bushwhackers that have given such a disreputable prestige to "Old Missouri," but Indians were there in abundance and were not backward in making known their sentiments toward the white invaders. At the age of nineteen Charles Pearce left his native state for Colorado. In 1862, he returned to Missouri, then crossed the Plains to Salt Lake City, and thence made his way to Montana, where for five years he was engaged in stock raising near Bozeman. In 1869 he sold his cattle interests and went to Oregon, there buying land five miles southeast of Salem. He lived in Oregon till 1877, then sold out and came to Klickitat county, where he filed on a quarter of government land and bought a tract. He has since devoted his energies to the raising of stock and to farming. Klickitat county, as Mr. Pearce found it, was in a state of settlement that would have compared well with Scotland county, Missouri, thirty-five years before. Indians were the most numerous inhabitants of the county and were not entirely friendly to the white men. It is Mr. Pearce's belief, however, that the alarm which was caused among the settlers by the Indians was due more to the white stockmen than the Indians themselves. As is well known, it has almost invariably been the part of stockmen to oppose the farming class of settlers who plow up the great cattle ranges, and it is alleged that this opposition has been responsible for the stirring up of Indian scares upon several occasions. Such at least is Mr. Pearce's idea of Indian troubles in Klickitat county.

Mr. Pearce married in Montana, December 25, 1865, Miss Elizabeth Davis, a native of Wales, born in 1848. She came to the United States when an infant, and later crossed the Plains with her parents, her father, however, dying before the journey had been accomplished. His death occurred in 1849. Mrs. Davis died in Monmouth, Oregon, April 4, 1876. Children born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pearce are: William Henry, born September 28, 1866, now residing in the Willamette valley, Oregon; Edward J., born October 4, 1869, now living in Klickitak county; Louis F., born April 26, 1872; Nora E., born July 6, 1875; Sara E., born May 8, 1868, and Rachel, August 18, 1871, the last two deceased. Fraternaly, Mr. Pearce is associated with the Grange, and in politics, with the Democratic party. He is a member of the Christian church at Centerville, and is one of the active workers of this congregation. At various times he has served as a member of the local school board, and though having no children that were of an age to attend school, was none the less painstaking in his duties. His property interests comprise chiefly eight hundred and seventy-seven acres of land and the stock, buildings and implements with which it is equipped. Being one of the very oldest settlers in Klickitak county, having crossed the Plains five times and personally witnessed the settlement of the west from the Mississippi river to the Pacific coast, Mr. Pearce is entitled to be considered a pioneer of the pioneers. He has the virtues of that honored class well developed, and his standing in Klickitak county is high.

JOHN R. WHITCOMB, a prosperous rancher residing one mile north and two miles west of Lyle, was born in Clarke county, Washington, October 18, 1868, the son of Thomas M. and Ann (Tiernan) Whitcomb, who were among the pioneers that crossed the Plains to Oregon with ox teams. The elder Whitcomb settled at Vancouver, Washington, in 1864. In the spring of 1865, he took up a homestead fifteen miles northwest of Vancouver, where he resided for seven years. Then he moved to Hood River, Oregon, and after four years of residence in that section came to Klickitak county. During the first three years of his stay here, he farmed a leased tract of school land on the Columbia river bottom, then pre-empting the tract of land on which he lived till the time of his death, November 5, 1901. He was of English and German descent. Ann (Tiernan) Whitcomb was born in Tyrone county, Ireland, February 3, 1832, to English and Scotch parents, the father being employed by the English government as a teacher in Ireland. He taught in one place for seven years. Ann Tiernan, in company with her eldest sister, came to Ohio in 1851, in which state she married the elder Whitcomb when nineteen years of age. John R. received his education in the common schools of Klickitak county, where he grew up from the age of seven, his parents having come to Klickitak county when he was a child. From childhood to the present time he has resided at home with his parents, his only absence of any length being the time that he was required by law to reside upon his homestead to make final proof. He was twenty-one at the time of his filing. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Whitcomb are Henry E., born in Indiana, October 9, 1858, and now residing in California; Thomas J., born in Indiana, January 13, 1864, who crossed the Plains with his parents when a baby, and grew up and was educated in Klickitak county, where he is residing at present; Mrs. Lithuania Hanson, born in Ohio, August 5, 1854, now residing in Douglas county, Washington; Mrs. Maranda J. Thompson, born in Indiana, May 6, 1856; Mrs. Clara Childers, born in the same state, May 18, 1861, now residing in California; Mrs. Elousia Miller, born in Washington, January 23, 1870, now residing in Iowa; Mrs. Martha J. Pfeil, born in Hood River, Oregon, September 28, 1873; Mrs. Lizzie Hopkins, born in Hood River, Oregon, February 18, 1875, now living in Tygh Valley, Oregon. Two other sisters, Mary E. and Iantha A., are deceased. In religion, Mr. Whitcomb adheres to the Methodist faith. His property interests comprise four hundred and eighty acres of land with valuable stock, buildings and implements such as are necessary to successful farming. He is respected by all who know him as a successful and law-abiding citizen and is well worthy of their highest esteem.

EDWARD J. PEARCE, an affable ranchman residing two and one-half miles east and three south of Centerville, was born near Salem, Oregon, October 5, 1869. His parents, Charles and Elizabeth (Davis) Pearce, were among the earliest settlers of the west. Charles Pearce was a native of Scotland county, Missouri, born February 20, 1840. When nineteen years of age he went to Pike's Peak, and later to the vicinity of Salt Lake City, Utah, where for a short time he followed farming. In August of the year following his arrival in Utah he went to Montana, and there also farmed for a time. From Montana he went to Oregon in 1869; thence to California, and his final move was to Klickitak county, in 1876. Upon arrival he immediately filed on a tract of land, upon which he has since lived, engaged in farming and stock raising. He is of German and Scotch descent. Elizabeth (Davis) Pearce was born in Wales. Her people came to Montana when she was a child, and in that state she grew to womanhood. Her death occurred in 1875. Edward J. grew to manhood and received his education in Oregon, California and Washington, his parents changing residence from one to another of these three states during his boyhood. He remained with his father till he was eighteen years of age, then accepted employment in a sawmill in Sherman county, Oregon. There he worked for one year, returning then to Klickitak county, where he rented his father's farm. He worked it for a year, then began working for wages. This he did for two years, but being dissatisfied with such a method of making a living he filed on his present farm in 1890.

Mr. Pearce was married February 14, 1895, to Miss Lulu Childers, a native of Klickitat county, born February 6, 1876. She received her education in the local schools. Her parents, Sylvanus and Sarah A. (Jamison) Childers, were among the pioneer arrivals in Willamette valley, Oregon. Their biographies appear elsewhere.

Mr. and Mrs. Pearce are parents of the following children: Rolley, now deceased; David R., born October 6, 1899; Hattie E., November 3, 1900; Orville S., September 28, 1902, and Roy Edward, June 6, 1904, all in Klickitat county. Mrs. Pearce has a sister, Mrs. Evelina Oldham, at present residing in Goldendale. Her other sister, Mrs. Flora E. Leloh, is deceased. Mr. Pearce's brothers and sisters are: Hattie L., Iva M., Robert E. and Wilbur W., all engaged in business in different parts of the Northwest. Mr. Pearce's land holdings in all comprise four hundred acres, two hundred and fifty of which are under cultivation. The farm upon which he resides is one of the most valuable in that part of the county. It is well stocked with everything required in the execution of farm work, and under the able management of its owner is becoming each year more attractive, both as a home and in adaptability to successful farming.

SYLVANUS W. CHILDERS. Among Klickitat county's esteemed and successful pioneers is her whose name begins this biographical sketch, at present a resident of The Dalles, Oregon, to which city he removed in 1902. A native of West Virginia, he was born February 7, 1843, in Doddridge county, to the union of Isaac and Hulda (Tharp) Childers, also natives of that state, the father having been born December 10, 1819, in Harrison county, and the mother in 1825 in Doddridge county. Isaac Childers was a mechanic, though he followed farming and stock raising the greater portion of his life. In 1851 he removed from Virginia to Monroe county, Iowa, where he lived ten years, occupied with farming and raising stock. He then went to Sullivan county, in the state of Missouri, and subsequently disposed of his farm and became a resident of Milan, Missouri; there his death occurred in 1890. His ancestors were among the earliest German colonists of Virginia. He was married to Miss Tharp, December 15, 1842, and as the result of their union fifteen children were born, nine of whom are still living. The mother passed away in Sullivan county. Sylvanus W. received his education in the common schools of Iowa and Missouri, and remained at home on the farm until a young man, then working for other farmers in the neighborhood. In 1867 he returned to Iowa and lived two years with his grandmother near Mount Sterling, in Van Buren county. About the first of the year 1869 he bought a farm in Missouri and made that his home until the fall of 1874, when he came west and located near Hillsboro, Washington county, Oregon. A year later, October 22, 1875, he became a pioneer of Klickitat county, taking a homestead half a mile east of Centerville. This farm remained his home until October, 1883. At that time he removed to a place which he had purchased near Columbus and lived there until February, 1902, selling out his farming and stock interests in that month to Phillips & Aldrich, of Goldendale. Mr. Childers was extensively engaged in sheep raising from 1889 until his retirement from agricultural pursuits in the year just mentioned. Since 1902 Mr. Childers has resided in The Dalles, enjoying the fruits of a long and successful life on the farm and the range. One of his noteworthy achievements while a farmer near Centerville, in 1880, was the erection on his place of one of the finest barns in the county; unfortunately this substantial indication of thrift was destroyed by fire in May, 1904.

Miss Sarah A. Jamison, a daughter of Robert and Harriet (Varnum) Jamison, became the bride of Mr. Childers in Sullivan county, Missouri, in 1871. Of German and Pennsylvania Dutch extraction, she was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, May 14, 1855. Her education was received in the schools of Pennsylvania and Missouri and subsequently she taught two terms. Robert Jamison, a farmer by occupation, was a native of Venango county, Pennsylvania, and in that state was married. In 1869 he immigrated to Sullivan county, where he followed farming until his death in 1901, at the age of eighty-two. Mrs. Jamison, also a Pennsylvanian by birth, was born in 1824 and is still living, her home being in Sullivan county. Seven children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Childers, of whom one is dead, Mrs. Florence E. Leloh, born in Sullivan county, June 24, 1872; she died in Portland in 1900. The other children are: Mrs. Eva L. Oldham, born in Sullivan county, December 13, 1873, living in Goldendale; Mrs. Lulu B. Pearce, born in Klickitat county, February 6, 1876; Hattie L., Klickitat county, April 6, 1882, who recently finished a course in Klickitat Academy; Wilbur W., Klickitat county, September 10, 1883, a resident of Klickitat county; Ivy M., born in Klickitat county, August 20, 1887; and Robert E., whose birthday was August 14, 1889. Politically, Mr. Childers is an independent voter. Not long ago he was honored by his fellow townsmen by being elected a member of the city council of The Dalles. Though his home is now in that city, he still owns considerable property in Goldendale and elsewhere in that region. Mr. Childers occupies an enviable position in the community because of his well-known abilities, integrity and congeniality.

CHARLES A. PEARSON, a well-known farmer and dairyman residing at the little town of Trout Lake, three miles west of Trout Lake postoffice, was born in the province of Smolan, Sweden, August 31, 1859, the son of John and Anna (Larson) Pearson, both of whom are deceased. The elder Pearson resided all his life in the old country, engaged in farming. His death occurred in 1894. Anna (Larson) Pearson was born in Sweden in 1837, and died in 1902, never having left her native land for any extended period of time. She was sixty-five years of age at the time of her death, and her husband was fifty-five when he passed away.

When Charles A. was nine years old he came to the United States and took up his residence with one of his uncles, John Johnson, who was an Iowa farmer. The parents intended to follow, but circumstances prevented. Charles lived with his uncle until nineteen years old, receiving a practical education in the common schools of Iowa. When not in school he worked on the farm, in every way possible making himself useful. At the age above mentioned he went to Illinois, thence proceeding to Door county, Wisconsin, where he worked in the timber for two years. In 1881 he left Wisconsin and went to Colorado. Here for a time he was employed in railroad work, but later he moved to Idaho, still continuing his employment with the railroad. Ceasing this vocation in 1883, he came to Klickitat county, Washington, where, in July of that year, he secured a tract of railroad land, filing on it later when it reverted to the government. At the time of his arrival, there was but one settler in the valley, Peter Stoller, one of the oldest and best known pioneers of Klickitat county. For a number of years after settling on his present farm Mr. Pearson was engaged in cattle raising. This, however, was uphill business, since irrigation had not yet been introduced there, and the crops of rye hay were insufficient. Not until 1890 was he able to get water on his land, but since then the immense crops he has harvested in part compensate for the losses of previous years.

On April 8, 1887, Mr. Pearson married Miss Susie Stoller, a native of Switzerland, born March 30, 1864. The ceremony was performed in The Dalles, Oregon. Miss Stoller was the daughter of Peter and Margaritta Stoller, the former of whom has been previously mentioned as one of the pioneers of Klickitat county. Each of the parents was born in Switzerland, and both now reside in Silvertown, Oregon. Children born to this marriage are: Emma, Carl, Elva, Orie and George, all residing at home. Three brothers of Mr. Pearson, John, Henry and Claus H., live in the vicinity of Trout Lake. C. A. Pearson has served his community as road supervisor, justice of the peace, and for twelve years as clerk of the local school district. This district now contains some seventy scholars who are taught by two teachers in the best school house in Klickitat county, except those in Goldendale, and the excellence noted is said to be partly due to the active interest taken in school affairs by Mr. Pearson. The postoffice was established at Trout Lake in 1887 through his instrumentality, he being the first postmaster appointed. Eight years later it was moved one mile farther east to Stoddeman's place, and thence, in the fall of 1903, to the ranch owned by C. W. Moore. At the same time another office was established a mile above Moore's place, the point now being known as Guler postoffice, Christian Guler, at present conducting a summer resort at that place, being appointed as postmaster. In politics, Mr. Pearson is an independent Republican. His property interests comprise one hundred and sixty acres of fine land and a herd of dairy cattle from which he supplies milk to the local cheese factory. The land in question is well adapted to the raising of timothy and clover, and is very easily irrigated.

CHARLES W. MOORE, postmaster at Trout Lake, is a prosperous farmer and dairyman. He was born in Eldorado county, California, June 19, 1854, the son of Squire D. and Mary (Baxter) Moore, the former at one time a well-known steamboat owner on the Columbia river. He—the elder Moore—was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1831. In 1852, with a company of equally hardy spirits, he crossed the Plains to Oregon City, Oregon. Later he went to California, where he followed mining till 1856, at which time he left California and went to the mining district of Oro Fino, Idaho. Walla Walla was his headquarters while mining in this locality, in which city—then little more than a pioneer village—he spent the severe winter of 1861, in which many people were threatened with starvation. He mined till 1864, then took up steamboating on the Willamette river. Later he came to Klickitat county, where he resided till the time of his death. He was of Irish parentage. Mary (Baxter) Moore, his wife, was born in Iowa in 1831, and died in April, 1870.

Charles W. lived in Oregon City until he reached his majority, his parents having moved from California to that point when he was young. He followed steamboating on the Columbia river till 1880, most of the time being in partnership with his father. The health of the latter failed at this time, and he was obliged to discontinue the life of a riverman. Charles then came with him to Klickitat county, and near Glenwood on Camas Prairie he filed on a homestead, afterward engaging in stock raising. Selling out in 1888, he moved to Trout Lake, where, two years later, he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land. Since then he has followed stock raising and dairying, though for four years he was also the mail carrier between White Salmon and Trout Lake.

On January 4, 1877, Mr. Moore married Miss Martha Kaufman, who was born near Fort Wayne, Indiana, June 25, 1851. She was the daughter of John S. and Elizabeth (Manning) Kaufman, both of whom are now deceased. John S. Kaufman, a farmer by occupation, crossed the Plains to the Willamette valley, Oregon, in 1852, where he resided till the time of his death in 1865. He was of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Elizabeth (Manning) Kaufman, his wife, a native of Pennsylvania, died at the age of sixty-three. Her parents were Pennsylvania Dutch, as were those of her husband. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Moore are: Mrs. Mary Brown, Mrs. Anna Coate, Fred C., Edward E., and John L., all residing in Klickitat county. Fraternally, Mr. Moore is associated with the United Artisans, and in politics he is a Republican. He is an active politician, and has served faithfully and efficiently as central committeeman. He has served his community as justice of the peace, and fully as acceptably has several times filled the position of school director. At present, however, he is retired from the more active duties of public service, his time being largely occupied by the duties of his postoffice and the management of his farm.

JOHN F. ECKERT is a sturdy German residing on a fine dairy and stock farm three and one-half miles south of Trout Lake. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, December 5, 1840, the son of Gottlieb and Katrina (Smith) Eckert, both of whom are now deceased, the father dying when John F. was but one year old, and the mother in 1872. John spent the days of his boyhood in or near Wurtemberg, receiving such education as was then considered essential to German youth. He remained in Germany until forty-one years of age, being, after reaching maturity, a farmer. In 1881, he came to the United States, his objective point being Iowa. In Iowa he remained for only a year and a half, however, then proceeding westward to Portland, Oregon. After a brief stay here, he accepted employment in a blacksmith shop in Washington county, Oregon. Discontinuing this vocation in 1885, he came to Trout Lake, where, on March 28th, he filed on a homestead. Upon arrival he had twenty dollars, and naught else, except his own determination to succeed. Utterly undaunted by the difficulties in view, he and his son began the task of home-making. For a time they worked out, investing the money earned in cattle and a team of horses. With a small start in live stock they began irrigating, and after this worked with steadily mending fortunes. The son, however, worked for wages for several years, though occasionally helping his father on the new farm.

September 13, 1865, in the old country, Mr. Eckert married Miss Katrina Wise. Miss Wise was one of three children. Her father, Martin Wise, was an extensive property owner in Germany, his holdings including both land and interests of a commercial nature. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Eckert are: Mrs. Caroline (Eckert) Sellinger, Christian F., and John F., Jr., all alive. In religion, Mr. Eckert adheres to the Lutheran church, and in politics, to the doctrines of the Republican party. Though public-spirited and patriotic, he is not generally given to devoting much time to public affairs, other than consistent with good citizenship, his one variation from this policy being in serving a term as school director. The property interests today controlled by Mr. Eckert comprise three hundred and eighty acres of land and the stock and buildings with which his farm is equipped. In 1903, he sold seventy head of cattle, and he has thirty remaining, some of them very fine dairy cattle. The land he owns is given principally to the raising of hay, clover and timothy. A fine orchard is thriving on the place, now in full bearing, and said to be the best in the valley. Mr. Eckert is a good farmer and a respected citizen. As are those of his nation generally, he is unassuming, but thoroughly business-like, and by unremitting industry he has created for himself in the former wilderness of Trout Lake valley a farm that ranks with the best in this locality.

CHARLES J. PETERSON, a worthy native of Sweden, resides on a well-cultivated farm two and one-half miles west of Trout Lake, in Klickitat county. He was born in Sweden, November 14, 1855, the son of Peter and Gustava (Nelson) Peterson, both now deceased. Neither of the parents ever left their native country for any extended period of time, and at the time of death received interment not remote from the places of birth. Charles J. grew to young manhood and was educated in Sweden. When seventeen years old his father died, and he then went to Scotland, where he shipped as a sailor. After two years of seafaring, he made his way to the United States, his objective point being Chicago, where he accepted employment in the iron works. Having spent two years at this occupation, he went to Wisconsin, thence to Colorado, later to Idaho, and finally to Portland, Oregon, where he remained for three years. His final move was to Klickitat county, in 1885. Immediately upon arrival he filed on a homestead in the Trout Lake valley, and since has made this place his home.

Mr. Peterson has been married twice. His first wife was, before marriage, Miss Lena Anderson. The marriage was solemnized in Portland, Oregon, in 1884. Mrs. Peterson died in 1892, after having borne her husband three children, one of whom died at the age of eighteen months. She was born in Norway in 1866, and in the land of her nativity grew to womanhood and was educated. When a young woman she came to Portland, where she met and married Mr. Peterson. The children who survive her are: Wallis A. and Amanda A., both natives of Klickitat county.

The present Mrs. Peterson, who was formerly Miss Minnie Norby, knows nothing of her parents, they having died when she was an infant. Her marriage was solemnized in 1894. She and Mr. Peterson are parents of six children, namely: Oscar E., Sanford E., Lena, Hadveg, Minnie and Hulda, all born in Klickitat county. Mr. Peterson's fraternal connections are with the United Artisans, and in religion, he is a Methodist. His land holdings comprise two hundred acres, sixty of which are under cultivation, the remainder being used mainly for pasturing purposes. He owns at present forty head of cattle, horses necessary for the carrying on of his farm work, and divers other live stock usual to well managed farms. He possesses the best qualities of the Swedish race, and is, in all respects, a substantial, law-abiding and worthy citizen.

FRANK M. COATE, a prosperous farmer and stockman residing one and a half miles northwest of Trout Lake postoffice, was born in Miami county, Ohio, October 12, 1862, the son of James and Mary J. (Pearson) Coate, the former now residing in Klickitat county, the latter deceased. James Coate was born in Ohio in 1839. He farmed during the earlier years of his manhood, but later engaged in the mercantile business, which he followed for ten years. He is of Scotch-English parentage. Mary J. (Pearson) Coate was born in Ohio in 1837, and in that state grew to womanhood and was married. Her death occurred in Ohio in 1884. She was of English descent. Frank M. attained early manhood and was educated in his native state. He lived with his parents till eighteen years of age, then started to learn the carpenter's trade. Although during his apprenticeship he acquired a fair degree of proficiency in his chosen vocation, he has never followed carpentering to the exclusion of other lines of work. After serving his term as an apprentice, he went to Indiana, where he followed carpentering to a greater or less extent for three years. In 1887 he came to Klickitat county, where he located on his present homestead in Trout Lake valley, and he has since cultivated it with assiduity and skill.

October 15, 1896, Mr. Coate married Miss Annie Moore, a native of Oregon, born January 25, 1880. She came to Klickitat county when a child, and grew to womanhood and was educated there. She married Mr. Coate when nineteen years of age, the marriage being solemnized at Trout Lake postoffice, of which Charles W. Moore, father of Mrs. Coate, is the present postmaster. He is a native of California and possesses an accurate knowledge of the history of the Golden state, being particularly well versed in events that transpired during the periods of tremendous excitement that followed the opening up of the most noteworthy of the great gold mines. He settled on Camas Prairie in 1881. Martha (Kauffman) Moore, the mother, was born in Indiana in 1850. When she was two years old her parents crossed the Plains to Oregon, and in this state she attained womanhood, and received such education as the schools of that pioneer time afforded. Her marriage occurred in Oregon. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Coate are two in number: Martha E. and Roger S., the former born January 24, 1901, and the latter August 27, 1903, both in Klickitat county. Fraternaly, Mr. Coate is affiliated with the Masons and the United Artisans. In religion, he is an adherent of the Christian church, and in politics he is a Republican. He owns a nice farm of two hundred acres, fifty of which are under cultivation, the balance being used for pasturing purposes. The place is well stocked with cattle and horses, buildings, implements, and all other things necessary to the successful pursuance of diversified agriculture.

ANDREW J. JOHNSON, a favorably known rancher residing in the vicinity of Trout Lake, is a westerner by residence and by birth. He was born in Lane county, Oregon, November 14, 1858, the son of James C. and Cincinnati (Simpson) Johnson, the former deceased and the latter now living in The Dalles, Oregon. The elder Johnson was a carpenter by trade. Kentucky was the state of his nativity, but in 1850 he moved thence to Arkansas, and thence, after a stay of three years, across the Plains to Oregon. Of the perils that beset the plainmen who braved the dangers of a thousand miles of plain and mountain to build homes in the great west for future generations, themselves perchance falling victims to merciless savages or succumbing to the countless hardships incurred by the invasion of the wilderness, enough has been written already. It is a story of which the life of every man who crossed the Plains is a chapter. James C. Johnson did not live to witness the final greatness of the country he had risked his life and the lives of his family to reach. His death occurred in 1868, fifteen years after his arrival in Oregon after the arduous journey across the Plains, this trip being the wedding tour of him and his bride. After the death of her first husband, Mrs. Johnson married James H. Coventon, likewise one of the pioneers of Oregon. Mr. Coventon made his first trip across the Plains in 1837, when he was eighteen years of age. He was born in Georgia in 1819, and when a young man served in the Mexican war. He made his second trip to Oregon in 1850, this time establishing a permanent residence. Andrew J. accompanied his parents from Lane county, Oregon, to California, when two years of age. The death of the elder Johnson occurred in California when Andrew was ten years old, and thus the boy, at a very early age, began to bear the responsibilities of life. He left the parental roof for good when sixteen years of age, after which he first took up trapping in the valley of the Des Chutes river in Oregon. He was thus engaged for three years; then he worked as a fisherman on the Lower Columbia river for two years. Next he went to The Dalles, Oregon, where he worked on a steamboat for two seasons, then proceeding to Wheeler county, Oregon, where he followed farming and stock raising for six years. His final move was to Klickitat county. Immediately after his arrival, which was in 1890, he filed on his present homestead in Trout Lake valley, and since then he has built a comfortable home on the place and cleared sixty acres of the tract, reserving the balance for pasture.

In 1880, Mr. Johnson married Miss Elzada Taylor, a native of Oregon, born in 1858. Miss Taylor grew to womanhood and was educated in Oregon. During her early years, educational facilities in Oregon were limited, the attention of the settlers being given as much to the defense of their lives and property against the resentful redskins as to the maintenance of schools. However, she obtained a practical education. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children: Martha J., born in 1882, and Dolly E., in 1885, both natives of Oregon. Fraternally, Mr. Johnson is affiliated with the Red Men, the Masons and the Artisans. In religion, he is a Methodist, and in politics, a Republican.

JAMES O. SHAW, the genial hotel-keeper of Glenwood, Washington, socially and in business affairs commands a position among his fellows not generally attained by others than the most deserving. Mr. Shaw is a "down East Yankee," having been born in Somerset county, Maine, October 30, 1827, the son of William and Betsy (Young) Shaw, who are now deceased. William Shaw was born in Standish, Maine, January 3, 1790, and during his life time followed farming chiefly, though also engaged at times at the cooper trade. His death occurred in 1855, the greater part of his life having been spent in Maine. He was of Scotch parentage. Betsy (Young) Shaw was born in Maine, in 1795, and was of English descent. Her death occurred in 1845, she, too, having lived all her life in Maine. Her father served in the Revolutionary war.

James O. was one of eleven children. He spent the years of his boyhood on the home farm in Maine, remaining under the paternal roof until he was twenty years old. At the age mentioned, he went to Boston, Massachusetts, where for a year he was employed in a general merchandise establishment. Then, in the fall of 1849, he sailed for San Francisco, California, taking passage via Cape Horn. After a perilous winter voyage, requiring several months, he landed safely at San Francisco, March 13, 1850, from which place he proceeded immediately to the gold mining regions, where for five years he wielded the pick and shovel, experiencing the ups and downs common to the lot of miners of that pioneer period. He next became interested in a lumber business in San Francisco, in which he was engaged for four years, after which he acquired the controlling interest in a sawmill. He discontinued this business shortly, however, and during the five years next ensuing, followed divers occupations. He finally settled on a farm in San Mateo county, California, where he remained until 1879, in which year he came to Klickitat county. Two years after his arrival, he acquired the real estate interests he now has. His ranch is known as the Glenwood farm. Mrs. Shaw was appointed postmistress of Glenwood postoffice in 1886, and she held this position until 1894. In 1893, Mr. Shaw purchased a general merchandise store in Glenwood from Charles Adams, but after conducting the business for three years he sold the goods in stock to a Mr. Smith, at the same time renting him the store building. Mr. Smith, however, did not retain a permanent interest in the concern, the management passing to Bowen, Betschi & Company. Mr. Shaw has been engaged at his present business in Glenwood since 1881.

On May 1, 1859, Mr. Shaw married Miss Telitha J. Teague, then residing in San Mateo county, California. She was born in Missouri, January 15, 1843, and when ten years old crossed the Plains with her parents to California. Andrew Teague, her father, a native of Independence, Missouri, born in 1822, was of Irish parentage. Her grandfather Teague arrived in Missouri in the early days of settlement, before even bushwhackers and brigands had come into prominence. He hauled the first load of merchandise to Independence that was offered for sale in that place, this being before any railroad was built into the town. In 1850, he crossed the Plains to California, where he first engaged in the lumber business, and later took up the study of law, eventually being admitted to the bar. He followed the legal profession after being admitted till his death, March 14, 1884. Parnelia (Morgan) Teague, the mother, was born in Missouri in 1821, but when quite young went to Alabama. Later, she returned to Missouri, where she was married at the age of twenty. Her parents were Scotch and English. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Shaw are: Eufralia, who was born in California and died at the age of eighteen months; Orlando C., born in California, March 24, 1861; Chauncy C., born October 21, 1862, and Myrtle E., March 4, 1868, both in California, the latter of whom died at the age of eight months; Lila M., now Mrs. E. E. Bartholew, a native of the Golden state, born December 5, 1878, and Luella B., now Mrs. J. G. Wyers, native of Klickitat county, born February 17, 1881. Since coming to Klickitat county, Mr. Shaw, by industry and integrity, which are almost universally characteristic of the pioneer settler, has established himself well among the most prominent citizens of the county. For twelve years he was a sawmill owner, and during that time manufactured lumber for scores of houses, since it was during this period that the most rapid progress was made in the settlement of Klickitat county. The mill in question was situated on Bird creek, in Camas valley, and was the first mill built in that region. At present, however, he has retired from active business life, his attention being given more largely to neighborhood affairs, social, political, and fraternal. He longs to the Odd Fellows, and in politics, is a Republican. In religion, he adheres to the Baptist faith. Mrs. Shaw has membership in the Rebekah order.

BERT C. DYMOND is a comfortably situated farmer and stockman residing a half-mile east of Fulda postoffice, in Klickitat county. He was born in Genesee county, New York, April 25, 1864, the son of Chester and Emma E. (Austin) Dymond, both of whom are now residing in Klickitat county. Chester Dymond was born in New York state in 1827. After reaching manhood he farmed for a number of years in his native state, then, in 1869, went to Iowa, where he lived till 1878, then moving to Oregon City, Oregon. He resided in and near Oregon City till 1880, then came to Klickitat county, where he acquired a tract of land which he at once began to cultivate, since then having made his home on it. Emma (Austin) Dymond was born in New York state, in 1842, and grew to womanhood and was married there. She is at present living in Klickitat county. When Bert C. was quite young his parents moved from New York to Iowa, and later the westward journey was continued to Oregon City. He secured his education, in the common schools of Iowa, and in the Oregon City high school. In 1891, he filed on his homestead which is situated in the Camas Prairie region. Though he has since farmed this property continuously he has not resided upon it since making final proof in 1898. He and his father and brother, Gay A., were partners in business ever since their arrival in Klickitat county, until the death of the father, June 10, 1904. Besides this brother, our subject had one sister, Mrs. Pearl Benford, but she died December 4, 1900, in The Dalles, Oregon. In politics, Mr. Dymond is a Republican, quite prominent in local affairs. He was elected in the fall of 1902 to a two years' term as commissioner of the First district. His property interests consist chiefly of his finely cultivated farm and the stock, implements and buildings with which it is abundantly supplied.

RICHARD M. RAFFETY, a well-known farmer residing half a mile south of Jersey post-office, Klickitat county, Washington, was born in Greene county, Illinois, June 9, 1838, the son of James and Arthanussa (Sage) Raffety, who were among the earliest pioneers in Illinois. James Raffety was a farmer. He was born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1814, and after attaining manhood went to Illinois, arriving there in 1833. Later he went to Missouri, and thence returned to Pike county, Illinois, residing there till the time of his death. He was of Scotch extraction. Arthanussa (Sage) Raffety was a native of Illinois, born in 1821, and married Mr. Raffety, the elder, in that state. She died in Pike county, in 1853. She was of German extraction.

Richard M. received his education in the common schools of his native state. He remained at home until he was fifteen years of age, then began working out for wages, and was thus engaged much of the time until he reached the age of twenty, at which time he rented a farm. Later he bought land in Pike county, which he farmed till 1872, then going to Madison county, Montana. Here he farmed and raised stock until 1891, in the spring of which year he arrived in Klickitat county. During the first four years of his stay here he lived on rented property, but in 1896, he filed on his present homestead. Upon this place he has ever since farmed and raised stock, achieving success in both lines.

Mr. Raffety was married in Pike county, Illinois, November 2, 1858, to Miss Nancy E. Hinch, a native of Illinois, born in 1841. Her parents were John M. and Nancy (McIntire) Hinch, the former of whom died in Montana, and the latter of whom is at present a resident of that state. Mrs. Raffety died in 1870, leaving four children. In 1877 Mr. Raffety married Mrs. Ella M. Gilman, a widow, living at the time in Montana. She was the daughter of Osgood Paige, a New Hampshire farmer, who lived his entire life time in that state, passing away several years ago. Her mother was Nancy (Boyn-ton) Paige. This Mrs. Raffety was born in New Hampshire, January 12, 1839, and in that state received a common school education. She married Isaac H. Gilman, her first husband, when twenty-one years of age. Her children by this marriage are: Osgood H., Laret, Clara L., Leroy H., Alice, Rosia B. and Leslie G. Mr. Gilman died in Montana in 1876. Mr. Raffety's children by his first marriage are: Charles, born in 1860, Mrs. Emma Harris, in 1862; Oren L., in 1864; Mrs. Mary A. Harris, in 1866, and Ethelda, in 1870, and those of himself and the present Mrs. Raffety are: Mrs. Lula A. Coleman, Mrs. Maud A. Mason, Lillie B.

and Estella M. In religion, Mr. Raffety adheres to the Presbyterian church, and in politics, he is a staunch Democrat. While hardly to be classed among the oldest pioneers of Klickitat county he is one of its most highly respected citizens, and an enthusiastic supporter of all measures that conduce to the welfare of the community in which he resides.

WILLIAM C. RAFFETY is a prominent farmer residing two and one-half miles north of Jersey postoffice, in Klickitat county, Washington. He was born in Greene county, Illinois, October 19, 1841, the son of James and Arthanussa (Sage) Raffety. James was born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1814. He was a farmer. From Tennessee he moved to Kentucky, and later to Illinois, where he established himself permanently. His parents were Scotch. Arthanussa (Sage) Raffety has been dead many years, her demise occurring in Pike county, Illinois. William C. attained early manhood on the home farm in Illinois, and during his youth was educated in the common schools. He remained at home the greater part of the time until he was nineteen years of age. In 1863, when twenty-one years of age, he crossed the Plains to California with an ox team, making the journey in company with six other westward-bound homeseekers. During the first few years of his stay in California he worked for wages, then, in 1871, he and his cousin opened up a butcher shop in Galt, Sacramento county, where they remained for two years. After leaving the butcher shop he worked for a railroad company for six months, and next went into the sheep business, forming a partnership with his cousin. This occupation he followed for ten years, after which he sold out, moved to Fresno, and there engaged in the transfer business, which vocation he followed for six years. His final move was to Klickitat county in 1890, where, three years later, he filed on his present homestead.

Mr. Raffety was married in Stockton, California, March 19, 1883, to Miss Hannah L. Wristen, the daughter of Milton and Jane (Harris) Wristen. She was a native of Hancock county, Illinois, born August 14, 1861. Her education was acquired in the common schools of her native county, where she attained young womanhood. Her marriage occurred in California. Milton Wristen, a native of Illinois, was a farmer by occupation. He is now living in San Francisco, as is also his wife, Jane (Harris) Wristen, who was also born in Illinois. One child, Lalita W., has been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Raffety, the date being June 12, 1886. Fraternally, Mr. Raffety is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics, he is a staunch Democrat. During his life he has sought chiefly an unofficial career, though in Nevada he made an honorable digression from his preferred manner of living by accepting the office of sheriff for a time. His present farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres of land, some of which is the best in the community.

JOSEPH AERNI is a prosperous farmer and stockman residing one mile west of Guler postoffice in Klickitat county. He was born in Switzerland, September 27, 1850, the son of Joseph and Rosena Aerni, both now deceased. Joseph Aerni was a native of Switzerland, and of the hardy race of Alpine mountaineers whose achievements in war constitute a very interesting part of the history of continental Europe. The elder Aerni devoted his life time to vocations of a pastoral nature, not being favorably inclined to such pursuits as wood-carving, watch-making or other of the small industries which in quality of workmanship have made Switzerland famous throughout the civilized world. Mrs. Rosena Aerni passed her life in Switzerland amid environments similar to those of her husband. Both parents were very well educated along such lines as were then considered useful by the Swiss people. Joseph Aerni, Junior, during boyhood acquired a very good education in the schools of Switzerland. He remained under the paternal roof until seventeen years of age, then accepting work on a dairy farm. Afterwards he was manager of a large farm in Switzerland for three years. In 1882 he came to the United States, finally locating near Portland, Oregon. For a short time after his arrival he was employed on a dairy farm, but later he bought a place of his own near Portland. After a residence of three years on this property he moved in 1885 to the Trout Lake region, in Klickitat county, where he filed on a homestead. Seventy acres of this tract have since then been cleared and put under cultivation by Mr. Aerni.

Mr. Aerni has been married twice. The first marriage took place in Switzerland, July 22, 1875, Miss Lizzie Boehi being the lady. She was a native of Switzerland, born in 1848, daughter of Abraham and Lizzie (Deuh) Boehi, both of whom lived in Switzerland all their life time. She grew to womanhood in her native country, there receiving a very good education in music and languages. She married Mr. Aerni when twenty-six years of age. She died in December, 1880. Mr. Aerni's second marriage occurred March 22, 1892, in Klickitat county, the lady being Miss Mary Stalder, also a native of Switzerland. John and Mary Ann Stalder, her parents, were both natives of Switzerland. Miss Mary was educated in her native country. She came to the United States when sixteen years of age, and at the age of thirty-one married Mr. Aerni. Mr. Aerni's children by his first marriage are Lizzie, now Mrs. Smith; Joshua, and Mrs. Hannah Englett, both natives of Switzerland; Joseph and Jacob, natives of Oregon, and Mary, a native of Klickitat county. His children by the second marriage are Lettie, Ernest, Martha, Carl and Henry C., all born in Klickitat county. In religion, Mr. Aerni is an adherent of the Baptist church, and in politics he belongs to the Republican party. He is one of the most industrious farmers of Klickitat county, and though a Swiss by birth and descent, is as patriotic an American citizen as if his forefathers had assisted in the making of the American republic rather than the Swiss.

GABRIEL LONG is a prosperous farmer, thirteen miles northwest of Arlington, Oregon. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, March 24, 1857, the son of Lewis and Sarah A. (Hesser) Long, who were among the early pioneers of Oregon. Lewis Long was born in Greene county, Virginia, March 10, 1814. He moved to Ohio in boyhood, and was married there; to Illinois in 1844; thence to Iowa in 1853, and in 1854 he crossed the Plains to Linn county, Oregon, with a team of oxen. A few months after his arrival, in 1855, he filed on a homestead, where he resided till the time of his death in 1894. He was of English and French parentage. Sarah A. (Hesser) Long was born in Ohio, September 22, 1822, and was of German and English descent. Her people were among the pioneers of Ohio, not arriving, however, until settlement was to some extent begun. She was married in Ohio when eighteen years of age. Gabriel Long attained early manhood in Linn county, Oregon, and during boyhood was educated in the common schools. He remained at home until nineteen years old. At this age he went to Baker county and accepted employment on a ranch, where he remained for a year, then returned home, and after a stay of one year engaged in farming on his own responsibility. In 1880 he bought a ranch in Lane county. This he farmed for two years, then sold out and went to Baker City, where, for four years, he worked at the carpenter trade. He sold out his home and real estate there in the spring of 1887 and went to the Willamette valley, Oregon, where for the following five years he farmed. In 1895 he filed on his present farm in Klickitat county, which has since been his residence.

On July 14, 1878, in Lane county, Oregon, Mr. Long married Miss Emma Jordan, the daughter of John and Mary (Worley) Jordan. John Jordan was a mining man. He was born in Greene county, Virginia, in 1818, and after attaining manhood moved to Illinois, where he lived for several years. In 1850 he crossed the Plains with an ox team to California, but after a stay of three years returned east via the Isthmus of Panama. He again went to California in 1855, crossing the Plains with ox teams as before. He moved thence, in 1872, to Lane county, Oregon, where he put up a sawmill which was operated for ten years. His next and final move was to Klickitat county, arriving in 1885, and in this county he resided till the time of his death in 1892. He was of German and Irish parentage. Mary (Worley) Jordan was born in Missouri, June 3, 1838, and is now living in Bickleton, Washington.

Emma Jordan, now the wife of Mr. Long, is a native of California, born October 8, 1861. She received a common school education in California and Oregon, and was married when sixteen years of age. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Long are: Sarah A., born May 9, 1879, Marion C., May 9, 1880, and Lewis L., March 26, 1892, all natives of Linn county; D. Smith, May 9, 1879, east of Bickleton; Phoebe M., October 29, 1881, now Mrs. McMurry, residing in Bickleton; Charley, born in Baker county, Oregon, January 5, 1888, and Dewey, born in Klickitat county, August 14, 1898. In religion, Mr. Long is an adherent of the Methodist church, and in politics, is a staunch Democrat. He is prominent in community affairs, having served as road supervisor with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. His land holdings comprise nine hundred and sixty acres, six hundred and forty of which are under cultivation, the balance being used as pasture. These property interests have been acquired by Mr. Long through his efficient management and well-directed industry.

MURDOCK McDONALD is a sheepman of Arlington, Oregon, his ranch being situated seven and one-half miles northwest of that place, in Klickitat county. His family lives in Arlington. Mr. McDonald is a native of Nova Scotia, born July 22, 1855. His parents were Malcolm and Margaret (McRitchie) McDonald, both natives of Scotland. Malcolm McDonald was born in 1814 and lived in Scotland till 1834, at which time he came to Nova Scotia, where he died in 1894. Margaret (McRitchie) McDonald was born in 1830 and is still living, her residence being in Nova Scotia.

Murdock grew to the age of sixteen on the home farm in Nova Scotia, then left the paternal roof to see more of the world. His first move took him to Eureka, Nevada, where he accepted employment as a miner. For the thirteen years following he mined, being at different times in the states of New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, Utah and California. He finally went to Oregon, later to Seattle, Washington, and in 1883, he landed in Klickitat county. Upon his arrival, he took up his present ranch and engaged in the horse raising business, getting a start by purchasing horses at sixty-five dollars a head. He has since continued in the horse business, though not extensively since becoming interested in sheep. At one time he started in cattle raising, but gave this enterprise up in favor of his sheep interests, and he now has a herd of wool-bearers numbering nearly six thousand. His land comprises a tract of six thousand acres, all in a body. His Arlington residence, which has been in use by his family for the past five years, is one of the most attractive homes in that city. In addition to his other stock, he owns about a hundred head of horses.

On December 7, 1887, Mr. McDonald married Miss Kate Day, a native of Vancouver, Washington, born in 1861, the daughter of Andrew and Margaret (King) Day, both natives of Cork, Ireland. Andrew Day was a farmer. He was in California at the time of the discovery of gold that led to the well-remembered sensation throughout the country. Later, he moved to Vancouver, Washington, and thence to Klickitat county, arriving before Goldendale was more than a townsite. His death occurred January 12, 1891. Margaret (King) Day came to Charleston, South Carolina, when six years old, having been sent to that city to a brother on account of the death of her parents. She was educated and married in Charleston. Her death occurred in Portland, Oregon, May 16, 1902, when she was seventy-one years of age. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have six children, all living, namely: Ethel Clara, born February 25, 1889; Florence, June 30, 1890; Violet, May 14, 1892; Bernice, February 5, 1895; Margaret, February 22, 1897, and Laura, October 16, 1901. Fraternaly, Mr. McDonald is affiliated with the Masonic order, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Woodmen of the World and the Maccabees. Of the ancient Order of United Workmen and the Maccabees, he is a charter member in the Arlington lodges. In religious matters, he holds to the Presbyterian faith, and in politics, he is a Republican. In educational matters, Mr. McDonald has always been found ready to serve his community. For the past fifteen years he has been a school director, and his services in this line are said to have invariably proven satisfactory. His property interests are among the most valuable in the county, and they have all been gotten by honest effort, their owner being a man of integrity and high moral worth.

YAKIMA COUNTY

Walter A. Granger

YAKIMA COUNTY

WALTER NORTON GRANGER, of Zillah, Washington, general manager of the Washington Irrigation Company, has been a resident of Yakima county for fifteen years, the greater portion of the time connected with the management of the big Sunnyside canal. Mr. Granger is a native of the state of New York; was born in Buffalo, March 4, 1858, the son of Warren and Mary (Norton) Granger, both natives of New York. Mr. Granger spent his youth and early manhood in the state of his birth, and in its common and high schools received his early education. He afterwards continued his studies in Brown University at Providence, Rhode Island, remaining there for two years. At the end of the second year he became afflicted with cerebro-spinal troubles, and was compelled to discontinue his course of study. He crossed the sea, and, after two years of travel through European countries, his health being in a great measure restored, he returned to this country, in 1882, and began the study of law in the office of a prominent attorney of Buffalo, New York. He pursued the study of the law for two years, but, his health again beginning to decline, he decided to try the West, and in 1884 located in Montana, where, for a time, he was engaged in mining, eventually, however, becoming interested in various irrigation projects. While a resident of Montana he built and put in operation the Gallatin canal in the Gallatin valley, the Florence canal and reservoir in the Sun river valley, and the Chestnut canal in the Chestnut valley. These canals are all in successful operation to-day. In 1889, Mr. Granger came to Washington, and the same year was given by the Northern Pacific Railroad an option on all their lands in the Sunnyside district, with the understanding that an irrigation canal should be constructed through that part of the county. He at once began surveys for, and in a short time the construction of, the big ditch into which the water was turned in April, 1892, and with the management of which he has ever since been prominently connected. A detailed history of the great canal will be found in the general chapters of this volume. It is fifty-seven miles long, with nearly 600 miles of branch and lateral ditches; waters 68,000 acres of land, on which were produced, in 1903, crops valued at one and one-half million dollars. The subject of this article is the next to the youngest in a family of seven children; three sisters and one brother are living; their names follow: Mary (Granger) Hodge, St. Paul, Minnesota; Virginia, Anna V. and Harrison (real estate dealer), Buffalo, New York. The marriage of Mr. Granger and Miss Maud Thomas was celebrated in North Yakima in 1891. Mrs. Granger is a native of Missouri and the daughter of Captain James H. and Lucy B. (Guyer) Thomas, residents of North Yakima and pioneers of Yakima county. The biographies of her parents appear on another page of this volume, where will also be found mention of her four brothers. To Mr. and Mrs. Granger have been born four sons and one daughter: Walter, Warren, Thomas, James R. and Maud. Mr. and Mrs. Granger are members of the Episcopal church. Mr. Granger supports the principles of the Democratic party, and his fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen. His name will ever be inseparably connected with the Sunnyside canal, probably the largest, and directly benefiting the most extensive agricultural area, of all the canals thus far constructed in the great arid West. He is a man of exceptional executive ability, of courage and strictest integrity, and commands the confidence and respect of all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

Mr. Granger has ever been a leader in all the enterprises for the advancement and development of the Sunnyside country since his advent into it. His latest undertaking is in the line of railway construction. Already a corporation has been formed "to build, construct, equip, maintain and operate, by steam, electric or other motive power, a railway line on such route as may be selected by the board of trustees of this corporation, from a point of connection with tracks of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, at or near Toppenish, Washington, running thence in a generally easterly direction to the town of Sunnyside, and thence in a southeasterly direction to a point at or near Prosser, all in Yakima county, Washington," also "to construct, maintain and operate a telegraph and telephone line in connection with said railroad." The trustees of this company are Walter N. Granger, president; George P. Eaton, Norris Sisk, A. B. Flint, S. J. Harrison, Naaman Woodin, C. E. Woods, F. L. Pittman and F. H. Gloyd. No one who knows these men, either personally or by reputation, will doubt their entire good faith in this undertaking or their ability to carry it to a successful issue.

HON. WESLEY L. JONES, one of the representatives-at-large from the state of Washington in the national house of representatives, is one of Yakima county's most popular and highly esteemed citizens—a comment which speaks volumes for his personality and of which any man might well feel proud. Not only Yakima county claims him as her own, but the state in which he lives takes a pardonable pride in the man who for five consecutive years has ably and faithfully represented the interests of his constituency at Washington. He belongs to that type of true Americans which, plain, unassuming, energetic and substantial, yet forms the bulwark of the nation's life. He was born at Bethany, Illinois, October 9, 1863. His mother's maiden name was Phoebe McKay, who is still living at the age of sixty-eight, in Illinois. The father was a Union soldier in the Civil war and died from lung trouble in 1863, three days previous to his son Wesley's birth. Upon the broad, fertile plains of his native state, tilling the soil and learning other branches of husbandry and from the age of ten attending the district school, Wesley Jones, Jr., grew to manhood, giving what money he earned toward the support of his mother. At the age of eighteen he began teaching school, having secured a second grade certificate, thus strengthening the foundation already laid for a long, useful life. With commendable industry he secured a higher education at Southern Illinois College without other aid than his own individual efforts, and, after graduation there, went to Chicago, where he began to read law. While acquiring this legal knowledge he supported himself by teaching in the night schools of Chicago. In the spring of 1886, he was rewarded for his perseverance by being admitted to practice before the appellate courts of that city. Two years longer he taught in the schools of Illinois, and then, early in 1889, he sought a broader and a riper field for the practice of his profession, choosing the Pacific Northwest, and to North Yakima he came. At that time this embryo city was enjoying all the excitement of a boom period, and so, after carefully looking over the prospects, Mr. Jones decided to settle there. For the first year of his residence, he was employed by Goodwin & Pugsley in their real estate office, but in 1890 he formed a partnership with two other lawyers, and, under the firm name of Rochford, Jones & Newman, began his legal career in Washington. In 1892, the firm lost one of its members, Mr. Rochford, and five years later Mr. Newman's place was taken by Mr. Jones's half-brother, William P. Guthrie, a bright young Illinois lawyer, who came West in that year. Since his arrival in the state, Mr. Jones had taken an active interest in politics, being a Republican of pronounced views, and so rapid had been his rise in the councils of the party that in 1898 he received at the hands of his fellow Republicans of Washington the nomination as congressman-at-large. He was elected by a most satisfying majority and entered national life March 4, 1899. Again in 1900 he was renominated and re-elected, and still again in 1902, his majority the last time being one of the largest on the ticket. He carried every county in the state. As a public officer his record has been without a flaw, and each session of congress has witnessed his promotion to more and more important committee work and to a higher standing in the party councils. He was one of the committee of seventeen that drafted the irrigation bill and was active in securing its passage. He was also on the committee in the Fifty-seventh congress, which had in charge the famous Ship Subsidy bill, and was one of the Republicans who could not agree to its report from its committee. No measure of especial interest to the West is introduced but that he is its friend and zealous advocate. Mr. Jones has never held but one public office—the one he now fills—and none other is spoken of as his successor.

Mr. Jones was married in 1886 at Enfield, Illinois, his bride being Miss Minda Nelson, a native of that state. To this union have been born two children, both of whom are living: Harry, aged fifteen, and Hazel, aged five. Mr. Jones has one brother, C. A. Jones, living at Sunnyside, and one half-brother, William P. Guthrie, who was his law partner until Mr. Jones was elected to congress; a half-sister, Mrs. Rae Coleman, resides near Bethany, Illinois. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and, because of his soldier-father, is allowed the privilege of membership in the Sons of Veterans. Congressman Jones owns a fine ranch of nearly a hundred acres under the Sunnyside canal, and also possesses a comfortable residence in North Yakima, and at these places he passes his time when not engaged in business affairs.

JUDGE FRANK H. RUDKIN, of the superior court, with jurisdiction over Yakima, Kittitas and Franklin counties, Washington, came to North Yakima in 1890. Previous to this time he had for three years followed the practice of law in Ellensburg. Judge Rudkin was born in Vernon, Ohio, April 23, 1864. He is the son of Bernard and Winifred (Leonard) Rudkin, both natives of Ireland, the former born January 6, 1818, and the latter in 1823. Bernard Rudkin came to the United States in 1850 and still lives in Ohio, having attained the age of eighty-five. His wife, the mother of Judge Rudkin, who came to the United States in 1847, is also living, at the age of eighty. Judge Rudkin spent his youth in Ohio and the usual term of years in the common schools of that state. At the age of twenty-two, he was graduated from the law department of the Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Virginia, with the class of 1886. The following year he came to Ellensburg and at once began the practice of law, in which he has ever since been remarkably successful. Until 1896 the judge was affiliated with the Democratic party. He was never, however, an advocate of the doctrine of "free coinage," as taught by the Democratic leaders in that memorable campaign, and when this was made the paramount issue between the two great parties, he became a pronounced advocate of the gold dollar as the base or unit of our national currency, and eventually became a leader in the councils of the Republican party. In 1900, he was the candidate of the Republican party for judge of the superior court and was elected. The evident benefits of a sound currency, the successful issue of the Spanish war and the era of wonderful prosperity that has followed have tended to cement the bond of union between the judge and the party of McKinley and Roosevelt. Aside from a study of the more important political issues of the day, Judge Rudkin devotes the major portion of his time to the law and to his judicial duties, to which, both by nature and profession, he is wedded. He ranks with the best lawyers and judges of law in the state. He has one brother in North Yakima, John J. Rudkin, the brothers being to some extent associated in the practice of law, although not partners. He also has three brothers and one sister living in Ohio: M. L., E. J. and W. B. Rudkin and Mrs. Kate A. Collins. Both as citizen and jurist, Judge Rudkin is one of the foremost men of central Washington, and indeed of the Northwest; progressive and public-spirited, of scholarly attainments, of strictest integrity and fearlessness in the enunciation of what he conceives to be right principles, whether in the courtroom, in the councils of political party, or in the walks of everyday life. He is held in highest esteem, not alone by his immediate associates and friends, but by his fellow citizens of the state and of the Northwest.

BENJAMIN F. BARGE. It affords great satisfaction and pleasure to the chronicler of biographical and historical events to come in touch with the life of a man of resources and talent; one who may truly be termed a man of affairs; who has looked upon life from many view-points, and has familiarized himself with the manners and conduct of leading men in the various business pursuits of life, and in his associations with them has won respect and deference for his business tact and judgment, abiding confidence and faith in his uprightness and business integrity, and love and esteem by his affable, gentlemanly deportment to all with whom he comes in contact, either in a business or social way. In the subject of this sketch, Benjamin F. Barge, it can truthfully be said are combined in a pronounced degree those inherent characteristics and cultivated qualities above mentioned; which claim is established beyond peradventure by his own business success and the honors and public offices of trust which he has received at the hands of those who know him best and esteem him most. Mr. Barge was born in the historic city of Concord, Massachusetts, on February 2, 1834, and comes from good old Scotch stock, tracing the history of his family in America back to the landing of the Mayflower at Plymouth Rock. A paternal forefather was an associate of the Christian pioneer and martyr, Roger Williams, and assisted in the founding of Providence, Rhode Island. His father and mother were John M. and Flora M. (Nash) Barge, the former born at Concord, Massachusetts, in 1784, where he lived and died, following the vocation of farmer. The latter was born in Massachusetts, also, in the year 1790, and came of Scotch-Irish stock. She was well educated and followed teaching for many years. She was sister to Stephen W. Taylor, founder and president of Bucknell University, formerly Lewisburg University. She departed this life in 1858. Mr. Barge finished a three years' course at Yale University, and at the age of eighteen went to Louisiana and engaged in teaching, which he followed for eight years. The country then being rent in twain by the outbreak of the Civil war, he removed to Henry county, Illinois, where he continued to follow the calling of teacher. He was called to the superintendency of the Cambridge schools in that state, and continued to hold this position for six years; following which he was called to fill a like position at Geneseo, where he continued for fifteen years, during eleven years of which he filled the office of county superintendent. Removing to Iowa in 1881, he located at Webster City, and here for the first time since taking up the work of pedagogy, at the age of eighteen, he abandoned the birch and ferule and assumed the role of agriculturist and stock raiser, which he followed with success for some six years. At the close of this period he sought a new field and a new vocation, taking up the work of editor and publisher in Minnesota, which he followed for three years. In 1890 he immigrated to the Pacific coast and settled at Olympia, the Washington state capital. His reputation as a practical and successful educator followed him to his new home, and upon the enactment into law of the bill establishing the State Normal school at Ellensburg, he was appointed to the position of principal, and upon his shoulders was laid the work of opening up and establishing upon a permanent basis this well-known institution of learning; which laborious task

he accomplished with success, and, at the close of three years, being elected to represent his county in the legislature, he resigned the principalship of the Normal, having accomplished his mission in this line, and assumed the role of law-maker. In June, 1896, following the close of the legislative term, he received, at the hands of the national government, an appointment as member of the special Indian commission appointed for the purpose of negotiating treaties with the Indians of Montana, Idaho, Utah, Colorado and Washington, for the sale of their surplus lands and the opening of certain reservations to settlement by the whites. For four years he was a member of this commission, three years of which he was chairman, and all the time held the position of disbursing officer. In 1896, Mr. Barge located at North Yakima, since which time he has been actively identified with the progress and development of that thriving young city, having contributed fully his share, along all lines, and in many much more, to the end that North Yakima might assume and hold its place as the leading city of central Washington. He has himself had constructed twenty-one houses in the town and has had cleared and put in a high state of cultivation some fifteen hundred acres of sage brush lands in that vicinity. In June, 1863, Mr. Barge and Miss Carrie W. Showers were united in marriage at Cambridge, Illinois. Mrs. Barge was born in Cambridge, June 2, 1841, and came of pioneer stock in that state, her father and mother, Joseph and Nancy (Cady) Showers, emigrating from their native state of New York to Illinois, in a very early day. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Barge have been born the following children: Hattie and Cora, residing at Webb City, Ia.; Jennie Leckey, Eagle Grove, Ia., and Alice McCredy, living in North Yakima. Socially, Mr. Barge is connected with the Masonic order, in which society he holds the rank of thirty-second degree Mason. Politically, he is an ardent Republican, and religiously he is a Baptist, with which church he has been identified for the past sixty years. Mr. Barge was a member of the state board of education in Illinois, from 1879 until the time he left the state, when he resigned his position. He is president of the board of education of North Yakima at present, which position he has capably filled the past two years. Mr. Barge has been a most successful business man and possesses his share of this world's goods, owning some twenty-four hundred acres of land in the valley and a considerable amount of city property in North Yakima.

HON. GEORGE S. TAYLOR was one of the earliest and most highly respected pioneers of the Yakima valley. He was born in Fountain county, Indiana, March 8, 1832. At the age of twenty he located in Lucas county, Iowa. Six years later he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca McGlothlen. Mrs. Taylor still lives on the homestead in the Selah valley. Husband and wife made their home in Iowa until the fall of 1864. In 1862, Mr. Taylor enlisted in Company G of the Thirty-fourth Iowa infantry, for service in the Civil war, and followed the fortunes of his regiment through many hard-fought campaigns until the spring of 1863, when he was honorably discharged on account of disability. After the recovery of his health, he started across the Plains with his family, in wagons drawn by oxen. This was in the fall of 1864, and, after a long and eventful journey, the Columbia river was eventually reached and the first stop was made in Umatilla county, Oregon. After a few months of rest, they moved on to Yelm Prairie, near Puget Sound, where relatives were located. In 1866, when the Yakima valley was still occupied by hostile bands of Indians, Mr. Taylor returned from the Sound county and took up land in Selah valley, which has ever since been the family home. During the Indian troubles he was active in the work of running down and capturing the hostiles, and was one of a party that captured old Chief Moses in the late seventies and turned him over to the military authorities. Although not an office seeker, Mr. Taylor served several terms as county commissioner; was elected in 1880 to the territorial legislature; several times refused the nomination of his party for sheriff, and was a candidate for joint senator in 1894, running several hundred votes ahead of his ticket. He was a man of extremely generous impulses, denying himself many times to help others. He was one of the most successful stockmen in the valley. In April, 1900, with the assistance of others, he was caring for a large herd of cattle which had been taken to the Cascade mountains for the season. About forty miles from North Yakima, in the region where the cattle were ranging, between the Big and Little Rattlesnake creeks, is a mountain known as the "Devil's Table." While amusing himself one afternoon rolling stones down the precipitous side of this mountain, Mr. Taylor thoughtlessly loosened a rock which was supporting one on which he was sitting, and was carried with the rocks over a sheer precipice, meeting instant death. In its issue of April 21, 1900, the Yakima Democrat referred to Mr. Taylor as one of nature's noblemen, and said further editorially: "A newer generation owes much to the class of men of whom 'Uncle' George Taylor was a type, a debt that can never be repaid. Is it any wonder, then, that the tragic death of such a man comes as a personal bereavement to all who knew him?"

HARLAND J. TAYLOR, a pioneer of 1866, resides three and one-half miles north of North Yakima. He is the eldest son of Hon. George S. Taylor, whose biography appears elsewhere in the volume, and was born in Lucas, Iowa, April 2, 1857. He crossed the Plains with his parents in 1864, and accompanied them through Oregon and Washington to Puget Sound and back again to the Selah valley, where, in 1866, the father settled on land which has since been the family home. His mother and father were of Scotch-Irish extraction, both natives of Indiana, and pioneers of Iowa. The mother's name is Rebecca (McGlothlen) Taylor, and she is still living on the old homestead in Selah valley. During Mr. Taylor's almost lifelong residence in Yakima county, he has been identified with every step in its wonderful progress, and is regarded as one of the most substantial and successful men in the valley. In 1892, he was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Cherry, daughter of Thomas C. and Bell Cherry, of Selah valley. Mr. Cherry was a pioneer of Oregon and there Mrs. Taylor was born in 1867. Mr. Taylor received a good education in the common schools of Yakima county, and Mrs. Taylor in the common schools of Oregon. Mr. Taylor is an active Democrat, though not an office-seeker. He holds membership in the fraternal orders Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Eagles and the Fraternal Brotherhood. He is energetic and progressive; owns a half interest in one thousand acres of grazing and farm land; has a large number of cattle and horses, and one of the best homes in the county.

GEORGE W. TAYLOR, farmer and stockman, residing four and one-half miles north of North Yakima, is the second son of Hon. George S. Taylor, whose biography will be found on another page of this volume. He was born at Fort Simcoe, Yakima county, August 17, 1867, one year after the arrival of his parents in this county from Lucas, Iowa. His early life was spent on the homestead and pre-emption lands taken up by his father in 1866. With his father and brother Harland, he engaged in farming and stock raising, in the meantime securing in the common schools a good education, and, early in life, assuming equally with father and brother the responsibilities attendant upon the care of their extensive farm and stock interests. At the age of twenty-two, in 1889, he was married to Miss Anna Moore, daughter of Theodore Moore, a native of England and for many years a sailor. Mrs. Taylor was born in Oregon in 1882, but grew to womanhood and was educated in Washington. She was eighteen years old at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have three children, as follows: Eugene, born November 7, 1889; Clara, born September 2, 1891, and Hazel, born August 8, 1893. The family attend the Congregational church, while Mr. Taylor, fraternally, holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically, he is an active Democrat; attends the councils of his party, and uses his influence for its best success. He is highly respected by all who know him, and as a business man has been most successful. He has a good home; owns a half interest in one thousand acres of valley lands, with several hundred head of cattle and other stock; has mining and other interests, and is one of the substantial and reliable residents of the valley.

CHARLES A. MARKS, living on his ranch, eight miles west and four south of North Yakima, is a native of Yakima county, born in the Ahtanum valley in 1874. His father, John P. Marks, one of the prosperous farmers of the county, is a native of Kentucky and crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1853 and located in Linn county. He came to Yakima county in 1871, taking up land in the Ahtanum country. Here our subject was born and raised. The mother, Ellen Williams, was born in Illinois. Subject attended school in a log cabin in his district and finished his education in the Whitman College at Walla Walla. He worked with his father until nineteen, when he decided to go out into the world and try conclusions with Dame Fortune on his own account. He went to Weiser, Idaho, and took up a claim, on which he worked for some time, trying to ditch it for irrigation purposes; but, finding it too much of an undertaking, at the end of one year and one-half went to Butte, Montana, then to Gibsonville, Idaho. After a more extended tour of Montana he returned home to the Ahtanum and went to work for his father, and, profiting by his experience while away, began to accumulate stock, and now has a fine bunch of cattle, with a half-interest in ten and one-half sections of grazing and timber land. He was married in the Ahtanum valley in 1897 to Miss Leah Reed, daughter of John C. and Mary J. (Ferris) Reed, the former a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1839, and also a pioneer in Yakima county, where he settled in 1882, in the Ahtanum valley and where he still lives. The mother was a native of Illinois, born in 1850. Mrs. Marks was born in Nevada in 1880. They have one child, Ellen, born in Yakima county, December 23, 1901. Mr. Marks has one brother, Elmer B., who lives near him. Mr. Marks is a Democrat and, fraternally, is connected with the Yeomen. Mrs. Marks is a member of the Christian church.

JOHN D. CORNETT, cashier of the Yakima National Bank and president of the North Yakima Commercial Club, was born in eastern Ontario, Canada, October 4, 1853, and came to Yakima county in 1887. He is the son of William and Sarah (Reid) Cornett, both natives of north Ireland and both pioneers of Leeds county, Ontario, his father locating there in 1866. He came to North Yakima from Canada in 1891 and still makes this his home. John D. Cornett spent the years of his youth and early manhood in Canada. In youth he attended the common schools of his native province and was afterwards graduated from the Ganaoque academy. He then took a course in telegraphy, but abandoned its study at the age of seventeen to accept a clerkship in a general store, continuing so employed for two years. Going to Huron county, Michigan, in 1876, he taught school for four years and also, during the vacation months, studied pharmacy. In 1880 he took charge of a drug store for Dr. R. C. O'Gilvie, a physician of Port Hope, Michigan, remaining in this position seven years. In 1887 he came to North Yakima and accepted the position of timekeeper and paymaster for George McDonald, who at that time was building the Northern Pacific railroad from Cle-Elum to the Roslyn mines. In the spring of 1888 Mr. Cornett, with others, organized the Yakima National Bank. He served as assistant cashier until the annual meeting of officers and directors of the bank in 1889, when he was elected cashier, an office which he still retains. During his residence in North Yakima he has also served four years as city treasurer. He has always had faith in the future of the city and county and, besides his holdings in the bank, has become interested to a considerable extent in city property, and some years ago took up a timber culture claim near Kiona, which he still holds. Mr. Cornett was married in Kingston, Ontario, March 9, 1881, to Miss Jessie Donald, daughter of John and Jean Donald, both natives of Scotland. Her parents came to Kingston in early days and her father was master mechanic of the Kingston Locomotive Works. Her mother was a woman of culture and refinement and was greatly esteemed for her qualities of mind and heart. Mrs. Cornett was born in Kingston, Ontario, November 16, 1861, and was educated in her native city, being graduated from the high school. Following her high school course, she taught for three years, the first term at the age of sixteen. She was nineteen years of age when she met and married Mr. Cornett. Mrs. Cornett has brothers and sisters as follows: Edward Donald, almoner and tax land agent for the Grand Trunk railroad in Ontario; George, president of the Yakima National Bank, in North Yakima; John, an engineer, living in New Mexico; James, a stockman of North Yakima; Mrs. Mary Ely of Chicago, wife of an engineer, and Mrs. Jean Vance of North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Cornett have the following children: Jean, born in Michigan, 1884; George W., born in Michigan, 1886; John, born in North Yakima, 1891; William, born in North Yakima, 1897. Jean is a graduate of the North Yakima high school. Two children have died: Edna, born in Port Hope, Mich., October 6, 1882, died when three and one-half years old; Donald, born in North Yakima, 1893, died when eighteen months old. The family attend the Presbyterian church. Mr. Cornett is a Republican. The fraternal spirit is a prominent characteristic of Mr. Cornett's individuality; he is a Blue Lodge and a Shrine Mason; also a Knight

Templar; a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He and Mrs. Cornett are prominent and popular in the social circles of North Yakima and their home, at the corner of Yakima avenue and Sixth street, is one of the best in the city.

DAVID LONGMIRE. Among all the citizens of Yakima county, none is more highly respected and honored for his integrity, sterling business abilities and true beneficence than is the man whose name commences this chronicle. As a courageous pioneer, an energetic farmer and keen business man, a man devoted to his home and loyal to his friends, he has been justly popular since his advent into the life of the Yakima community when that little company numbered only a few score souls, and he is today recognized as one of the leaders in the county where he has made his home and concentrated his energies for so many years.

The Longmire family, of which our subject is a member, is well known in the early annals of Washington, having been among the earliest settlers on Puget Sound. His mother, Susan (Nisely) Longmire, died in Indiana many years ago. Fifty-one years ago, when Olympia and Steilacoom were the only towns north of the Columbia river, excepting the military post at Vancouver, David's father, James, and his stepmother, Verinda (Taylor) Longmire, crossed the inhospitable plains and mountains of the continent and toiled wearily up the Yakima valley to the Naches river, which they followed to its source, and then descended to Yelm prairie, where they founded a new home. The story of this trip through the Cascade country has been fully told elsewhere in this volume, so that here it is sufficient to say that the boy David accompanied his parents, giving him the honor of being, so far as is known, the first white man now living in Yakima county to gaze upon its sage brush plains and sparkling streams. James Longmire was a native of Indiana, born March 17, 1820, and lived there until 1853. His death occurred on Yelm prairie, Washington, in 1897. David's mother was also a native of Indiana, where she died in young womanhood. Mr. Longmire was again married, Miss Verinda Taylor becoming his wife; she is still living. David was born May 8, 1844, and received two years' education before crossing the Plains during his ninth year. He finished his schooling in Olympia, where he attended the common schools. Until he became of age he remained at home farming and raising stock, but, upon attaining his majority, he engaged in the now unusual occupation of cutting fence rails. When twenty-three years old he filed on a land claim in Thurston county and lived there three years. In 1867, he came to the

Yakima valley with a party of Northern Pacific surveyors and was occupied with them until late in 1863, returning then to his farm. But the trip to Yakima county had disturbed his peace of mind by revealing to him its wonderful undeveloped resources, and, since it could no longer be quieted, February 16, 1871, witnessed his departure for the new home he had chosen, which was purchased in the Wenas valley. The promised land came up to expectations and upon the Wenas ranch Mr. Longmire has since lived and prospered. Mr. Longmire and Miss Lizzie Pollard, daughter of Asa and Tillatha Pollard, natives of Iowa and Indiana respectively and pioneers of the sixties in Washington, were united by the bonds of matrimony in Thurston county in 1869. She departed this earthly life in 1888 and was laid at rest in Yakima county. In 1890 Mr. Longmire again married, the bride this time being Mrs. Lizzie Treat, daughter of George and Catherine Lotz, of German birth, who crossed the Plains in 1853 and settled in Washington. Mr. Lotz died in 1895; his wife, five years later. Mrs. Longmire was born in Thurston county, May 17, 1860, and was there educated and married to Charles Treat. By his first wife Mr. Longmire had six children: Alice, born June 11, 1870; Mrs. Martha Porter, born September 5, 1876; Mrs. Burnette Small, born June 6, 1878; David C., born November 8, 1883; George M., born March 8, 1886; and James G., born November 6, 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Longmire's only child is Roy B., whose birthday was January 17, 1896. Mr. Longmire has the following brothers and sisters: Elaine, John, Robert, Frank, Mrs. Melissa Rice and Mrs. Martha Conine, living on the Sound; George and Mrs. Tilatha Kandle, living on the Wenas, and Mrs. Laura A. Longmire, living in North Yakima. Mr. Longmire is a member of only one order, the Masonic fraternity. He is a member of the Christian church. During his entire life he has been a strong Democrat, and in 1878 was elected county commissioner, in which position he served the people four years. He was the Democratic nominee for representative to the legislature, some years ago, and was defeated by the narrow margin of eleven votes, the Republicans carrying the county generally by a large majority. Aside from his main occupation of ranching, Mr. Longmire has done considerable prospecting for minerals on the headwaters of the Yakima and its branches and also on the western slope. At present he is interested in the development of a valuable coal deposit on the headwaters of the Cowlitz river. This mine was discovered as early as 1867 by Mr. Packwood and Mr. Longmire, but its inaccessibility has heretofore prevented its being properly opened. But his pride is his magnificent six hundred acre ranch, five hundred acres of which are in alfalfa and timothy and the balance plow land and building sites, lying along the banks of the Wenas creek. Here he is making a specialty of raising Hereford cattle and fine horses and his herd of one hundred cattle and thirty horses is convincing proof of his abilities in this direction. Mr. Longmire has been among those progressive stockmen who have foreseen the immediate exhaustion of the open range under prevailing conditions and has, therefore, already purchased four sections of grazing land and contemplates buying a much larger tract, which, together with his immense hay ranch, will give him an ideal property for the business of stock raising.

HON. WALTER J. REED, a pioneer of 1879 in the Yakima valley, now engaged in the real estate business in North Yakima, was born near Edinburgh, Scotland, April 3, 1842. He is the son of John and Isabella (Craig) Reed, both natives of Scotland, the former born in 1821 and the latter in 1824. They were married in 1841, the bride being at the time in her seventeenth year. She still lives, at the age of eighty, in Carnegie, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. Walter J. Reed was brought to the United States by his parents when he was six years old. The family first located in Maryland, but moved in a short time to Ohio, where the father engaged in farming and mining until 1859, when he again moved with his family to Pennsylvania, continuing for a time in his former occupations. In 1861 he enlisted for service in the Civil war, in the One Hundred and First Pennsylvania volunteers, following the fortunes of this regiment through many hard fought campaigns until the fall of 1864, when he was wounded and taken prisoner by the Confederates. He died in Florence, South Carolina, in November, 1864, from the effects of his wounds and imprisonment. Walter J. Reed obtained his education in the common schools of Ohio and continued at home, assisting his father on the farm, until nineteen years of age, when, in August, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Sixty-third Pennsylvania volunteers, and followed his father to the front. His regiment belonged to the first division of the third army corps. Among other battles of less importance, he took part in the following: Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, the Seven Days battle before Richmond, the second battle of Bull Run, Gettysburg, the battles of the Wilderness, at Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. He was wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, honorably discharged from the service in August, 1864, and returned home, where he engaged in coal mining until 1877. In this year, leaving the region where his youth and early manhood had been spent, he immigrated to California, where he followed mining for a short time in Shasta county. He afterwards spent some time in The Dalles, Oregon, as a contractor and builder, going from this point to the mining regions of Grant county, in the same state; prospected there a few months and, in 1879, came to the Yakima valley. Locating a soldier's homestead just south of the present city of North Yakima, he passed four years in farming and stock raising. In 1883 he moved to what is now a portion of Kittitas county, taking up a pre-emption claim where the town of Cle-Elum was afterwards built. In 1886, before the railroad reached the location, he laid out the town-site of Cle-Elum and built the Reed House, still the leading hotel of the town. In the fall of the same year, while out hunting, in company with C. B. Brosious, he made a discovery of coal, the find resulting in farther and more extensive research and in the eventual opening of the great Koslyn and Cle-Elum coal fields. Mr. Reed's pre-emption claim was the second entry in that region. When we consider the wonderful development that has since taken place in this region, the inestimable value of this discovery is apparent. When North Yakima was laid out, in 1885, Mr. Reed owned forty acres of land that was included in the townsite and built the first two-story house erected in the city. In 1897 he returned from Cle-Elum to his homestead near North Yakima and, the following year, was appointed register of the United States land office located at this point. He served in this capacity four years. He has also served a like period as member of the city council.

Mr. Reed was married in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in September, 1864, to Miss Barbara A. Steiner, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Robbins) Steiner. Mrs. Reed was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, May 17, 1843. Her father was the first white child born in what is now Mercer county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being 1813. He was a farmer and contractor and died at Cle-Elum in 1888. Mrs. Reed's mother was a native of Ohio, born in 1815, of Scotch and Welsh parents, they being pioneers of that state; she died in Pennsylvania in 1868. Mrs. Reed was educated in the common schools of Pennsylvania; she was twenty-one years old when she and Mr. Reed were married. She has two brothers: Theodore Steiner, proprietor of Hotel Reed at Cle-Elum, and Frederick, living on a farm near the same place. She also has one sister, Mrs. Margaret Nye, wife of Colonel N. C. Nye, of Prineville, Oregon, one of the wealthiest stockmen in that part of the state. Professor David C. Reed, superintendent of the schools of Redlands, California, is a brother of W. J. Reed. Another brother was John Reed, a man prominent in the affairs of city and county, whose biography will be found on another page of this volume. He died in 1902. Fraternally, Walter J. Reed is connected with the Masons and with the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a commander of the Grand Army of the Republic post in North Yakima. Mr. Reed is a Republican. He has extensive real estate interests in Cle-Elum and in North Yakima; in timber and farming lands throughout the valley, and has heavy interests in the mines about Cle-Elum. He has taken a most active part in the development of Yakima and Kittitas counties; he has been and still is a prominent factor in their progress and is one of the best known and most successful of the pioneers of central Washington.

MRS. ADDIE REED, now residing at No. 310 North Selah avenue, North Yakima, has lived within the present boundaries of Yakima county since 1871. She was the wife of Honorable John Reed (recently deceased), one of the honored pioneers of the county. Mrs. Reed was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, April 2, 1863. Her father was Levi Gibbs, a native of Indiana, and a mining man. He crossed the Plains in the early days and followed mining in Oregon until some time in 1864, when he was murdered near The Dalles, Mrs. Reed being at the time but little more than one year old. Her mother was Mary J. (Vaughn) Reed, a native of Missouri, born December 14, 1835. She crossed the Plains with her parents in 1846, when eleven years old, the family locating in Oregon. She died when Mrs. Reed was ten years of age. Bereft of her parents, she was cared for during her youth by her grandparents, who came with her mother to Washington in 1871, locating on the Naches river. Her grandfather died in 1882 and her grandmother in 1890. Mrs. Reed received her education in the common schools of Yakima county. Her marriage with John Reed was solemnized September 20, 1882. They lived on the Naches for two years and in 1884 took up a pre-emption claim, where the water-works are now located. After a residence of three years on the pre-emption they moved into North Yakima, remaining here ten years. Going again to the old homestead taken up by Mrs. Reed's grandfather, they resided there one year, during which time the land was divided among the heirs. A homestead was then taken in the Sunnyside district and, after remaining on the land for eighteen months, they returned to North Yakima, where they made their home for two years. In 1901 they again moved, this time to Cle-Elum, where Mr. Reed died, August 8, 1903. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Reed are: Fred R., born in North Yakima, December 6, 1890, and William M., born in North Yakima, August 18, 1893. One child, Walter J., was born in North Yakima, March 13, 1888, and died at the age of three years and eight months. Mrs. Reed is one of the highly respected pioneers of Yakima county. She affiliates with the Methodist church and has many friends in the social circles of the city. Her husband, John Reed, was a pioneer of 1878. He was a native of Pennsylvania and the son of John and Isabella (Craig) Reed, both natives of Scotland. John Reed, Sr., came to the United States in 1848 and was a soldier in the Civil war, belonging to the One Hundred and First Pennsylvania volunteers. He died in Florence, South Carolina, November, 1864, from the effects of confinement in a Southern prison and from wounds received in the service. His wife and the mother of the Yakima county pioneer still lives, in Carnegie, Pennsylvania. John Reed, Jr., was educated in a soldiers' orphan school in Pennsylvania and, as has been stated, came to Yakima county in 1878. He was always prominent in the political and industrial progress of the county and of the city of North Yakima. He was at one time mayor of the city and served for several years as a member of the city council. He was prominent in Masonic circles, being a Master Mason, and was held in highest esteem by all who knew him as the possessor of those sterling qualities of manhood so often revealed by the pioneers of the great Northwest.

EARL G. PECK. Earl G. Peck is the treasurer of Yakima county, and was born in Sauk county, Wisconsin, June 11, 1865. He is the son of Francis N. and Eliza J. (Montgomery) Peck, the former a native of Vermont, and now a resident of Baraboo, Wisconsin, where he has held the office of register of deeds for three consecutive terms. Mr. Peck's mother is dead. The subject attended the public schools of Baraboo, but left his studies before graduating in order to take up railroad life. He entered this work as a call boy, and while thus engaged he learned telegraphy. He next took a position as operator, which vocation he followed five years. The next four years he served as train dispatcher. During his experience at the key, Mr. Peck served in twenty-eight different offices. In February, 1894, he came west and located a homestead in the Naches Gap, which place he now has set out in fruit trees. He remained on this ranch until January, 1899, when he took a position as deputy under County Treasurer William B. Dudley. He held the position of head deputy in this office under Mr. Dudley for two terms; when, in January, 1903, he became Mr. Dudley's successor in office. He was elected on the Republican ticket, and carried the entire vote of his party. Mr. Peck was married in Racine, Wisconsin, April 21, 1890, to Miss Lillian A. Peck, a native of Racine, and the daughter of Erastus C. and Helen M. (Sears) Peck, the latter dying during Mrs. Peck's infancy. The father was clerk of Racine county during a period of sixteen years, and died in 1902. Mr. Peck has one brother, Tracy L., who is station agent of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway at Dodgeville, Wisconsin, and three sisters, whose names are: Mrs. C. W. Randall, Baraboo, Wisconsin; Mrs. Thomas A. Lawson, Chicago, wife of the assistant general superintendent of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and Mrs. Lawrence A. Dash, whose husband is station agent at Ralph, Iowa, for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. Mrs. Peck has one brother, Lewis N. Peck, of Los Angeles, California. Mr. and Mrs. Peck have two children, Helen A. and Francis E., both at home. The family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Peck is a man of refinement and sound sense, both in politics and in business, in both of which he has been eminently successful. He is a competent official, courteous and obliging, standing high, not only in his own party, but with the entire public of Yakima county, which admires and trusts him almost without an individual exception.

WILLIAM B. NEWCOMB. William B. Newcomb, county auditor of Yakima county, was born in West Point, Wisconsin, December 24, 1871. His father and mother are J. I. and Delia D. (Christler) Newcomb, and are both living on a farm near North Yakima. The subject has two sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Janeck and Mrs. May R. Kelso, both of North Yakima. Mr. Newcomb was educated in the common schools of Lodi, Wisconsin, and after leaving school he occupied the position of telegraph operator and station agent for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad for a period of eight years. After leaving the road he came to North Yakima and purchased a fruit farm of fifteen acres in Fruit Vale, upon which he has resided since. He was deputy auditor for four years under E. E. Kelso. In 1902 he was elected to the office which he now holds. On June 28, 1893, he was married to Miss Lillie B. Nott, a native of the same place as is her husband, the wedding being solemnized at Lodi, Wisconsin. Mrs. Newcomb is the daughter of W. S. and Josephine (Green) Nott, both of whom are living in the town in which Mrs. Newcomb was married. To Mr. and Mrs. Newcomb have been born two children: Wallace R., born December 10, 1898, and Vera M., born during October, 1901. Mr. Newcomb is a member in good standing of the Ancient Order of United Workmen fraternity. He is regarded as an efficient and obliging official, and his general standing in his county is of the highest.

HENRY J. BICKNELL. Among the Yakima county pioneers who have taken an active part in the development of that most wonderful country, and who in passing from the scenes of life will have left the marks of their energy and enterprise stamped indelibly upon the surface of that goodly land for the contemplation and gratitude of coming generations, few take higher rank than the subject of this sketch. Born in Penobscott, Maine, on the rock-ribbed Atlantic coast, where thrift and hardiness are indispensable to even a meager success in the common vocations of life, and these conditions in his case being accentuated by the death of his father when he had reached the age of twelve years and was called upon to take an active part in winning a living for the family upon the farm, the lessons learned in this early school of experience have stayed with him all through after life. Henry Bicknell, his father, was a Vermonter, born November 2, 1798, and came of the old Puritan blood that crossed the ocean in the Mayflower. His mother, Betsie (Foster) Bicknell, came of English ancestry and was a native of Rhode Island. In 1851, when subject was but seventeen, his mother married again, and he started out in life for himself, working at whatever he could find to do. At the age of nineteen he took passage on a sailing vessel bound for California, via the Cape Horn route, landed at San Francisco six months later, in the spring of 1853, and went to work in a sawmill. He followed lumbering at Redwood City five years, then returned to Maine, via Panama, and after a brief visit located in Illinois, where he bought a place and farmed, later engaging in merchandizing at Petersburg, Illinois, and still later in the wholesale liquor business in Jacksonville. The next five years were spent in the lumbering business, in California, then one year in Maine, when he again returned to California and launched out in a mining project, which, through the dishonesty of a trusted friend, swept all of his capital away at one stroke. After a few years more, spent in California and Oregon, he came to Parker's Bottom, Washington, and bought the right to a tract of land, which he at once began to improve, being the first one to get water upon the bench land of that bottom, in 1883, two years after his arrival in the country. He was chosen president of the irrigation company organized at that time for the purpose of irrigating the valley. He at once set out a small orchard, consisting of apples, peaches and pears, and demonstrated the adaptability of climate and soil to fruit raising; from this early beginning has sprung the now famous Sunnyside country. He sold this original homestead in 1895 for twenty-two thousand dollars. Mr. Bicknell had three brothers and one sister, of whom two, James and Stephen, are still living. Politically, he is an avowed Republican, and takes a lively interest in political campaigns and the success of his party. He is interested in some fifteen hundred acres of improved and raw lands in the county, as well as in the new coal fields which have been discovered in the vicinity. As a citizen and neighbor none rank higher.

ARCHIE L. FLINT, merchant at North Yakima, is an 1869 pioneer in Yakima county, and the blood of pioneer ancestors flows in his veins. His father, Isaac A. Flint, who came of the hardy and indefatigable Scotch and Welsh stock, left his home in New York in a very early day and went as a pioneer into Wisconsin, and later to Missouri, from which state he crossed the Plains to California in 1845, and a few months later crossed the line into Oregon, where he took up land. He, with a party, explored the Sound country, and later, in 1849, went to the California gold fields. He then returned to the states, via the Isthmus, and in 1853 again crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling this time in Douglas county, where he remained for years and reared his family. He was a Christian minister, and founded the first Christian church in North Yakima. He gave many years of his life to the ministry, and was esteemed for his many good qualities by all who knew him. His wife, Emeline L. (Phinney) Flint, was of English ancestry and a direct descendant of Sir John Hollister. Subject received his education in the Portland high school and in Monmouth college. At the age of eighteen he went to work for his brother in the stock business, investing his earnings in cattle. At the end of five years he and his father engaged in stock raising together, he making his home with his parents and looking after the cattle on the range. The severe winter of 1880-81 swept away at one fell swoop two-thirds of their herd, and he then sold the remainder and engaged in merchandizing in Yakima City. After two years he sold and ran a planing mill for two years, then went to railroading with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which he followed for eight years. In 1894 he returned to North Yakima, and in 1896 was appointed deputy county auditor, in which capacity he served for two years. In 1899 the North Yakima Furniture Company was incorporated, of which he is the secretary and treasurer, as well as stockholder and one of the active managers of the business. He was married in Yakima City in 1882, to Clara Wright, whose birth place was Oregon, where she made her advent into this world in 1856, and where she was educated and learned dressmaking. Her father is one of the early Oregon pioneers, in which state he still lives and farms. Mr. and Mrs. Flint have two children, Alda and Avera L. They were both born in North Yakima, the former on July 25, 1883, and the latter on October 4, 1886, and will both soon complete the high school course. Fraternally, Mr. Flint is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is at present vice-grand; the Woodmen of the World, and the Fraternal Brotherhood. He is an active member of the Christian church. Politically, he is a Republican. He is recognized by all who know him as a man of integrity and of many sterling qualities.

JOHN C. MACCRIMMON, a Yakima county pioneer of 1883, and a resident of North Yakima since its infancy, where he has engaged in various lines of business, merchandizing, real estate and loans, is a native of Scotland, in which country he was born February 11, 1848. His parents, Neil and Mary (Campbell) MacCrimmon, were both natives of Scotland, where they were born respectively in 1809 and 1812, and where they both died. His father was a commission man. Subject received his early education in Glasgow, and later took a course of study in the United States. At the age of thirteen he took passage for the United States via South America, arriving in California in December, 1861. He lived the first year in the new country with a Mr. Handley, later working on a milk ranch, and then holding the position of clerk in a San Francisco store for a year. After an eight months' course in school, he went to Victoria, British Columbia, and held the position of express messenger for Wells, Fargo & Company for three years, and after trying a season in the Cariboo mines, went to Portland, Oregon. He there engaged in merchandizing, which he followed for some nine years, and again sought the British Columbia mines, and for three years wooed the goddess of fortune with varying success. He next spent a year at Victoria and a brief period at Portland, and brought up at The Dalles, where he shortly engaged in railroad work, holding the position of superintendent of construction on the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad, then building, which position he held four years, and by means of which he finally landed in Yakima county in 1883. In 1884 he was appointed postmaster at Yakima City, but resigned the office the next year to move to the new town of North Yakima. Here he formed a partnership with Matt Bartholett, in the general merchandizing business, which he followed until 1888, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate and loan business, with J. H. Needham. He continued this partnership for eight years, when he again tried merchandizing for a brief time. But in a few months he once more took up the real estate and loan business, which he has since followed without cessation. Mr. MacCrimmon's brothers and sisters are: Norman, Angus, Donald, Margaret and William. He was married in Portland, Oregon, in 1886, to Fannie Klippel, who died a few months later. He was married the second time in 1887 to Martha Needham, a native of Wisconsin, born October 17, 1860. She was a teacher a number of years, having taught in her native state and also in the schools of Yakima. Her father was a native of Vermont, and was a pioneer of Wisconsin, where he settled in 1855. His name was John C., and the mother's, Marcia (Munger) Needham. She was a native of New York and a school teacher. Subject's children are: Nannie M., Lillian S., John M. (deceased), Myrtle E., Donald H. and Margaret B. (deceased). Socially, Mr. MacCrimmon is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has the distinction of having represented that order four times as delegate to the grand lodge. His religious connection is with the Christian church. He is a staunch Republican, and has held the office of justice of the peace two terms. He organized the first company (Company E) of the National Guard in the state, and was elected captain of the same.

SYLVIVUS A. DICKEY, superintendent of public instruction in Yakima county, Washington, is a native of Butler county, Pennsylvania, born in 1858. His father was a Pennsylvania farmer, Archibald Dickey, of Scotch-Irish descent, a pioneer of western Pennsylvania, born in 1822 and passed away in 1897. The father's grandfather was a native of Ireland. The mother of the subject of this article was Jane (Cross) Dickey, born in western Pennsylvania of American parents in 1822. She died in 1871. Sylvivus A. Dickey spent his youth and early manhood in Pennsylvania, assisting his father on the farm and attending school. After a course of study in Grove City college he began his career as a teacher. In 1883 he came West, locating first at Seattle, and for sixteen years engaged in school work in various localities on the Sound. For four years he was superintendent of public instruction in Kitsap county; he also, during his residence there, served several terms as justice of the peace, and for two years occupied the editorial chair on the Washington Post-Sentinel. In 1889 he represented the Eighteenth district in the convention which framed the constitution of the state of Washington. Coming to Yakima county in 1898, he settled in Parker's Bottom and engaged in teaching. In recognition of his practical knowledge, of his executive ability and of his success as a teacher, he was elected superintendent of public instruction in Yakima county in 1900, and re-elected in 1902. In the matter of organization and in the grading of the schools he has been remarkably successful and all his work as superintendent has been eminently satisfactory. He is regarded as the right man in the right position. In 1889 Mr. Dickey was married to Mrs. Alma (Hill) Banker, a native of New York and a daughter of Walton and Sarah (Hose) Hill, both natives of New York, the former an architect. Mr. Dickey has four brothers and one sister in Pennsylvania. There is one child, Archie Earl, thirteen years old. Mr. Dickey holds membership in the Knights of Pythias and in the Maccabees. Husband and wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Dickey has always taken an active part in the councils of the Republican party. He has been successful in a business way and owns one of the best farms in the valley. He is known as one of the most successful educators in central Washington, and is highly esteemed throughout Yakima county, where his sterling qualities as a man and his professional capabilities are well-known and thoroughly appreciated.

HENRY GREEN, M. D. One of the most successful practicing physicians and surgeons of North Yakima is Doctor Henry Green, who was born in Dover, England, in 1823. His parents were John Kester and Sarah (McLaughlin) Green, both natives of Ireland. His father was a physician and a professor. He was educated in Glasgow, Scotland, and was a man of prominence and of scholarly attainments. After coming to the United States he occupied a chair in the medical school of the Washington university in Baltimore, Maryland. Doctor Green was born while his parents were visiting in England, they having resided in the United States for a number of years prior to his birth. Returning to this country with his parents when but a few months old, his early life was spent on a plantation owned by his father near Richmond, Virginia. His early education was obtained in a select school at home. He afterwards attended the Christian Brothers' college at Richmond, and continued his studies in the university at Baltimore, being graduated from the law department. He eventually decided, however, to follow his father's profession, and in 1847 entered the Orian Medical School at Cape Town, Africa, from which he was graduated. He continued his studies later in Port Elizabeth, afterwards spending some time in study and travel in England. Entering the English navy, he served two years as assistant under Surgeon Sage, in the meanwhile visiting the ports of China and other foreign countries. In 1859 he returned to the United States, and for a time traveled over the Southern states. He was at Charleston, South Carolina, when the first shot of the Rebellion was fired at Fort Sumter, and from this time until the close of the war served as a surgeon in the Southern army. He was twice wounded and twice taken prisoner. After the war he practiced his profession in St. Louis, Missouri; Oakland, California; Corvallis, Oregon; Goldendale, Tacoma and Centralia, Washington. He was elected to the Oregon legislature from Benton county, where he resided six years. He first visited North Yakima as a delegate from Thurston county to the state Democratic convention and was so pleased with the city that he determined to locate here, and became a permanent resident in 1895. Doctor Green was married in Iowa in 1866 to Miss Lodency Whitcomb, a native of Indiana and the daughter of A. J. Whitcomb, a merchant and a native of Wales. One son, Rev. Leon D. Green, is a Christian minister of Eugene, Oregon. The second son, Earl, resides with his parents. The wife and younger son commune with the Baptist church. Fraternally, the Doctor is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a Democrat and takes a keen interest in the success of his party. He owns a grain ranch in the valley and a twenty-acre tract near the city. Doctor Green is a man of generous impulses and is possessed of those sterling qualities that inevitably lead to success.

HONORABLE ANDREW JACKSON SPLAWN. Prominent among those who have been actively associated with the political and industrial development of central Washington is Andrew Jackson Splawn, a pioneer of 1862. His birthplace was Holt county, Missouri, and the year, 1845. He is the son of John and Nancy (McHaney) Splawn; his father a native of Kentucky and his mother of Virginia. John Splawn removed from Kentucky early in the century to become a pioneer of northwest Missouri, where he died in 1848, in his thirty-eighth year. The mother, Nancy Splawn, who still lives, in her ninetieth year, at Ellensburg, Washington, has led an exceptionally useful and busy life, most of her years having been spent on the frontier. A pioneer of Missouri, three years after the death of her husband, or in 1851, she started across the Plains with ox teams, accompanied only by her five sons, Charles, George, William, Moses and Andrew Jackson, the oldest being but twenty and the youngest, the subject of this biography, being in his sixth year. After having courageously endured the severe trials and fortunately escaped the many dangers of this long journey, she eventually settled with her family in Linn county, Oregon, where a homestead was taken up, which, for a number of years, remained the family home. Here, during his youth and early manhood, Mr. Splawn was variously occupied, in farming and caring for stock, and, in the schools of his home county and those of Corvallis, receiving his education. Leaving Oregon in 1860, he assisted his brother Charles in driving a band of cattle into Klickitat county, Washington, and in 1861 came over the divide into the Yakima valley. In the fall of the same year he started with Major John Thorp to British Columbia, driving cattle to the Thompson river, where they spent the winter. In 1862 the cattle were driven to the Cariboo mines, British Columbia, and in the fall of this year Mr. Splawn returned to the Yakima valley, wintering on the Moxee. Returning to Oregon, he operated pack-trains between The Dalles and Canyon City, from The Dalles to Boise basin, and from The Dalles to Rock Island, near the present site of Wenatchee. He also made one trip with a pack-train of forty horses from The Dalles to the Cariboo mines, a distance of 1,000 miles. In 1865, with Captain Barnes, he drove cattle from the Yakima valley, via Lewiston and the Salmon river country, into Boise basin, returning to winter again in the Moxee valley. Another drive was made from Klickitat county to "Warren's diggings," Idaho, and still another, with Leonard Thorp, in 1866; this time from Klickitat county via Spokane to the Kootenay (British Columbia) mines; thence to the mines of Blackfoot mountain, Montana. In 1868 Mr. Splawn bought cattle in the Yakima valley and drove them to the mining regions of Thompson river, British Columbia. The years 1867-68-69 were spent in the Yakima valley, buying and selling cattle; as a rule the sales being made to purchasers who were driving to the Puget Sound country. In 1870 a store or trading post was established by Mr. Splawn on the present site of Ellensburg, Kittitas county, the same being sold in 1872 to John A. Shoudy. From that date to the present time he has continued in the stock business, and, although he has experienced reverses, having lost at one time, in the severe winter of 1880-81, his entire band of seven hundred cattle, he is one of the most successful stockmen in the county. He is widely known as a breeder of Herefords, and in the fall of 1903 took first and second prizes at the Washington State fair held at North Yakima, the Oregon State fair at Salem, and the Inland Empire fair at Spokane. He has for several years been president of the state fair association. Although his interests are largely in stock, he has invested heavily in other directions. In addition to some undeveloped mining property, he owns three thousand acres of land, eight hundred acres under irrigation, sown largely to alfalfa, timothy and clover; the balance pasture lands.

Mr. Splawn was married in the Moxee valley in 1872 to Miss Mary A., daughter of Martin and Bridget (Downs) Daverin, the father a native of Ireland, who came to Washington in 1872. Mrs. Splawn was a native of Wisconsin, where she was educated. She died in 1894. One child born to this union died in infancy. Mr. Splawn was again married in Ellensburg in 1897 to Miss Margaret Larson, daughter of John H. and Hettie (Tilton) Larson. Mr. Larson came to Oregon in the seventies and located in Tillamook county. He was afterwards engaged in business for some time in The Dalles, coming from there in 1880 and taking up a claim in the Yakima valley. He eventually returned to The Dalles. Mrs. Splawn was born in Kansas in 1873, came west with her parents and was educated in a convent school in The Dalles. For six years she taught school in Yakima county. Mrs. Splawn has brothers and sisters as follows: William Larson, of North Yakima; Lawrence and Bert B., living in the Cowiche valley, and Minnie B., a teacher in the schools of North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Splawn have one son, Andrew Jackson, Jr., born in 1899. Mr. Splawn is an active and an influential Democrat, a leader both in local and state politics. He is at present state senator from Yakima county, elected in 1902. In political and business circles, he is one of the best known of the pioneers of the Yakima valley and of central Washington. No one has been more closely or more actively associated with the political history and the industrial development of this portion of the Northwest than has Senator Splawn, and in the record of events which constitute the history of central Washington he must ever be accorded the prominence to which long years of active participation in the progress of this section entitles him.

LEONARD LUTHER THORP, a pioneer of 1858 in Klickitat county and a pioneer of 1860 in the valley of the Yakima, was born in Polk county, Oregon, near the town of Independence, October 16, 1845. He is the son of Fielding Mortimer and Margaret (Bounds) Thorp. His father was born in Kentucky in 1822 and during a life of seventy-two years was always to be found among the foremost of the trail blazers along the ever receding frontier. His mother was a native of Tennessee and was born near the old home of General Jackson. She died at the home in Kittitas valley in 1888. The parents of Leonard L. Thorp were pioneers of Oregon as well as of Washington, having crossed the Plains and settled in Polk county, Oregon, in 1844, nine years before Washington became a territory. In 1858, the family, consisting of father, mother and nine children, removed from Oregon and settled in the Klickitat valley, on the lands that afterwards became the site of Goldendale. A portion of this townsite was used for some time as a calf pasture by Mr. Thorp. During his residence in this country the old pioneer was successful in securing the formation of Klickitat county, becoming its first probate judge. But the march of civilization drove him onward and, in 1861, he left the Klickitat home and settled in the Moxee valley, near what is now known as the "Old Moxee" house, at the edge of the bluff near the big spring, becoming the first permanent settler in Yakima county and also its political father. The household reached this destination February 15, 1861, but previously, in the fall of 1860, the father and two of his sons drove two hundred and fifty-nine cattle and sixty horses into the valley and wintered there. In the spring a cabin was built of cottonwood and a garden made in the bottom lands. At this time, the open lands being covered with rye-grass from four to six feet tall, they were of little value except for grazing purposes, as the pioneer, with his crude implements, could accomplish but little in converting the primeval plains into grain fields and orchards. But here the live stock thrived and each year there were additions to the acreage devoted to farming purposes. This valley remained the home of Mortimer Thorp until 1868, when he again moved toward the frontier, taking up land on Tanum creek, Kittitas county, improving the same and making it his home until his death in 1894. Leonard Thorp received his education in the common schools of his native county in Oregon and also received instruction from a private tutor in both Kittitas and Yakima counties. After reaching his majority he engaged in ranching for himself, taking up land in the Selah valley in 1870.

He was married on the Moxee, in 1869, to Miss Philena Henson, daughter of Alfred and Martha (Bounds) Henson, also among the earliest of Yakima's pioneers, having first come to the Yakima valley in 1861. Their children are: Mrs. Eva Brown, born in the valley in 1872, now living in Tacoma; Dale Owen, born in Selah valley, 1874, and Margaret, born in Selah valley, 1880. One daughter, Mrs. Martha Young, was born in 1870, and died during October, 1900. Mr. Thorp has one brother, Willis W., of Seattle, and three sisters: Melissa F., wife of Charles Splawn, of Thorp; Mrs. Julia Olive Smith, a resident of King county, Washington, and Adelia E. Thorp, of Alberta, British Columbia. His life has been spent in ranching and stock raising. Since coming to the Yakima country he has lived successively in the Moxee, Selah and Yakima valleys, removing to North Yakima only in recent years. He is one of the successful and highly esteemed pioneers of the county, has been closely identified with its industrial development and has always been active in its general progress. Although he has never been an office seeker in the general acceptance of that term, he served the county as assessor from 1871 to 1873 and also served an unexpired term of Charles P. Cooke, in the auditor's office. He is now vice-president of the Yakima National Bank, of North Yakima. Mr. Thorp is one of the best known and most reliable pioneers of Yakima county, and indeed of central Washington.

CAPTAIN ROBERT DUNN, a pioneer of 1876 in Yakima county, residing in Parker Bottom, five miles north and three east of Toppenish, is a native of Scotland, born near Glasgow in 1837. He is the son of Robert and Isabel (Shanks) Dunn, who died in Scotland, the land of their nativity. The father was a farmer and stockman; the mother, who lived to be eighty-seven years old, died within two miles of the place of her birth; she was the mother of thirteen children. The son Robert remained in his native country until his eighteenth year, attending school and working on his father's farm. In 1854 he left Scotland to seek his fortune on the western continent, going first to Canada, where his grandmother was living, and remaining there for three months. Thence he went to St. Louis, Missouri, where he was variously occupied for about one year, when he enlisted (1855) in the Second United States regular cavalry, with which regiment he served for five years, being discharged at Ringgold, Texas, in 1860. Going to New Orleans on his way North, he was there made the victim of conscription by the Confederate authorities and forced into the Southern army. He managed to escape, however, taking passage on the steamer J. C. Swon, the last boat to leave the South for Northern points before the beginning of hostilities, and went to St. Louis. Here he again enlisted, this time in Battery H, Fifth United States artillery with which he served for two years, participating in the battles of Corinth, Stone River, Shiloh, the siege of Vicksburg, and others. In the last named engagement he was severely wounded. He was afterwards transferred to a colored regiment and made captain of Company E, Eighth United States colored artillery, serving with this command until the close of the war, campaigning principally in the states of Kentucky, Virginia and Texas. He was mustered out of the service at Louisville, Kentucky.

April 6, 1865, he was married in Paducah, Kentucky, to Miss Annie M. Curry, daughter of James Curry, a native of Pennsylvania. Miss Curry was born in Pennsylvania. Both parents died when she was an infant, and she was adopted and raised by an uncle who lived in Kentucky, where she was educated in the common schools, and where she met and married Captain Dunn at the age of twenty-one. In 1866 Mr. and Mrs. Dunn left Kentucky for Missouri, where Mr. Dunn farmed for ten years. At the end of this time, 1876, they made the overland trip across the Plains to Washington, the journey at the time being extremely hazardous on account of the activity of the hostile Indians of the West and Northwest; they were in the midst of their journey with their six children at the time of the Custer massacre. Arriving in Washington, they settled in Parker Bottom, taking up first a soldier's homestead, then a timber claim and a desert claim and later purchasing some adjoining lands. Mr. Dunn is now farming four hundred acres, of which two hundred acres are in alfalfa, fifty-two acres in hops, ten acres in orchard and the balance in pasture. He also raises blooded stock; has thirteen registered Shorthorn cattle, one hundred and ten graded cattle, fourteen head of horses and two hundred hogs. In 1903 he raised fifty-two and one-half tons of hops. Excellent business ability, perseverance and progressive methods have enabled him to transform this tract of primitive arid land into an ideal home and one of the most valuable farms in the Yakima valley. In 1889 Mr. Dunn was appointed postmaster at North Yakima; he moved his family there, bought property and built a home and conducted the office in a most satisfactory manner for five years, at the end of this period moving back to the farm, where he has since continued to reside. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dunn; their names follow: Ella, the wife of Daniel McDonald, of Parker Bottom, born in Kentucky, 1866; Isabel (deceased), formerly the wife of Thomas Redmon, born in 1868; Annie, wife of W. F. Morgan, living on Knob Hill, four miles west of North Yakima, born in 1870; Maggie, wife of Charles McAllister, of North Yakima, born in 1872; Thisia, wife of C. A. Peters, of Rossland, British Columbia, born in 1874; Mrs. Lulu McKee, of Parker Bottom, born in 1876. The five daughters last named were born in Missouri. The eldest son, Adam D. Dunn, born in 1878, was the first white child born in Parker Bottom, where he still resides, engaged in thoroughbred stock raising; he is a graduate of the Agricultural college at Pullman. The youngest son, George Dunn, now engaged in hop growing in Parker Bottom, was born in Yakima county in 1880; he has also taken a course in the Pullman college. Mrs. Dunn is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Dunn is a prominent fraternity man, being connected with the Grand Army of the Republic, the Royal Arch Masons, the Elks and the Loyal Legion. Politically, he is a staunch Republican; has served as justice of the peace in Parker Bottom for the past ten years, and in 1902 was elected to the state legislature as the candidate of the Republican party. He has discharged the duties of legislator to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. As a pioneer of the county, as one of its most successful farmers, as a man of strictest integrity, honored and esteemed by all who know him, no one is more justly entitled to a place of honor in a work of this character than is Captain Robert Dunn.

DANIEL A. McDONALD, the well-known and successful hop raiser, farmer and stockman residing in Parker Bottom, is a pioneer of Washington, having come to Yakima county in the year 1883. Grasping the rich opportunities presented by the frontier region into which he came, he utilized them with a strong, capable hand, attaining results which are indeed creditable to the man himself and encouraging to others. Born on Prince Edward's Island in the year 1861, he is the son of Scotch parents, Alexander and Isabella McDonald, who crossed the Atlantic and settled in Canada early in the last century. The elder McDonald was a successful farmer, following that occupation until his death. Daniel A. lived at home until he was twenty years old, assisting his father in the farm work and attending the public schools. But in 1881, like thousands of other young Canadians, he came to the States to seek his fortune, going first to Boston, Massachusetts. There he worked three months in a rattan factory. This short experience in a manufactory satisfied his ambitions in this direction, and he decided to go west. Accordingly he was soon in Montana Territory in the service of the Northern Pacific. From Montana he came west with the Cascade division construction force in 1883, that year marking his advent into Yakima county. After working for the railroad company a short time in Washington, Mr. McDonald resigned, and in 1885 filed a pre-emption claim to a tract of land lying near the site of North Yakima. This property, now known as the Alderson farm, he sold to a man named Alderson, in 1888. The energetic young Scotchman then, in 1889, removed to Parker Bottom, buying a quarter section there, upon which he has since lived. During the past sixteen years he has improved two farms in the county. In 1888 he entered the stock raising industry, and has been as successful in this line of business as in farming. He has one brother, Malcolm, at the old home; and sisters, Flora, Catherine, Jessie and Alex.

Mr. McDonald was married at North Yakima in 1889 to Miss Ella F. Dunn, the eldest daughter of Captain Robert and Annie M. (Curry) Dunn. Captain Dunn was born near Glasgow, Scotland, in 1837, came to Canada in 1854, later enlisted in the United States army, was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he obtained his rank as captain, lived in Missouri for several years, and finally, in 1876, immigrated to Washington, becoming a resident of Parker Bottom and consequently a pioneer of Yakima county. Mrs. Dunn was born in Pennsylvania in 1844, and was united in marriage to Captain Dunn at Paducah, Kentucky, April 6, 1865. Both parents are still esteemed residents of Yakima county, their home being in Parker Bottom. Ella (Dunn) McDonald was born in Kentucky in January, 1866, crossed the Plains with her parents and received her education in the schools of Yakima county. She was married at the age of twenty-one. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have five children, all born in Yakima county: Edith, born August 25, 1890; Isabella, September 15, 1891; Robert, September 8, 1894; Clara, August 3, 1897; and Daniel, November 30, 1900. Mrs. McDonald had five sisters: Isabella Redmon, deceased; Mrs. Annie Morgan, Mrs. Maggie McAllister, Mrs. Thisia Peters and Mrs. Lulu McKee; also two brothers, Adam D. and George R. Mr. McDonald is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are connected with the Presbyterian church. He takes an active interest in politics, being an influential Republican. Four hundred acres of land in Parker Bottom constitute his property interests, one hundred and fifty acres being in alfalfa, twenty-five in a hop yard, several acres in an orchard, twenty-five in plow land and the balance in pasture. Last year his hop yard produced approximately thirty tons of hops, which netted the fortunate owner between twelve thousand and thirteen thousand dollars—a small fortune in itself. His stock interests consist of two hundred and fifty head of cattle and fifty head of fine horses, placing him among the leading stockmen of the country. Mr. McDonald has labored faithfully and perseveringly and is now reaping the just rewards offered to honest, energetic, capable men; his friends are numbered by the score, and all who know him have a good word to say for Dan McDonald.

MAX JACKSON, farmer, stockman and one of the most successful hop growers in the state, resides at North Yakima and has been a resident of Yakima county since June 20, 1879, when he came to central Washington with his parents. He was born in Texas, October 12, 1862, and with his parents, John and Mary (Bowman) Jackson, natives of Missouri and Kentucky respectively, went to California when a child. There he passed his boyhood, working with his father and attending school, and remained until the family came to Washington Territory. Here he first rode the range for various parties, working as an employee for the first eight years. Then, with the money and stock he had been gradually accumulating, he entered business on his own account, taking a homestead a little later. Upon his father's ranch he first gained an insight into the hop industry and studied it so persistently that he at last became recognized as an expert grower. Mr. Jackson increased his stock interests from time to time, until now the Jackson-Cline Company feed fully nine hundred head of stock cattle, which are shipped and replaced continually. Mr. Jackson was placed in charge of the Hiscock hop ranch in the Moxee valley ten years ago, and in his ten years of management of that large yard has brought it into prominence as one of the leading hop ranches of the state. This yard lies only a few miles from North Yakima and is one of the sights of the county. December 5, 1886, Mr. Jackson and Miss Hattie Buffington, daughter of George and Emily (Buttler) Buffington, were united in marriage. She was born in California and came to Yakima county in pioneer days. To this marriage have been born six children, all of whom are living: Harry R., Reba, Bessie, Donna, Hazel and Gladys. Fraternally, Mr. Jackson is connected with the Masons; politically, he is a Republican. As a pioneer and a progressive agriculturist who has done much for his section and shows his faith in that region by owning a quarter section of fine land, he is justly entitled to be counted among the substantial men of his county.

WILLIAM P. GUTHRIE, of the law firm of Jones & Guthrie, North Yakima, is one of the leading lawyers of central Washington and prosecuting attorney of Yakima county. Though still a young man, he has attained prominence in his chosen profession, become a captain in the political affairs of Washington and acquired a goodly holding of valuable property. Bethany, Illinois, is his birthplace, the date of his birth being July 11, 1870, and his parents being David and Phoebe (McKay) Guthrie, the former born in Kentucky in 1837, the latter in Pennsylvania in 1835. His father served through the Civil war in the One Hundred and Sixteenth Illinois infantry, being in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under General Logan, participated in Sherman's march to the sea and was severely wounded at the battle of Atlanta. He is living in Illinois, where he has resided for more than fifty-eight years. His grandfather served as United States Treasurer under President Lincoln and his American ancestors came to this country in the historic Mayflower. William P. was educated and has lived the greater part of his life in Illinois, where he was graduated with a degree of B. S. by the Southern Illinois College and by the law school at Bloomington. He was admitted to practice by the Illinois supreme court in the year 1895, and pursued his profession in that state until 1897, when he came to Washington, arriving in North Yakima August 23, 1897, and entered into partnership with his half-brother, Wesley L. Jones, with whom he is now associated. August 15, 1897, Mr. Guthrie and Miss Nellie Robinson, daughter of George and Cynthia (Robinson) Robinson, of Evansville, Indiana, were united in marriage, and to this union has come one child, Iris, born during 1902. Mr. Robinson, deceased, was a prominent business man in Evansville. Mr. Guthrie has one sister, Mrs. Barbara Colman, living in Illinois, and two half-brothers, Wesley L. Jones and C. A. Jones, the latter being a resident of Sunnyside. Mrs. Guthrie is a member of the North Yakima Methodist Episcopal church, in which she is an active worker. Fraternal orders to the number of five claim Mr. Guthrie's membership and attention, namely, the Masons, Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen, Elks and the Woodmen of the World, in all of which he is active. But it is in political affairs that Mr. Guthrie has best shown his ability to lead men and in which his prominence has been greatest, though not meaning by this statement to lessen the standing he has gained as a disciple of Blackstone. The year after he was graduated into the practice of law, he was signally honored by the Republicans of Piatt, Moultrie and Shelby counties, Illinois, who nominated him as their candidate for district attorney. That was in 1896, a year unparalleled in the history of the nation in the intensity of the campaign waged. Notwithstanding the fact that Bryan carried these three counties by over six hundred votes, young Guthrie was defeated by only eleven, clearly demonstrating his popularity. In Illinois, also, he served two terms as chairman of the congressional committee of the Eighteenth district, was an alternate delegate to the St. Louis convention in 1896, acted as chairman of the county committee at home for four years, and was one of the state committee for a time. Shortly after his arrival in Yakima county he was recognized by being appointed secretary of the Republican county committee, and in 1900 was elected prosecuting attorney of his district, defeating his Democratic opponent, E. B. Preble, by two hundred and eighty votes. In 1902 he repeated his success, being re-elected by a majority of seven hundred and eighty votes, a greater demonstration than before of his popularity in the new home he chose in 1897. He takes an active part as a speaker in all campaigns and was one of the Republican state orators in 1898. His half-brother and law partner is now serving his third term as one of Washington's representatives in congress. Mr. Guthrie is the owner of two hundred acres of farming land near Sunnyside, all but forty acres being in alfalfa, is interested in city property, and possesses a third share in the town-site of Prosser.

HUGH K. SINCLAIR is a retired stockman and banker. It is with mingled feelings of justice and pleasure that we accord the citizen whose name stands at the commencement of this article a place among these chronicles, for he has won such recognition by braving the vicissitudes of pioneer life in central Washington, energetically grasping the opportunities presented him and manfully bearing the burdens entailed by public-spirited citizenship. The date of his birth was 1840, and his birthplace was the far-away peninsula of Nova Scotia, to which his father came from Scotland when but a lad of eighteen and where also his mother was born, to Scotch parents. There, too, his father and mother lived and died. Until he was sixteen years old Hugh remained at home, but when he had attained that age he entered the machine shops in Guysboro county and for the next thirteen years worked as a mechanic under the most skilled artisans in the country. The time came, however, when the great opportunities presented by the West appealed to him so strongly that he determined to try stock raising on its grassy plains. With this idea in view he arrived in Yakima valley November 22, 1879, and straightway settled upon a homestead in the Naches valley. Subsequently he bought an adjoining quarter section, and on this ranch, comprising half a section of fine farming land, he lived until 1891, successfully following the lucrative business of raising cattle and horses. Hardly had he arrived in the country before the execution of the Perkins murders took place at Yakima City, an event which is very vividly recalled by all citizens living in the county at that time. The old rifle Mr. Sinclair was given by the territory for use against possible hostile Indians he still owns and values very highly. Among Mr. Sinclair's neighbors on the Naches valley farm, which is managed by his son, business of stock raising, were Judge J. B. Nelson, James M. Kincaid, Russell Lowry, Lize Denton and James Glead. In 1891 Mr. Sinclair removed to North Yakima, that his family might enjoy better social and educational advantages, and there he has remained, still retaining his Naches valley farm, which is managed by his son. A portion of this land has been in hay for twenty-two years without having been plowed or fertilized during that time, only one illustration, says Mr. Sinclair, of the fact that the Yakima country is the finest under the sun. The month of February, 1864, is the date of Mr. Sinclair's marriage in Nova Scotia to Frances Bishop, a native of that country and the daughter of parents who were born in New England. The father was a carriage maker. Mrs. Sinclair has two brothers: John, now sheriff of Fresno county, California, and George, a bridge builder on the Southern Pacific railroad. Mr. Sinclair has one sister, Mrs. Isabella McPhee, a resident of Yakima county. To Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have been born four children, two of whom are living: Mrs. Clara Sloan and Alfred H., residing in Yakima county; and two dead, Mrs. Harry Coonse and Edgar J. Both Mr. Sinclair and his wife are active members of the Presbyterian church in North Yakima, he being an elder. Although he has been an active and influential Republican, he has steadily refused to accept political preferment at the hands of his friends. For many years Mr. Sinclair served as a member of the North Yakima city council. In educational matters, he has always been deeply interested, and has served on both country and city school boards, with honor to himself and benefit to the schools. Until quite recently Mr. Sinclair was vice-president of the Yakima National Bank, which stands third among the banking institutions of the state as to earnings, and in this business still has much of his money invested, and exercises a power in the bank's policies. The generosity and congenial qualities of Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have won for them a host of loyal friends, and as a pioneer, progressive citizen and a man of sterling integrity and worth the husband and father is recognized as one of the leaders in his county.

FRANKLIN J. KANDLE. Comparatively few men in middle life can claim as their birthplace the renowned Evergreen state, but the distinction of being able to do so belongs to him whose name forms the caption of this article. To him also belongs the higher honor of having so lived as to reflect credit upon the young commonwealth whose birth was almost contemporaneous with his own. As was natural in a country blessed with so many undeveloped resources, Mr. Kandle early turned his attention to the task of appropriating and developing the elements of wealth which lay in profusion around him, and in this he has achieved a very enviable success, at the same time winning what is far more valuable, a standing in his community such as comes to none but persons of sterling integrity and worth.

Mr. Kandle was born at Tumwater, Washington, on the 17th of November, 1855. The circumstances of his birth are rather peculiar. His parents, with their neighbors from a wide section of the country, were refugees in a stockade constructed by their own hands as a protection against the Indians, who at that time were on the war-path, for the storm of war was then raging in many parts of the west. Henry Kandle, the father of our subject, had come to Portland, Oregon, then a mere hamlet, in 1851, and had later moved to Thurston county and taken up a donation land claim. A native of New Jersey, he had moved as a boy to Indiana, where he grew to manhood and married and whence he had come over the wide plains and precipitous mountains to the Pacific coast. In 1861 he moved to Yelm Prairie, but some time later he became a resident of Pierce county, which he served as commissioner for several years. His wife, the mother of Franklin J., whose maiden name was Margaret Hill, was born in Ireland and came to the United States when about twenty-one years old. Shortly after her arrival she united her fortunes with those of Henry Kandle, with whom, as his brave helpmeet, she endured the hardships and dangers of life on the Plains and in a new and sparsely settled country.

Until the 26th of June, 1879, our subject remained at home with his parents, and then moved to Yakima county, where he secured a pre-emption and later a homestead on the Wenas. To the improvement of this home he has ever since devoted himself, reducing the stubborn soil to a high state of cultivation and making his place comfortable and convenient by the erection of splendid buildings. But the original homestead and pre-emption, though of generous proportions, were not a large enough sphere for the activities and energy of Mr. Kandle, so he has added to his original holdings from time to time until he now has twenty-four hundred acres of land. Even this is not enough and he leases an amount almost as large, devoting the whole to agriculture and the pasturing of his stock. He is a lover of blooded cattle and has a herd of Durhams which would delight the eye of any connoisseur in fine stock. But Mr. Kandle finds time, despite all the demands which his extensive farming and stock raising interests must make upon him, to devote to the interests of the public. A Republican in politics, he not only does his share in conventions and caucuses, but he watches with a vigilant eye all matters of local or state and even those of national concern. At present he is serving as county commissioner of Yakima county, a position which he has held six years in all, his first election being in 1890.

Mr. Kandle was married in 1883, the lady being Ida R., daughter of Jacob and Myra Green, the former of whom as a farmer and an esteemed pioneer of Yakima county, but is now deceased. Mrs. Green, the mother, was a native of Louisiana and is at present a resident of Pierce county, this state. Mrs. Kandle was born in Illinois in 1860, and after a residence of several years there and in Kansas came with her parents to Yakima county in 1879. She has one sister, Mrs. May Pollard, living in the Wenas valley, and Mr. Kandle has three living brothers: Robert, in the Wenas, George, in Tacoma, and William, in Pierce county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kandle are Emma M., Leona F. and Norris H., all natives of Yakima county.

HONORABLE HENRY JOSEPH SNIVELY.

One of the leading attorneys of central Washington who has made for himself a name worthy of record in professional and in political life is Henry J. Snively of North Yakima. He is the only son of Ambrose and Elizabeth (Harritt) Snively, and was born in Virginia, August 17, 1856. His father was a contractor and builder, a native of Germany. He came to the United States with his parents when six years old, the family first locating in Maryland, afterwards removing to Virginia. He is now living in West Virginia. His wife, the mother of the North Yakima attorney, was a native of Pennsylvania, of English and Scotch parentage. Following the usual common school course of study, Mr. Snively was graduated in 1877 from the classical course of the University of West Virginia. Two years later, in 1879, at the age of twenty-three, he was graduated from the law department of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. Shortly after graduation he opened a law office in Grafton, West Virginia, and there practiced his profession with marked success until 1886, when he came to the territory of Washington, locating at North Yakima. Almost immediately upon his settlement here he was accorded prominent recognition by the local Democracy and, in the fall of the same year, was nominated by that party for the office of district attorney, the district including Yakima and Kittitas counties.

HENRY J. SNIVELY.

He was elected by a large majority, his opponent being Honorable C. B. Graves, afterwards judge of the district court. In 1888 he was re-elected to the same office, his opponent in this campaign being Walter M. Milroy. In each of these elections he was the only successful candidate on the Democratic ticket. While serving as district attorney he was appointed by Governor Semple as a member of the code commission, created to formulate a code of laws for the territory. He took an active part in this work, the arduous task being completed about the time Washington was admitted to statehood. Under the direction of the first state legislature the code was revised by W. Lair Hill and the laws made to conform to the state constitution. The compilation afterwards became known as the Hill Code. In 1890 Mr. Snively was the Democratic candidate for attorney general, but was defeated with his party. In 1891, as Democratic candidate for representative from Yakima county, he was, for the third time in his political career, the only successful party nominee at the elections. In June, 1892, he was chosen in state convention as delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago and had the honor, at the request of the national campaign manager, to second the nomination of Grover Cleveland for president. In August, 1892, he was nominated as candidate for governor of Washington. In the election following he was defeated with the balance of the ticket, but ran five thousand votes ahead of his fellow candidates, his opponent, John H. McGraw, being elected by only a few hundred plurality. In 1897 he was appointed by Governor John R. Rogers as a member of the state board of control, having the management of all the state institutions except the university and the agricultural college. On this board he served with distinction for four years. Since 1900 he has devoted his time almost exclusively to his extensive law practice.

Mr. Snively was married in Grafton, West Virginia, to Miss Elizabeth H. Martin, daughter of Luther and Anna M. (Harrison) Martin, the former a lumberman and a native of Virginia, and the latter a native of the District of Columbia and a descendant of the James river Harrisons. Mrs. Snively was born in Virginia in 1858 and was educated in the Pittsburg Female College. Mr. and Mrs. Snively have two daughters and one son. Janie M. was born in Grafton, West Virginia, January 22, 1883; Jessie H., in Grafton, July 30, 1885; Henry J. Snively, Junior, in North Yakima, January 25, 1890. The family attends the Episcopal church. The family residence was built in 1888 by Colonel Howlett and afterwards purchased by Mr. Snively. It has lately been remodeled and, in its modern appointments, is one of the most complete and desirable homes in the city. Mrs. Snively is prominent in church and social circles and Mr. and Mrs. Snively are greatly esteemed by a very large circle of personal friends and acquaintances.

JOHN CLEMAN is a farmer and stock raiser whose home is eight and one-half miles north of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, July 29, 1855, and was the son of Auguston and Rebecca Anna (Griffith) Cleman. His father was one of the first settlers in this territory and died in 1882. Mr. Cleman attended school in Oregon and when ten years old came to Yakima county and attended school here until he was eighteen years old. He worked for his father until he was twenty-one and then engaged with J. B. Huntington in the stock business. Later he spent four years with the stock firm of Phelps & Wadleigh. He borrowed capital and engaged in that business alone and has continued the business with considerable success. He was married March 9, 1884, to Mary Kershaw, who was born in Beaver, Utah, September 30, 1864. She was the daughter of Robert and Mary (Harrison) Kershaw, both natives of England. Her brothers and sisters were: William, now dead; Robert, Samuel, Emma, Edward, Alice, now dead, and James. Mr. Cleman's brothers and sisters are: Caroline Waggen, a widow; Ruth Pressy, Olive Sanders, Flora Small, Rosie Olsen, Jacob and Perry Cleman.

Mr. Cleman is the father of two children, Edward, born December 24, 1884, and Frederick, born July 20, 1887. He is a Mason and Elk and is a Republican. He was elected county commissioner in 1888 but resigned in 1889 and was elected to the state legislature as representative. He was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1892. He owns about twenty-two thousand acres of land, of which about seventeen thousand acres is in Yakima county. He has 400 head of horses and mules, sixty head of cattle and two thousand sheep, a good farm house and three barns which hold one thousand tons of hay. He is well esteemed and highly respected by all who know him.

BETHENIA ANGELINE OWENS-ADAIR, M. D., the second daughter of Thomas and Sarah Owens, was born in Van Buren county, Missouri, February 7, 1840. Her parents crossed the Plains in the first emigration of 1843 to Clatsop Plains, Oregon, bringing their small, delicate looking, nervous and sensitive child with them. One seeing her then could hardly be made to believe that so much constitutional vitality and power of endurance could be locked up in so frail-looking a frame, but she was blessed with an exceptionally good heredity, and her subsequent career proved that she had within her a full share of the unyielding granite of both character and constitution which characterized her ancestors. Her grandfather, Owens, was a leader in the world of finance, while her grandfather, Damron, distinguished himself for conspicuous daring and resourcefulness in the wars with the Shawnee and Delaware Indians. For one heroic act, the rescuing of a mother and five children from the blood-thirsty savages, he received from the United States government a splendid, silver-mounted rifle worth $300.

Bethenia's mother was in all respects a worthy daughter of her noble sire, while her father was a stalwart Kentuckian, who first as deputy sheriff, and then during his long experience as sheriff of Pike county, Kentucky, won the reputation of being afraid of neither man nor devil.

The blood of a worthy ancestry early showed its power in young Bethenia. Her long journey over plain and mountain to the far west developed a love for a free, untrammelled, outdoor life, and an utter distaste for domestic duties and the confinement of the house. Her mother may have been just a little disappointed at this evident boyishness, but her father evinced much pride in the boldness of her spirit, plainly enjoying the manifestations of his own dauntless nature as reproduced in his child. Bethenia was very fond of animals, especially the horse. As soon as she could reach to a pony's mane, she could mount unaided, for she had a cat-like ability to climb, and once on the animal's back she could handle him with the skill and adroitness of a wild Indian. Her peculiar character was brought into bold relief by contrast with her queenly sister, Diana, whose tall, slender, graceful form caused her to be styled "the beauty of Clatsop Plains." But Bethenia's daring and spirit were just what she needed for the career that was before her. At a very early age, she began to rebel against the limitations imposed upon her sex and her entire subsequent life has been a protest against the fetters of womanhood. She has lived to see many gyves stricken from their wrists and ankles, and enjoys not a little the consciousness that in the evolution of the "new woman" she has had a not inconspicuous part.

Bethenia Owens led her wild, untrammelled life, following without restraint the dictates of her own sweet will, until twelve years old, when a teacher came to Clatsop Plains and she was sent for initiation into the world of letters. She has many pleasant memories of that first school. It was taught under difficulties, books, blackboards, etc., being exceedingly scarce. The teacher, whose name was Beauford, was a handsome young man, always reserved in his intercourse with the other young people and so particular about his personal appearance that he received the sobriquets of "Slicky" and "Dandy." But with the children of his charge he was a universal favorite. Bethenia was especially fond of him for he taught her to jump, throw the lariat, spring onto a horse's back and perform with dexterity many other feats of western chivalry. One day at a picnic the taunts of the young men of Clatsop Plains about his white hands drew from Mr. Beauford an offer to wager all he possessed against a like amount that he could dig, measure and pit more potatoes than any of them. The challenge was accepted, the terms finally agreed upon being that the pedagogue was to dig, measure and place in three piles sixty bushels of potatoes in a day of ten hours, he to select his own potato patch. "Upon the day appointed," says Mrs. Adair, "everybody was present, white men and Indians, and women and children of both races. Beauford removed his coat and vest, took off his long, blue, silk, Spanish scarf, loosened his leather belt (suspenders were not worn in those days) removed his boots, put on a pair of handsome beaded moccasins, drew a pair of soft bukskin gloves over his delicate, white hands, then, taking a light hoe from which part of the handle had been sawed, stepped to the middle of the field and awaited the signal to proceed. When the time-keeper announced the hour of starting, he bowed gracefully to the company and attacked a large hill of potatoes. In an incredibly short time the half bushel was full and with two or three long bounds it was empty again. For about three hours, the tellers were kept busy counting the half bushels, then the wiry schoolmaster slackened his pace and joked pleasantly with the bystanders, but long before the ten hours were passed, the sixty bushels were in the three piles."

Next year Mr. Owens moved to the Umpqua valley, settling near Roseburg. Less than a twelve-month later, Bethenia, then only fourteen years of age, immature in judgment and uneducated, followed the custom which was at that time in vogue. May 4, 1854, she became the wife of one who had worked on her father's farm and was among those who had lost the wager with the school teacher, Lagrand Hill. As might have been expected, the union did not prove happy, and four years later a separation took place. It was then that Bethenia, enfeebled in health, penniless, and with a two-year-old baby in her arms, began the real upward climb. For a while she remained at her father's home, but with returning bodily vigor came an overwhelming desire for an education and a larger life. Overruling her father, who wished her to remain with him, she began seeking all sorts of employment, even washing, that she might support herself and child and enjoy at the same time the benefits of the Roseburg schools. By working from five in the morning until far into the night she was able to accomplish this herculean task. After completing a three-month term, she returned to her old home at Clatsop Plains, but before doing so she brought suit for divorce from her husband, the custody of her son and the right to resume her maiden name. The case was vigorously contested on account of the child, but S. F. Chadwick, who represented her in the trial, succeeded in getting a decree from the court, giving her all she sought. Thirty years later, when Mr. Chadwick was the honored governor of Oregon and Dr. Owens-Adair was, by special invitation, a guest in his home, he died very suddenly, despite the utmost exertions and timely presence of this by that time skillful and learned physician.

After the court had rendered its decision, Bethenia, now Mrs. Owens, renewed her efforts for the support of herself and child. Her father presented her with one of the first sewing machines brought into Oregon. She worked hard and faithfully, sewing and nursing and assisting with household for more than a year, after which, at her sister's earnest solicitation, she returned to Clatsop. She did not remain long, however, for the ambition of an education was still with her, and late in the fall of 1860 she accepted the invitation of her childhood friend, Mrs. Munson, of Oysterville, to spend the winter there, attending school and assisting with the work mornings, evenings and Saturdays. She wrought hard and long, doing considerable washing and ironing in addition to the duties she must perform for Mrs. Munson, for she had the expenses of herself and child to meet, but to her work was play, so the winter was very pleasantly and profitably spent.

B. A. Owens-Adair

Then came another call from her sister, Mrs. Diana Hobson, of Clatsop. She went with the understanding that at the end of six months she was to have the privilege of attending school at Astoria. While with Mrs. Hobson she concluded to get up a little private school in the neighborhood, and with characteristic decision at once set about the task of interesting heads of families of the district in her scheme. Soon she had the promise of sixteen pupils, who were to pay her two dollars each a month, and in the old Presbyterian church of Clatsop she had her first experience in teaching. She was quite successful in this venture, notwithstanding the fact that two of her group of sixteen were more advanced than she, and she had to learn the lessons ahead of them with the assistance of her brother-in-law. By teaching and picking wild blackberries, she accumulated her first small bank account.

Fall found her at school in Astoria with her son and nephew. It was mortifying to her, who had been herself a teacher, to be put in classes with young children, but by her own exertions and the aid of kindly teachers she soon gained a place far in advance of her youthful classmates.

During the next summer, that of 1862, she again worked for her sister on the farm, making butter, milking cows, doing housework, etc. While thus employed it fell to her lot to make a large cheese for the benefit of the soldiers in the Civil war. The cheese was sold again and again in Astoria until it had brought a hundred and forty-five dollars, then sent, with its maker, to the state fair, where it was sold and resold as before, yielding many hundreds of dollars for the boys in blue. It received much attention from the papers of the time.

Next winter the doughty Mrs. Owens was again at Astoria, supporting herself and son by doing, besides her own cooking and work, the washing for two families and the washing and ironing of a third. She would arise at four Monday morning and put out the big washing. By ten o'clock she would report at school. Tuesday morning she would repeat the operation at her second customer's home, while the third washing and ironing she did at her own humble rooms. In this way she earned five dollars a week, which proved sufficient to her needs. Her efforts attracted the attention of the benevolent and worthy Captain Farnworth, a pilot on the Columbia bar and a friend of her family, who one night called upon her and found her ironing and studying at the same time. He conversed with her awhile, and finally said: "I have come to you as a friend and I want to be your friend. I am all alone in the world. The nearest relative I have is a nephew. I have more money than I need and I think I cannot do better than to help you." Mrs. Owens positively refused to accept any monetary assistance from the captain, preferring to work out her own destiny and enjoy the blessed boon of independence.

But there were others watching Mrs. Owens' heroic climb, and from some of these an offer came that could be accepted without compromise. The teacher's wife, who had been serving as his assistant, having fallen ill, Mrs. Owens soon received from the directors an offer of twenty-five dollars a month to take the place of the unfortunate lady. She accepted gladly, pleased with the larger opportunities for culture and study the position gave her. She was brought to realize the progress she had been making by the circumstance that among her pupils was a young lady who had been far ahead of her when they attended school at Oysterville together.

Before the term ended, Mrs. Owens received an offer of a three-month school in Bruceport at twenty-five dollars a month, she to board around among the families of the district. She applied to Judge Olney, county superintendent, for the necessary certificate, which the kind-hearted gentleman readily furnished, together with many words of commendation and encouragement, for he knew of the course Mrs. Owens had been pursuing. She taught a successful term at Bruceport, so successful indeed that the patrons of the school raised money to pay for an extra term of three months. Before the end of this pleasant half-year, she contracted to teach a four-month term at Oysterville, where, three years before, she had been herself an humble learner; then for four months she taught at Clatsop. By industry with her sewing machine and crochet needle, she made all her expenses out of school hours, saving the entire sum received as recompense for these months of constant teaching. At Clatsop she bought a half lot and contracted with a carpenter to build her a cozy little three-room house. It was located on the back part of that beautiful lot where now stands I. W. Case's residence. Around this first home cluster many pleasant memories. When the school term was ended she remained in it, getting her living and adding to her small savings by sewing, crocheting and many other forms of endeavor. Once her peace of mind was somewhat disturbed by the sudden appearance of her former husband, who had been endeavoring for years to get her to again enter into the marriage bond with him. He insisted that she permit him to take his child for a walk and she finally consented upon his promising not to run away with the boy, as he had frequently threatened to do. To make doubly sure, she hastened to the sheriff, who undertook to see that Mr. Hill should never leave town with the boy. As a matter of fact he made no attempt to do so.

In the fall Mrs. Owens rented her house and went to visit her parents at Roseburg. At their earnest solicitation she remained with them that winter. Next spring she engaged in millinery and dressmaking, and for the ensuing three years she had uninterrupted success in the business; then came trouble and opposition. An expert milliner named Mrs. Jackson appeared, who became the attraction at once, and left Mrs. Owens with all her money invested in a spring stock for which there was no sale. It was a severe blow to both her pride and her pocketbook, but her unusual abilities never shone more brilliantly than when obstacles were to be overcome. She left her son in a clergyman's family, borrowed two hundred and fifty dollars; went forthwith to San Francisco and entered the apartments of the best milliner in that city. For three months she made it her business to hear and see all that went on and to learn every detail of the millinery business. Then she had circulars printed and sent on ahead to Roseburg announcing her great opening. On the day set, she was at her stand in Roseburg with the latest and the best that the San Francisco markets afforded. The tables were completely turned on Mrs. Jackson, who shortly afterward left town. Mrs. Owens realized fifteen hundred dollars profits from the sales of that year.

Money now came rapidly and easily, enabling her to give her son the advantage of a course in the University of California. With the improvement in her circumstances came a great desire for a medical education. She had been called upon at different times to nurse the sick, and her natural talents in that direction had caused her services to be eagerly sought by physicians and friends. One incident in her career as a nurse did much to determine her to study medicine and surgery. She was assisting a friend with a sick child. The doctor came and made a long, bungling effort to use a catheter, lacerating the little patient most cruelly. At length he laid down the instrument to wipe his glasses. "Let me try, doctor," said Mrs. Owens, and picking up the catheter, she placed it with a steady, skillful hand and relieved the young sufferer, though she had never seen such an instrument used before. The doctor was angry, but the mother expressed her feelings in tears and manifestations of affection.

A few days after this Mrs. Owens called upon Doctor Hamilton, told him in confidence that she had decided upon a medical career, and asked the use of his books. As she came from the doctor's office she met S. F. Chadwick, her former attorney, who had overheard the conversation. Coming forward, he shook her hand and said: "Go ahead; it is in you; let it come out; you'll win." Honorable Jesse Applegate, who had nursed her in childhood on the trip across the Plains, was the only other person who gave her any encouragement about studying medicine. She did not tell her family of her decision, for she knew the opposition they would offer, but kept her own counsels, laboring early and late to get the necessary funds to enter the medical college.

In due time the plans of Mrs. Owens were matured. She arranged with Mrs. Abigail Scott Dunniway to give her son, who by this time had been educated in part, a position on her paper. She communicated to Mrs. W. L. Adams, of Portland, her intention to go to New York for a medical course, and was by that lady persuaded to go instead to Philadelphia, where Dr. Adams then was, partly for the sake of his health and partly for study. A storm of opposition followed the announcement of her intentions. Her family felt that they were disgraced, and even her son was made to believe that a great wrong was being done him, while friends derided her as exceedingly foolish. One lady, who expressed especial disgust, afterward called upon Mrs. Owens in Portland for medical treatment, though she had emphatically stated she would never countenance a lady doctor.

The day for the departure came. At 11:00 p. m. the ambitious but nearly heart-broken lady seated herself in the overland stage for California. The dark, rainy night was in keeping with her feelings, for she was greatly depressed, now that she had time to think, on account of the discouraging and sometimes unkind remarks of friends and relatives, but the cheering words of Governor Chadwick came to her, and she resolved with all the energy of her ardent nature to prove them true. She would show the world that she could and would be a physician, she said.

Arriving at Philadelphia, she matriculated in the Eclectic Medical school of that city, engaging also a private tutor. She likewise attended lectures and clinics in the great Blockly hospital there, as did also all the other medical students from the various schools. In due time she received her degree, whereupon she returned to Roseburg to settle up her business affairs, which had been left in charge of her sister.

A few days after her return a friendless old man died, and the half dozen doctors who had attended him decided to hold an autopsy. Among then was the Doctor Palmer to whom she had given offense years before by using the catheter on his patient. He proposed that for a joke they extend an invitation to the new Philadelphia physician to be present, and as all the others assented, they sent a young man with a note to Doctor Owens. She knew that such a message emanating from Doctor Palmer meant no good to her, nevertheless she said to the young man: "Give the doctors my compliments and tell them I will be there shortly." She followed close behind the messenger and arrived outside the door in time to hear the hearty laugh which greeted the announcement of her reply. Stepping in, she shook hands with all the medical men, one of whom informed her, by way of final coup, that the autopsy was to be upon the genital organs. She replied that one part of the human frame should be as sacred to a physician as another. Doctor Palmer thereupon said: "I object to the presence of a woman at a male autopsy, and if she remains I will retire." Silence followed. Finally Doctor Owens said: "I came here by invitation, and will leave it to a vote whether I go or remain; but first I would ask Doctor Palmer why he considers it worse for a woman to attend an autopsy on a male than for a man to attend one on a female subject." A number of the doctors said they had voted that the invitation be extended and they would not go back on it now, while Doctor Hamilton said, "I did not vote, but I have no objection." Doctor Palmer thereupon retired amid the derisive cheers of some forty or fifty men and boys inside and outside the old shed, who were fully cognizant of all that was going on.

Presently one of the physicians opened an old dissecting case and handed it to Dr. Owens. "Do you wish me to do the work?" she asked. "Yes, yes, oh yes; go ahead." She did so, and when the work was completed all hands joined in three hearty cheers for the lady doctor. The news had spread to every house in town, so that when Dr. Owens emerged from the autopsy room she had to face an excited crowd of men, women and children, all anxious to get a look at her. The women were shocked and scandalized; the men laughed; some few defended her, but all agreed that it was a good joke on the doctors.

Mrs. Owens began practice in Portland, entering into partnership with Dr. Adams. When, a year later, this partnership was dissolved, Doctor Owens retained the old stand. One morning, when she came in from her calls, she found a woman lying on the lounge in her back office, deathly sick. Before the lady expired she begged Mrs. Owens to take one of her three girls. The doctor promised to do so, and some weeks later, the girl came with her father. She was puny, delicate, under-sized, poorly clad and bashful, but the doctor's kindly manner soon placed her at her ease, while a good bath and some fine new clothing converted her at once into a very presentable child. A homeopathic lady physician, who had passed some uncomplimentary remarks upon the girl when she first appeared in Doctor Owens' office, saw her two years later, when kindness and care and the culture of the schools had done their work, and could hardly be made to believe that the Mattie of that date and the Mattie of two years before were one and the same.

Prosperity attended Doctor Owens. She put her son through the medical college and set him up in the drug business in Goldendale, Washington. She gave her sister a course in Mills' seminary and dispensed not a little money in charities, yet from the sale of her millinery and other Roseburg properties and from her earnings as a professional woman, she had, in 1878, about eight thousand dollars in cash. She was doing well, but the thirst for more learning had taken possession of her and she eventually decided to take a three-year course in an "old school" medical college. Again her family and friends remonstrated, her old friend Jesse Applegate being among the number who advised her against such a course, but, nevertheless, the 1st of September, 1878, found her again en route for Philadelphia. Her ambition was to be admitted to the renowned Jefferson Medical College, so with that in view she called on Professor Gross, the greatest surgeon then living in the United States. He invited her to breakfast and otherwise received her kindly, but said that, though he would like very much to open the doors of Jefferson college to her, he could not do so, for the power lay with the board of regents, and they were an age behind the time. He advised going to the woman's college, which was just as good and gave the same examination. She replied that woman's colleges were not very highly esteemed out West. "Then," said he, "the University of Michigan is the school for you. It is a long-term school and second to none in America."

Dr. Owens acted at once upon this suggestion. For the next two years she averaged sixteen hours a day study, except during vacations, when ten hours were devoted each day to answering questions in anatomy out of Professor Ford's question book. When she went to her teacher for help with a few of the questions, the answers to which she had failed to find, he said: "Dr. Owens, you have done more than any other student in this university and more than I ever expected any one would do."

Her previous knowledge of medicine and close application enabled Dr. Owens to complete her course in allopathy in two years. She then went to Chicago and spent some time in clinical and hospital work. While there Dr. Hill joined her, and the two went to the University of Michigan, the mother for advanced courses in theory and practice and materia medica, in the homeopathic department, also for further study in history and English literature; the son for a post-graduate course. After six months, the mother and son, in company with two lady physicians, sailed for Europe for a three-month trip. They visited Glasgow, Edinburgh, Hamburg, Dresden, Berlin, Potsdam and other towns. At Dresden the ladies parted with Dr. Hill, who returned forthwith to Goldendale, Washington, and entered into a life partnership with the girl he had left behind him there. The lady doctors continued their journey through Austria, Prussia, France and England, in the great cities of all which countries they visited the leading hospitals and witnessed operations by the world's most eminent surgeons. Dr. Owens' letters of recommendation with the state seals on them proved an "open sesame" everywhere. These and her diplomas also saved her trouble on her return to New York, for the custom house officer was determined to charge heavy duty on instruments she had bought in Paris, and only consented to let them pass when satisfied that she was indeed a physician and had the instruments for her own use.

Hastening back to Portland to minister to the pressing wants of a patient there, she was soon again buried in the practice of her beloved profession. She secured beautiful rooms over the drug store of her old friend, Dr. O. P. S. Plummer, on the corner of First and Main streets. "I was more than gratified," says the doctor. "I was astonished at the patronage that came to me from my old and new patients, friends and enemies, if so they might be called, of the days of my struggles and trials." From no other place came so much encouragement and patronage as from the doctor's old home at Roseburg. Verily, the daring and courage of this born leader (this woman who dared to perform an autopsy in the face of the established rules, customs and prejudices of her time, though fully cognizant of the fact that, just a few years before, the students of Jefferson Medical College had publicly rotten-egged certain young women who had the audacity to attend clinics at Blockly hospital) were receiving an abundant and unusually speedy reward. Dr. Owens considered that she was paid an hundred fold for all she had endured in that long climb from ignorance and obscurity to an honored place in an honorable profession, by the help she was daily permitted to render to mankind. Once at least it was her privilege to return good for evil. A woman entered her office one morning, pale and trembling, and stated that for many years she had been ill with a disease of which the doctors said she could never hope to be cured. "I have heard so much about you," continued the lady, "that I have come to see if you can give me any relief." The doctor examined her patient carefully, then said: "I am sure you can be helped, possibly cured. I will treat you a few weeks, then teach you to treat yourself, and if you will follow my directions faithfully for a year, I believe your health will be restored." The doctor then took the patient home in her carriage. She went to the house day after day, giving the full benefit of her years of study and experience, and in time the lady recovered fully. It was none other than her quondam rival, Mrs. Jackson, who had caused such a disturbance in her millinery business at Roseburg. Mrs. Jackson was deeply moved by the doctor's kindness, but the latter said: "I owe you a great debt of gratitude, for by your opposition you spurred me on to greater endeavor. You have been in reality my good angel, and I shall repay you with interest." The two ladies have been fast friends ever since.

It was also the doctor's pleasure, after she returned from her course in the University of Michigan and her tour of Europe, to renew her maternal relationship toward her foster child, Mattie Belle. The girl had been left in charge of a friend during the absence of Dr. Owens, and had spent the time in school. Easily persuaded by her adopted mother to take up the study of medicine, she in due time added the degree of M. D. to her name, but she never left Dr. Owens until death summoned her away, in October, 1893.

After three years of constant application to her profession, years of great financial profit, and what was far better, great satisfaction, Doctor Owens met once more a friend of her girlhood, Colonel John Adair, son of General John Adair, of Astoria, Oregon. The renewed friendship soon ripened into a more intimate attachment, and in the First Congregational church of Portland, Oregon, the twain plighted their troth on July 24, 1884, and Doctor Owens became Doctor Owens-Adair.

Twenty years have sped by on eagle wings since that happy wedding day. In the excellent autobiography from which this necessarily imperfect and incomplete sketch has been compiled, the doctor has not seen fit to be very detailed in her narrative of more recent events. She tells us, however, that the years have been years of strenuous endeavor and that into her later life some rain has come as well as much sunshine. Notwithstanding the fact that at the time of her marriage she had an income from her rentals and practice of over seven thousand dollars a year, she has been at times embarrassed to maintain the heavy obligations which have come to her through having allowed herself to be persuaded into buying large properties near Astoria, and through other land speculations. Her husband, a refined and cultured gentleman, is of a sunny, optimistic disposition. His penchant for large speculations, in which he can always see millions of dollars has caused some trouble to his wife at times, but her energy and pluck have enabled her to conquer so far in every fight.

When Dr. Owens-Adair was forty-seven years old she became the mother of a sweet little girl, but unfortunately the child soon passed away, leaving an aching void in her heart. Soon afterward she left Portland, going to her husband, who with twenty-five Chinamen was trying to reclaim the tide lands adjoining their eight hundred acre farm. She felt that, whatever the financial sacrifice, she could not remain away from Colonel Adair, now that her babe was gone. The ensuing two years were passed in Astoria, amid the activities and exactions of a large practice; then the doctor contracted typhus fever, due to bad drainage. She went very near to death's door, so near that she made her will and settled up her affairs in anticipation of the end, but the strong constitution she had inherited from her ancestors along with her invincible force of character enabled her to beat back once more the forces of dissolution.

After her recovery, she yielded to the persuasion of her husband to go to their farm, which, he thought, the railroad must soon cross, making them eminently wealthy. For eleven years she remained there, actively engaged in professional work, assisting also on the farm during all her leisure moments. She never refused to go when called, no matter what the hour or the state of the weather. At length the constant riding through that rainy country over muddy roads began to undermine her health, for she had a rheumatic heredity, and Colonel Adair, becoming frightened, begged her to go to North Yakima, Washington, for a holiday with her son and his family. She did so. The dry climate acted like magic, and in a few days she felt twenty years younger. Soon her son, Dr. Hill, had her persuaded to let the old farm go and to take up a permanent residence in North Yakima. Having decided on this course, she returned to the coast, sold off all the stock, rented the farm and straightened up her business affairs generally. April 6, 1899, found her again in North Yakima, ready for business. To her surprise and delight she found many who knew her personally and by reputation and to secure a practice was a matter of little difficulty; indeed she performed an operation the first week of her residence in the town, for which she received a hundred dollars cash. Her business has since increased rapidly, and she says that if she can have two or three years more of active practice, she can straighten out all the tangles in her affairs and place her properties in shape to furnish herself and family a sufficient income to make them comfortable the remainder of their lives.

In 1888, Dr. Hill's wife died and Dr. Owens-Adair gladly received into her home and heart her only grandchild, Victor Adair Hill, then less than three years old. A few years later, when Dr. Hill again married, his mother prevailed upon him to permit her and Colonel Adair to adopt Victor and make him their heir at law. In 1891, Dr. Owens-Adair again manifested her kindness and benevolence of spirit, by taking upon herself, at the request of his mother, the care of a little baby boy, at whose birth she officiated as physician. With her husband's consent she named him John Adair, Jr. The names of her family she has perpetuated in the plat of her "Sunnymead" addition to Astoria, one street of which is known as Hill street, another is Victor street. Through the farm and plat run three beautiful streams, to which she has given the names Adair creek, Mattie Belle creek and Vera creek, respectively.

The present writer has been privileged to chronicle the early struggles and some of the triumphs of this strenuous, useful, all-conquering life. It is to be hoped that he who records its end will do so at a date now far in the future. It is Dr. Adair's ambition to live until both her younger boys and her granddaughter, Vera Owens Hill, are grown and settled in life, and the chances seem good that she will be permitted to do so, for she now has excellent health. Seldom is she guessed to be more than forty-five years old. She stands erect, has a quick, firm step, and drives and handles her horse as easily and as well as she did twenty-five years ago. Day or night she obeys the call of suffering humanity, never sparing herself. She still lives the old strenuous life, rising at five in the morning, winter and summer, and taking exercises immediately upon rising to call every muscle in her body into vigorous action. She is her own accountant. She reads much to keep well abreast of the times and in the summer of 1900, she took a severe post-graduate course in the Chicago clinical school for physicians only, attending lectures from nine o'clock a. m. until six o'clock p. m. and from eight until nine p. m., notwithstanding the extreme heat. She also finds time to write many family and social letters and to contribute frequently to papers and medical journals. Certainly her fine constitution, her talents and her invincible energy have been assiduously devoted to the welfare of suffering humanity and it is just as certain that they always will be until she shall have drawn her latest breath.

GEORGE E. PIERCE. Although still a young man, George E. Pierce, contractor and builder, is one of the leading business men of North Yakima. He was born in Renovo, Pennsylvania, December 14, 1867. His father was D. W. Pierce, a native of Vermont, who came to Klickitat county in 1880, and at one time was his county's representative in the state legislature. Belinda B. (Laythe) Pierce, our subject's mother, was also a native of Vermont. George E. went to school in his native state until he became eleven years of age, when his family removed to Albany, Oregon. Here he remained only a year, when the family came to Goldendale, where George attended school. He later took a business course in Salem, Oregon, affording him a good, practical education. Returning to Goldendale, he worked in his father's saw and planing mill at that point, and in July, 1899, he came to North Yakima and began working at the trade of carpenter. He worked independently until January 1, 1903, when he formed a partnership with W. T. Stewart, under the firm name of Stewart & Pierce. They do a general contracting business, and the firm is one that everyone feels he can trust. Stewart & Pierce constructed the recent addition to the hospital, and have worked on other public buildings, besides having erected many structures for private individuals.

At North Yakima, May, 1902, Mr. Pierce was married to Miss Mary E. Shaw, a native of England, and daughter of Edward and Mary Shaw, both of English birth, and came to the United States when a child. She lived in Portland, Oregon, for eighteen years, when she came to Goldendale, where her father died. Her mother still lives in North Yakima. Mr. Pierce has two brothers, D. W. and E. E., and two sisters: Mrs. Ella D. Adams and Mrs. Ruth Enderby, and one other sister now deceased. Mrs. Pierce has two brothers, Fred E. and Charles R. Shaw; the former with the North Yakima Furniture Company. Mr. Pierce is a member of Yakima lodge, I. O. O. F., No. 22, and of the Woodmen of the World. In politics, he is a staunch Republican. He enjoys the reputation of being a first-class workman, and the services of the firm of which he is a member are in flattering demand. Besides this he is looked upon as an honest, industrious and, in all ways, an exemplary man.

JOHN M. MURCHIE. John M. Murchie, proprietor of the Fashion stables, of North Yakima, was born in the state of California, August 30, 1860. His grandfather, on his father's side, went to Nevada City in 1849 and located the Murchie Gold and Silver Mining Company's claims, which developed into, and are still, the greatest producing mines of Nevada City. The subject's father was Andrew Murchie, who went to California in 1856, where he was superintendent of a quartz mill until 1880, when he removed to Wasco, Oregon. Here he passed away in 1893. John M. Murchie's mother was Mary A. (Nisbett) Murchie, a native of Maine, as was also her husband. She is now living in North Yakima. Mr. Murchie was educated in California, where he received a high school education, and he was also a graduate of Heald's Business college. He was an expert accountant, and during his career in his native state was bookkeeper for a mercantile and mining firm. After resigning his last position he came to Oregon, in 1880, and followed farming for ten years. He then removed to The Dalles, where for four years he conducted a livery business. He next entered construction work in the employ of the Columbia Southern Railroad, superintending the building of ten miles of that line. In 1899, he came to North Yakima and built the Palace bakery building, a one-story brick block, which is now occupied by two general stores. Here he conducted a bakery for a period of eighteen months, when he sold out his stock, but he still retains the building and fixtures. His next venture was in the livery business, when he bought his present barn and equipment, which he has been conducting in a successful manner up to the present time. His is the largest business of its kind in the town, requiring the constant employment of eight men to carry it on. Besides this property, Mr. Murchie owns considerable valuable town property and a handsome home.

Mr. Murchie was married at Wasco, Oregon, in 1883, to Miss Annie M. Pearson, who died in 1888; two children were born to that union, Lester and Bessie. At Wasco, in 1892, he was again married to Miss Isabel Pullian, a native of Kansas City, Missouri. Socially, Mr. Murchie is an active member of the Woodmen of the World, and in politics, he is an interested Republican. He attends practically all the conventions of his party, and while a citizen of Oregon he was given the nomination for county clerk, but later withdrew his name from the ticket. He is regarded as being a man of ability and honor, and takes a leading part in all the affairs of the city of his choice.

WILLIAM T. STEWART. William T. Stewart, a well-known contractor and builder of North Yakima, was born in New Brunswick, October 9, 1861; the son of William and Mrs. Stewart, both also natives of New Brunswick, where the mother died in 1876. In earlier life William Stewart was a lumberman, but is now living on a homestead near North Yakima. Mr. Stewart had eight brothers and one sister. Two of the brothers, Robert F. and Frederick C., are deceased. Those living are: James S., Andrew, Charles H., foreman for a lumber company at Buckley, Washington; Irvin A., a resident of Minnesota; Hiram A., a miner in the LeRoi mine of Rossland, British Columbia, and Marv E. Donovan, proprietress of a hotel in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Stewart was educated in Canada and worked with his father in the lumber business until he became sixteen years of age, when he removed to the state of Maine, where he worked in the woods, and was also employed in various lumber camps as cook. He then came west as far as Minnesota, at which state he worked in the woods and at the carpenter's trade. He spent in all ten years in this state, when, in 1889, he came to Tacoma, and engaged in carpenter work, in which he continued until 1893, when he came to North Yakima. In the spring of 1895 he went to Trail, British Columbia, and conducted a hotel for three years. Again returning to North Yakima, he engaged in, and has since followed, contracting and building. Among the notable structures of his town that were built under Mr. Stewart's supervision are the Independent Order of Odd Fellows' building, the Sloan building, and others. During his residence in North Yakima he has acquired considerable town property, besides having proved up on a homestead. In Warsaw, April 2, 1884, Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Annie R. White, a native of New Brunswick. She received a liberal education in her native country, after which she taught school, and later was bookkeeper for D. L. Moody in his seminary for two years. She then came to Warsaw and was married. Her father was Henry White, now deceased, of New Brunswick, a carpenter and boat builder. Her mother was Esther (Wiggins) White, a native of the same country; she died in Duluth, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have been parents of three children, Stanley Earle, born November 5, 1895, and a pair of twins, who died in infancy. Mr. Stewart belongs to Yakima lodge, No. 22, I. O. O. F., and to lodge No. 53, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor. Both he and Mrs. Stewart are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Stewart has the reputation wherever he has lived of being a man of sober and industrious habits, public spirited and generous. He is universally regarded a good workman and an upright man.

E. E. BUTLER, with J. M. Murchie, is engaged in a profitable livery business in North Yakima. He was born in Clinton county, Iowa, January 18, 1852. He is the son of John P. and Mary (Shields) Butler, both natives of Indiana. John P. Butler was a contractor and builder in his native state and later in Iowa, until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Twenty-sixth Iowa infantry, company H; went to the front and was killed at the siege of Vicksburg. The subject's mother died in California in 1894. Mr. Butler attended school in his native state and followed printing and farming until arriving at the age of twenty years. In 1872, he went to California, where for a time he followed lumbering and two years later he came to Yakima county, Washington, located at Yakima City (Old Town) and during the same year went to the Wenas valley, where he followed the lumber business for a few years and located a homestead. On this homestead he farmed until 1890. For the past two years he has been engaged in his present business. He was married in 1877, in Yakima county, to Maggie O'Neal, daughter of A. and Minerva O'Neal, who crossed the Plains in an ox wagon in 1853. Mrs. Butler was born the following year at what is now Yelm, Thurston county. Both her parents are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Butler have seven children: Clarence E., Nellie M., Eugene C., Maud M., Walter L., Iverna E. and Arthur W. Mr. Butler has one brother, Eugene, in the stock business in Glenn county, California, and two sisters, Mrs. E. Chambers, of North Yakima, and Mrs. Ellen Nielson, of Willows, California. Mrs. Butler has brothers and sisters as follows: Charles, in the lumber business in Yakima county; William, also engaged in lumbering; John, a farmer; Mary, who resides with Mr. Butler, and Anna, wife of Eugene Butler, in California. Mr. Butler is a member in good standing of Yakima lodge, No. 22, I. O. O. F., in which order he has held continuous membership for twenty years. He also at one time was a member of the Home Guards. He is considered to be a man of honor and integrity and is one of the reliable business men of his city.

W. WALLACE FELTON, an architect and builder of North Yakima, was born in Grundy county, Illinois, May 22, 1850. His father, Samuel Felton, a native of New York state, was a machinist by trade, and died in Houston county, Minnesota, in 1873. Mr. Felton's mother was Martha M. (Bowers) Felton, born in Ohio, and died when the subject was but four years old. Mr. Felton has two half-brothers, James B. and Clarence E., both engaged in the orange business in Florida. After receiving his education in the public schools of Minnesota, Mr. Felton engaged in the photograph business for three years. He then went to Illinois, took up carpentering and building, and after mastering the trade he returned to Minnesota and took a course in architecture. In 1877 he removed to Iowa and for two years was engaged in the grain business, after which he returned to Minnesota and resumed contracting and building. In 1883 he went to Florida and engaged in the saw-mill business with his brothers. The climate not agreeing with Mrs. Felton, Mr. Felton sold out at the end of one year and removed to Iowa; after a residence of one year in Iowa, again returned to Minnesota and resumed contracting and building. Three years prior to coming to Washington he resided in St. Paul, in which city he followed contracting and building. He came to Walla Walla in 1890, where he followed contracting for five years. In 1895 he came to North Yakima, bought a farm and put out an orchard. The following year he took up the practice of his profession in town and has remained in that work since. Since coming to North Yakima, Mr.

Felton has erected some of the principal buildings of the town; among them being the Miller block and residence, the Presbyterian church, the Episcopal rectory, the residences of W. B. Dudley, E. B. Moore, and others. He now holds the contract for the construction of the Summit View school building, of which he is architect, the cost of which will be approximately ten thousand dollars. He has a handsome home on Nob Hill, and is part owner of the anthracite coal mines near Cowlitz Pass, which certainly are promising properties. He also owns a tract of land between the Yakima and Columbia rivers.

In Caledonia, December 25, 1872, Mr. Felton was married to Miss Lucy C. Pope, a native of the state of Minnesota. She was the daughter of Dr. T. A. and Mary Pope, and died on the 12th of July, 1876. From this union they have two children, Lucius A. and Maude L., who is a graduate of the Minnesota State Normal School, and was a successful teacher in the public schools of that state for several years. She was married to H. M. Helenick in 1902. Both Lucius A. Felton and Mr. Helenick have positions with the Chicago, St. Paul & Minneapolis Railway Company. In Lime Springs, Iowa, July 2, 1878, Mr. Felton was married to Miss Priscilla M. Fessenden, a native of the state of Wisconsin. She is the daughter of James and Mary Fessenden, the former a farmer, born in Vermont. Both her parents are now dead. She has three brothers: Joel Fessenden, of Cresco, Iowa; Dr. E. S. Fessenden, Wisconsin; Sylvanus Fessenden, Indiana. Her sisters are: Mrs. Sarah Willhelm, Lime Springs, Iowa; Rebecca Turck, in Michigan, and Laura Phelps, in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Felton have been parents of four children: Vera B., who died when about six months old; Edith M., wife of Charles E. Druse, North Yakima; Pearl V., wife of C. H. Wimer, a North Yakima farmer, and Ray, who is a student of the high school, and is now living with his parents, at home. Mr. Felton is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen fraternity, his membership being in a Minnesota lodge. Both Mr. and Mrs. Felton are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Felton is an adept in his profession, and his services are much sought after. He bears the best reputation in and about his town, and in all circles, financial and social, his standing is of the highest order.

FRANK J. TICKNER. The prosperous and skillful photographer whose name initiates this paragraph is a native of Linden, Genesee county, Michigan, born May 1, 1872, the son of Rev. J. J. and Lydia A. (Ripley) Tickner, both of whom are now actively engaged in religious work in North Yakima, the former as pastor of the Baptist church, the latter as his efficient helper. Mr.

Tickner is a native of New York state and his wife of Wisconsin.

Frank J. Tickner, of this review, began the study of the art of photography at the age of eighteen. After having assiduously devoted himself to it for a time, he left it temporarily to attend Kalamazoo College, Michigan, where he received his secondary and advanced education. After graduation he took up again the practice of his art, first in Linden and later in Bronson, Michigan. Coming west eventually, he purchased the interests of E. E. Jones, a photographer of North Yakima, on the 1st of January, 1903, and his professional skill and business abilities have enabled him to build up an excellent business. In his gallery are to be found many of the most modern and improved equipments that the manufacturer of photographic supplies is able to furnish and he is well prepared to do all kinds of work in his line.

Mr. Tickner has one sister, Mrs. Cora Jones, residing at Castle Rock, near Portland, Oregon. A competent man in all branches of photography and related arts, his services are sought by all who desire the best work. Many of the photographs from which the illustrations in this volume were made were furnished by him. As a man and a citizen, he has a very enviable standing in his community, and he is looked upon by those who know him as possessed of an honorable, generous nature and sterling integrity of character.

GEORGE A. GANÓ is one of the most favorably and widely known of Yakima county's farmers and business men. Until quite recently he made his home in Moxee valley, but at the present time is living in North Yakima, still, however, retaining his ranch. He is the son of James H. and Rhoda (Gardner) Gano, whose biographies will be found elsewhere among these chronicles. They were natives of the state of Ohio, where they lived for half a century before immigrating to Yakima county in 1892. The father served in the Civil war as a member of the Tremont Light Guards; the mother had three brothers in the same conflict, Joel, Benjamin and George. In Ohio the subject of this biography spent his youth and early manhood, having been born in Clark county, April 13, 1864, where he lived four years and was then taken to Hardin county. His early industrial training was on the farm and in the car shops. When twenty-five years old, however, he decided to seek his fortune in the far Northwest and selected Yakima county as the place to cast his lot. This he did in 1880, his first work in Washington being with Gardner & Hall, civil engineers. He then engaged successively in teaming, collecting, selling sewing machines and finally in ranching, taking a homestead claim in the Moxee valley in 1896. In all these occupations he was successful and by dint of hard work and economy added from time to time to his worldly possessions. In order to irrigate his farm he found it necessary to bore an artesian well more than 900 feet deep, from which flows a fine, large stream of warm water the year around. In the summer of 1903 Mr. Gano formed a partnership with I. B. Turnell and under the firm name of Gano & Turnell opened the Pacific hotel on South First street, North Yakima. Subsequently, however, Mr. Gano retired from the business, though not until the hostelry had been firmly established. Mr. Gano and Eliza Spahr, a resident of Ohio at the time, were united in marriage October 2, 1889. She lived only a few years, passing into the valley of the shadow in 1896, April 14th, leaving, besides her husband, three children, James, Delbert and Arden, to mourn the loss of a devoted mother. Mr. Gano was again married September 17, 1900, the bride being Martha Gano, of Clinton, Illinois, the daughter of George and Susan (Ward) Gano. Her parents were born in the Buckeye state; the father served in the Civil war and is now a prosperous farmer of Illinois. To this marriage has been born one child, Georgia. Mr. Gano has eight brothers and sisters: William, Mrs. Elva Heffelfinger and Mrs. Estella McElree, living in Ohio; and Ira J., Wesley E., Avenell Patterson, Mrs. Ida Benson and Mrs. Emma Purdy, residents of Yakima county. Mr. Gano is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and politically, is a stalwart Republican, attending all caucuses and conventions held in the county. He has never sought political preferment, but has been elected constable for two successive terms. His principal property holdings consist of a ranch in the artesian district of the Moxee valley, sixty acres being well improved. All who know Mr. Gano personally will testify to his congenial qualities and, as a prosperous farmer, a capable business man, and a man of his word, he is highly respected and popular.

NICHOLAS McCoy, pioneer and stockman, was born in Austria, January 14, 1831, and at the age of sixteen left home and went as a cabin boy on a vessel bound for Africa. Starting out so early in life to do for himself, he has had many varied and interesting experiences that have proven valuable to him in later years. Profiting by the store of general knowledge so gained, he has made a success of life in a business way. After making the trip to Africa he remained there two years, then took passage for Cuba in a slave trader, and made the port of Havana in safety. From there he sailed for New York, then to New Orleans. Here he lived for seven years, until 1858, when he went to California. He next took a vessel for Victoria, British Columbia, and thence to the Fraser River mines, where he remained a short time. In 1861, he came up the Columbia river to The Dalles, and later to the Yakima valley, settling, or rather camping, near where the town of Sunnyside is now located. At this time, Mr. McCoy says, the only settlers in the valley that he knew of were Charles Splawn and Mortimer Thorp. Here he engaged in the cattle business, which he has continued to follow ever since with varying fortune, but ultimate success, proving that perseverance at any one thing is almost sure to win success and fortune in the end. Mr. McCoy served as guide to the settlers and scout for the government, in the early days of the country, and has been in all of the Indian troubles that have arisen since his arrival in the Northwest. He served as scout with General Howard and was personally acquainted with Chief Moses. He has a vast fund of information regarding the general Northwest, having driven cattle into the mine regions of British Columbia, Idaho and Montana, and having traveled through various other sections of the country. He pre-empted his present home in 1884, and has since purchased a number of other tracts of land in the county. He now lives in Old Yakima. He is fraternally identified with the Masonic order, being a member of Yakima lodge, No. 24. He is admitted to be one of the earliest pioneers of Yakima county and one of its most worthy citizens.

JEFF D. McDANIELS, the liquor dealer of North Yakima, and also interested in mining, is a native born Pacific Coaster and a pioneer of 1865 in Yakima county, where he came with his parents at the age of seven years, and where he has continued to reside the principal part of the time since. He is not only a pioneer himself in the great Northwest, but he comes of the very earliest pioneer stock. His father, Elisha McDaniels, was born in Kentucky in 1824, and pioneered it in both Illinois and Missouri. In 1844 he crossed the Plains from the latter state, to Oregon, when it required indomitable courage to face the extreme hardships and dangers which beset the way on every hand, both by day and by night. In the sixties he drove stock through to the Cariboo mines in British Columbia, and it was by this means that he came to settle in the Yakima country in 1865, where he eventually died. Subject's mother, Lettie J. Cormack, was a native of Pennsylvania and with her parents, crossed the Plains to Oregon in the year 1844, later meeting Mr. McDaniels in the new El Dorado, where they were married, and where subject was born, August 22, 1858. At the age of seven his parents moved to Yakima county, and here he grew up. He remained at home, working with his father until twenty, then worked two years for a railroad company. He then engaged in mining and followed this for some eight years, during which time he opened a saloon in North Yakima, which he conducted for twelve years. He then sold out and turned his whole attention to mining for some six years, one year of which he spent in the Nome gold fields. He returned to North Yakima in 1901, and has continued to reside here since. He was married in February, 1887, to Cora C. Lindsay, a native of Yakima City, where she was born in 1867. Her father, John Lindsay, was a native of Missouri, and crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1850, and later came to Yakima county, settling at Yakima City. He has a daughter, Jessie A., born in North Yakima, September 7, 1889. Mr. McDaniels is socially connected with the Eagles and Red Men. Politically, he is a Democrat. Mrs. McDaniels was a member of the Christian church, and passed away in North Yakima, May 20, 1899.

CASPER FEUERBACH, who owns and operates one of the leading barber shops in North Yakima, is an 1882 pioneer in the county. He has seen the city of North Yakima spring from sage brush and sand to its present pretentious conditions, and has added his influence and efforts to bring about that desirable end. He was born in Germany, June 15, 1837. His father, Jacob Feuerbach, a miller by trade, was also of German birth. He immigrated to the United States in 1848, locating at St. Louis, Missouri, where he shortly afterwards was carried away in the great cholera epidemic. Subject's mother, Magdalene (Haas) Feuerbach, was born in Germany and came of a family of high standing and wealth in the old country. She came to the United States with her husband, in 1848. Subject received the principal part of his education in the old country, but being young and of a bright, observing turn, he was soon able to make the most of his early acquirements and turn them to account in the land of his adoption. At the age of twelve he began to learn the trade of a barber, and on his father's death he at once began to assist in the support of his mother. He continued to work at his trade in St. Louis until 1858, when he moved to St. Charles, Missouri, where he opened a shop and continued to run it twenty-four years. In 1882 he came west to Washington, locating at Yakima City. Here he took charge of the shop owned by his son, who had preceded him several years. At the end of three years he moved to North Yakima and built a shop, which he has continued to operate for the last eighteen years. He was married in St. Louis in 1855, to Louise Sieglinger, a native of Germany, where she was educated when a girl, later taking private lessons in the United States. To this marriage were born twelve children, of whom seven are still living, as follows: Louisa Winters, Portland; Joseph, San Francisco; Kate Tyler, Lena Younger, Portland; Amelia, of Portland; Alma Rankin, likewise of Portland, and Blanch, who lives at home. Mr. Feuerbach has prospered in a business way, and owns business and residence property in the city. He is a straightforward man in his dealings and is esteemed as a good, worthy citizen by all.

FRANK X. NAGLER, manufacturer of cigars, North Yakima, was born in Bavaria, Germany, June 15, 1867. The father and mother, Jacob and Mary (Lechner) Nagler, were both natives of Germany, where the latter still lives. The father was leader of a military band, which position he held for forty-seven years. In addition to schooling in the ordinary branches, subject took a course in a conservatory of music in Germany when a boy, and, being talented in this line, he made rapid progress, becoming very proficient in music at an early age. When but sixteen he came to the United States and located at Faribault, Minnesota, where he learned the trade of cigar-maker. In 1886 he came to Ellensburg, where he engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and at the same time became the leader of the band and gave instructions on stringed instruments. From Ellensburg he came to North Yakima in 1890, where he opened a cigar factory and also followed music teaching. He was married in North Yakima in 1891, to Sarah Ward, daughter of Robert Ward, a mining man of Boise, Idaho, and at one time a member of the legislature of that state. Mrs. Nagler was born in Boise, and was educated in the convent there. Mr. and Mrs. Nagler's children are: Earl, Merlin, Raymond and Francis. Mr. Nagler is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Yeomen and Red Men. The family is connected with the Catholic church. Mr. Nagler has succeeded financially, and owns a homestead in the county, city property, his cigar factory and store, and mining stock, being treasurer of the Elizabeth Gold Hill Mining Company. Mrs. Nagler was at one time assistant in the county auditor's office at North Yakima. Mr. Nagler is a Roosevelt man; is esteemed for his strict integrity, and is known as a worthy and reliable citizen.

RICHARD J. CURRY, a leading tailor of North Yakima, is a native Californian, having been born, July 14, 1872, at Sacramento. His citizenship in Yakima county dates from 1879, when at the age of seven he came to this country with his parents. His father, Thomas Curry, was born in Ireland and came to the United States in 1852 at the age of nineteen, and followed mining for years in the Black Hills, Colorado, Nevada and California, living in the latter state for ten years. He then resided two years in Tacoma, afterwards taking up land in Yakima county, locating a timber culture claim. He claims the distinction of being the first one in the country to take advantage of the arid land act. He was the youngest of a family of twenty-nine children, all of whom were living at the time of his death, in 1896. The mother of our subject, Mary F. (Doyle) Curry, came of Irish parentage. Subject attended school until twelve and for the next four years was variously employed. He then went to Seattle for three years, at the end of which time he returned to North Yakima and learned the tailor's trade. In the course of a few years he and his brother John bought out the tailoring shop where he worked, and together they ran the business until 1899 under the firm name of Curry Brothers, when he bought his brother out and has since conducted the business alone. He has built up an extensive and successful business. He has two brothers, John and Thomas, living in North Yakima. He was married in North Yakima, in 1897, to Florence M. Smith, daughter of Thomas and Emma B. (Hubbard) Smith. The father was an early settler on the Pacific Coast, and was for twenty years head man in one of the leading shoe establishments in San Francisco. The mother was a native of Illinois. Mrs. Curry was born in San Francisco, April 3, 1881, and came with her parents to Yakima county when a small girl. Her sister, Blanche Carr, lives in North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Curry's children are: Ira R. J., Florence E., Godfrey and Esther R. They are members of the Catholic church. Politically, Mr. Curry is an active Republican; fraternally, he is connected with the Elks, Knights of Pythias and Ancient Order of United Workmen. He has a comfortable home in the city and a well established business, and ranks well as a business man and citizen.

JOHN P. MARKS.

JOHN P. MARKS, farmer and dairyman in the Ahtanum valley, has made his home in that fertile valley ever since 1871, at which time he settled upon the old homestead, where he now lives. He was born in Bluegrass, Kentucky, January 31, 1838, to the union of Bluford B. and Martha W. (Moore) Marks, both natives of the same state. In an early day both removed to Missouri with their parents and were there married. The father was a farmer and an Oregon pioneer, living in that state at the time of his death in 1871. The subject of this biography, at the age of fifteen, crossed the Plains with his parents, driving an ox team all the dreary way, taking his turn with the men in the train at guard duty, and otherwise manfully bearing his share of peril and work. At the end of six months the emigrants reached the Willamette valley, and there, in Linn county, in the year 1853, hewed out the new home in the far West. Here he worked with his father several years, attending the Lebanon Academy. In 1859 he went into the wild Rogue river region, and there hunted and trapped for three years, going into the mining regions of Idaho and Montana from Oregon, in the spring of 1862. The first year he was engaged in mining, visiting all the famous camps of Idaho at that time; then for five years he operated pack-trains in those territories, enduring the hardships and braving the dangers common to such regions in those times. Six years of this rough life satisfied his ambition in that direction, and he again took up his abode in Oregon, where he was married and resided for two years, or until his removal to Puget Sound. His stay on the western slope was of short duration, however, for in 1871 he immigrated to the Yakima country and settled on the Ahtanum. For a year he taught in the district schools of the settlement, and such was his success that his fellow citizens rewarded him by electing the young schoolmaster county superintendent. In this capacity he faithfully served two successive terms, aiding materially in establishing the schools of his county upon a firm foundation. In 1867, he was united in marriage to Ellen Williams, a native of Illinois, who crossed the Plains with her parents when she was but five years old. Her father, Charles A. Williams, made that journey in 1843, settling in Oregon. Mrs. Marks died in 1891, leaving five children, three of whom, Mrs. Nora V. Frazer, Elmer B. and Charles A., are still living. Mr. Marks was married again in 1892, this time to Mrs. Mattie (Hastings) Smith, whose father was a farmer in Canada, where she was born in 1838. She was educated and grew to womanhood in Vermont, teaching and also holding the position of matron in the reform school for a number of years, before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Marks are zealous members of the Congregational church, and socially hold the esteem of a host of friends. He is affiliated with one fraternal order, the Yeomen. In politics, he has always been active and influential, and is to-day, having been one of the Democratic nominees for representative to the legislature from his district at the last election. Until 1896 Mr. Marks was a Republican, but the issues involved in that famous campaign were such that he sought a new political standard under which to serve his country. As a business man he has been successful, owning at present four hundred and forty acres of well improved farming land and a considerable band of stock; as a pioneer, he took a prominent part in redeeming the Yakima wilderness and converting it into fields of hay, hop yards, orchards and gardens; and as a public-spirited citizen who respects both the civil and moral laws, he is active in promoting the welfare of his home county and state, and commands the respect of his fellow citizens.

ANDREW F. SNELLING, living near North Yakima, was born in Johnson county, Missouri, July 8, 1840. Vincent L. Snelling, his father, a native of Kentucky, was a clergyman and a steamboat captain. In 1844, he crossed the Plains, taking up a full section of donation land in Yamhill county, Oregon. During his residence in Yamhill county he preached the gospel and served as captain of a boat on the Willamette river. He was the first Baptist minister on the coast. He died in California in 1855. Adelia (Tandy) Snelling, his wife, and the mother of A. F. Snelling, was born in Virginia of Welsh and English parents. Her ancestors came to Virginia early in the nineteenth century. Mr. Snelling was four years old when his parents crossed the Plains. He was educated at McMinnville college, in Oregon. He resided on the Yamhill county homestead until his twenty-first year, when he was appointed deputy in the county clerk's office at Eugene, Oregon. Two years later he went to Montana, and for five years engaged in mining; during the last two of these years, however, he represented his county in the territorial legislature. After a brief time spent in Nevada, he went to Goose Lake valley, Oregon, and for four years followed lumbering. He was then elected clerk of Lake county, and, two years later, was re-elected. A third time he received the nomination for this office, but declined, accepting instead the appointment as register of the United States land office at Lakeview, Oregon, proffered him by the Cleveland administration. At the end of his term as register, he moved to Pierce county, Washington, and engaged for a time in mercantile pursuits. In 1891, he became a merchant of North Yakima, but, during President Cleveland's second administration, was appointed register of the North Yakima land office and continued in this position for four and one-half years. In 1892, he purchased a tract of land near the city, where he has since made his home. Mr. Snelling has two brothers, Vincent and James, and one sister, Adelia. He was married in 1877, in Lakeview, Oregon, to Miss Mary Watson, a native of Illinois, where she was born in 1854. Her father, William Watson, was also a native of Illinois and a soldier of the Civil war, during which he contracted a disease from exposure, which ultimately caused his death. Her mother, also a native of Illinois, still lives, in Washington. Mrs. Snelling has five brothers and three sisters. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Snelling are: Otta, Lena L., Jessie D., and Adelia M. The family attend the Baptist church. Fraternally, Mr. Snelling is connected with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is past grand of the Odd Fellows.

He is a leader in the Democratic party and is a man highly esteemed by his neighbors and fellow citizens.

FREDERICK E. SHAW, salesman with the North Yakima Furniture Company, was born in Pennsylvania, May 27, 1877. His father, Edward Shaw, was a native of England and a miller by trade, following this vocation continuously for forty-five years. He came to the United States, where he worked at the milling business in almost every state. He died in Goldendale, Washington. Our subject's mother, Mary (Wainwright) Shaw, who is now making her home with her daughter, is also a native of England. Mr. Shaw is a graduate of Klickitat Academy, at Goldendale, where his parents lived for several years after coming west. When he was but six years old they moved to Portland, and there, at the age of thirteen, he entered the large wholesale furniture house of Peters & Roberts, where he learned the trade of upholsterer. He continued with this firm for eight years, then returned to Klickitat county and took a course in the academy at Goldendale. After finishing his studies he came to North Yakima and accepted a position with the firm with which he is now connected. He has now been with this company four years. He has one sister and one brother living: Mary Perce and Charles Shaw, both citizens of North Yakima. Mr. Shaw was married in North Yakima, in 1901, to Miss Maud Palmer, who was born in Minnesota, April 4, 1879, but raised in Goldendale, where her parents settled in an early day. Her father, George B. Palmer, was a veteran of the Civil war. He was a pioneer of Klickitat county. Mrs. Shaw has eight brothers and sisters living. Fraternally, Mr. Shaw is associated with the Masonic and the Maccabee orders and is commander of the latter lodge. He is also secretary of the Order of Washington. He is a Republican politically, and religiously, is connected with the Episcopal church. He has a comfortable home in North Yakima.

MOSES N. ADAMS, of Yakima City, came to Yakima county in 1879, where he has made his home continuously, with the exception of two years spent in Alaska. He is a native of Ohio, born in 1844, from the union of James H. and Eliza (Cox) Adams. The father was a native of Ohio, but spent almost his entire life in Illinois, where he followed farming and milling. He was a man held in high esteem and was a pronounced abolitionist during the war times. Subject's mother was born in New Jersey. Her father, who was a Scotchman, served in the Revolutionary war and lived to be almost a centenarian. At the age of seventeen our subject enlisted in Company C, Eighth Illinois cavalry. He was wounded at Malvern Hill in 1862, and was discharged for disabilities arising therefrom, but re-enlisted in the same company as soon as he recovered, and served until the close of the war. In 1866 he went west to Colorado and entered the mines in Lake county, where he remained until 1870. From there he took a trip through New Mexico, Arizona, California and Nevada, working in the various mining camps and having several engagements with the Indians. In 1877, he moved into the Klickitat valley, Washington, where he remained until 1879, when he came to Yakima county and took up land thirty-five miles south of North Yakima. Here he continued to live and farm until 1890, when he moved to Yakima City and bought a place, where he has since made his home. He was married in San Francisco, in 1875, to Louise Ferrell, daughter of John Ferrell, a farmer and native of Ohio, who now lives on the old homestead originally taken up by the subject of this sketch. He was an argonaut of '49 in California. Mrs. Adams was born in California in 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Adams' children are: Florence, Nellie Courtwright, Rosa Adams, Robert A., Clarence, John C., Bessie and Kate, all residing in Yakima county. Socially, Mr. Adams is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic and Independent Order of Odd Fellows orders; politically, he is a Republican, and in 1893 was honored by his party with the nomination for county commissioner. He was duly elected and served throughout the term with credit.

EDWIN R. LEAMING first settled in Washington in 1875, locating at Walla Walla. In 1880, he moved his family to Ellensburg, himself engaging in the nursery business at Yakima City, and in 1883 he bought eighty acres, now a portion of the townsite of North Yakima, and upon which he at once moved his family. Mr. Leaming is a native of Cape May county, New Jersey, born February 14, 1827. His parents were Christopher, and Ann (McCreay) Leaming. His father, of English descent and a lawyer by profession, died in 1865. The mother, a native of New Jersey, lived to the ripe old age of ninety-five. Our subject received an academic education, and at the age of sixteen went to Philadelphia and learned the tailor's trade, serving a four years' apprenticeship. He then ran a business of his own for four years, at the end of which time he moved west to Jackson county, Iowa, and bought a farm. Two years of farming satisfied him. He sold out and went to Wisconsin and mined for a time, then opened a store, and later engaged in the lumbering business. In 1858 he moved to Kansas, where he lived seven years, and from which state he enlisted in the Civil war, receiving his discharge in May, 1865. He then engaged in merchandizing in Missouri for some nine years, at the end of which time, 1875, he moved to Washington (then a territory), where he has since made his home. After purchasing the tract of land at North Yakima, he engaged in the nursery business, following it with success to the present date. He has contributed materially to the development and improvement of North Yakima, having, in addition to erecting nine buildings on his tract of land, set out and brought to a fine bearing condition numerous orchards about the city. He was married in New Jersey, September 6, 1849, to Harriet Pennington, daughter of James and Rebecca (Kindle) Pennington. The father, who was of English descent, was a native of New Jersey and a shipbuilder. The mother was also born in New Jersey of English parents. Mrs. Leaming taught school for three years. She departed this life in 1900. To this marriage were born five children, of whom two are living: Lois I. Parker, Yakima; and William C., in Bacoachi, Sonora county, Mexico. Mr. Leaming was married the second time March 19, 1903, to Mrs. Minerva Kester, his present wife. Fraternally, Mr. Leaming is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an active member of the Presbyterian church, and at present holds the office of elder in the North Yakima congregation, of which he was one of the organizers. In addition to a fine tract of land, he owns considerable city property and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of North Yakima. He is highly esteemed by all.

FRED E. THOMPSON, fruit grower and shipper, North Yakima, is a Washingtonian by birth, and owns Sumner as the place of his nativity. He was born May 29, 1863. His father, Levant F. Thompson, was born in Jamestown, N. Y., and crossed the Plains to California in 1849. His oxteams gave out en route, and he completed the journey of 300 miles on foot. After four years in the mines of that state he came to the Sound country and engaged in lumbering. He established the third mill on the Sound, which was destroyed by the Indians during the uprising and war of 1855-56. In 1863 he commenced growing hops in Pierce and King counties, the experimental crop consisting of two and one-half acres. He was the first one to try hop-growing in the Northwest, and not even the wisest and most far-seeing of that day could have been made to believe that in the course of time this would become one of the greatest industries of this admittedly great country. His father died in 1896. The mother, Susan (Kincaid) Thompson, was born in Missouri in 1844, and is still living in this state. Our subject made his home with his parents until he reached the age of twenty, when he engaged in hop growing on his own account, which he followed in Pierce and King counties for some ten years, with good success. In 1888, he came to Yakima county, and, purchasing a quarter-section of land, began fruit raising and shipping, which he has since followed. He made the first shipment of fruit from Yakima county that ever crossed the Missouri river. In 1898, he organized a wholesale and retail fruit and produce company in Billings, Montana, under the firm name of Thompson, Kain & Vaughn, and in 1901 he organized another company of similar character in Butte, Montana. At present he is the representative of the wholesale house of Ryan & Newton, of Spokane, Butte and Seattle. In 1902, he sold his fruit farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which he had taken when in sage brush, and developed into the largest fruit farm in Yakima county. He was married in Sumner, Washington, in 1893, to Miss Viola Kirkman, a native of Oakland, California, born in 1873. She is a lady of literary attainments and has a finished musical education; is also a graduate of the Egan Dramatic School. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson has been born one child, Hazel, whose birthday is November 13, 1894. Fraternally, Mr. Thompson is connected with the Masons and Elks. Politically, he is a Republican.

EDWARD E. KELSO. In the winning of Yakima county, many characters of sterling quality have been developed. The rich but sometimes deeply buried natural resources were a challenge to the pioneer who had granite in his fiber and iron in his blood, and the men with these qualities have never lacked a field for their exercise here, nor have they often failed of their rewards. Prominent among the men who have had the courage to answer nature's challenge, and who have conquered in the fight, are the Kelso brothers, of whom the subject of this article is one. Coming to the country with little capital except their unbounded energy and their unusually good judgments in commercial and business matters, they have wrought their way steadily to fortune, at the same time winning and retaining a high standing in the various communities in which they have lived. Edward E., of this article, is a native of Richland county, Ohio, born August 12, 1863, the son of John A. and Martha (Miller) Kelso. The former was born in Pennsylvania, April 13, 1832, came to Ohio when a small boy, grew up and was educated and married in Richland county, that state, and continued to reside there until 1863, when he moved to Williams county. He came thence in 1884 to Walla Walla county, Washington, and now lives two miles east of the city of Walla Walla. He is of Irish extraction and his wife, the mother of our subject, of German. She was born in Ohio in 1834, was married when twenty years of age and is now in Walla Walla county. Our subject received his education in the common schools of Ohio and in the normal school at Fayette. At the early age of eighteen he began his career as a teacher, and for the ensuing three years he was a successful practitioner of the art of pedagogy, but upon attaining his legal majority he changed both his residence and his business. He accompanied his parents to Washington, and in the fall of the same year (1884) filed on a homestead in the Horse Heaven country, six miles south of Kennewick. It was then he began wheat raising, the business in which he has had such excellent success. In 1886 he became associated with his two brothers, William and Clinton, in farming and the three that year cultivated some two thousand acres, only a small part of which belonged to them. At the present time they are still farming, but mark the difference—they now cultivate in the vicinity of six thousand acres, and it is all their own. Nor does this constitute all their holdings. In 1895, they opened a store at Kiona which, under the firm name of Kelso Brothers, is still in operation, and they are having the same success as merchants which has always attended them in wheat raising. The Mr. Kelso of this article, while achieving success as a farmer and in mercantile pursuits, has never lost his interest in things more distinctively intellectual. In 1893, he moved to North Yakima to accept a position as deputy county treasurer under D. W. Stair. For two years he was thus employed; then he became deputy county auditor under F. C. Hall. His services in these capacities must have been eminently satisfactory to the general public, for in 1898 he was elected to the office of county auditor. In 1900, the people reaffirmed their choice and gave a further token of their confidence in his abilities and integrity by bestowing upon him the same office for another term. During the fall of 1897, Mr. Kelso purchased an interest in an abstract, insurance and real estate business in North Yakima, forming the co-partnership of Kelso & Foster, and the two carried on a successful business together until October, 1903, when the senior partner sold to the junior. Since that time Mr. Kelso has given his undivided attention to his farming and mercantile businesses, though his residence is still in North Yakima.

December 14, 1898, Mr. Kelso married Rosella, Mae Newcomb, a native of Columbia county, Wisconsin, born October 6, 1878. She was educated in the common schools of her native state and in the North Yakima high school, then learned the trade of a milliner, serving an apprenticeship under Madame Connolly. It is fitting that some mention be made of her parents. Her father, John I. Newcomb, was born in Vermont in 1844, but was taken from the Green Mountain state to Wisconsin while yet in infancy, and there grew to man's estate and was married. By occupation he was a farmer, though he also spent some time at his trade, that of a painter. Delia D. (Christler) Newcomb, the mother of Mrs. Kelso, was born in Wisconsin, July 14, 1849, and it was in that state that she married Mr. Newcomb. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kelso are: Waldo E., born in North Yakima, November 20, 1899; Gordon N., born in North Yakima, August 1, 1901, and Delferna, a native of the same city, born January 27, 1904. Fraternally, Mr. Kelso is affiliated with the Knights of the Maccabees, and in religion he is a Methodist, his membership being in the North Yakima church, of whose board of trustees he is secretary. He belongs to the Republican party.

JOHN H. HUBBARD (deceased), carpenter and farmer, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, June 3, 1828. He was a pioneer of Washington, locating at Yakima City in 1879, near which place he took a homestead and lived for sixteen years. In 1866, he moved to North Yakima, where he purchased land and built a fine residence, and where he continued to reside until his death, July 13, 1900. Mr. Hubbard came of English stock on his father's side and Holland Dutch on his mother's. His father, Willis Hubbard, was born in Virginia, in 1793, in which state his parents settled in a very early day. He himself was a pioneer in both Ohio and Illinois. His mother, Catherine Haines, was a native of Ohio. Mr. Hubbard remained at home in Illinois until sixteen, when he went to Iowa and was there married, at the age of nineteen, to Sarah Sullivan. His wife died within a year of their marriage, after which he returned to Illinois, and engaged in the stock business for six years. He was, during this period, on March 20, 1854, united in marriage, at Lafayette, Indiana, to Elizabeth A. Vickroy, daughter of William and Mary (Myers) Vickroy; the former a native of Bedford, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Maryland. After his second marriage Mr. Hubbard moved with his family to Minnesota, where he followed the carpenter's trade for five years. He again returned to Illinois, where he resided until 1875, when he moved to California. After a residence of four years there he came to Yakima county.

Mrs. Hubbard was born in Pennsylvania, in 1831, and was educated for a teacher, which profession she followed in the three states of Ohio, Virginia and Pennsylvania. She was united in marriage to Mr. Hubbard at the age of twenty-three, and their married life extended over a period of forty-six years. She owns a fine farm of eighty acres on Nob Hill, adjoining the city on the west, and her residence in the city. She had the honor of christening "Nob Hill," the district where her farm is located. Her children are Florence M. Lince, North Yakima; Floyd W. (deceased); Emma B. Smith, and John B. (deceased). Mr. Hubbard was a member of the Universalist church, as is also Mrs. Hubbard. He was an active Republican and fraternally was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a good citizen and neighbor, and highly esteemed by all for his many good qualities. He was the promoter of the Cowiche and Naches (or Hubbard) ditch.

ROBERT D. FIFE, miner and mine operator, North Yakima, was born in Scotland, December 12, 1857. His father, John Fife, a mining man, was born in Scotland and immigrated to the United States in 1865. He located first in Pennsylvania, where he mined for a time and then came west to Wyoming and mined for a number of years, locating finally in Yakima county, where he died in 1889. The mother, Jennett (Adamson) Fife, was born in Scotland and died in Wyoming. Subject commenced mining at the very early age of nine years, in Pennsylvania, where he worked for three years and then came west to Wyoming with his parents, where he remained until 1882, when he came to the mines in Washington and worked until 1887, principally in the coal mines. In that year he moved to North Yakima, and turned his attention to prospecting for the precious metals, and developing his prospects. He was the locator of the Elizabeth Gold Hill mine, which took its name from his daughter. He is the president and business manager of this mining company. He was married at Alma, Wyoming, November 15, 1879, to Agnes Livingston, a native of Scotland, born August 26, 1861. She came to the United States with her parents when eleven years old. She has two brothers, John, in Idaho, and Sandy, in Washington. Her father, Alexander Livingston, was born in Scotland and came to the United States in 1870, and located in Wyoming. Mr. and Mrs. Fife's children are John, Elizabeth B., Robert, James, Eillie R., Ora, Thomas and Agnes. Mr. Fife is an independent Democrat. He and family are members of the Presbyterian church. He is considered an expert prospector and a good judge of mineral, and knows how to develop a property when he takes hold of it. He is enterprising and public spirited, and to such men as Mr. Fife is largely due the progress that has been made in the mineral fields of central Washington.

GEORGE N. TUESLEY, business manager of The Yakima Herald, was born in Minnesota, thirty-six years ago. He spent his school days in that state, entering a country printing office at the age of sixteen, where he acquired an insight into the newspaper business and learned something of the "art preservative." In 1888, he removed to the state of Washington, acquiring an interest in one of the largest job printing establishments in Tacoma, later becoming its business manager.

Mr. Tuesley came to the thriving little city of North Yakima in 1894. Here, in 1897, together with C. F. Bailey, he leased the Herald from E. M. Reed. Mr. Bailey retired shortly afterward, Mr. Tuesley continuing the business and later taking in as associates his brother, Walter, and Robert McComb, and purchasing the plant. Under Mr. Tuesley's management, the business and influence of the Herald grew steadily, until now it has a plant and business second to none in central Washington. Mr. Tuesley is a practical man in the business, having had experience in almost every branch of publishing, which he has given careful study and consideration, with the result that he is reaping an enviable success.

He was married in 1890 to Miss Ada Ross, at Verdale, Minnesota, and has three children. Quite recently Mr. Tuesley and E. L. Boardman, formerly of the Republic, have acquired the Herald, and are now joint publishers. A sketch of the Herald appears elsewhere in this book.

JOHN D. MEDILL, editor and publisher of the Yakima Democrat, was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, June 27, 1865. He spent most of his early years at work on his father's farm and attending the public schools of his community. At the age of eighteen he left the parental roof, bound for the far West, like many other young men, there to seek his fortune. He resided in Nebraska three years, from that state coming to Washington in 1889 and settling first at Tacoma. In 1892, he located at North Yakima, then in its infancy, where he was engaged in different lines of business until 1898.

At that time he assumed charge of The Democrat and has since been so occupied, steadily building up a most valuable property and widening his influence both at home and throughout the state. Mr. Medill is quite active in politics, although he has never been a candidate for office. He was a delegate from the state of Washington to the Democratic national convention, held in Chicago in 1896, and also to the Kansas City convention of 1900. A sketch of The Democrat will be found in the press chapters of this work.

LEGH R. FREEMAN, editor and publisher of the Northwest Farm and Home, was born in Culpeper county, Virginia, December 4, 1842, the son of Arthur R. and Mary A. Freeman. He was educated at Kemper College, Virginia, taking a preparatory course for the state university. He came west in 1859, and on the frontier learned the printer's trade and entered newspaper work. He was among the first to explore the western two-thirds of America, writing a description of the scenery and resources of the country through which he passed. He also lectured upon his experiences and the sights he had witnessed. For forty-five years Mr. Freeman has been engaged in newspaper work in the west and has seen the western two-thirds of the union become peopled by one-third of the population of the country. His wife, Mrs. Mary R. Freeman, born in St. Paul, Minnesota, October 31, 1863, her parents having been John T. and Mary (Dorrington) Whitaker. She was married to Mr. Freeman, July 11, 1900. Mrs. Freeman is a highly educated woman, being a graduate of the St. Paul high school and of the commercial department of the University of Minnesota, besides holding the highest grade teachers' certificates issued in Minnesota. She is associate editor of the Farm and Home. A sketch of this journal appears in the press chapter of this history. Few residents of the Northwest have been engaged in newspaper work as long as Mr. Freeman or are as well known.

E. L. BOARDMAN, editor of the Yakima Herald, a sketch of which will be found in the press chapter, came to Washington January 1, 1903, purchasing a half interest in the Yakima Republic. He disposed of his interests in that paper in August of the same year and last February (1904) bought a half interest in The Herald.

Mr. Boardman is a native of Ohio, having been born in Hillsboro, in the year 1857. His father is one of the oldest newspaper men in that state, his uncles and other relatives on both sides of the family being well known journalists. Prior to coming to Washington, Mr. Boardman resided for thirteen years in Montana, the last three years of which he was the publisher of the Evening Herald in Helena. During his residence in Montana, he also published the Billings Gazette and other papers. Prior to his residence in Montana, Mr. Boardman was connected for a number of years with several of the metropolitan papers of the country, having begun his newspaper career, while a boy, on the New York Tribune. Mr. and Mrs. Boardman have four daughters. Though having lived a comparatively short length of time in the Yakima country, Mr. Boardman has become favorably and widely known through his business connections and is counted one of the city's substantial citizens.

ALBERT E. HOWARD, manufacturer of sash and doors, North Yakima, was born in Woodville, New York, in 1858. His father, Albert W. Howard, was born in New York, where he spent his life until 1903, when he came west to North Yakima to live with his son, the subject of this sketch. He is a bridge builder by trade and has followed it all his life. He is of English descent. The mother, Olive C. (Noyes) Howard, was born in Pennsylvania in 1832, and came of Dutch parents. She is living with her son. At the age of fifteen subject left his home in New York and went to Iowa. He there engaged in hunting and cleared several hundred dollars. He then attended the Dunning academy at Jefferson, where he finished his education, preparing himself for teaching. But not liking the profession of teaching, he abandoned it and went to work with his brother at the carpenter's trade. After a year he returned to New York and worked at building and cabinet work, and later went on a revenue cutter as ship carpenter. He then took charge of a large force of men on contract work, at Syracuse, and later engaged in business for himself, which he conducted for four and a half years. In 1890 he came west to Centralia, Washington, and in 1891 he came to North Yakima, where he began contracting and building. He has constructed some of the best buildings in the city, among others the Opera house, Clogg, Ditter and Wisconsin blocks, and some of the best residences. He was married in Syracuse, New York, in 1884, to Grace M. Ashfield, a native of that city and daughter of William H. and Rhoda (Kemp) Ashfield. The father was a native of New York and was a druggist for years. He was a veteran of the Civil war and was one of President Lincoln's body guards at the time of his assassination. His mother was born in New York, of Scotch parents. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Howard were born the following children: Bessie, Frauk W., Warren, Alexander H., and Florence. Fraternally, Mr. Howard is a member of the Masonic, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and Elks orders. He is a pronounced Democrat, and owns a comfortable home in the city.

JOHN P. MATTOON. Not only is John P. Mattoon, the subject of this article, one of the oldest pioneers of Yakima county, but he is among the oldest remaining settlers of the Northwest, having crossed the Plains to Oregon in the year of the famous "Whitman massacre," at the age of thirteen. He was born in Lucas county, Ohio, December 26, 1834, to Abel and Sarah M. Mattoon, natives of the state of New York. His parents moved to Ohio in an early day and were counted pioneers of the state as well as of Indiana, to which latter state they moved from Ohio. On March 10, 1847, subject started from LaGrange county, Indiana, to cross the Plains with ox teams, which he succeeded in doing after many months of slow, tedious travel, meeting with no serious interruption on his journey, and with no interference from the Indians. He arrived in the Willamette valley in the fall and settled at Oregon City, where he completed his education and then engaged in farming. He followed agriculture there for seventeen years, making a success of it, so much so, that in 1864 he was appointed by the government as farm instructor at Fort Simcoe, under Indian Agent Bancroft. He served in this capacity for four and one-half years, most of the time under J. H. Wilbur, better known as "Father Wilbur," who superseded Bancroft the same year of Mr. Mattoon's appointment. In 1869 he engaged in stock raising on the east side of the river, where Parker is now located. He followed the stock business for some eighteen years and then sold out and opened a livery stable, which he still runs. He has one sister, Mrs. William Hughes, living in Whitman county. He was married in Oregon, October 29, 1858, to Martha Hickenbothom, daughter of George and Jerusha Hickenbothom, the former a native of Ireland and the latter born in Connecticut. Mrs. Mattoon was born in Tazewell county, Illinois, March 23, 1839. Her brother William, who now resides in Oregon, was a volunteer in the Indian war in that state; the other brother, George, is a farmer in Oregon. Mr. Mattoon has one daughter and one son, George Lincoln and Annie J. Watt (now deceased), wife of George H. Watt, professor of pharmacy in the State Agricultural College at Pullman. Mr. and Mrs. Mattoon are members of the Congregational church.

JOSEPH MONDOR. One of the substantial farmers of the Tampico country is Joseph Mondor, a Canadian by birth, born in 1835, from the union of Isadore and Sallie (Laplish) Mondor. His parents were both of Canadian birth, and farmed there for years. The mother died when her son Joseph was but four years of age, the father living to the ripe old age of eighty. At the death of the mother our subject was taken to raise by his grandparents, attending school until the age of sixteen, when he went to learn the blacksmith's trade. At the end of two years he quit the trade and worked on a steamboat for three years on the St. Lawrence river; following which he spent a year in Upper Canada. He went to California in 1856 via Nicaragua, landing in San Francisco in November of that year. In the spring he started for Placer Falls, traveling the entire distance of three hundred miles on foot. He remained there but a short time, returning to Sacramento, where he purchased a place and farmed for three years. He then tried Nevada for a time, but not liking it, returned to California again and engaged in farming. In 1868 he returned to Canada and was married, bringing his wife to California, where he purchased a fine farm and a large tract of railroad land and settled down for many years to farming and raising stock. In 1882 he sold out everything, and the following year moved to Walla Walla, Washington, and in the fall of 1884 came to Tampico, and rented a farm. afterwards purchasing the ranch where he now lives, and where he has made his home ever since. He put a homestead filing on his ranch, and starting in right from the foundation has developed his place into a high state of cultivation, with fine orchard, eight-room house, large convenient barns and out buildings. He is a diversified farmer, giving his attention to raising hops, hay, fruit and stock. He was married in Canada in 1868 to Eliza Arcand, daughter of Francis Arcand, a blacksmith by trade, who lived and died in Canada. Mrs. Mondor was born in Canada in 1845, graduated from the St. John Academy and followed teaching for six years. She is well read and of a literary turn. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Mondor have been born the following children: Isadore, Alphonse, Mrs. Mary Slavin, Joseph L., Frank A., Henry G., Louise and Willie. They are of the Catholic faith, and Mr. Mondor is an active Democrat. He has been school director at Tampico for five years, and takes deep interest in educational matters.

ROBERT CRORY. Few men have had a more varied career, or have taken a more thorough course in training in the school of life than has he whose name forms the title of this article. He has been as far north and as far south as civilized men usually go and he has sought the favor of Fortune in many parts of the globe. Like most other men of an adventurous turn, he has given much attention to mining, and like most other devotees of the business he has had his ups and downs.

Mr. Crory is a native of the province of New Brunswick, born near St. George, December 24, 1835. His father, David, and his mother, Mary (Stenson) Crory, were both from the vicinity of Belfast, Ireland, and by occupation the former was a farmer and lumberman. Public schools had not been established in New Brunswick at that time, but around the family hearth our subject got the rudiments of an education. He finished his training in the school of experience, a very good college, but one that often exacts a high tuition fee. Most of his time after he became ten years old was spent away from home working in mills, lumber camps, on the farm and at fishing and sometimes before the mast. He also spent three years at the cooper's trade. The 15th of April, 1865, he set out by the isthmus route for the Pacific coast. The steamer on which he embarked, the Golden Rule, was wrecked on a coral reef one hundred and eighty miles from Aspinwall, on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus of Panama. Passengers and crew numbered about eight hundred and twenty-five persons, and to feed them were two barrels of salt meat and enough biscuits to furnish each person one a day for six weeks. Water on the island there was none, but they found that they could slake their thirst in a measure by lying in the ocean water and allowing the pores of the skin to absorb what they would of it. They dispatched a life-boat to Aspinwall, but she met with an accident, lost her compass and failed to bring relief. Next day, however, another life-boat was dispatched and she had better success, reaching the town in due time. Shortly after she arrived there two American men-of-war, the State of Georgia and the Huntsville, entered port, and these at once went to the rescue, finding, however, on arrival that certain turtle fishermen from the Mosquito Coast, into whose hands the first life-boat's crew had fallen, had reached the scene of the wreck before them. The shipwrecked crew and passengers were brought away to safety after eleven days of hardship and partial starvation.

Mr. Crory crossed the isthmus and came on to San Francisco, thence to Puget Sound, where he entered the employ of the Port Gamble Milling Company, with whom he remained for three years. Shortly after quitting their service he returned to New Brunswick for a visit, again crossing the isthmus. He intended to stay at home for a considerable time, but soon the White Pine, Nevada, silver excitement reached him and he hastened back to the West, although he was dissuaded by adverse reports from going all the way to the silver mines. He was soon again in the lumber business, this time working for the Port Madison mills. He was thus employed for four years except while making another short visit home. The trip there was made by the isthmus route, but the return was by the Union Pacific and San Francisco. Upon leaving Port Madison, Mr. Crory went into the Omanika mining district over the Arctic divide in Alaska, but though coarse gold was there in abundance the expense of living was so great that little could be made, and our subject went back to the Sound, after spending a couple of mining seasons there, with little money in his pocket. As soon, however, as he had made another stake he returned to the North, going this time up the Stikeen river. He made the trip in the winter time with forty-four other white men and one hundred and twenty-five Indians, and though the weather was bitterly cold he suffered little inconvenience, so thoroughly habituated did he become to the rigors of the climate. They prospected on one of the streams whose waters finally flow into Peace river and Mr. Crory struck an exceedingly rich claim. Had he held it he could have made his fortune, but he soon acquired other property, which he was led to believe was just as good and being unable to work all to advantage he sold his interest in it. He later discovered that the vender of the other property had grossly misrepresented it. The result of it all was that instead of making a fortune he lost heavily.

With what money he had left Mr. Crory started for South America, but learning that reports of rich prospects there were ill founded he went to South Africa instead, passing through New York, Liverpool and London on the way. Landing at Port Natal, he went thence to Petrusburg, where the British soldiers were stationed, thence by ox team and cart to the Transvaal, where was a rich placer deposit known as Pilgrim's Rest, the object of his visit to South Africa. He found that the deposit was indeed rich, but it was quite well worked out and there was no show for him there. His partner wished to remain, however, and they separated, Mr. Crory going to the Kimberly diamond fields. For a month after his arrival he was sick with Natal fever, but upon recovery he found the prospects in diamond mining excellent. Australians were there rewashing debris and finding, by superior methods, ten diamonds where one had been found when the dirt was first washed. Boys and girls even were making money. Mr. Crory hastily sent for his partner and the two bought a half claim, which was considered by the venders as no good, but it turned out well and for a time they made money rapidly. Eventually, however, a boom was experienced in the diamond fields, properties going skyward in price, and Mr. Crory invested quite heavily. On one of his claims he sunk a well to avoid paying for water. Though he did well at diamond mining as far as discovering the diamonds was concerned, the price soon dropped so that he could only pay the royalty on his claims and he was forced to abandon them. Again he had missed it when fortune seemed in sight. The cause of all this fluctuation was that a large syndicate had been formed in London to control the diamond market and was manipulating things for its own interests.

Mr. Crory next went to Australia. He traveled extensively over the southern part of the island and over the New Zealand Islands, but though he liked the appearance of the country he did not find any inducements to remain, so the fall of 1876 found him again in San Francisco. He went thence to the Sound and from there started for Arizona, but when he had got as far as San Francisco he changed his mind and went instead to Canada, where he worked on the final location of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. In 1877 he started again for Arizona. Again he changed his mind, coming rather to the Yakima country, where he took up land in the Wenas valley, two hundred acres in all. He has made his home in Yakima county ever since, though his farm was sold in 1887 and the proceeds invested in interests around North Yakima. He also has property in Gray's Harbor.

In Yakima county, in 1878, Mr. Crory married Ellen J. Gray, a native of New Brunswick, born in 1834. She died on the 13th of August, 1897, leaving no children. In politics, Mr. Crory is an ardent Republican. His life has been an eventful one and replete with adventures, so replete, indeed, that if his whole story were told a fair sized and very interesting volume would be produced.

LOT DURGAN, farmer, North Yakima, was born in Vancouver, Washington, March 15, 1867. His father, Alonzo Durgan, was a native of Ohio, and crossed the Plains in 1851 with his parents, at the age of fifteen. He located near Vancouver, Washington, and was here married and lived there until 1870, when he came to Yakima county, and took up land. He continued to reside here until his death in 1894. He was of Scotch and English parentage. His mother, Nancy (Dillon) Durgan, was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and crossed the Plains when three years old, with her parents. Her father was a member of the first territorial legislature in Washington. The subject of this article grew to manhood in Yakima county, and attended in addition to the public schools of the county a business college at Portland. At the age of fourteen he began to learn the trade of printer, at which he worked for four years and a half. Before his father's death he took the management of the home farm, which he has continued to operate until January, 1902, when he moved to North Yakima, his present place of residence. W. H. Johnson, of North Yakima, is a half-brother. Mr. Durgan was married in Ellensburg in 1899 to Mrs. S. J. Mabry, widow of W. H. Mabry, deceased. Her father was John Martin. She was born in Iowa and came west with her parents to Idaho, and later to Klickitat county, Washington, where she was educated and first married. Mr. Durgan is a Republican. Fraternally, he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, Red Men and Eagles. He owns city property in North Yakima, is thoroughly identified with the country's growth and development and is one of its most worthy pioneers.

HENRY L. TUCKER, liveryman of North Yakima and ex-sheriff of Yakima county, is a pioneer of 1876. He first settled in Yakima City, where for several years he was engaged in the feed business. As soon as the townsite of North Yakima was surveyed, he established his livery barn here, and has continued in business here ever since. He is the pioneer liveryman of Yakima county. Mr. Tucker was born in Indiana, February 16, 1847. His parents were Meshach and Nancy (Brown) Tucker, neither of whom are now living. His father, born in 1807, was a farmer and blacksmith, and a native of Tennessee. His mother, born in 1809, was a native of Ohio. November 8, 1862, at the age of fourteen, Mr. Tucker enlisted in company D, Forty-seventh Indiana infantry, and was at once sent to the front. He served with Grant at the siege of Vicksburg, and was also in the battles of Port Gibson, Champion Hill, Big Black river, and of Jackson, Mississippi. At the battle of Champion Hill his haversack was shot away; otherwise he escaped injury through all these engagements. He was honorably discharged at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, October 24, 1865. He returned at once to Indiana, but in 1866 went to Iowa, followed stage driving two years and afterwards assisted in the construction of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, through Iowa and Nebraska. In 1871 he went to Portland, Oregon, and from there to southwestern Washington, where he assisted in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad from Kalama to Tacoma, continuing in the employ of the company for about six years. Coming to Yakima county in 1876, he followed prospecting for several years, locating the Gold Hill placer mines shortly after his arrival. During the early years he also engaged for some time in the lumber trade, running the first logs ever driven down the Yakima river, and operating a freight and pack train between The Dalles and Yakima City, eventually settling in the latter place. Mr. Tucker was married in Yakima City, July 9, 1883, to Miss Emma J. Leach, to which union were born a daughter and a son: Clara (Tucker) Jennett, of Seattle, born June 19, 1884, and Harry A. Tucker, born May 2, 1886. Mr. Tucker is the sixth of a family of eight children, all but three of whom are living. The names of brothers and sisters are as follows: Anderson (deceased), Sarah J. (Tucker) Holt, Minnesota; Joshua B. (deceased), Elizabeth (Tucker) Hingson (deceased), Harriet A. (Tucker) Robinson, Minnesota; Eliza (Tucker) Niles, Nebraska, and Jasper N., of Minnesota. Mrs. Tucker has brothers and sisters as follows: John Leach and Martha Scott, of North Yakima; Horace, in Alaska; John C., in Minnesota; Sarah E. Liggett, Dora E. Bunnell, Melissa Churchill, Frank W., Henry W., Minnie Thompson, George W., Lillie and Lottie, all of North Yakima. Henry W. Leach served through the Spanish war in the Philippines as quartermaster sergeant and, just prior to his discharge, was promoted to a second lieutenancy. Fraternally, Mr. Tucker is connected with the Masons, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the T. O. T. E. M. He is a staunch Republican and has served four years as sheriff of the county. He has also served three terms as city councilman, refusing a fourth term on account of press of personal business. He has one of the most thoroughly equipped liveryies in central Washington and also operates four stage lines out of North Yakima, two of them on daily schedules. Mr. Tucker is extensively interested in town property and owns and occupies one of the best residences in the city. He is public spirited and enterprising; always active in promoting the best interests of town and community, and is esteemed as one of the most reliable and worthy citizens.

JOHN H. MILLER, farmer, fourteen miles southwest of North Yakima, first came to Washington in June, 1876, on a prospecting tour, and settled for a time at Goldendale. In May, 1879, he moved to Yakima county, where he has since lived. He was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, February 26, 1850, of German parents. His father, John F. Miller, came to the United States when a young man, and served through the Mexican war as captain, and later trapped on the Mississippi river, always being on the frontier. He died in 1863. The mother, Louise Mielkersman, also a native of Germany, died in 1865. At the age of eight, our subject's parents moved with him to Arkansas, and when sixteen, he went to Texas, where he farmed for a time, returning to Missouri in 1872, where he remained for two years. He then went to California, and after a year moved to Oregon, later, as narrated, settling in Washington. He ranched on the Yakima river for a time for Phelps & Wadley, and they failing, he ran the place for Ben Snipes. At this time he took up a ranch west of North Yakima, which he owned for ten years, but failing to secure artesian water, he sold it and moved to the Ahtanum valley, where he has since lived. He was married in 1884 to Mary Belts, daughter of Daniel and Caroline (Veelcks) Belts, both natives of Pennsylvania. The former was a pioneer of forty-nine on the Pacific coast, and was drowned while in Oregon. After her husband's death the mother married John L. Morrison in Illinois. In 1877 they came west to Oregon, Mrs. Miller accompanying her stepfather and mother, the latter dying the same year in Oregon. Mrs. Miller was born in Illinois, October 15, 1849, the same year her father crossed the Plains, and she never saw him. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have two children, Minnie W., now deceased, and Cora C., born August 4, 1888. Mr. Miller is a Republican and a member of the fraternal order of Yeomen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOSIAH H. MORRISON, farmer, and for twenty-three years a resident of Yakima county, lives on the Ahtanum, ten miles west and four south of North Yakima, where he is engaged in raising stock, hay and fruit. He is a native of Illinois, born March 16, 1865. His father, John L. Morrison, a leading farmer of this county, was born in Illinois and crossed the Plains in 1877 to Oregon, and in 1880 came to Yakima county, and is now living in Ahtanum valley. The mother, Caroline (Veelcks) Morrison, was born in Pennsylvania and moved to Illinois, where she was united in marriage to her first husband, Daniel Belts, who later met his death by drowning, in Oregon. She ten years later married John L. Morrison. Her second husband moved to Oregon in 1877, shortly after the death of his wife. Our subject came with his parents to Oregon when ten years of age, and three years later came with them to Yakima county. At the age of sixteen he began to ride the range, herding stock, and followed this for six years. He then went to work at the carpenter trade, which he followed for some six years, still returning to the range occasionally. In 1894, he bought a farm of one hundred acres and moved onto it. He now has it largely under cultivation, with ten acres in orchard. He was married in the Ahtanum valley January 1, 1894, to Carrie L. Minner, daughter of William H. and Harriet (Shamp) Minner. The father was a native of Iowa and a veteran of the Civil war. He moved to Oregon in 1864, after his discharge from the army and in 1876 came to the Ahtanum valley, where he still lives. The mother was born in Ohio of Pennsylvania Dutch parents. Mrs. Morrison was born in Oregon in 1869, and came to this state when eight years of age. She has five living brothers and sisters: Julian E. Minner, Jennie Lisle, Lida Crosna and Nellie Clater. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison have four children: Lester, born October 1, 1884; Gerald, born July 22, 1887; Prudence, born September 19, 1898, and Minnie, born February 28, 1903. Mr. Morrison is an active Democrat. He is also counted a good citizen and neighbor and a man of integrity.

ORBIN F. NOBLE, a farmer living near North Yakima, was born in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1848, to the marriage of George W. and Eliza (Cerplus) Noble. The father, a native of Maine, was born in 1818, and followed mercantile pursuits. He immigrated to Ohio when a young man and was there married, but at a later date he moved to Illinois and then to Iowa, where he died. The mother was born in Ohio to Irish parents. She is still living in Iowa. Our subject moved to Iowa with his parents when a small boy, and there grew to young manhood and received his education. He began working out at the age of sixteen, and four years later entered the employ of the railroad company, remaining so occupied for ten years, through the states of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, California and Arizona. In 1888, he came to Washington and engaged in farming, which business he has pursued successfully ever since. Three years ago he purchased his present farm of forty acres, principally seeded to grass, and engaged in the dairy business. He was married in this state in 1889 to Mrs. Lois Shaffer, a native of Switzerland, born in 1868. Coming to the United States with her parents when a very small child, she became a resident of Illinois, where she was first married. Her first husband was, however, killed in an accident shortly after his marriage. Her father, Beauty Coffey, was a blacksmith, born in Switzerland. Mr. and Mrs. Noble's children are: Minnie, Howard and Ida L., the first two born in King county and the latter in Yakima. Fraternally, Mr. Noble is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Masonic orders, and his wife with the Eastern Star. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Mr. Noble belongs to the Republican party. Mr. Noble is conducting a very successful farming and dairy business.

ERNEST W. FRENCH, farmer and dairyman on the Ahtanum, was born in Massachusetts, September 24, 1863. His father, a ship carpenter, was born in the Bay state in 1841, being a direct descendant of the noted Winslow family of that state. He followed engineering for several years, running ships and tugboats. Adelaide (Phillips) French, the mother, was born in Massachusetts in 1844, and still lives in this state. She traces her ancestry back to the Staples family of the early times in her native state. Our subject attended school in his native state until seventeen, when he engaged to learn the trade of machinist, serving an apprenticeship of three years. In 1883 he went to Texas, and from there to St. Louis, working at his trade, overhauling and repairing the presses of the Globe-Democrat while there. He then went to Omaha, from there came west and engaged in the construction work of the Oregon Short Line, in Oregon. At the end of a year he went to the Puget Sound country and located on Hood's Canal, where he remained until 1889, going from there to Mason county, where he bought a ranch and farmed until 1900. He then came to Yakima county and bought a farm in Parker's Bottom, and two years later, bought his present farm on the Ahtanum. He was married in Seattle, in 1888, to Miss Ida M. Troutman, a native of Illinois, who had come to Washington with her parents the same year. Her father and mother are Daniel and Lucy (Townsend) Troutman, the former a real estate dealer, and both natives of Indiana. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. French have been born four children: Arthur D., Edward A., George W. and Ernest O. Mr. and Mrs. French are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is fraternally associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while politically, he affiliates with the Republican party.

JESSE W. REYNOLDS, who resides on his farm nine and one-half miles west, and two and one-half miles south, of North Yakima, came to Yakima county October 24, 1884, and settled in the Ahtanum. He was born in Missouri in 1838, to the marriage of David and Mary (Kelly) Reynolds. The father was a Missouri pioneer, settling in that state in 1834, and came of Holland and French stock. He was born in Tennessee in 1797, and died in 1870. The mother was a native of Tennessee and lived to the ripe old age of ninety years and six months; she was the mother of eight children. The subject of this biography grew to manhood on the farm in Missouri, gaining what education the common schools of his district afforded. At the age of twenty-two he volunteered in the three months' service under Captain Abernathy, at the end of which time sickness prevented his further service. On his recovery he engaged in farming; later took charge of the home place, which he conducted until his father's death in 1876. He then went to Kansas for a year, and from there crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1877, locating in Union county, where he followed farming and dairying for seven years. In 1884 he came to this county, renting a farm in the Ahtanum country for a year, and later living on the Cowiche for eight years, when he purchased his present place. Here he has since lived, farming and raising stock. He was married in Greene county, Missouri, in 1867, to Miss Susan Garrett, daughter of William D. and Elizabeth (Dutton) Garrett, the former a farmer and native of New Jersey, and the latter a native of Ohio. Mrs. Reynolds was born in Missouri in 1844, where she was raised and educated. To her union with Mr. Reynolds have been born the following children: Mrs. Mary Milborne, Mrs. Bertha J. O'Neil, John F., David D., Franklin D., William M., Mrs. Amy F. Fear, Sarah E., and Jessie F. Politically, Mr. Reynolds affiliates with the Republican party. He owns two hundred and forty acres of land and considerable stock, and is prospering.

ELMER B. MARKS, farmer and stockman, was born in Linn county, Oregon, September 18, 1870, from the marriage of John P. and Ellen (Williams) Marks, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Illinois, and both pioneers in Oregon, to which country they traveled in teams in 1853 and 1845, respectively, with their parents, and where they were united in marriage in 1867. The mother died in Yakima county in 1891, and the father now lives in the Ahtanum valley, a well-to-do and respected farmer and stockman. He served two terms as superintendent of education of Yakima county. Our subject's parents moved from Oregon to Yakima county when he was one year of age, and here he has grown up and lived since, receiving his education in the common schools, with a course in the Empire business college at Walla Walla. On his return from Walla Walla he engaged in the butcher business at North Yakima, but selling this out in a short time, he and his brother Charles went to Weiser, Idaho, where he remained three years, then went to Oregon for a few months and returned home to the Ahtanum in the fall of 1896. He put in one year on a rented farm, and then went to work for his father on the farm, at the same time buying stock for himself, which he continued to increase as best he could. In 1898, he and his brother bought stock together and became interested in ten and one-half sections of grazing land, on which they ranged their cattle, besides considerable other land. He was married in Yakima county in May, 1899, to Miss Myrtle Morrison, daughter of James W. and Mattie (Good) Morrison. Her father is a farmer and native of Missouri, who crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1874, and six years later came to Yakima county. The mother is a native of North Carolina. Mrs. Marks is a native of Yakima county, where she was born February 13, 1881, and was educated in the academy. Her brothers and sisters are Wallace, Mrs. Maud Garrison, Edna, Chester, Ethel and Warren. To their union Mr. and Mrs. Marks have had two children born: John P., Jr., and Gladys H. Mr. Marks is a Democrat and a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. In their church relations the husband is a Congregationalist and the wife a member of the Christian church. Mr. Marks is a highly esteemed citizen.

WEBSTER L. STABLER. Among the early pioneers of Yakima county who have had a hand in the experiences of those primitive days as well as in the later developments and progress of this now populous county, the name of Webster L. Stabler should appear. Born in 1832 in the Keystone state, his parents moved with him at the age of five to the then wild western country of Illinois. Here he was reared amid the border scenes of that state until he had reached the age of twenty, acquiring his education in the log cabin schoolhouse and developing muscle and hardihood in the various duties required about the home. In 1852, when but twenty, he started from Morgan county, Illinois, with ox teams, to cross the wide expanse of prairie, desert and mountains, a path beset with dangers of floods and Indians on the one hand and privation and exposure on the other. He reached Portland, his destination, on October 8, 1852, at the end of a six months' journey, and, after wintering there, he took a pre-emption claim in the spring, just across from Vancouver on the Oregon side of the line, where he engaged in farming and stock raising until 1864, when he went to the Salmon river mines in Idaho, where he mined and ran a pack-train into the Boise mines, in partnership with A. J. Bean. He later returned to his ranch near Vancouver, and was married to Miss Melinda S. Hayden, February 22, 1864. In 1868 he bought a bunch of cattle and drove them to Yakima county, taking up a claim in the Ahtanum valley and putting up hay for his stock. He then returned to his place in Oregon, leaving a man in charge of the new ranch. In the spring of 1869, he returned and filed on the land, which has never since changed hands nor had a mortgage on it. His wife died in Vancouver, Washington, August 7, 1869, before he got his effects moved to his present home. Her father, Gay Hayden, was a native of New York, and crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1850, settling near Vancouver. In 1882, Mr. Stabler was united in marriage to Mrs. Harriet Millican; to which union were born two children: Gay, born September 17, 1883, and Lewis, August 17, 1887. Mr. Stabler is an active Republican, and in 1890 was appointed Indian agent at Fort Simcoe, but resigned after holding the position for a year and a half, preferring to attend to his ranch and stock rather than pose as an office holder. He owns a fine ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, and makes a specialty of breeding Shorthorn and Holstein cattle, of which he owns some fine specimens. Mr. Stabler is recognized as an enterprising, public-spirited citizen and a good neighbor.

MRS. MARY SIMPSON. In pioneering in new countries, where deprivations and exposures are suffered alike by all members of the family, as in war times, when the husband is called to the front, and the patient, enduring wife is left at home to endure the cares of the family and the mental anguish and continued suspense of uncertainty, who is there to sing of her heroism or record her deeds of self-denial? Few, far too few, historians deal fairly, if at all, with this class of pioneers. Among the pioneers of Yakima county, Mrs. Mary Simpson is certainly entitled to a place in the annals of its development. She was born in Springfield, Illinois, in 1839, from the union of Willis and Sarah (Tarman) Northcutt. Her father was born in Ohio in 1803 from pioneer parents. He was a lawyer by profession and was educated in Columbus. He crossed the Plains to California in 1850, and, after mining there for some time, moved to Oregon, where he was joined by his family in 1855. The mother was born in Ohio, in 1805, and was married at the age of twenty. She traveled from Illinois to Oregon in an ox-train to join her husband. Mrs. Simpson, when sixteen, came with her mother across the Plains, to Morrow county, Oregon, and four years later was united in marriage to James B. Simpson. They continued to live in Oregon until 1870, when they moved to Yakima county and took up the place where she now resides. Her husband, James B. Simpson, was born in Franklin county, Missouri, in 1828, and went to California in 1850, and, after mining until 1862 went to Oregon, where he met his wife and married her. He died in Yakima county in 1866. To this marriage were born the following children: Alice Angeline, now living at Fort Simcoe, where she has been in the employ of the government as teacher in the Indian school for the past twelve years; Alma Solomon, California; Jemima Gallager, also a teacher for several years at Fort Simcoe; Nettie Swanson, Everett, and William, at home. Mrs. Simpson is a member of the Christian church. Her husband was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. She owns the old homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, well improved, with eighty acres in alfalfa, ten acres in hops, and the remainder pasture land. Her son, William, is running the farm for her.

JOSEPH E. ESCHBACH is one of the prosperous young farmers of Yakima county, who has a bright outlook before him. He came of French parents, although a native of the United States himself, as is also his mother. He was born in Blue Earth county, Minnesota, March 19, 1860. His father, John P. Eschbach, was born in Alsace, France, in 1823, where he was married and his wife died, leaving three children. He then came to the United States, and settled in Minnesota, where he married Miss Barbara Sugg, of Buffalo, New York, whose parents were born in France, at the same place as her husband. Her father served nine years with Napoleon. To this marriage were born ten children. She is living in North Yakima; the husband died in 1893. Our subject came to Yakima county with his parents, and received the last three years of his schooling here, working at the same time with his father on the farm until twenty-two. He then worked with his uncle for a year and also a year with his brother. He then tried hop raising, and in 1895 took charge of his father's farm, he and his brother forming a partnership in the business. They have greatly improved the productiveness of the ranch since taking charge of it, having one hundred acres seeded down to alfalfa, and the remainder to hops, clover and grain, with some plow land. He started with ten head of cattle, which have been increased to three hundred head, with a good band of well bred horses. He was married in North Yakima in 1899, to Miss Mary Sandmeyer, daughter of Stephen and Theresa E. (Roxlau) Sandmeyer, both natives of Germany, who settled in Minnesota, where they were married. In 1883 they moved to Yakima county, where they have since lived. Mrs. Eschbach was born in St. James, Minn., in 1878, and was raised in Yakima City principally, but spent five years at Cle-Elium with her family. She has five brothers and sisters, all living in North Yakima: Matthew, Anna, Joseph N., Irene and Ernest. They have two children: Barbara and George A., both born in North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Eschbach are of the Catholic communion. Politically, Mr. Eschbach is an active Democrat. He and his brothers have jointly six hundred and eighty acres of grazing land on the Cowiche, with stock, mining interests and town property in North Yakima. Mr. Eschbach is a wide-awake, rustling young business man, well esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances.

MRS. CATHERINE F. LYNCH. Among the pioneers of Yakima county, none are more deserving of a place in history than the noble, brave wives and mothers who came from their homes in the East and older settled portions of the West, and faced the dangers and hardships of the early days in the settlement of this country; and few of those pioneer mothers, probably, have seen and experienced more of those deprivations than has the subject of this sketch, Mrs. Catherine F. Lynch. She is a native of Cork, Ireland, where she was born September 25, 1861, and was brought by her parents to the United States the same year, where she was raised under the influences of the customs and schools of her adopted country. The parents, Timothy J. and Julia (McCarthy) Lynch, were both born in Ireland, and settled in New York on first coming to this country, later coming to Yakima county, where they still live, making North Yakima their home. Mrs. Lynch was raised in Washington, where she first met Daniel Lynch, and at the age of seventeen was united to him in marriage. Mr. Lynch was a native of Ireland, born in 1835. He came to California in 1849, with the great influx of gold seekers, and, after mining there for a number of years, came to Yakima county in 1868, and took up the homestead where the widowed wife now lives, and where he lived until his death in 1889. At this time the widow was left with the care of her five children and the management of the farm, which added responsibilities she has met with faithfulness and conducted with tact and business ability equaled by few. Her children are: Catherine, born in 1880; Mary E., born 1881; John J., born in 1883; Daniel, born in 1886, and Hannah J., born in 1889. Mrs. Lynch and family are members of the Catholic church, and the husband was an active Democrat. Mrs. Lynch has one hundred and seventy-nine acres of land, half of which is in cultivation, and some seventeen acres of hops; also a good bunch of cattle and horses.

FRANK EGLIN, farmer and hop grower, living one and one-half miles east of Tampico, is a native son of Yakima county, born in the Tampico valley, October 12, 1878, from the union of Abraham D. and Margaret F. (Crews) Eglin, now living near Tampico. The father was born in Canada, June 11, 1834, and his father and mother, Cornelius and Mary (Dolson) Eglin, were natives of New York and New Jersey, respectively, and moved to Canada in 1844, later returning to Indiana, where they raised their family. Subject's father was reared in Indiana, and at the age of twenty started for the Pacific coast by ox teams, driving a team of slow-moving bovines over the long, tortuous trail to Eugene, Oregon, where he landed in the fall of 1854 and shortly afterwards departed for the gold fields of California, where he mined four years. He then returned to Corvallis, Oregon, where he followed butchering and operated a dray at the same time, for some five years. In 1871 he moved to Yakima county and took up a quarter section of land, which he has owned ever since, and where he now resides, near Tampico. Here have been reared all of his family, including the subject of this sketch. His mother was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, in 1837, and went to Oregon when a small girl, where she was afterwards married. She is the mother of eleven children: Benjamin K., Mrs. Lavina Strong, John S., Mrs. Judith Dithenthaler, Warren M., Mrs. Olivia L. Barth, Thomas W., Charles D., George W., James B. and Frank. Mr. Eglin's father is one of the leading farmers of the county, and in 1899 was elected county commissioner, serving in this capacity for two years. He is at present running one of his father's farms, and is giving his attention to hop growing and hay. The subject of this biography was married in North Yakima, in 1900, to Miss Maggie Bates, daughter of Thomas and Celia (Logsdon) Bates, both natives of Missouri, now residing near Toppenish. They were early settlers in Washington, coming to Walla Walla when that city was merely a fort, and there Mrs. Eglin was born in 1878. Her parents removed to Idaho when she was still a young girl, later going to Oregon and thence to Yakima county, where their daughter was married at the age of twenty-two. Her husband is a young man of energy, perseverance and progressive ideas. He is a man of honor and integrity, whose future prospects are bright and who enjoys the confidence and respect of all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

HENRY KNOX, who resides upon his ranch, twenty-one miles west and south of North Yakima, near Tampico, first came into Yakima county in 1865, when things wore the wild and untamed appearance of those very early times, but as his stay was only brief, he dates his residence here from 1873, when he first made permanent settlement on the farm where he now resides. Mr. Knox is a Pennsylvanian, and comes of Scotch and German parents. He was ushered into this world on July 17, 1828, in the old Keystone state, where he lived until eighteen, when he made his first trip from his native state, going into the copper mines of Michigan, where he stayed but one year, returning again to his old home. At the end of four years he went to Minnesota, took up land and engaged in farming for eight years. When he had the place improved, he sold it, just in time to get caught by the gold excitement at Pike's Peak, along with hundreds of other venturesome spirits. He remained there but a short time and went to the Indian Territory, remaining for two years, when he returned to Minnesota and engaged in milling for three years. He then fitted out with ox teams and joined a caravan across the Plains, heading for Puget Sound. They went via Walla Walla and up the Yakima river, and attempted to cross the Cascade range. This was in 1865, when there was only a trail making connection with the Sound country, and after reaching the end of the road they were forced to turn back and seek a new route down the Yakima valley, thence to The Dalles and on down to Vancouver by steamer. He stopped there, took up land, and farmed for eight years, then sold out, came to Yakima county and purchased land of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Here he has reared and educated his family of seven children: Eva D. Anderson, Samuel P., Eliza A. Shaw, Minnie M. Witzel, Jasper, Curtis W. and Jerod A. He was married in Minnesota, in 1857, to Miss Eveline Armstrong, daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Bartolett) Armstrong, natives of Pennsylvania, where she also was born. Mr. Knox's parents were Thomas and Susan (Sheckely) Knox, natives of Pennsylvania, where they both died. Mr. Knox devotes his attention principally to hop growing and the raising of hay, in both of which lines he is successful.

JOHN WETZEL, a farmer living near Tappan, in Yakima county, and a pioneer of 1873, was born in the province of Alsace-Lorraine, France, of German parents, in 1855. His father, John Wetzel, was a stone mason and a native of Alsace-Lorraine, in which country he also died. The mother, Elza (Blasmeier) Wetzel, was born in the same country as her husband, where she still lives. Mr. Wetzel was raised in the land of his nativity until he reached the age of seventeen, there attending the schools and learning the trade of stone mason with his father. He then turned his face toward the United States, the reputed land of liberty, free homes and unbounded wealth and opportunity for the thrifty and energetic poor man. He landed in New York and started westward for the Pacific coast, landing in San Francisco in 1873; thence going to Portland, The Dalles and to Yakima City, where he located, April 17, 1873. The year after his arrival he engaged to work for A. D. Eglin, with whom he continued for twelve years. During this time he took up a pre-emption claim and proved up on it, selling the same to Andrew Slavin. He then rented and farmed various places until 1892, when he purchased the place where he now lives, and where he has since resided. In 1883 he engaged in the brewery business at Yakima City, starting the second brewery at that place. He was married in Yakima City, January 6, 1884, to Miss Minnie Knox, daughter of Henry and Eveline (Armstrong) Knox, pioneers and at present residents of Yakima county, whose sketches appear in this volume. Mrs. Wetzel was born in Montana and raised in Yakima county. Her birth occurred while her parents were crossing the Plains from Minnesota to the Pacific coast. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wetzel have been born the following children: Zevala Mondor, Mary Mondor, Joseph, Josephine, Orenda, Elsie, Eva, Mabel, Henry, and the last, an infant. They are members of the Catholic communion, and Mr.

Wetzel is an active Republican, taking deep interest in the success of his party. In fact he is a man who takes interest in anything which he thinks is for the betterment of the country at large or his own immediate community, and is counted a man of honesty, and integrity.

EDWARD A. SHANNAFELT, who lives on his farm, one and one-half miles west of Tappan, was born of German parents in Michigan, in 1859, November 17th. He pre-empted his present farm in 1884, and it has been in his possession ever since. His father William H., was a farmer, born in Ohio in 1824. He was a pioneer in Michigan, where he went in an early day, took up land, and raised his family. He continued to live there until his death in 1900. His mother, Susan (Bleacher) Shannafelt, was born in Pennsylvania in 1831, and raised seven children. She still lives on the home place in Michigan. Our subject was educated in the preparatory college at Oberlin, Ohio, and later attended school one year at Ann Arbor, Michigan. He grew up on the farm, remaining at home working with his father until becoming of age. He then engaged in farming for himself for three years. In 1882 he came west to Oregon, where he remained but a short time, when he moved to Yakima county. He was married in Erie, Pennsylvania, in 1880, to Miss Carrie M. Howk, daughter of William and Mary (Renouard) Howk. Her father was a farmer, of English and German parentage. He enlisted as a soldier in the Civil war in the early sixties and was killed at the battle of the Wilderness. Her mother, who was of French descent, was born in Ohio, and raised six children. Mrs. Shannafelt was born in Ohio, April 16, 1845, and is the mother of four children, as follows: Floyd, born in Ohio, June 19, 1880, now a soldier in Manila; Ethel M., born in Ohio June 29, 1883; Daniel W., born in Washington January 27, 1880, now deceased; Bernice N., born in Washington, May 21, 1893. Mr. Shannafelt is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and he and family are connected with the Congregational church. He is an active Democrat and participates in the councils of his party. In 1882 he was proffered the nomination for county assessor by the Republican party, to which office he was elected that fall, serving two years. He also served as deputy assessor for a long period prior to his election as assessor. He owns a well-improved place with good residence and other buildings and conveniences. He is making a specialty of raising Holstein cattle, of which he has a nice herd of some twenty head.

CHARLES T. ANDERSON, a native of the Northwest, first settled in Yakima county in 1877, just at the time he had reached his majority. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, in 1856, to the union of Charles P. and Mary (Cahoon) Anderson. The father, a native of Kentucky and by trade a cabinet maker, crossed the Plains to Oregon by ox teams in 1852, and took up a donation claim. He lived there for eighteen years, then moved to Lewis county, Washington, where he still resides. His father was Swedish and his mother Scotch and English. The latter, a native of Indiana, died in 1902. She was the mother of eight children.

Our subject learned the trade of cabinet maker with his father when a boy and when twenty-one, built the first house erected in Centralia. Coming to Yakima county in 1877, he worked at his trade there for the ensuing six years, but in 1883 he squatted on his present farm, and held it in this way for eight years, when he filed on it. Putting out his first hop field of three and one-half acres in 1886, he has continued in the industry ever since, and now has nine acres. He is also engaged in general agriculture and in stock raising. Among the many improvements on his place is a fine eleven-room house and outbuildings in keeping with it, and indeed his farm is in all respects well kept, bespeaking thrift and industry in its owner.

In 1881, in Yakima county, Mr. Anderson married Eva D. Knox, a native of Minnesota, born in 1862. She crossed the Plains with her parents when little more than an infant, in 1865, passing up the Yakima river, near where they now live, while on this journey. Her parents, Henry and Eveline (Armstrong) Knox, are now living near Tampico, and their personal histories appear elsewhere in this volume. Her living brothers and sisters are: Eliza Shaw, Minnie M. Wetzel, Jasper, Curtis W. and Jerod A. Mr. Anderson has one brother and three sisters. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are: Clarence A., Charles H., George C., Adda L., Edythe, Guy, Fred, Amy J. and Lulu. Politically, Mr. Anderson is a Democrat. His farm of one hundred and sixty acres is in an excellent condition, well stocked with cattle and all horses needful for its successful operation. As a man and citizen, he enjoys a high standing in his community and county, his neighbors all respecting him for his industry and integrity.

JOHN W. SHAW, farmer and stock raiser and a Yakima county pioneer of 1874, was born in Illinois in 1852. His father, William Shaw, was a pioneer in Oregon. He crossed the Plains with an ox outfit in 1853, and in making a cut-off became lost on the way, and it was six weeks before they again found the trail. They were without water for three days at one time and, running out of provisions, were compelled to kill their own cattle and subsist upon meat alone without salt. At last reaching Douglas county, Oregon, he took up a donation claim, on which he lived eleven years, later spending seven years in the Grand Ronde valley, and finally departed this life in Yakima county in 1898. The mother, Eliza J. Miller, was a native of Pennsylvania and the mother of nine children. She died in 1900. Our subject was but one year old when his parents brought him across the Plains, entirely too young to have any remembrance of the hardships which they underwent, but he does have a very distinct recollection of the early experiences in that new country of his boyhood days. He grew to young manhood in Douglas county and the Grand Ronde valley, commencing to do for himself at the age of eighteen. When he was twenty he went to California, and later went to the mines in Nevada. He came from the latter state to Yakima county in 1874 and took up a pre-emption claim near the Woodcock Academy. This he sold at the end of six years and purchased of the Northern Pacific Railroad his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres, where he has since lived. He was married in 1876 to Miss Eliza A. Knox, daughter of the pioneer, Henry Knox. Mrs. Shaw was born in the Indian Territory in 1861, crossing the Plains with her parents in 1865. To Mr. and Mrs. Shaw have been born the following children: Anna P. Brawtner, William, Cecil, Martha, Vida, Carrie, Daisy, Emma and Archie, all living near Tampico. Politically, Mr. Shaw is a staunch Republican. In addition to raising hops extensively, he also handles a great deal of stock. He is one of the solid citizens of the county.

WILLIAM HAYMOND MINNER, deceased, a pioneer of 1875, was born in Indiana February 6, 1834. His father, Peter Minner, a farmer, was a native of Delaware, born in 1804. To him belonged the honor of having been one of the first settlers in Hamilton county, Indiana. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. The mother, Laticia (Holt) Minner, was born in Delaware in 1805 to Dutch and Scotch parents, and died in 1876. She was the mother of nine children. The subject of this sketch was raised in his native state. His father dying when he was a boy two years of age, he had but limited educational opportunities, indeed, and at the early age of nine he began to work out to help the mother in supporting the family. He continued to pursue this course until he was of age. The mother then sold the home place and moved to Iowa, where she and her two sons bought a place together. The brother dying in a short time, the place had to be disposed of. Mr. Minner then went to Missouri and took up eighty acres of land, and in a short time was married to Minerva Duree, who died two years later, leaving one child, who still lives. Mr. Minner enlisted in the army in the first year of the Civil war and served for almost three years, engaging in many of the hard-fought battles of that contest. He was then discharged for injuries received, and, returning home, outfitted with eight yokes of cows and started across the Plains to Oregon. He lived there for twelve years, and in 1875 moved to Yakima county. He rented land for two years on the Ahtanum, and during that period purchased one hundred and sixty acres, which never passed out of his hands. He improved the place, taking water out of the Ahtanum for irrigating purposes, building good barns and putting up the first good residence in the Ahtanum valley. After the death of his wife in Missouri he was married in 1862, in Iowa, to Harriett J. Shamp, who accompanied him on his trip across the Plains. She died in 1895, leaving six children: Elmer, Julia E., Jennie P. Lyle, Carrie L. Morrison, Lydia L. Crosno, Nora Claton. He was married again in 1897 to Mrs. Endis Hay, from whom he was divorced after five years. He then married Anna Stone, a cousin of the Rothschilds, who died shortly after the ceremony was performed. He was again married in recent years, and his last wife survives him.

Unfortunately a very few months ago, Mr. Miner became involved in a quarrel with Charles Myers, a renter of some of his farm property, and the latter shot and killed him.

CARPUS S. HALE, stock dealer and raiser, North Yakima, was born in the Willamette valley, Oregon, January 28, 1867. He comes of pioneer stock, his parents having grown up there from small children. His father, Milton Hale, was born in Indiana, in 1838, of Dutch and Irish parents, and was a stock raiser. He drove an ox team from his native state to Oregon, when but fourteen years of age, and settled with his parents in the Willamette valley. In 1871 he moved to Umatilla county, where he followed stock raising until 1894, at which time he moved to Yakima county, where he died the following year. The mother, Mary E. (Sperry) Hale, a native of Pennsylvania, came west to California with her parents, and later moved to Oregon, where she met and married her husband at the age of fifteen. Mr. Hale was raised in Umatilla county, and was with his father, assisting with the stock, until twenty years of age, at which time he purchased one hundred and sixty acres and went to do for himself. He then pre-empted another quarter section and also bought three hundred and twenty acres of the railroad. He farmed this for five years, then sold out and in 1892 moved to Yakima county. He first located at Zillah, where he opened a livery barn and butcher shop, operating these for three years, then he purchased a party's right to a homestead. This place he improved and lived upon for three years, at the end of which time he lost it through some technical error in the first filing. He then moved to North Yakima, and engaged in buying and selling stock, which he has since followed. He is also raising stock, having several hundred head on hand most of the time. He and his brother, Michael A., are business partners. His living brothers and sisters are: Caroline Cason, Cynthia Cochran, Sarah Cason, Michael A., Daniel, Perry, Guy, Della Armitage, Ida Grable, and Clay, all but three of whom live in Oregon. He was married in Oregon, in 1887, to Mary E. Haile, to which union were born two children, Hughie and Ida E. He was married the second time, in North Yakima, in 1902, to Lorena Lafferty, daughter of John and Sophia (Harding) Lafferty, both natives of Iowa, and pioneers of Washington. His wife has one sister, Bessie. Mr. Hale belongs to the Woodmen of the World, and was raised under the influence of the Baptist church. He is among the more prominent and influential pioneers of the county.

EDWARD SLAVIN, a farmer, living two miles north and three east of Tampico, was born in Lewis county, New York, in 1856, to Irish parents. His father and mother, Andrew and Ann (Duncan) Slavin, both of whom were born in Ireland, later settled in Minnesota, where the father farmed. Here young Slavin attended the schools of his district, and worked with his father on the farm until eighteen, when he started out to do for himself, working at any job that came his way, principally, however, in the forests of that country. In 1887, he came to Washington, settling in Yakima county, where he and his brother bought a quarter section of land of the railroad company. They cut logs on their place that fall, also worked together for a time on the brother's hop ranch. Mr. Slavin then spent three years in North Yakima running the street sprinkler and hauling lumber, then he went to the Big Bend country, where he farmed for a year. Returning to Yakima county at the end of that time, he engaged in farming on the Ahtanum, and he has been thus engaged ever since. He follows diversified farming, giving attention to hops, hay and stock, and achieving an excellent success in his line.

In Yakima City, in 1892, Mr. Slavin married Lillian, daughter of George Jervius, a merchant of that place. Mr. Jervius was born in Canada and came to Yakima City at a very early date. Mrs. Slavin is a native of Omaha, Nebraska, born in 1873, but she came to Washington when six years of age, and was educated here, teaching school for a time, after completing her education. Mr. and Mrs. Slavin's children are: Zoe S., born December 6, 1896; Helen M., born December 4, 1899, and Lawrence, born in 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Slavin are members of the Catholic church. Mr. Slavin is a pronounced Democrat. Coming to the county with little capital, he has, by industry and thrift, acquired a competency, and the respect which is ever willingly accorded those who prove themselves master of adversity is his to enjoy.

ANDREW C. GERVAIS, retired farmer, living in Yakima City, is numbered among the earliest pioneers in Yakima county, where he settled in June, 1861. He is a native of Franklin county, New York, where he was born in 1834, to the marriage of John B. and Angelica (Aquit) Gervais. His parents were both born in Canada, the father being a farmer and blacksmith. They were the parents of sixteen children. Our subject attended school until thirteen, when his father put him out to learn the shoemaker's trade, at which he served an apprenticeship of five years. He then went to New York and followed his trade in Albany, Troy and other points, for two years. At this time, 1852, he was taken with the western fever, and took ship for San Francisco via the Panama route, at which place he landed May 1, 1853, and, after remaining there for one year, went to Sacramento for six months and followed shoemaking, then came to Yakima county. He worked the first summer for William Parker, and spent the winter with Mortimer Thorp. During 1860-1, he followed packing from Umatilla to Boise Basin. During one of his trips the Indians stole his pack-train. While trying to recover the goods he was shot through the leg by a redskin, but ultimately recovered his goods and continued his trip in a wounded condition. In the spring of 1862 he took as a homestead a tract of land adjoining the present site of Yakima City, on which he lived until 1893, when he sold it. The next year he went east and renewed his acquaintance with his boyhood scenes after an absence of thirty-five years. In 1897 he again made a trip east, where he was married to Miss Mary Basonette. He brought his wife to Washington, where she died eight months later. In 1899 he was again married in the east to Miss Eliza Petaud. He brought his new bride to his home in Yakima City, where they have since lived. After the sale of his farm, Mr. Gervais purchased a comfortable home in Yakima City and retired from farm life. He has seen the development of his country from a wild waste of sage brush and grass, inhabited only by the Indian and his cayuse, the pioneer stock raiser with his range cattle, into its present advanced state of cultivation and civilization, with beautiful homes and the most productive orchards on the continent covering the valleys and hillsides, in all of which he has taken an active and honorable part, and in the history of which he is entitled to a permanent and lasting record page.

JAMES M. HENDERSON, farmer, and constable in North Yakima, was born in Indiana in 1844, from the union of William B. and Sarah (McKee) Henderson. His father was born in Ohio and went to Indiana in 1842, where he lived until 1856. He then immigrated to Minnesota, where he farmed and where he still lives at the age of ninety. He is of Scotch and English descent. The mother was also a native of Ohio, of Scotch parentage, and is now deceased. Our subject grew to young manhood in Minnesota, and when the war broke out he, at the age of twenty, enlisted and served one year. He then returned home and went to school again for twelve months; then followed farming until 1873 when he went to California. After five years he returned to Faribault, Minnesota, where he served as policeman for two years; then moved to Iowa. His health failing, he went to Kansas at the end of two years. In 1889 he came to North Yakima, following teaming for four years, when he was elected marshal, and at the end of one year purchased a ten-acre tract of land two miles west of town, which he improved by putting out an orchard and building a good house. This he sold later for three hundred dollars per acre and purchased an eighty-acre tract farther west, in the Ahtanum valley, which he is now devoting to hay and grain. In 1902 he purchased a home in North Yakima, where he resides at present. Mr. Henderson was married in Delaware county, Iowa, December 25, 1872, to Miss Louise Morse, daughter of Leonard L. and Julia (Farnum) Morse. The former was a native of Vermont, and was a pioneer of California. He died in Iowa. The mother was a native of New York. Mrs. Henderson is a native of Illinois. She was raised, educated and married in Iowa. She followed the profession of teacher for a number of years. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have been born four children as follows: Jennie, wife of David H. Guiland, a pioneer of this county, now living in Idaho; Etha C. Woodcock, living in Yakima county; Harry and William, deceased. The family attends the Christian Science church. Being a veteran of the Civil war, Mr. Henderson is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Politically, he is a Republican. He is active and progressive in political and business affairs and is esteemed by all who know him.

DAVID J. STEEVENS. The subject of this biography first came to Yakima county in the fall of 1868, when he assisted Sumner Barker in opening a store at Fort Simcoe, in which he clerked for several months. This was the second store started in the county. In the fall of 1869 the store was divided and half of it removed to Yakima City, then in its infancy, and the first store that place ever had was thus established, Mr. Steevens acting as clerk. The next spring he took up a ranch on the Ahtanum and after living there a short time removed to Fort Simcoe, in the capacity of government carpenter. After two years he returned to his farm and in 1876 opened a carpenter shop in Yakima City. He continued to live there until after the founding of North Yakima, when he removed to that city and engaged in carpentering. Here he followed his trade for nine years, at the end of which time he returned to the Ahtanum valley and once more went to farming, and this he has continued to follow ever since. Mr. Steevens was born in Pennsylvania in 1837 to the union of David E. and Adelia (Straight) Steevens, both natives of New York. His father was born in 1816 and died in Illinois. He was a carpenter by trade. The mother's ancestors were banished from Ireland, for political reasons, and settled in the United States during colonial days. She died in Pennsylvania when her son David was thirteen years of age. When a boy he learned the carpenter's trade with his father and at eighteen years of age went to Illinois and worked at his trade. The Civil war broke out during his residence there and he enlisted in the Seventh Illinois infantry, Company B. After seven months' service his time expired and he re-enlisted in the Seventy-sixth Illinois infantry, and in 1863 went as a member of an escorting party, across the Plains to Oregon. Here he was discharged, but at once enlisted in a volunteer company to fight Indians, and later enlisted in the First Oregon infantry, from which he was discharged at Vancouver, Washington, at the close of the war. He engaged in clerking and working at his trade here for almost two years. He then went to The Dalles and later to Yakima county, as stated in the foregoing. He was married in Yakima county, March 1, 1870, to Martha E. Lyen, daughter of Ezekiel Lyen, to which union was born one child, Henry A., who is now on the United States training ship Mohican. In 1875, after the loss of his first wife, he was married to Mrs. Caltha Deardorf, who died two years later. Fraternally, Mr. Steevens is connected with the Masonic order; politically, he is an active Republican.

SILAS H. WOOLSEY is a native of the Buckeye state, and was born in 1850. Three weeks after his birth his father died, leaving the family of children to the care of the mother. The father, Hezekiah Woolsey, was a Pennsylvanian and followed farming. He was a pioneer in Ohio, and came of English stock. The mother, Hannah Cutler, was a native of Wales. She died when young Woolsey was but ten years of age and he went to live with one of his brothers. He remained with him until the close of the war, when another brother, who had served through the war, came home and he went to live with him, where he remained until he was twenty-six, having an interest in the crops on the farm after he became of age. In 1879 he went to Nebraska, living there for three years. He then sold out and came to Yakima county, settling at first in the Ahtanum valley. After three years' residence there he moved to Kittitas county and took up a quarter section of land near Cle-Elum, which he sold eighteen months later to the coal company and returned to Yakima county. He then purchased his present farm of eighty acres and took up residence on it, improving and developing the ranch into its present convenient and productive condition. Here he has since continued to live. He was married in Illinois, in 1875, to Miss Eliza J. Dickerson, daughter of William and Sarah (Housh) Dickerson. Her father, a farmer and native of Illinois, continued to reside in the state of his nativity until his death. Her mother was a native of the Hoosier state and of German descent. There were eleven children in her family. Mrs. Woolsey was born in Illinois in 1855, and learned the millinery and dressmaker's trade. The children born to her union with Mr. Woolsey are: Frank, Mrs. Sarah Hanson, James, Lauren, Maud, Clara, Emma, Edith, Ellis, Gertrude and George. Mr. and Mrs. Woolsey are of the Congregational communion, while he is an active Republican, interested in the success of his party principles.

ANDREW JACKSON CHAMBERS, merchant at Ahtanum, is a native pioneer of the state of Washington, making his advent into this world in Olympia, the state capital, in 1853. His residence in Yakima county dates from 1871. His father, Thomas J. Chambers, was born in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1823, in the old home of President Andrew Jackson, who was a cousin of his mother. He made the trip from Ohio to Oregon in 1845 with ox teams, wintering at The Dalles and the next spring went down the river to Oregon City, in boats sawed out of logs with whipsaws and pinned together with wooden pins. He took land there, but two years later moved near Olympia, to the prairie district which now bears his name. He was in the California gold excitement of 1849. Returning to Thurston county he took up a donation claim and in 1866 came to Yakima county, crossing the mountains with pack-train and one hundred and fifty head of cattle, his family accompanying him. The next year he moved with his stock to Klickitat county, where he resided until 1871, then returned to Yakima county, where he still lives at the age of eighty. The mother, America McAllister, was born in Kentucky and crossed the Plains in 1844, at the age of nine, to Thurston county. Her father was killed by Indians in 1856. Mr. Chambers grew up in the farming and stock business, and at the age of sixteen his father gave him an interest in a bunch of cattle and he continued in that business until 1877, when he opened a butcher shop in Yakima City, the first shop in the county. He continued to reside in that town until 1885, then sold out and moved to North Yakima, where he engaged in supplying beef to the Northern Pacific Railroad, while the line was extending its track over the mountains. He ran a butcher shop in North Yakima two years, until 1889, when he sold and bought the store on the Ahtanum, where he has since continued in business. He was married in Yakima City in 1875, to Miss Elizabeth Brown, daughter of James and Mary (Clogne) Brown. Her father was a native of England and a settler in California in 1857, where he died in 1861. The mother, being left a widow, bought a team and moved her family to Oregon, where she lived until 1902, at which time her death occurred. Mrs. Chambers was born in New York City, in 1855, and was sent to school at Vancouver, Washington, and, after the completion of her education, taught school. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Chambers were born the following children: Mrs. Ella F. Weiked, North Yakima; Walter A., Claude J., Thomas J., Bernard, Daisy M. and Victor. Mr. Chambers is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Rebeccas, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Woodmen of the World and Yeomen. Mrs. Chambers is a Rebeccah. Their church connection is with the Congregational church. Mr. Chambers is a Democrat, and, for ten years, was postmaster at Ahtanum. As a pioneer, he was prominently identified with the famous Perkins affair, which so stirred the inhabitants of the Yakima country in 1878-79, being a cousin of Mrs. Perkins. A full account of this tragedy will be found in the general history of Yakima county.

PROFESSOR ERNEST S. WOODCOCK, principal of the Woodcock Academy, is a native of Minnesota, born in 1870; but reared in Yakima county, receiving his education in Whitman college, Walla Walla, with a post-graduate course at Columbia College, New York. After the completion of the post-graduate course he returned to his native state and accepted the position of principal of the Colville Academy. At the end of the first year he was called home by the death of his father, to assume charge of his business affairs. He at the same time taught in the Woodcock Academy, at their place, of which his father was the founder, and in 1902 was proffered the principalship, which position he now holds. His father, Fenn B. Woodcock, was born in Massachusetts in 1834, and was a graduate of the Hines College, in Connecticut. In 1857 he went to Minnesota, and engaged in farming for a time, but at the first call for volunteers by President Lincoln, he enlisted in the Fourth Minnesota infantry and served his country for four years, being in many of the principal battles, including Vicksburg and Altoona; was with General Sherman, on his famous march to the sea. He left Minnesota for Oregon in 1877, and the next year came to Yakima county, settling in the Ahtanum valley, where he purchased several hundred acres of land. He lived there until his death in 1897, esteemed and respected by all for his sterling worth and many praiseworthy qualities. Among other marks of permanent progress and value which he leaves to preserve the memory of a useful life is the Woodcock Academy, of which institution he was the founder, and which was named for him, after his death. He traced his ancestry back to the landing of the Mayflower. It is not surprising that Professor Woodcock should turn to pedagogy as a profession, in view of the fact that both his parents were teachers. The mother, Frances E. (Taylor) Woodcock, a native of Connecticut, was a graduate of the Hines college, of that state, and for years was a teacher. She traces her ancestry back to the very first families of her native state. Mr. Woodcock was married in Walla Walla, in 1896, to Miss Mary Hunt, sister of Gilbert Hunt, of that place. Mrs. Woodcock was a native of Vermont, her birthday occurring in 1876. She was educated at Whitman College, Walla Walla, where she made her home with her brother, at the death of her parents. She followed teaching for a time and was an instructor in shorthand in the Colville school. She died in 1897, leaving one child, Marion F. H. In 1900 Mr. Woodcock was again married in the Ahtanum valley, to Miss Ethel Henderson, daughter of James M. and Louise (Morse) Henderson, residents of the Ahtanum valley. Mrs. Woodcock received her education in the Woodcock Academy and Whitman College, and has been a teacher in the Woodcock Academy for the past three years. She was born in Iowa, in 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Woodcock are members of the Congregational church, of which he is a trustee. In addition to his school duties Mr. Woodcock manages his farm of three hundred and eighty acres and gives attention to his herd of fine Holstein cattle. He is progressive and enterprising and holds a high place in the esteem of his neighbors and acquaintances. Among the educators of Yakima county, and indeed of central Washington, none are better known and held in greater esteem for their scholarly attainments and for their success as instructors than are Mr. and Mrs. Woodcock.

NATHAN P. HULL. One of the successful educational instructors and agriculturists of Yakima county is Nathan P. Hull, the subject of this historical sketch. His ancestors, on both sides, were among the history makers of the early Mayflower days in this country; and, with the succeeding generations, have passed down to the present day an inheritance of a clean record, of pledges kept and trusts held inviolate, a patrimony far more to be prized than inherited hoardings of gold. Mr. Hull made his advent into this world in Wisconsin, January 20, 1864. His father, Henry Hull, was a native of New York, born in 1822, and from which state, in 1848, he moved to the then wild and almost unsettled portion of Wisconsin. He here took up land and engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he has followed from that time to the present, making his home on the old homestead. Caroline Brewster, the mother, was born in Pennsylvania in 1827. Mr. Hull is a thoroughly educated man; starting in the common schools of his native state, he has passed through the high school, Oshkosh state normal and Indiana normal schools, with a post-graduate course in the Wisconsin University. In 1884, at the age of twenty, he engaged in teaching, which he pursued for nine years in the states of Wisconsin and Illinois, with excellent success. In 1893 he accepted the principalship of the Woodcock Academy, having immigrated to Washington in that year. At the end of two years he purchased land and engaged in agriculture, devoting his time to the developing of his farm and setting it to fruit. In this he was remarkably successful, and today has one of the best fruit farms in his section of the country. He has since enlarged his real estate holdings to two hundred acres, and has added hay raising and dairying to his pursuits. He was married in Champaign, Illinois, in 1895, to Miss Minnie Greene, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Stevens) Greene, the father a native of Indiana and now a real estate dealer in Illinois, the mother born in Ohio. Mrs. Hull was born in Champaign county, Illinois, in 1867, where she was educated, graduating from high school. She followed teaching for a time both in her native state and in Washington. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hull there have been two children born: Edna, January 30, 1898, and Carroll, on the 3d of August, 1900. The daughter died in infancy, on December 14, 1898. The parents are members of the communion of the Congregational church. Fraternally, Mr. Hull is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America order. He is an active Republican. He has a fine two hundred acre farm well stocked and in a high state of cultivation, a good residence and pleasant home surroundings. As a teacher Mr. Hull is recognized as a man of ability. Applying his scholastic training to his rural pursuits, he has demonstrated the peculiar adaptability of the valley lands to diversified farming. In educational and social circles he is a man of influence and is counted among the successful and substantial citizens of the county.

CHARLES H. BURR, farmer on the Ahtanum, was born in Rutland county, Vermont, October 8, 1843, from the union of Carlos and Mary (Ellis) Burr. His father was a farmer by occupation and was ushered into this world in the Green Mountain state in 1818. His ancestors were pioneers in Vermont, living there when Rutland was one of the state capitals. The mother, who is of Scotch-Irish descent, was a native of Vermont, born in 1815. She learned the tailoring trade when young and worked at it for many years. She still lives in her native state at the age of eighty-eight. Mr. Burr grew up on the home farm in Vermont, until the Civil war broke out, when he, at the age of eighteen, enlisted in Company C, Tenth Vermont volunteers, in defense of his country. He served until the close of the war, being mustered out at Alexandria, Virginia. He returned home at the close of the war and remained until 1868, when he went to Wisconsin, and later to Sioux Falls, Dakota, where he took up land. This he sold after two years; in 1872 he went to Iowa, and in 1878 to Kansas, in which state he lived for ten years. In 1888 he moved to Washington, and 1892 found him farming in Yakima county. In 1899 he purchased his present place, where he has made a comfortable home. He was married in Iowa in 1876, to Miss Henrietta Monroe, daughter of George and Christia (McIntosh) Monroe. Her father and mother were both natives of Scotland. Her father was born in 1819 and lived at home until his father's death, then came to Canada with his mother, and in 1869 removed to Iowa, where he later died. He was married in Canada and was the father of a family of ten children. Mrs. Burr was born in Canada in 1856, and was married at the age of nineteen. To this union were born the following children: Beatrice B., Florence, Emma E. and Robert. Mr. Burr is one of the original Lincoln Republicans and takes pride in that distinction.

ELIZABETH SIVERLY. Mrs. Siverly is one of the pioneer settlers in that portion of Washington where she resides, settling there with her husband in the early seventies. She was born in Indiana in 1851. Her father, George Wilson, was a native of Virginia, and a millwright. He brought his family from Iowa to Oregon, in 1862, by ox team, settling in the Grand Ronde valley, and seven years later moving to Douglas county, where he died in 1851. Martha Coil, her mother, was a native of Kentucky, of which state her parents were early pioneers. She was the mother of five children. Mrs. Siverly lived in Iowa until she was ten years old, and then made the trip across the Plains with her parents to Oregon. She finished her education in the schools of LaGrande, and at the age of fifteen was united in marriage to John Siverly, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1833, of Dutch parents. He was left an orphan when young and was taken to raise by a brother. When but sixteen he ran away and crossed the Plains to California, in the great exodus from the east to the gold fields of that state during 1849. He mined there and in all of the leading mining districts of the Pacific coast, for a number of years. In 1867, he met and married Mrs. Siverly in Oregon, and a few years later they moved to Yakima county. To this union were born the following children: George W., March 12, 1868; Lawrence, June 10, 1870, now in Nome; John A., deceased; Mrs. Viola Brown, February 24, 1875; Floyd, August 4, 1877; Mrs. Clara Hughes, October 24, 1880; Roy H., November 14, 1889; Jack, August 3, 1893. Mrs. Siverly is a member of the Congregational church. She owns eighty acres of good land and has a comfortable home. Among the many brave women who endured the hardships and risked the dangers of pioneer life in the Yakima valley, no one is more worthy of a place in the history of the country than is Mrs. Elizabeth Siverly, and it is with pleasure that we enroll her name with the honored pioneers of Yakima county.

WILLIAM GRANGER. Although an actual resident of Yakima county only since 1897, William Granger is a pioneer of 1861 in California and of 1863 in central Washington. No man is better known by the early settlers of this region and no one has been more active in the development of this part of the state, and we are therefore pleased to accord him a place in this volume among its honored pioneers. Mr. Granger was born in Canada, near Toronto, September 2, 1837. He is the son of William and Elizabeth Granger, natives of England, both long since dead. The father was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century, was a pioneer of Eaton county, Michigan, and died there at the age of sixty-two. While the son William was an infant, the parents moved from Canada to Eaton county, Michigan, and here he spent his youth and early manhood. Educational advantages were limited but he spent several winters in the primitive schools of the neighborhood, doing farm work in the summers, however, from the time he was eight years old. In 1861, at the age of twenty-four, he left home and went to California, engaged in mining there for a time and, in 1863, removed to Umatilla, Oregon, whence he operated a pack-train to Boise, carrying provisions to the Idaho mining regions. After three years in this occupation, he went to Okanogan county, Washington, and engaged in stock raising, meeting with good success. In 1897 he sold the greater part of his Okanogan interests and located on his present place in the Moxee valley, four and one-half miles east of North Yakima, where he has united farming with stock raising. In 1903 he disposed of his remaining stock in Okanogan county, and his entire holdings are now in the Moxee, where he is having excellent success, both with the products of the farm and with stock. Mr. Granger was at one time elected commissioner of Stevens county and, when Okanogan was formed, was appointed one of the first commissioners by Governor Ferry. He was prominent in the early history of that county and is well known for the part he played in the Indian troubles of the late seventies. As a deputy sheriff, he arrested Salusakin and Wyantcat, two of the Indian participants in the murder of the Perkins family, an account of which will be found elsewhere in the volume. Mr. Granger is third in a family of ten children, all of whom are living. Two sisters, Margaret (Granger) Bush, and Ann (Granger) Scott, were born in Canada and are now living in Michigan. The others were born in Michigan and are still residing in that state; their names follow: Thomas, Joseph, George, James, Elizabeth (Granger) Hartford, Mary (Granger) Shaw, and Anna. Mr. Granger was married in Yakima City, October 1, 1877, to Miss Charlotte Bunting, who was born in Steilacoom, September 8, 1858, the daughter of Joseph and Martha A. (McAlister) Bunting. The father was killed by Indians while mining in Arizona, and the mother, a native of Missouri and a pioneer of Washington, is now Mrs. Martha Cheney, residing five miles southeast of North Yakima. Her biography will be found on another page of this volume. Mrs. Granger has three brothers, one half-brother, and one sister, living. Their names with other particulars will be found in connection with the biography of Mrs. Cheney, the mother. One sister, Blanche (Bunting) Perkins, was killed by the Indians July 9, 1877; a full account of the massacre is given on another page of this history. To Mr. and Mrs. Granger have been born the following children: Harry, born January 3, 1879, the first white child born in Okanogan county; Ella and Elmer, twins, born May 4, 1880; Henry Roy, born March 28, 1885, deceased; Martha, born September 23, 1898. Mr. Granger has one hundred and sixty acres where he makes his home; five acres are in orchard and the balance in hay. The place is well equipped with modern residence and other buildings, a most desirable home, and at present is stocked with seven hundred sheep. In politics, Mr. Granger is a Democrat, always interested in the success of his party. The sterling qualities which have brought success in a business way have given him also the confidence and respect of his fellow men and have made of him a man of influence and a substantial citizen of the county.

HENRY V. HINMAN, the present register of the North Yakima United States land office and a respected citizen of Yakima county, is a native of the Empire state, born in 1836. His father, who bore the same name as the subject of this biography, was also born in New York state and lived there until his death. By profession he was a successful lawyer. Mrs. Hinman, whose maiden name was Laura Van Note, was the daughter of Dutch parents and a descendant of the earliest settlers of New York. She was born in New Jersey, and died at Kinderhook, New York. After receiving an excellent common school education in the schools of Kinderhook, Columbia county, New York, Henry V., Jr., apprenticed himself for four years to the printer's trade and, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five, followed that occupation. However, seven years of such work weakened his eyesight so greatly as to oblige him to turn to some other line of work, and so, in 1857, he came as far west as Illinois, whose broad, fertile prairies appealed so strongly to him that he settled in Whiteside county and engaged in farming. Four years later he bade farewell to family and friends, put aside the plow and the sickle for the old Springfield rifle and the knapsack and, as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois infantry, marched southward with the boys in blue. Three years and eight months he served his country on the battlefield, participating in the battles of Farmington, Corinth and many others of note, besides being with Sherman on his famous march to the sea. Near Atlanta, Georgia, he was wounded and confined in the hospital for sixty days. Upon his return to service he was rewarded for his bravery by being commissioned first lieutenant of Company B of his regiment. After being mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1865, he returned to the farm in Illinois, where he lived until 1866, when he moved to Missouri and engaged in railroad construction. At the end of six years experience in this line of work in Missouri and seven years experience at Atchison, Kansas, Mr. Hinman again returned to agricultural pursuits, this time in Washington county, Kansas, where his home remained for eleven years. Like many another resident of that section, he became familiar with the ways of cyclones and was an unwilling victim of one. In 1879 he removed to Manhattan, Kansas, and in 1889 immigrated to the Northwest, locating a homestead near Mission, Chelan county, Washington, where he lived for the following five years. Then came a short experience in the mercantile business in Ellensburg, with his son, a position for four years in the Kittitas county court house and, in June, 1902, his appointment as register of the land office in the Yakima district. During the second year of his residence in Illinois, 1858, Mr. Hinman wooed and won Miss Jane L. Brakey, at that time a young school teacher of eighteen years. She was the daughter of William and Mary (Cooley) Brakey, natives of Pennsylvania and early settlers in Illinois, where both are buried. During the awful years of 1861-

65, Mrs. Hinman again taught school as an aid toward supporting the family while the husband and father was fighting for his country's preservation. Seven children came to the Hinman home: William E., born in Illinois in 1859 and living in Washington; Mrs. Laura E. Cash, born in Illinois in 1861, living in Ohio; Mrs. Mamie M. Clark, born in Illinois, living in Chelan county; Charles H., born in Missouri in 1871; Agnes M., born in Kansas in 1879, now a teacher and also supervisor of music, in the Ellensburg schools; Mrs. Sadie Dix, born in Kansas in 1881, now living at North Yakima, and Jennie P., born in Kansas in 1884, living at home. Mr. Hinman is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and politically, a Republican, having belonged to the party since John C. Fremont's candidacy for the presidency in 1856. Besides his valuable homestead in Chelan county, he owns a fine home in the city of North Yakima, No. 201 North Seventh street. As a government official, Mr. Hinman's integrity and ability are the pride of his many friends.

WILLIAM J. HACKETT, farmer and threshing machine operator, who lives upon his ranch, six miles west and four south of North Yakima, is a pioneer of 1877 in Yakima county. He was born in the State of Massachusetts, November 10, 1848, but grew up and was schooled in the pineries of Wisconsin, where self-reliance and hardness of constitution are early acquired in life and are pre-requisites to success in the lumbering business. His father, Peter Hackett, was a lumberman, born in the Emerald Isle. He immigrated to Canada when eighteen years of age and from there emigrated to Massachusetts, where he was married. Subsequently he removed to Wisconsin and there lived the remainder of his life. The mother, Phoebe (Hall) Hackett, was born of Yankee stock in Massachusetts, her father, Lyman Hall, being a pioneer in her native state. At the age of sixteen the subject of this article began to serve a three years' apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. At the end of that service he went farther north into the lumber district, where he worked ten years. In 1876 he emigrated to the Pacific coast country, settling for the first year in Portland. The following year he came to Washington Territory. After working five years for the firm of Polly & Emery, he filed upon a tract of land on the Abtaunum, which is his present home. Here he has since made his home, rearing and educating his family and enjoying the fruits of his labors. He has operated a threshing machine for the past twenty years during the summer and fall months and at present has a steam thresher. There is probably not a man in the county more skilled in this line of work than Mr. Hackett. In 1890 he built a sawmill near Soda Springs, which he ran for ten years. He was married in Wisconsin in 1870 to Miss Barbara Ditenhailer, daughter of Ferdinand and Helen Ditenhailer. She died and he was again married in 1891, this time to Miss Hattie Greenwalt, a native of Missouri, born in 1865. Her parents were Abraham and Louise (Billings) Greenwalt, both natives of Pennsylvania, who came from California to Yakima county, where they still reside. Mr. Hackett's children are: Edgar, May, Maude, William, Ted, Lincoln W. and Rex. Mr. Hackett is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and politically, is an avowed Republican. His wife is a member of the Christian church. He owns a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which he devotes to hops, hay and grain, besides having it well stocked with horses, cattle and hogs. He is a well respected citizen.

JAMES W. HARDISON, a pioneer of 1875 in Klickitat county, and a native pioneer of Oregon, is engaged in farming and raising stock ten miles Northwest of Toppenish. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, May 17, 1846, the son of Gabriel and Barbara (Slater) Hardison, the father a native of Kentucky and the mother, of Pennsylvania; both parents are dead. His mother was a second cousin of ex-Senator Slater. The family crossed the Plains in 1845 and took up a donation claim in Polk county, Oregon, upon which the father resided until his death. The son James was the first white child born in Polk county. His youth and early manhood were spent in Polk county and here he received his education, attending first the common schools and eventually being graduated from Monmouth College, to the endowment of which he afterwards contributed considerable sums. At the age of twenty-three he engaged in farming in Polk county, so occupying himself for six years, when he sold out and moved to Klickitat county, Washington. The old homestead in Oregon was one of the best farms in that region and the elder Hardison took great pride in its products. He had an exhibition of Gloria Mundi apples at the first Polk county fair that weighed slightly more than two pounds each and which were sold for one dollar each. His first apple crop sold for twelve dollars per bushel and the second crop for nine dollars per bushel. Another year he sold five hundred bushels of onions at five dollars per bushel. From 1875 to 1892, James Hardison was engaged in stock raising in Klickitat county. In the year last named he came to Yakima county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, where he now resides, and which was practically a barren sage-brush plain. This he has improved, transforming it into a most productive farm and making of it one of the most desirable homes in the county. He has ten acres in hops, a good young orchard, eighty acres in hay, a comfortable dwelling, other buildings, and all the accessories of an ideal home and farm. He also raises cattle and horses, having twenty-five head of the latter, and his herd of cattle including twenty-five milch cows. Mr. Hardison was an active participant in the events associated with early history of this section, with which he is very familiar. He had the honor, with Samuel Fister, of conveying the first seal of Yakima county from Umatilla Landing, a mule being the means of transportation, to the Moxee valley and delivering it to Mortimer Thorp. James Hardison was ninth in a family of ten children. Their names follow: Mrs. Amanda Thessing, Sylvester, John, Walton and Angelo, deceased; Mrs. Melissa Locke, in Oregon; Peter, in Iowa; Mrs. Mary McFarland and Mrs. Victoria Hobbs, living in Oregon. Mr. Hardison was married in Polk county, Oregon, in 1869, to Miss Elizabeth Wherry, a native of Iowa, born in 1852, the daughter of Wyatt and Josephine (Henderson) Wherry. Mr. Wherry was a veteran of the Mexican war and at the time of his death owned the townsite of Odell, Iowa. Mrs. Hardison is a first cousin to Senator Henderson. To Mr. and Mrs. Hardison have been born the following children, Oregon being the birthplace of all but the youngest, who was born in Klickitat county: Earl, a stock buyer of Seattle; Ellis, deceased; Elbert, a farmer and stock raiser of Yakima county; Nellie, Margaret and Eula, living with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hardison are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Hardison is a Democrat, influential in the councils of his party. He is a man well known among the pioneers of central Washington and is highly respected for those sterling personal traits of character possessed by so many of those who have accomplished so much in the development of the great Northwest.

WALTER G. GRIFFITHS, farmer and stock raiser, living six miles west and three miles south of North Yakima, is a native of South Wales, born in 1848. His father, James Griffiths, was born in Wales in 1803, in which country he farmed until his death in 1871. The mother, Mary (Watkins) Griffiths, was also born and died in Wales. Mr. Griffiths remained in the country of his nativity until twenty-two, when he took passage for the United States, and settled in Iowa, where he attended the Troy normal school, finishing his education already begun in the common branches in his native country. In 1874 he went to California, and in 1875 opened a butcher shop in Downey, Los Angeles county, which he ran until 1877, when he sold out and went to Arizona. After mining there two years he returned to California, and in September, 1879, came to Yakima City, and purchased a timber culture claim in Wide Hollow. He and five other citizens put in an irrigation ditch, the second one in that valley, and he put forty acres of his new place in cultivation. He sold this place in 1882, and moved up on the Cowiche, where he rented for two years, at the end of which period he returned to the Ahtanum and took up his residence with Fenn Woodcock, where he had previously made his home while improving his timber culture land. He was married at this time, and rented his present place for a while, bought the farm in 1888, and has here made his residence continuously since that time. He has one brother, William, living in California. He was married in Spokane, in 1886, to Miss Fannie D. Strong, daughter of George W. Strong, a native of New York, born in 1845. Her father was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, and died in Oregon in 1885. Her mother, Sallie (Thomas) Strong, was born in Greene county, Ohio, in 1846, and followed teaching for a time. Her parents were pioneers in Iowa and Kansas. She moved from Kansas to Cheney, Washington, with her husband, in 1881, where he was a pastor of the church. After the death of Mr. Strong she was married to J. W. Brice, and now lives in Yakima county. Mrs. Griffiths was born in Iowa, April 25, 1867. She was educated for teaching and taught two terms in the city of Spokane, and one term in Yakima county. She has two sisters, Ada S. Pitt, Yakima county, and Lucile E. McManamon. Mr. and Mrs. Griffiths are Congregationalists, of which church he is a trustee. He is a Democrat, politically, and active in the councils of his party. In addition to his home place of one hundred acres, he has filed upon a homestead near White Bluff. His home place is well under cultivation, and is devoted to hay, hops and fruit, while he is handling some three hundred head of cattle, of the Holstein and Durham breeds.

EDWARD J. HACKETT. Among the thrifty, prosperous young farmers and stock raisers of Yakima county is the subject of this article, Edward J. Hackett, who came to the county with his parents when a small boy and has here been reared and educated, and is in a fair way to become one of the leading citizens and heavy property owners of the county. He was born in Wisconsin October 25, 1872, to the marriage of William J. and Barbara (Dettendoll) Hackett. His father, a native of Massachusetts, is a farmer in Yakima county, where he came in 1876 from Wisconsin. He is of Irish and English parentage. He is living at this time on his farm in the Ahtanum valley, which he took up as a homestead shortly after coming to the county. The mother was a native of Illinois and came of German parents. She died in 1891. Young Hackett has followed farming and threshing since he first began work, growing up on his father's farm and engaging with energy in the multifarious lines of employment connected with diversified farming, and has thus become what might properly be termed an intelligent agriculturist. In 1866 he took up a desert claim, which he proved up on at the end of three years, having put it in a good state of cultivation. In 1867 he purchased a forty acre tract adjoining his place, and to this he has since added two hundred and eighty acres. He was married in Yakima county in 1900, to Miss Zelma E. Greenwalt, daughter of Abraham Greenwalt, native of Pennsylvania, who came to Yakima county in 1887, and now lives on the Moxee. He is of German descent. Mrs. Hackett was born in Oregon in 1882, and was brought to Washington when five years of age, and has here been raised and educated. She has three brothers and two sisters. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hackett has been born one child, Carl E., whose birth occurred on October 2, 1901. Mr. Hackett is an active Republican, taking interest in the councils of his party, and lending his influence to the success of the same. Fraternally, he affiliates with the Woodmen of the World. He owns five hundred and forty acres of land, all but one hundred acres of which is under cultivation; one hundred and fifty head of cattle, with a large number of horses and hogs, and town lots in North Yakima.

JOHN E. DAVERIN, living some ten miles west of North Yakima, has the distinction of being the first male white child born in Kittitas county. He first saw the light under very peculiar and decidedly unusual circumstances. He was born August 14, 1869, under the thorn bush near where the town of Ellensburg is now located, while his parents were traveling in a wagon through the country, looking for a location. The town of Ellensburg was then unknown, and its present site was marked by a single log-cabin, which was used by some cattle men as headquarters while they grazed their herds in the valley and on the surrounding hills, the place bearing the euphonious, but suggestive, and, withal repellent title of "The Robbers' Roost." He is one of a pair of twins, his sister Emma, now Mrs. Fitterer, of Ellensburg, being born on the same day. His father, Martin Daverin, was born in Wisconsin and crossed the Plains in an early day, to Washington, locating in Kittitas county, where he died in 1885. His mother, Bridget (Downs) Daverin, was born in Chicago and died in 1893. Subject was reared and educated in Yakima county and worked upon the farm with his father until the death of the latter, when subject, at the age of eighteen, was called upon to take charge of the farm, and he also cared for his mother until her death, six years later. He continued to run the home place until 1902, when he sold it. He has now leased his present place and is engaged in hop growing. His brothers and sisters are: Mary J. Splawn, deceased; Maggie Nevins, North Yakima; Ella Bounds, North Yakima; William, Yakima; Eliza, Sholtz, Washington; Emma Fitterer, Ellensburg; Andrew, Yakima. He is socially, a member of the Eagles. Religiously, he is a Catholic; politically, a Democrat.

ELDRIDGE CROSNO, farmer and dairyman, living in the Ahtanum valley, is a native born Washingtonian, and was born June 14, 1872, on the old home place where he now resides. He was born to the union of William P. and Frances (Smith) Crosno. His father was born in Illinois, January 25, 1838, and crossed the Plains to Washington in 1864, settling first in Clarke county, where he took a homestead, but on which he did not prove up. Selling his right in 1869, he came to Yakima county and pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres in the Ahtanum valley. Here he engaged in stock raising until his death in 1895. The mother was born in Illinois in 1843, and traced her ancestry back to the Smiths who came over in the Mayflower in 1620. She died in 1875. Young Crosno devoted the greater portion of his boyhood days to educational pursuits, attending the Whitman college, the State Normal school at Ellensburg, and finishing with a four years' classical course in the Woodcock Academy. His vacations he devoted to assisting his father on the farm. When at the age of twenty-three, his father died and he was appointed one of the administrators of the estate. He then took charge of the home place, where he has lived ever since. His brothers and sisters are: Horatio, Mrs. Mollie Greenwalt, both living in the Ahtanum valley; May, a graduate of the State University at Seattle, and Ollie, now teaching in the Wenatchee high school. Mr. Crosno was married in the Ahtanum valley, October 19, 1898, to Miss Vida E. Wardle, a native of Yamhill county, Oregon, born December 17, 1881, and a graduate of the State University at Seattle and the California State University. Randolph Wardle, her father, was a blacksmith, born in California February 27, 1856, of English parents, and now lives in the Webfoot state. Nancy S. (Ticknor) Wardle, her mother, was born in Chehalis county, Washington, in 1863. Mrs. Crosno has one brother, Clarence W., living in Idaho. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Crosno have been born the following children: Lois, Lillian and Clara. The family are members of the Congregational church. Fraternaly, Mr. Crosno is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and politically, he is a Democrat. He has been road supervisor of his district, and has held the office of school clerk for six years. He owns three hundred and sixty acres of land, the greater part of which is grazing land, and also has a nice bunch of cattle and other stock.

JONATHAN O. TRAYNER (deceased) was one of the honored pioneers of Yakima county, having located near Prosser in 1882. At the time of his death he was living on the upper Ahtanum, where he had resided for nearly twenty years, having taken up his homestead in 1884. He was the son of James and Sarah (Osmond) Trayner, both natives of Pennsylvania, where they were born, the father in 1801 and the mother in 1805, and in which state they resided until their deaths. James Trayner was a farmer, and on the Pennsylvania homestead Jonathan was born March 8, 1833. He remained with his parents, working on the farm and attending the neighboring schools, until he was twenty-one years old. At this time, in 1854, he bade his parents good-by, went to New York and took passage by steamer, via Nicaragua, for San Francisco, reaching his destination January 21, 1855. He went from San Francisco direct to the Feather river country and engaged in the butcher business, so occupying himself for ten years. In 1864 he went to the Idaho mines; thence to Montana; thence to White Pine, Nevada; thence back to Montana, spending some time in each location, engaging in business in the mining regions of Idaho, Nevada and Montana until 1882. He then determined to change his occupation and engage in agricultural pursuits. With this object in mind, in 1882, he came to Yakima county and, as narrated above, settled near Prosser; thence moving to the Ahtanum valley two years later and taking up the homestead on which he afterwards resided continuously until his death, which took place October 24, 1903. Mr. Trayner was married in the Congregational church at Ahtanum, December 11, 1889, to Miss Mary M. Clyde, daughter of John and Minerva (Sigle) Clyde. Her father was a native of Maryland and a mechanic; he died in Ohio. Mrs. Clyde was a Virginian by birth, of German parentage; she raised a family of ten children, of which Mrs. Trayner was one. Mrs. Trayner was born in Ohio April 23, 1838. She grew to womanhood and was educated in her native state. In 1888 she came to Washington, met Mr. Trayner shortly after her arrival and, in 1889, married him. The farm on which she resides is one among the many comfortable homes in the Ahtanum valley, and consists of forty acres of well-improved land, devoted principally to alfalfa and fruit. Mrs. Trayner is a woman highly esteemed by her neighbors and friends for her commendable traits of character. Of Mr. Trayner's death we quote the following from the columns of the Yakima Herald: "Jonathan O. Trayner, an old and well-known resident of the Ahtanum, died at the Deaconess hospital, North Yakima, Saturday, October 24, 1903, as the result of injuries received by his team running away near his home and throwing him to the ground from the wagon, which was heavily loaded with logs, the injuries resulting from the logs falling on him. He was buried in Tahoma cemetery, Monday, October 26th, a large number of neighbors and friends attending the services. Mr. Trayner's age was seventy years seven months and sixteen days. He leaves a widow, but no children, to mourn his loss. He was a man respected by all who knew him and general regret is expressed at the unfortunate accident that cost him his life."

DAVID B. GREENWALT, an Ahtanum valley farmer, living eight miles west and three miles south of North Yakima, was born in Illinois, December 21, 1860, to the marriage of Abraham and Louise (Bilich) Greenwalt. His parents were both born in Pennsylvania, and were of Dutch stock. His father immigrated to California in 1870, where he lived for nine years and then moved to Oregon, later, in 1882, coming to Yakima county, where he still resides in the Ahtanum valley. The mother, who raised eight children, died in 1893. The subject of this article traveled from his native state with his parents to the Pacific coast, and received his early education in the schools of the Golden state, later taking a course in the Empire business college at Walla Walla, after coming to this state. He worked with his father until he was twenty-five, when he and his brother formed a partnership and engaged in ranching together for five years. In 1891 he was appointed deputy auditor, which position he held five and one-half years. At the end of this time he returned to farm life and has continued to follow farming since. He was married on the home place on the Ahtanum, April 6, 1892, to Miss Mary Crosno, a native of Clarke county, Washington, born during 1868. Six months later her parents moved to Yakima county, and here she grew to womanhood. She was educated in the Ellensburg State Normal, and in Seattle, and followed teaching for five years. Her father, William P. Crosno, who was a teacher in early life, and later a farmer, was a pioneer in Yakima county, where he settled in 1860, and lived until his death. He was a native of Jefferson county, Illinois, as was also his wife, Frances (Smith) Crosno. Mrs. Greenwalt's brothers and sisters are: Horatio, May F., Olive V. and Eldridge, all residents of Washington. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Greenwalt have been born the following children: Elliott, Francis L., Charlotte and William. They are members of the Congregational church. Fraternally, Mr. Greenwalt is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Maccabee orders. He is a pronounced Republican. In addition to the home place he owns another ranch of seventy-five acres, with plenty of stock, large orchard, and other improvements and conveniences in keeping. He is an enterprising citizen.

WILLIAM WILEY, dairyman and hop grower, living seven miles west and two miles south of North Yakima, was born in Minnesota, July 15, 1859. He is a pioneer of 1867, and has grown up with the country since a lad of eight years. His father, Hugh Wiley, was born in Pennsylvania in 1831, and was one of the early settlers in Minnesota. In 1865 he moved with his family to the Pacific coast, going via the Isthmus to San Francisco; thence to Salem, Oregon. In 1867 they came to the Ahtanum valley, and took a homestead, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1883. Mary (Tuft) Wiley, the mother, was born in Canada in 1840. Her father was John, and mother, Isabella (Crawford) Tuft, and they came from Ireland. She now lives in the Ahtanum valley. Our subject remained at home with his parents until twenty-one, working on the farm and attending school. He then began working out for wages, and at the end of four years purchased the farm where he now lives. It was a raw tract and he has made his home from the foundation up, bringing it to a high state of cultivation, with good house and one of the largest, most convenient barns in the valley. He was married in the Ahtanum valley December 23, 1883, to Miss Anna Cole, a native of Wisconsin, where she was born in 1865. She was educated in Portland, Oregon. Her mother, Kate (Ditendollar) Cole, was a native of Wisconsin. Mrs. Wiley has two sisters: Minnie and Elsie Hansen, living in Portland. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley have been born three children, as follows: Mrs. Vera May McDonald, Ernest and Howard, all living in the Ahtanum valley. They are members of the Congregational church. Politically, Mr. Wiley is a Republican, and fraternally, he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an enterprising farmer, and is engaged extensively in hop raising, dairying and stock raising, making a specialty of the Holstein breed of cattle, of which he has some fine specimens.

SILAS A. GILSON, an extensive land owner, living eight miles north of North Yakima, is a pioneer settler of 1877 in Yakima county. He is a native of Washington, born July 25, 1855, in Cowlitz county. His father, Allen Gilson, was a native of the Green Mountain state, and came of Scotch and English parentage. He crossed the Plains to Washington in 1852, and located in Cowlitz county, where he took up land and farmed until his death. Elizabeth (Johns) Gilson, the mother, was a native of Illinois, and was married at the age of twenty. The subject of our sketch grew to manhood in Cowlitz county, working with his father on the farm and looking after the stock. At the age of twenty-one he went to Puyallup county, remaining over a year, and from there came to Yakima county in February, 1877. He filed that year on a tract of land now known as the Simpson nursery, where he lived for ten years. Just prior to the sale of this place he purchased the land where the fair grounds are now located, and sent to Walla Walla for seeds and set out the beautiful grove which now adorns the grounds. He built the first track there, purchasing additional ground for the purpose. He put the place in fine condition and then sold it, taking up a homestead in the Selah valley. He later purchased a six hundred and sixty acre tract adjoining his homestead, and now has seven hundred acres in a body.

Mr. Gilson's brothers and sisters are: Hiram, a real estate dealer, Minneapolis; Charlie, deceased; Oliver, a merchant in California; Sumner, deceased; Mrs. Harriet Caples, Forest Grove, Oregon; Mrs. Sarah Benzer, Clarke county, Washington; Melissa, Vancouver, Washington; Mrs. Martha Gardner, deceased. Mr. Gilson has seen his county pass through the transition period from desert wilderness to a thriving, prosperous community, teeming with life and active industry, and dominated by civilizing and christianizing influences, to which results he has contributed his part, and which transformation he today views with pride.

JOHN W. WALTERS, a Yakima county pioneer of 1879, was born in Arkansas, April 2, 1843. His father, James Walters, was a native of Ohio, and a typical frontiersman and woodsman. He crossed the Plains to California in 1848, and was there at the time of the gold discovery, months before the rumors of the vast gold finds reached the east and produced that wonderful wave of excitement which resulted in a veritable exodus to the Pacific coast. He lost his life in that country and never saw his family after leaving them in the states. Martha Walters, the mother, died when her son John was but three years of age, and he was taken by some distant relatives to their home in Ohio, where he was raised. He received a common school education, working as best he could to pay for his support until he reached the age of nineteen. He at that time enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio volunteer infantry, and was assigned to the eastern department of the Potomac, serving under both Generals Meade and Grant, and taking part in many of the hotly contested battles of the Rebellion. He served until the close of the war, when he returned to Ohio, and from there moved to Illinois, where he lived until 1869. He then went to the Pacific coast, and, settling in California, engaged in farming for ten years, at the end of which time he sold out and moved to Yakima county, Washington. He here filed on one hundred and sixty acres of land under the desert land act, and, settling upon it, began its development. He was one of the first movers in the irrigation of land in his vicinity, and helped run the first furrow plowed in the construction of the Union ditch. He is still living on the original claim. He at one time operated the Valley lodging house in North Yakima. Since 1895 he has spent some time in both Oregon and California, for his health. He was married in Illinois, in 1868, to Miss Mary Harrison, daughter of Simeon and Mary Harrison. The wife was born in Iowa, in 1853. To this union were born eight children: Warren, James, John, Nettie Reed, Mary Casey Will, Cora Chapman, Alonzo and Lewis. Mr. Walters is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; also the Lutheran church, while Mrs. Walters is a member of the Methodist Episcopal communion. Politically, Mr. Walters is a Republican. He is a man of influence in the community, and is esteemed and respected by all.

ZACH HAWKINS, hop grower, and pioneer of 1871, was born in Oregon in 1859. His father, Samuel S. Hawkins, was a native of Iowa, born in 1834. At the age of eleven he started to cross the Plains with his parents, but the father died while en route, and the mother and family continued on their way to Oregon. When sixteen he went to the California gold mines; later, returning to Oregon, he moved to Walla Walla in 1864, soon after returning to the Webfoot state, thence going to Vancouver, Washington, and in 1871 coming to Yakima county. Here he took up land near Tampico. In later years he moved to North Yakima, where he now resides. The mother, Cynthia J. Cahoon, is a native of Missouri, and has two brothers living in Kittitas county. Mr. Hawkins has grown to manhood in Yakima county; his parents coming here when he was twelve years old. He was with his father on the farm and attending to the stock until becoming of age; he then went to do for himself. He was married at twenty-two and took up a claim on the Cowiche, where he engaged in stock raising, hop growing and general farming, on an extensive scale for those days. He lived on his ranch until 1893, when he moved to North Yakima. In 1898 he sold his ranch and bought land nearer town, devoting it to the cultivation of hops. Mr. Hawkins has six brothers and sisters living: Ada Miller, Alice Shaw, Anna Boyle, Rosa Larson, Elbert and Willis Hawkins, all of whom live in North Yakima but Mrs. Boyle, wife of Judge Boyle, of Ellensburg. His sister Jane passed away at the age of eleven. The subject of this biography was married on the Cowiche, during 1881, to Miss Nancy Tigard, daughter of Andrew J. and Sarah J. (Edwards) Tigard. Her father was born November 24, 1828, and was a pioneer of Oregon, to which country he went in 1845. He was also a pioneer of Yakima county, where he settled in 1872, making his home in the county until his death on October 6, 1898. His wife was born February 22, 1832, and married Mr. Tigard on the fifteenth of September, 1848. The husband and wife crossed the Plains during 1852, settling on a donation claim some three miles southwest of Portland, Oregon, where they resided until 1871, at which time they came to Yakima county, as before narrated. Mrs. Tigard passed away February 2, 1902. Her daughter Nancy, now Mrs. Hawkins, was born in the Webfoot state, December 6, 1863. She has three sisters and two brothers, all living in Yakima county, namely: Mrs. Mary White, Mrs. Sarah Seward, Mrs. Almeda White, James and Robert Tigard. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have had five children, as follows: Lela, now attending the State University at Seattle; Asa, a student at the North Yakima business college; Estella (deceased); Chester and Myron, both also deceased. The father of the family is fraternally affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. Politically, he is a Republican. The family church connection is with the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Mr. Hawkins is one of the most extensive hop raisers of the valley; has one of the best homes in the city, and is a progressive, energetic and highly respected citizen.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM L. SPLAWN.

Among the many worthy pioneers of Yakima county, few, if any, are more deserving of honorable mention in a history of the events and experiences of the early days than is the subject of this article, Captain William Splawn. His experiences in the new Northwest date from 1852, when he crossed the Plains from his home in Holt county, Missouri, in company with his mother and four brothers, Charles, George W., Moses and Andrew Jackson, to Linn county, Oregon, driving ox teams the long, dreary journey. He was but fourteen when he made that trip, his birth occurring September 15, 1838, in Holt county, Missouri, and his life since that time has been that of the energetic, dauntless pioneer, ever ready to enter new and unexplored countries; fearless of dangers, undismayed by hardships; with a list of experiences varying from the humorous incidents of camp life amid congenial spirits to the more serious ones of encounters with Indians, wild beasts and sometimes equally wild white men, the recounting of which our limited space forbids. It was he who fearlessly and capably led the company of Yakima volunteer soldiers into Chief Moses' country in 1878, an expedition which completely cowed that haughty warrior, and none was more active than William Splawn in the bringing of retribution upon the heads of the Indians who murdered the Perkins family that same year. Mr. Splawn came from pioneer stock of the Virginia and Kentucky kind, his father, John Splawn, being a native of the latter state and a pioneer in Missouri, where he died in 1848 at the age of thirty-eight. The mother, Nancy (McHaney) Splawn, a native of Virginia, was married at the age of fifteen, faced the hardships and deprivations of the early days in northwest Missouri and, after the death of her husband, with a courage worthy of her pioneer ancestors, crossed the Plains with her family, enduring the hardships of that hazardous journey to the new El Dorado on the Pacific coast. She still lives in Ellensburg, Washington, at the goodly age of ninety; a modest, unassuming old lady who seems to little realize that she has well earned the title of a "pioneer heroine." With the blood of pioneers flowing in his veins, and with the experiences he has had, it is not surprising that Mr. Splawn should take high rank as a pioneer himself and carry with him that independent, self-reliant spirit, untiring energy and generous hospitality for which he is noted. As a boy he was among the stockmen of Oregon; in 1858 he went to California and engaged in mining in Siskiyou county, where he also ran a pack-train for some time. Returning to The Dalles, he outfitted and packed supplies into the various mining camps then booming, among others the Cariboo and Fraser river districts, and followed this occupation some six years. He filed a pre-emption on a quarter section of land in Parker Bottom, Yakima county, in 1864, and engaged in the stock business, which he followed there for nine years. He then sold his pre-emption and took up a homestead, still following stock raising for some eight years on the new place. His next move was to Yakima City, where he lived until 1880, when he purchased his present home, which he has transformed from wild sage-brush land to its present high state of cultivation. On his ranch he has also erected a comfortable dwelling and has equipped the place with all needful conveniences.

Mr. Splawn was married in Linn county, Oregon, in 1858, to Margaret Jacobs, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1843. She crossed the Plains with her parents to Oregon in 1852; later met her present husband and was united to him in marriage at the age of seventeen. Her father, Richard Jacobs, also born in Pennsylvania, of Dutch parents, was a pioneer in Oregon, where he settled in 1852 and where he also died. Mrs. Splawn has two sisters living, Eliza and Addie, the former in Idaho and the latter in the Moxee valley. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Splawn have been born four children: Mrs. Nettie Richmond, born May 1, 1863, the first white child now living born in Yakima county; Mrs. Belle Campbell, Onah Boyington and William R. Mr. Splawn has improved three farms in the county, taking them from their raw, sage-brush condition, and now owns eighty acres, on which he resides, and eighty of timber; also a fine bunch of cattle and horses. He is an avowed and consistent Democrat, ever ready to assist his party friends to office, but not himself a seeker after official preferment. William Splawn is a man who has earned and will always retain the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens of the Yakima valley, and his name will ever be inseparably associated with the history of its reclamation and development.

ALFRED B. WEED, hop dealer and grower, North Yakima, was ushered upon the scene of life in the state of Wisconsin in 1850, to the union of Oscar and Laura (Conger) Weed. His father, who is a lawyer by profession, was born in New York. He went to Wisconsin when a young man and engaged in the practice of his profession, which he pursued for forty years in Palmyra and New London. In 1885 he moved to Pasadena, California, where he still resides. The mother was a native of New York, and was married to her husband in Wisconsin. Alfred Weed, after completing his education, at the age of eighteen, engaged in clerking in a general merchandise store. At the end of two years he went into the offices of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company, at Milwaukee, and later accepted a position with a manufacturing company at Grand Haven, which position he held for six years. In 1879 he came west to Washington, locating at Walla Walla. Here he entered the Baker-Boyer Bank as bookkeeper and continued in that capacity five years. In the spring of 1884 he came to Yakima City and purchased a stock of hardware of Imbre & Hinman. In 1885 he put up the first business house erected in North Yakima, and in March, of that year, moved his hardware stock from Yakima City into his new building, opening the business under the firm name of Weed & Rowe; the location being where the Yakima National Bank now stands. His health failing in 1889, he sold his business and traveled for two years. Returning home in 1891, he purchased a tract of raw land near town and, after placing it in a state of cultivation, engaged in hop growing, since which time he has given his entire attention to the cultivation and shipment of hops. He was married in Wisconsin in April, 1882, to Miss Alice Gordon, born in Wisconsin in 1855. Abram Gordon, her father, was a native of New York, and was a pioneer in Wisconsin. He was a merchant and farmer, and was of Scotch parentage. Emeline Place, the mother, was born in New York and went to Wisconsin when a girl, where she met and married her husband. She was the mother of five children. Charles Gordon, of the Yakima Hardware Company, is Mrs. Weed's brother. Fraternally, Mr. Weed is affiliated with the Masonic order. Politically, he is an active Republican, faithful in the councils of his party, where his opinions are deferred to. In 1892 he received the nomination of his party for representative, to which office he was duly chosen by the voters of his district. He prepared and introduced in the legislature the bill, which afterwards became a law, permanently establishing the State Fair at North Yakima. He has served on the city council of his home town, and twice has been called to the mayoralty. He has also acceptably filled the office of state fair commissioner for two terms. In addition to his farm interests, Mr. Weed owns the "Weed block" and one of the most beautiful homes in the city. He is a broad-minded, public spirited citizen, walking hand in hand with enterprise and progress, and has much to do with the development and advancement of his county.

JOHN LEE MORRISON, who lives on his farm in the Ahtanum valley, is a native of the good old state of Illinois, born in the year 1836, in Pike county, to the union of James D. and Lydia (Lee) Morrison. His father was of Irish stock, born in Pennsylvania. He was one of the very early settlers in Indiana, and from there moved to Illinois in 1828. From the Sucker state he went to Missouri, where he remained until the close of his life. The mother was a native of Kentucky. While receiving his early education, the subject of this article did farm work with his father in Illinois, remaining at home until twenty-three, in which year he was married to Miss Caroline Bilicks, daughter of Michael Bilicks, a Pennsylvania farmer. Mrs. Morrison was a native of Pennsylvania, in which state she grew up and was educated, coming later to Illinois, where she was married at the age of twenty-three. After his marriage Mr. Morrison moved to Missouri, in the fall of 1859, and engaged in farming and raising stock. In 1862 he returned to Illinois and enlisted as a soldier in the One Hundred and Eighteenth Illinois infantry, and was sent to the front, where he was shortly afterwards taken seriously sick and was discharged for disability to serve, passing through a long period of sickness extending over several months. In 1865 he returned to Missouri to look after his property interests, remaining there for eleven years. In 1877 he moved to Oregon by team, settling in the Willamette valley. He resided there three years, then moved to Yakima county and took up land near the present site of North Yakima, on which he remained until 1892, when he sold and bought one hundred acres of raw land in the Ahtanum valley. Here he has since lived, improving his farm and developing it into a very desirable home. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Morrison have been born five children, only two or whom are now living: Joseph H. and Ellen. The family are members of the Christian church. Mr. Morrison was an enthusiastic member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and helped organize Lodge No. 22, in North Yakima. He is also an active Democrat, faithful in the councils of his party.

JAMES E. COOK, pioneer farmer and stockman, Yakima City, was born in the county of Randolph, Virginia, October 12, 1828, and settled in Yakima county in 1870. Like many of the old Virginia families, Mr. Cook's family trace their lineage back to English ancestors, who came to America at a time when the land was under the rule of British royalty. His father, Thomas Cook, was born in England, and came to America with his father, who was sent to the colonies by the government as a blacksmith. Our subject's mother, Elizabeth Kennedy, was a native of Kentucky and the mother of eight children. Mr. Cook left his native state at the age of fourteen, went to Ohio and worked in the city of Columbus, and at various other points. He ran on the river steamboats for some three years, and in 1858 found himself in Burlington, Iowa. Here he remained until 1854, when he outfitted and crossed the Plains to Oregon, wintering in Canyon City, and the next spring crossing the state line into Klickitat county, Washington. He bought land here and engaged in stock raising and farming five years, when he sold out and moved to Yakima county, taking up a homestead near Yakima City, which he still owns, there never having been a transfer made during thirty-three years. He has followed stock raising ever since his settlement in the county. He was married in Washington county, Ohio, in 1858, to Miss Sarah Ann Dalsen, a native of Ohio, and daughter of George Dalsen, an Ohio farmer of English descent, and Nancy (Gordon) Dalsen, a native of Virginia, also of English parentage. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cook have been born the following children: Mrs. Frances M. Tustin, William L. Cook, Alonzo R. and Arthur N. The family are members of the Christian church, and Mr. Cook is a zealous Democrat. He owns two hundred and thirty acres of land and gives his attention to raising hay and stock, principally Holstein cattle. Many wonderful changes have taken place in this most wonderful valley since the advent of Mr. Cook in 1870, at which time the principal products were Indians, cayuses and sagebrush; and to these hardy, dauntless pioneers is due a world of gratitude from the present and future generations who are to enjoy the fruits of their labors.

ANSON S. WHITE, farmer and dairyman, resident in North Yakima, is a pioneer of 1851 on the Pacific coast, and came to Yakima county in 1871. He was born in Wisconsin, December, 1848. His father, William White, was a wheelwright and farmer, and a native of Illinois. He went to Wisconsin in an early day, and in 1850, leaving his family in that state, crossed the Plains by the then common ox team conveyance and settled in the present city of Chehalis, Washington, then in Oregon territory, which had at that time been organized but two years. In 1851 he sent for his family and took up a donation claim near Olympia. Here he lived until 1856, when he was killed by the Indians while he and his family were returning home from church, the family effecting their escape after the death of the father. The mother, Margaret M. (Stewart) White, was a native of Iowa, in which state her parents were pioneers. She brought her family across the Plains to her husband in 1851, and continued to live on the home place near Olympia until her death. Her son, Anson, was but two years of age at the time his mother crossed the Plains, but remembers distinctly the wild life of the early days in the new home in Oregon territory. He remained with his mother on the farm until sixteen, then spending two years in various occupations, after which he and his brother took charge of the home place for a period of three years. At the age of twenty-one he tried clerking for one year. In 1871 he came to Yakima county and took up a pre-emption on the Wenas, but did not prove up on it, returning to the Sound at the end of one year. For several years following he divided his time between the Sound and the Yakima country. In 1878 he filed a homestead on a tract of land on the Cowiche, which he has since owned, and where he continued to live until he took up his residence in North Yakima.

He was married in Olympia, in 1860, to Miss Nancy A. Hale, a native of Olympia, who died two years later. Her father, Charles H. Hale, was a sea captain and a pioneer of 1852 in Washington. Her mother, Waitstill (Look) Hale, was born in Maine. Mr. White was again married in Yakima county, in 1875, to Miss Almada Tigard, daughter of Andrew Jackson and Sarah (Edwards) Tigard. Her mother was a native of Arkansas, born February 22, 1832, and passed away on February 2, 1902. Her father was born November 24, 1828, and was married on the 15th of September, 1848. He crossed the Plains with his wife during 1852, and settled on a donation claim some three miles southwest of Portland, Oregon, in Multnomah county. He made his home on the property until 1871, at which time he came to Yakima county and resided until his death, which took place on October 6, 1898. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. White have been born the following children: William A., Lillie M., Robert G., Roy A., Sarah A., Charles H. and Harry Lee, all of whom were born in Yakima county, with the exception of the first named, whose birth occurred in Olympia. Mr. White and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which the father has been an officer for many years. He is connected with the fraternal order of Yeomen. Politically, he is a Republican. He has been connected with the schools of his community in an official capacity at various times. He is now operating a dairy, milking fifty cows, and is giving special attention to the breeding of the Durham and Red Polled cattle. He owns seven hundred and sixty acres of land, besides several pieces of city property, and is accounted a man of thrift and enterprise, of influence in the community, and one of the respected and reliable pioneers of the county.

ADONIRAM J. PRATT, one of the early pioneer officials of Yakima county, who served his constituency two terms, acceptably, as county treasurer, from 1876 to 1880, is A. J. Pratt, the subject of this brief article. He was born in the state of Maine in 1846, his father and mother being Ebenezer and Mary (Smith) Pratt. The father was a native of Maine and a mechanic. His ancestors were early settlers in the state of his birth, where he continued to make his home until 1871, when he sold out and came west to the state of Washington, where his son, the subject of this sketch, had come the preceding year. Here he continued to reside until his death. The mother was also a native of Maine. Mr. Pratt was educated in the common schools of his native state, and continued to assist and work with his father until he reached his majority. He then engaged to learn the trade of cabinet maker, which he followed in Maine for three years. In 1870 he decided to seek a new field of labor, and turned his face westward. He came to Yakima county, and took up land in the Ahtanum valley, engaging in the stock business, which he followed four years, then went to Yakima City. Here he went to work at his trade, which he pursued for two years, when he was called to fill the office of county treasurer. At the end of the two-years term he was re-elected, serving altogether four years. During this period he continued to run a cabinet shop in Yakima City, and at the close of his term of office took up the work where he had laid it down. His shop was burned out in 1881, and he at once rebuilt, and continued there until 1885, when he moved to North Yakima, at the starting of that town by the railroad company. He has continued to follow his trade ever since at that place. He is, no doubt, the pioneer carpenter and builder of the county. There were three brothers and a sister in his family: George W., North Yakima; Sarah Meade, Montana, and Henry, now deceased. Mr. Pratt is one of the popular, successful and substantial pioneers of the county and city.

JAMES HARRISON THOMAS, land attorney and real estate dealer, North Yakima, was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, January 6, 1842, to the union of William T. and Catherine (Drummond) Thomas. His father was a native of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, of Welsh parentage. He moved to Ohio when young and engaged in the stock business, where he died. The mother was born in Dublin, Ireland, and came to the United States when fourteen years of age, and a few years later met and married her husband. To this union were born nine children, four daughters and five sons. Mr. Thomas, the subject of this article, was left an orphan at twelve years, the father dying in 1850, and the mother in 1854. Honorable J. H. Tripp, of Carrollton, Ohio, was appointed his guardian, and wisely administered the estate. Subject was educated in the academies of Harlem Springs and Carrollton, later graduating from the Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania, with the degree of A. B. in the 1863 class. In 1866, the same institution conferred upon him the degree of A. M. In his Junior year he received the highest literary honor in the Philo Franklin Society. The war had broken out at this time, 1862, and young Thomas, while home on a vacation, organized a military company, and was chosen captain of the same, but declined the honor at the advice of his brother, Captain A. J. Thomas, and returned to college, another brother, Daniel, being chosen in his stead. At the close of his college course, in 1863, he enlisted in the signal corps, and at once repaired to Washington, District of Columbia, taking up his work within five miles of the seat of government, being called upon to train the first gun that was fired upon the advancing forces of Early and Breckenridge, in their attack upon the national capital. He then took a course at the Military Academy at Philadelphia, at the instance of Secretary of War Stanton, from which he graduated in tactics and was commissioned a lieutenant in the regular service, and assigned to the Twentieth United States infantry at New Orleans. At the close of the war he settled at Plattsburg, Missouri, and purchased and conducted a college there for four years. He was the Republican nominee for the Twenty-fifth General Assembly of Missouri, in 1868, over which there was a contest. In 1870 he was appointed deputy United States surveyor for the Territory of Montana, and had charge of the work in northern Montana. It was Mr. Thomas, who discovered and named the lake near the British line, bearing the name of Lake Blaine. After a period in the milling business in Plattsburg, Captain Thomas was appointed to the United States internal revenue department. He was candidate for Congress from the Third Missouri district in 1882, and made such a good race that he was appointed by President Arthur register of the United States land office at Yakima City, Washington, which position he held throughout the Arthur, Cleveland and part of the Harrison administrations. He was a delegate to the National convention that nominated Blaine for president. Since his retirement from the land office he has been a practitioner in the same line. He is the owner of the Yakima City townsite and is extensively interested in Cripple Creek mines, where he spent two years. He was married in Missouri, in 1868, to Miss Lucy B. Guyer, a native of Ohio, and a graduate from the Harlem Springs Academy. Her father, Henry Guyer, was a native of Ohio and one of the best known men in the eastern part of the state. The mother, Rebecca Dewell, was born in Pennsylvania of German parents. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have been born the following children: Dana H., deceased; Rosco G., drowned in 1902 while cashier of the Wenatchee Canal Company; Mrs. Maud E. Granger, wife of W. N. Granger, general manager of the Washington Irrigation Company, at Zillah; James B., assistant engineer for the Washington Irrigation Company; Guyer D. and Harry V., deceased. Mr. Thomas is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and his church connection is with the Methodist Episcopal communion. Since coming to the state he has ever been connected with all movements for the development and advancement of the interests of his town and community. His life has been a most active one, and few men have served more constantly in a public capacity than he.

HONORABLE WILLIAM H. HARE. Since his arrival in the county in 1883, William H. Hare, present representative of Yakima county, has been actively connected with public affairs in his community and county, ever striving to promote the best interests of the people and locality where he lives, and is at present conspicuous for his untiring efforts in the awakening of interest in the construction and maintenance of good roads in the county and state, he at the present time being a member of the executive committee of the "Good Roads Association" of the state. In his legislative work he has been one of the strong and enthusiastic workers for all irrigation and good roads legislation of any value to the people whatever, and his efforts along those lines have not been without avail. Mr. Hare is a native of the Buckeye state, born in Barnesville, in 1853, to the union of William and Anna M. (Davenport) Hare, the father a native of England. He came to the United States when a boy, and studied medicine in Ohio, where he practiced until his death. The mother was born in the Shenandoah valley, Virginia; was married in Ohio, and died when her five children were quite young. Mr. Hare received his early education in West Virginia, and was graduated from the Ohio Dental College, of Cincinnati, in 1874. He went to Sacramento, California, in 1875, and opened a dental office, where he practiced his profession until 1883. He at this time moved to Yakima City, and practiced until the starting of North Yakima, when he moved here and opened an office. He soon built up a good practice. In 1891 he was appointed receiver of the United States land office by President Harrison, which position he held until 1894, when he resigned. The following year he was appointed on the State Board of Agriculture, serving as president until the election of Governor Rogers, when he resigned. He sold his dental office in 1900, and engaged in the stock business, in which he is still interested. In 1902 he was elected on the Republican ticket as representative of his county, and served as speaker of the House at the following session, being called to that position of honor by the unanimous vote of his Republican colleagues. Mr. Hare has two brothers and one sister living: John A., in Ohio; Mrs. Jennie C. Peppert, Virginia, and J. W., for two terms sheriff of Clatsop county. Fraternally, Mr. Hare is connected with the Elks, in which organization he has frequently been honored with office. He is prominent in the councils of the Republican party, a man of scholarly attainments, a good public speaker and one who has earned and who retains the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens.

REUBEN VAN BUSKIRK, carpenter, North Yakima, came to Washington in 1886, settling first in Klickitat county, and one year later in Yakima. He is a Hoosier by birth, and was born in 1833, in Fayette county, Indiana, to the marriage of George Van Buskirk and Rachel Helm. The father, a native of the Blue Grass state, settled in Indiana in a very early day, engaging in farming, and continued to make that state his home until his death at the age of ninety-four. The mother was a native of Pennsylvania and lived to the age of eighty-one. There were eleven children born to this union. Subject remained at home until twenty-two, doing farm work with his father, and then went to farming for himself. He settled in Kansas in the early and troublous times of that state, when the pro-slavery and free-soiler elements were contending for supremacy, and remained there until 1861. He went to Indiana at this date and enlisted in the Eighth Indiana volunteer infantry. At the end of one year's service he was taken sick and was discharged, returning home, where he continued in ill-health for two years. He served as United States enrolling officer for some time in Indiana. Returning to Kansas, in 1866, he engaged in ranching near Fort Scott, remaining in that state for twenty years. He then moved to Klickitat county, Washington, and, a year afterwards, to North Yakima. Here he purchased property, and engaged in carpentering, which he has since followed. He was married in Indiana in 1866 to Miss Letitia Jamison, who died nine months later. He was married the second time, in 1867, to Julia Walrod, a native of Illinois, where she was educated. She taught school for a number of years in Kansas. Her father, Daniel Walrod, a native of New York, though of German parentage, was a soldier in the Civil war. Jane (Wolcox) Walrod, the mother, was a native of Connecticut. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Buskirk: Charley, living in Ashland, Oregon; Carrie Whitson, Edna Waldon, Ella, Ralph, who was killed in the Philippine war; George, Lee, Jessie and Velma; all the living children are in Yakima county. Mr. Van Buskirk and family are members of the Christian church. Fraternally, Mr. Van Buskirk is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a staunch Republican, and has filled the office of assessor in Indiana and in Kansas. In addition to a finely improved place in North Yakima, he has a homestead on the Columbia river. He is a man who commands the confidence and respect of his neighbors and acquaintances, and his influence is always exerted for progress in political, educational and industrial institutions.

CHARLES POLLOK WILCOX, lumberman, North Yakima, is a native of New York, making his advent into this world in 1836, to the union of Lansing H. Wilcox and Miranda Holmes. The father, a farmer by occupation, was born in Massachusetts in 1809, the son of English parents, and moved with his father to New York when a small boy, where he followed teaching for a time. He died in 1894. The mother, a native of Pennsylvania, was of English parents, her ancestors coming to the United States in the sixteenth century. She was the mother of seven children, and departed this life in New York, A. D. 1867. Mr. Wilcox grew up on the farm with his parents until twenty-one years of age, when he learned the trade of carpenter and millwright. He was an enthusiastic Union man, and when the war broke out he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth New York infantry, but being rejected for physical defects, he tried enlistment in the Ninth New York cavalry, but was again rejected. Later he was drafted, and once more was released for apparent disability. In 1865, he went to Europe as manager of a coal oil refining establishment, and was there for four years. Returning, in 1869, he engaged in the building business in Minnesota, and for several years later was interested in the retail lumber business, with headquarters at Detroit City, Minnesota. In 1888 he removed to the Pacific coast, settling at Tacoma. After remaining there two years he removed to North Yakima, purchasing a tract of land on Summit View, adjoining the city, where he built a fine home and still resides.

He was married in Salamanca, New York, July 18, 1864, to Miss Hannah M. McKinstry, a native of that state, and a graduate of the Academy of New York. She was a teacher for some time. Her father, William McKinstry, was a native of Vermont and a Methodist Episcopal minister, a profession he followed for about forty years, dying in Minnesota at the age of eighty-seven. The mother, Sallie M. Cole, was a native of New York, and followed teaching for years. She died at the age of eighty-six. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox's children are: William H. and Alvan B., born in North Wales; Warlo C. and Fenner L., born in Minnesota, and Agnes, adopted, born in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which they have been active workers for many years. Mr. Wilcox holding positions as steward, superintendent, trustee and chairman of the board through long periods at different places of his residence. He is a staunch Republican, casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and one vote for every Republican president since that time, and has been honored by office a number of times by his party and the suffrage of the people. He served three years as commissioner of Becker county, Minnesota, and four years as assessor. At present he is vice-president of the Wilcox Lumber Company, interested in a mill and real estate in Tacoma, and a farm at Parker Bottom. He is a man of energy and push, and is highly esteemed by his fellow citizens.

LEVI C. LOVELL, carpenter and builder, settled in North Yakima fifteen years ago, coming from the state of Illinois, and has followed his trade during that period with the exception of four years' service as deputy sheriff under Sheriff H. L. Tucker. His father, Simeon Lovell, was born in New York of Scotch-Irish parents, and resided in his native state until his family was raised, when, in 1859, he moved to Ohio, and died there at the age of seventy. His wife, Nancy (Allen) Lovell, was the mother of ten children. She was born in New Jersey, and was of Scotch descent. She lived to the age of seventy. Levi C. Lovell is a native of New York, born August 13, 1839. At the age of sixteen he learned the trade of carpenter, and later, removing with his parents to Ohio, he there worked at his trade until 1861, when he enlisted in the service of his country in Company A. Eighteenth Ohio infantry, serving for three years. Returning to Delaware, Ohio, at the time of his discharge, he was there married, and in 1867 removed to Illinois, where he engaged in farming and working at his trade for twenty-three years. In 1888 he came to Washington, locating at North Yakima, which place he has seen grow from the little hamlet to its present size and importance, and in which development he has taken an active part. He was married in Delaware county, Ohio, in 1865, to Miss Elizabeth R. Stockard, who was born in Lancaster, Ohio, April 4, 1847, and was educated in the Delaware, Ohio, college. William C. and Mary E. (Burlingame) Stockard were her parents; the former, a farmer and native of Virginia, born in 1818. He died in Illinois in his seventy-fourth year. Her mother, born in Marietta, Ohio, in 1820, came of English ancestry, and was the mother of ten children. Four children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lovell: William E., Susan C. (deceased), Mrs. Mary E. Walker and Jesse G. Fraternally, Mr. Lovell is connected with the Masonic order, the Yeomen and the Grand Army of the Republic, and his wife with the Eastern Star and the Relief Corps. They are Presbyterians, and Mr. Lovell is an avowed Republican. He owns a comfortable home in the city, is energetic and progressive, and is known and esteemed as one of the worthy pioneers of both city and county.

ROBERT SCOTT, one of the leading contractors and builders of North Yakima and central Washington, was born in Scotland in 1840, coming to Canada with his parents, Walter and Margaret (Stothart) Scott, when two years of age. His father was a blacksmith by trade, and immigrated with his family to Canada in 1842, where he died in 1867. His wife was the mother of six children, and lived to the age of seventy-five. Mr. Scott, at the age of sixteen, began to learn the carpenter trade on the Canada side of Lake Huron, at the same time attended school in the winter. In the spring of 1860 he and his brother went to Olney, Ill., where he worked at his trade until August 5, 1862, when he enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois infantry, from which he was discharged seven months later for disability. He then returned to Canada for two years, and in the spring of 1867 opened a wagon and carriage house in Old Mexico, in connection with his brother. After one year he located in Missouri and engaged in contract work; later, in 1878, opening in the hardware and furniture business, which he followed until 1883. One year he spent as traveling salesman and another in operating a bargain store in Springfield. This he disposed of and came west to Washington and, July 1, 1884, took up a railroad claim of one hundred and sixty acres of land on the Naches river. Here he resided for five years, then moved to North Yakima and re-entered his old business as contractor and builder. His first building was the H. H. Allen block; following with the Hotel Yakima, Vining and J. J. Lowe blocks, with part of the Ward block. He put in the flumes and building for the Water Power Company, and later built the Wilson, McEwen and Yakima National Bank blocks, and various other buildings both in the city and in outside towns. He was married in Olney, Illinois, in 1863 to Miss Sarah A. Morehouse, daughter of Daniel W. and Adelia M. Morehouse, the father a native of Illinois and a merchant in Olney, and the mother also a native of the same state and the mother of a family of five children. Mrs. Scott was born in Illinois in 1845, and was married at the age of eighteen. She is the mother of nine children—Walter D. (deceased in 1899); Robert W., living on the Naches; Charles E., Naches; James N., two years in the Philippines as sergeant; Tom H., two years in the Philippines in active service; Harry, Amy K., Bert and George. Fraternally, Mr. Scott is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic and Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and has served in the capacity of committeeman. In 1898 he was elected as assessor of the county on the Republican ticket, and was re-elected in 1900, serving the four years in an acceptable manner. In addition to one hundred and ninety-eight acres of land he owns considerable city property, including his home. He is an energetic, thorough-going business man, and is recognized as one of the citizens who has contributed greatly to the upbuilding of the community where he lives.

INGRAM B. TURNELL, proprietor of the popular hostelry, the Pacific Hotel, North Yakima, is a native of Eagle, Wisconsin, born January 1, 1853, of English parents. His father, Richard Turnell, came from Lincolnshire, England, the land of his nativity, to the United States in 1842, at the age of twenty-four, settling in Wisconsin, where he followed farming until his death. The mother, Sarah (Bingham) Turnell, was also a native of England, and came to the United States with her husband. Mr. Turnell grew to manhood on the farm at Black Earth, Wisconsin, going on the railroad as brakeman at the age of nineteen. Meeting with an accident in which one hand was crippled, he took a course in telegraphy, and after a brief service as assistant, he was given a position as station agent at Marshland Junction, two years later being promoted to New London. Here he was married and remained for thirteen years. He then moved to Waupaca, where he held the position of express agent and engaged in shipping produce for nine years, doing well. After a service of two and one-half years as station agent in Illinois, he came west to North Yakima, and filled the position of night operator for the Northern Pacific for two years, at the same time, assisted by his energetic family, running the Varker House in a very successful manner. He later gave up his position as operator, giving his entire attention to the hotel business. In August, 1903, he, in partnership with G. A. Gano, furnished and opened the Pacific Hotel, which is fast becoming one of the best patronized houses in central Washington. He has since bought out Mr. Gano, and is now sole proprietor of the business. He was married in 1877 to Miss Nellie E. Phillips, who was born in Wisconsin in 1860, a lady of culture, who has followed teaching and has been an instructor in music. Her father, Franklin Phillips, was a native of Rutland, Vermont, and was a pioneer both in Michigan and Wisconsin. He was a veteran of both the Mexican and Civil wars, serving as lieutenant in the Rebellion, in which he was seriously wounded, making of him an invalid for life. Her mother, Marion (Yerkes) Phillips, was born in Philadelphia of Quaker parents, and is now dead. Mrs. Turnell has two sisters and one brother, and Mr. Turnell has three brothers and three sisters. Their children are: Richard Franklin, station agent in Wisconsin; Luella M., Mrs. Emma L. Dunbar, Clarence W., Lloyd Y. and Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Turnell have devoted their lives to their children, and are justly proud of their three stalwart sons and three lovely daughters, all of whom are quite perfect, both mentally and physically. Mr. Turnell is a pronounced Republican. He is progressive and energetic and is counted one of the substantial and successful citizens of the thriving city of North Yakima.

JOHN T. STEWART, farmer, living one mile west and one mile south of North Yakima, is a native of Scotland, was ushered into this world in 1829, and brought to Canada by his parents at the age of six months, they settling two years later in New York. His father, William Stewart, was born on board of an English man-of-war, while they were cruising off the coast of Portugal, his father being an officer in the English army. The mother, Jessie (Thompson) Stewart, was a native of England. She was married quite young and was the mother of seven children. Our subject's parents went to Illinois in 1832, where he was raised. In 1855 he crossed the Plains from Iowa to California, driving an ox outfit. He first went to mining, but the second year engaged in farming, moving in 1858 to Oregon. Here he lived for twenty years, farming and stock raising, also working as a mechanic. He left Oregon in 1878 and came to the Ahtanum valley, Yakima county, taking up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, where he now resides. He improved this in fine shape and sold a portion of the land, it being favorably located within two miles of North Yakima, for a good price. He was united in marriage in Iowa, in 1854, to Charlotte Barter, who crossed the Plains with him and died in Oregon, in 1864, leaving six children, as follows: Albert S., Alfred, Mary A., William, Minnie R. Merchant and Alice. He was again married in 1855, in Oregon, to Mrs. Deborah Coker, a native of Missouri, born in 1844. Her father, John Dillon, was a farmer and stock raiser, born in the state of Virginia, and departed this life in Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have been born ten children: John S., Edward E., Ella, Ulysses, Laura, Clyde, Carrie, Claude I. and Maud I. (twins) and Benjamin. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are members of the Christian church. Fraternally, Mr. Stewart is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while politically, he is an active Republican. He is a man who has always been ready to assist in every good and worthy enterprise presented to him for the public weal or private need, and is respected for his good qualities.

STERLING P. VIVIAN, farmer and stock raiser, came to Yakima county in 1879, at the age of sixteen. He was born in Missouri, in 1863, on the 12th day of February, from the union of Milton and Eliza J. (Sartin) Vivian; the latter born in Missouri in 1842, and daughter of David and Euphany (Brutin) Sartin, both natives of Tennessee. She is now the wife of B. Franklin Ward, living in Yakima county. At an early day our subject's parents moved to Kansas; returned to Missouri for a time; from there went to Colorado; thence to the Indian Territory, and then crossed the Plains by team to Wyoming, settling at Sander in 1873, where the mother and one other woman constituted the feminine population of the town. From here his parents moved to Washington in 1879, and in 1882 took up a homestead on the Ahtanum, where his mother still resides. On their arrival in the county their son, Sterling, began riding the range for stockmen, and for many years followed this, with freighting from The Dalles, and in that time gathered quite a band of cattle. He has followed the stock business ever since, in connection with farming and dairying, in which he has been successful. He has one full brother, Claborn F., living in the state. He was married in North Yakima, in 1885, to Miss Alice Tanner, a native of Forest Grove, Oregon, where she was raised and educated at the academy at that place. Her father, Elisha Tanner, was born in Connecticut, in 1814, moved to Illinois in 1835, where he farmed until 1852, when he outfitted with oxen and made the trip to Washington county, Oregon, taking land near Forest Grove. He moved, in 1865, to Klickitat county, Washington; in 1869, came to Yakima county and bought one hundred and sixty acres of land (on which Mr. Vivian now lives), moving his family there in March, 1870. Here he followed stock raising until 1880, when he was accidentally drowned while crossing the Naches river on his way to church, in company with his wife, she narrowly escaping with her life. He was a staunch Republican, and an active member of the Congregational church, one of the officers and original organizers of that church in the Ahtanum valley. Her mother, Lucy (Carter) Tanner, was born in Connecticut, and is a lineal descendant of the Carters of the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Vivian have three children: Maud M., Grace (deceased in the year 1894, at the age of seven), and Ray T. Mr. Vivian is a Democrat, and he and his family are members of the Congregational communion. He owns a well-improved place of one hundred acres, well stocked with horses, cattle and hogs, and is counted one of the solid citizens of his community.

SAMUEL E. FARRIS, residing upon his farm, six miles west and three south of North Yakima, has lived in the Northwest since he crossed the Plains with his parents in 1865, at the age of nine, and is familiar with western life in all of its phases. His native state is Iowa, and his birthplace was in Monroe county, where he was delivered into the arms of his parents in 1856. His father, James F. Farris, a carpenter and farmer, was born in Ohio, in 1809, and moved to Iowa in 1854, where he remained eleven years, and then, outfitting with teams, started with his family, overland to Oregon. Joining himself to a large wagon train, under the leadership of Captain White, at the Missouri river, he made the journey through to Polk county, Oregon. In 1869 he moved to eastern Oregon, and in 1894 to Yakima county, where he later died. The mother, Martha (Newman) Farris, was born in Ohio, in 1824, of Scotch and Welsh parents, from among the original Puritans. She was one of thirteen girls who rode in a log cabin in the campaign of Harrison and Tyler in 1840, representing the thirteen original states. At the early age of sixteen our subject engaged in the stock business in eastern Oregon, which he pursued until the winter of 1884, when he lost ninety per cent of his holdings, and quit stock raising, turning his attention entirely to farming for four years. Receiving the appointment as deputy sheriff of Wasco county, in 1888, he then made his home in The Dalles for a number of years. In 1894 he moved to Yakima City, Washington, where he engaged in dairying and handling hay, until 1901, when he purchased his present farm and moved on the property. He has one brother and one sister: Mrs. Mary Alexander and John W. Farris. He was married in The Dalles, in 1883, to Miss Lizzie Davis, born in Oregon, in 1865, shortly after her father and mother, Silas and Emeline (Reno) Davis, reached that state from Missouri. Two children, Grover C. and Inez, were the issue of this marriage. He was again married, in 1896, to Mrs. Hettie Fairbrook, daughter of Isaac and Louise (Finney) Flint, Oregon pioneers, in which state she was born in 1864, and educated for a professional nurse. Mrs. Farris has two children, Lloyd and Glen Fairbrook, by her first marriage. She is a member of the Christian church, and sister to J. L. and Purdy Flint, of North Yakima. Fraternally, Mr. Farris is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. Politically, he is a staunch Democrat. He has a well-improved place and follows dairying. He is a most respected citizen.

SAMUEL FEAR, farmer, stockman and dairyman, living on free rural delivery route No. 4, three miles south and three west of North Yakima, is a native of England, born December 29, 1844, to Richard and Christiana (Light) Fear, also of English birth and descent. His father was a farmer in the old country. Samuel Fear remained at home until he was eighteen years of age, when he learned the butcher's trade. At this trade he worked during his residence in England, which was brought to an end by his immigration to the United States in 1889. He came almost direct from his home to Yakima county, spending only one night in New York City. Arrived in the county, Mr. Fear first leased William Carpenter's dairy. Then, in 1891, he opened a meat market in North Yakima, conducting this business one year. Ranching in the Cowiche valley followed during the succeeding five years, after which he leased a ranch on the Ahtanum, where he lived for a like period. By this time his industry and perseverance were so rewarded that he was able to purchase his present farm of eighty acres, the tract being a portion of the old Heaton place, and here, since 1901, he has made his home and expects to live the remainder of his life. Mr. Fear was married in England, April 19, 1867, to Miss Hannah Fear, daughter of Abel and Harriet (Cox) Fear, also of English birth. The daughter was born November 2, 1845, and was married at the age of twenty-three. Her education was obtained in the schools of England. To Mr. and Mrs. Fear have been born the following children: Mrs. Lizzie Wheeler, March 12, 1868 (deceased); Mrs. Sarah A. Carpenter, October 20, 1869, living in Yakima county; Albert E., April 25, 1871; Ernest D., December 20, 1872; Frederick C., December 25, 1878; Thomas W., January 23, 1881; Minnie, March 16, 1882; Nellie, January 19, 1884; Christiana, April 9, 1886 (deceased); and Henry J., August 28, 1888; all being born on British soil. Mr. and Mrs. Fear are members of the Church of England. Of his eighty acres of land, twenty are in alfalfa, twenty are in plow land and forty are in pasture. He has forty head of cattle, thirty head of horses and some other stock. Mr. Fear has prospered since coming to America and is respected by all who know him as one of Yakima county's sterling citizens.

DAVID MUNN, one of the pioneer farmers and stock raisers of the Ahtanum valley, has had an interesting career in the Northwest, where he has lived nearly half a century; witnessing the growth of this erstwhile wilderness into one of the leading sections of the west. He is a native of Tennessee, born in 1836 to the union of Edward and Millie (Butler) Munn, who were natives of North Carolina. Edward Munn was a farmer by occupation, who became a pioneer successively of Tennessee and Arkansas, dying in the latter state. The subject of this article did not have the advantage of school life, but worked in the cotton fields for his father until twenty-two years of age. A year later he crossed the Plains with an ox team, the tedious journey occupying six months. After three years spent in the mines, he settled in the San Joaquin valley, where he was engaged in farming four years. He then sold his place and, in 1867, went to Idaho, where he spent a winter, and thence to the mines of Montana, where he lived during the next three years of his life. In 1870, he came to Walla Walla, but remained there only a short time, going in the spring of 1871 to the Ahtanum valley. During the first two years of his residence in Yakima county he followed farming; then sold his farm, and for seven years, or until the terrible winter of 1880-1, raised stock, his losses that season being so serious as to practically force his retirement. Mr. Munn again returned to the farm and for twenty-three years has been steadily occupied in that greatest of earthly pursuits. He was married in 1896 to Mrs. Nancy J. Allen, of the Ahtanum valley, and with her shared life's joys and sorrows for five years, her death occurring in 1901. Mrs. Munn was a member of the Congregational church. In politics, her husband is a staunch and active Democrat. His farm consists of forty acres of highly improved land, thirty-five being in alfalfa and five in orchard, making the place a valuable one. At the time of the Perkins massacre, he was one of the party engaged in the pursuit of the murderous redskins. Mr. Munn has courageously and patiently braved the dangers and difficulties incident to the life of an early pioneer and now, close to the goodly age of three score and ten, he lives comfortably and enjoys the friendship of those around him.

LORENZO DAVIDSON, living three miles south and three west of North Yakima, is one of the most prosperous ranchmen in the Ahtanum valley and a leading citizen of that section, where he has lived fourteen years. His early life was spent on the peninsula of Nova Scotia, where, in the year 1836, he came into the world to bless the home of William and Esther (Crow) Davidson. On that peaceful and fertile peninsula, too, his parents were born, and there today his father is living at the shadowy age of ninety-one. When seventeen years old, young Lorenzo was apprenticed to a blacksmith and, excepting eight months in Boston, Massachusetts, worked at his trade in Nova Scotia until 1869. Then he crossed the continent to California, worked there as a blacksmith five years, spent a year at his old home, and again went to California, where he plied his trade for six years. In 1882, he emigrated from the "Golden state," settling upon a homestead in the Horse Heaven section of the Yakima country, where he led the life of a doughty pioneer for eight years. The Ahtanum valley attracted him so strongly, however, that in 1890 he removed there, buying a place in Wide Hollow basin. There he remained eleven years, prospering and otherwise enjoying life. The year 1901 saw him purchase the adjoining farm, having sold his, and also buy the eighty-acre ranch upon which he now lives. Mr. Davidson and Miss Isabella Watson, daughter of John and Isabella (McCune) Watson, natives of Ireland, were united in marriage in California, in the year 1876, and to this union three children have been born: Mrs. Eva M. Hawn, born May 27, 1877, living on the Ahtanum; Myrtle E., May 1, 1880, at home; and Leon P., born October 26, 1881, died at the age of sixteen months. John Watson immigrated to America when a young man and first lived in Pennsylvania, where, at Valley Forge, in 1854, Isabella Watson, was born. Two years later the family went by water to California, where the daughter was educated, and at the age of twenty-two married Mr. Davidson. She is a member of the Presbyterian church and her husband a member of the Baptist congregation. In politics, Mr. Davidson is a Democrat. In all, he owns one hundred and twenty acres of land, seventy-five of which are in alfalfa, eight in hops, and a portion in orchard; he also has a band of sixty cattle, selected Shorthorn and Polled Angus, and considerable small stock. Mr. Davidson may well feel proud of his success in life and enjoys the further blessing of his fellow men's respect and well wishing.

FRED W. BROOKER, stockman and land owner, resident of North Yakima, has been one of the active, pushing citizens of Yakima county ever since 1888, when he first purchased land in the Wenas valley. Four years prior to this he had lived in Kittitas county, where he had followed the cattle business. He is a native of

LORENZO DAVIDSON AND FAMILY.

Broome county, New York, born April 5, 1866. Leroy Brooker, his father, who was a carpenter and contractor by trade, was born in New York, came to Yakima county in 1884, and lives in North Yakima. The mother, Elizabeth (Peters) Brooker, was also a native of New York. F. W. Brooker came west to Colorado with his parents at the age of seven, receiving his education in the high school and business college at Denver. When sixteen he went to work for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as time-keeper on their line through Washington, and thus, in 1884, came to locate in Kittitas county, from which he moved, in 1888, to Yakima county. Having learned the carpenter's trade with his father when a boy, he, in 1890, moved to North Yakima and engaged in work with his father, who was actively following his trade at that place, and together they built many of the fine residences on Nob Hill and also in the business part of the city. In the spring of 1899 he and his uncle, Justice C. Brooker, formed a partnership and engaged in the livery business, opening what is known as the Fashion stables. This they conducted for two and a half years, when they sold the stock and leased the barn. Since that time Mr. Brooker has given his attention to the handling of cattle. He was married, in 1888, in Yakima county, to Miss Rosa R. Taylor, daughter of George S. Taylor and Nancy (McLaughlin) Taylor, pioneers of Washington. Mrs. Brooker was born in Selah valley, July 22, 1872, and has spent her entire life in the county. She has three brothers living in the county: Hardy J., Selah; Emery W. R., mayor of Prosser; and George W., Selah. Mr. and Mrs. Brooker's children are: Gracie G., born May 18, 1889; Fred T., born January 15, 1898. Mr. Brooker is a staunch Republican. He owns a two-hundred and thirty acre tract of fine land in the Selah valley, with fifty head of Shorthorn cattle; and is feeding one hundred head of stock cattle. He has bred and owned some of the best trotting horses in the state, among the number being the noted Deoduse, 2:10 $\frac{1}{4}$; Chester Abbott, 2:09 $\frac{1}{2}$, and now owns a pacer with a record of 2:29, Senator by name. Mr. Brooker believes that there is no more desirable place for homes, and that nowhere else will be found better opportunities for acquiring property and becoming independent, than in the Yakima valley. He is one of the successful and reliable pioneers of the county and is held in highest esteem by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM L. COOK, farmer and stockman residing near Yakima City, is a pioneer of both Klickitat and Yakima counties, having been born in Klickitat county, in 1865, when the inhabitants of both counties could be counted by the score instead of by the thousands. He is the son of James E. and Sarah Ann (Dalson) Cook, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively, whose biographies will be found among those of other Yakima county pioneers. The paternal ancestors were Virginians of the oldest families in that commonwealth; the maternal side of the house is English. William was five years old when the family moved to Yakima county and settled near Yakima City, where his parents still reside. At the age of eighteen, having secured a common school education, he began riding the range, and at this occupation continued until he had gathered enough stock of his own to enter into business on his own account. In 1860, his father gave him ten acres of fine land near Yakima City, where he now lives, farming and raising stock. May 11, 1887, he was married to Miss Clara Hildreth, daughter of William and Sarah (Brook) Hildreth, natives of the middle west. Her father emigrated to Vancouver, Washington, in 1870, and settled in Yakima county fourteen years later, where he is still living. His daughter was born in Clarke county, Washington, in 1870, received her education in the public schools of Yakima county, and was married when seventeen years old. To this union have been born the following children: Sarah M., April 1, 1891; William E., October 17, 1893; Raymond L., February 4, 1894; Grace, April 1, 1895; Edith, June 3, 1897; Ruth, March 23, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Cook is affiliated with the Royal Tribe of Joseph, and in politics, he is a staunch Democrat. He owns a select band of thirty fine stock cattle, besides several horses, and is considered a progressive young farmer of his county.

THOMAS J. McDANIEL, Yakima City, is a native-born Oregonian and a pioneer in Yakima county. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, July 16, 1856, to the union of Elisha and Lettie J. (Cormack) McDaniel. The father was born in Kentucky, January 8, 1825, and immigrated with his parents to Missouri when fourteen years old. In 1844 he traveled by team across the Plains to Oregon, and the next year took up a donation claim in Polk county, and engaged in the stock business on an extensive scale, becoming the largest stock owner in the state. Here he raised his family. In 1864, he drove a band of several thousand head of cattle and horses into Yakima county and settled on the Yakima river, where he continued in the business until 1885. He died in 1890. He owned at one time over ten thousand acres of land in Polk county, Oregon. He was a breeder of fine cattle and horses. The mother of our subject was of German and English descent, born in Iowa in 1828. Mr. McDaniel attended the high school at Salem, Oregon. He remained at home with the father in the stock business until twenty-one years old; he then entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad for four years, and settled in Yakima county, where he has continued to live, and where he has been constantly interested in stock until within the last two years, during which he has been engaged in the saloon business at Yakima City. He was married in North Yakima, in 1891, to Amy A. McLavy, daughter of James and Katie (Harkin) McLavy. Her father was a native of Iowa and an engineer. Both her parents are dead. Mrs. McDaniel was born in Iowa in 1873, came to Washington when three years old, and was raised and educated in Goldendale. Her brothers and sisters are: Guy, Roy and Mrs. Anna Bilington. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. McDaniel have been born three children: George A., Harry T. and Mary E., born respectively September 14, 1895, October 6, 1897, and May 3, 1901. Mrs. McDaniel is a member of the Christian church. Mr. McDaniel is an active Democrat and a man of influence in the local councils of his party. He is respected as a man of business integrity and has made a success of his business ventures.

CHARLES CAMPBELL was ushered into this world November 18, 1858, in Washington, District of Columbia, to the union of John F. and Cornelia (Brown) Campbell. The father was a native of Washington, District of Columbia, and was a cooper by trade. He later moved to the state of Delaware, where he lived until his death. The mother was born in Delaware where she also died. She was of English parentage. Mr. Campbell grew to manhood in Delaware, and was there educated. He remained at home with his parents until nineteen, when he went to Connecticut to learn the trade of molder, in the iron works, which he followed for three years. He then entered a meat market and learned the trade of meat cutter, which he pursued in Connecticut for three years. In 1882 he came west to Washington, stopping for a brief period at Waitsburg and then coming to Yakima county in 1883. He took a contract for cutting wood the first summer and then engaged in the stock business, which he has since followed. He is a breeder of thoroughbred running horses, and the best breeds of draft horses, including the Percheron and Clyde. He was married in North Yakima, in 1888, to Miss Bell Splawn, daughter of William Splawn, one of the oldest and best known pioneers of the Yakima valley, where he settled in the early sixties and where he is still living; a prominent farmer and stockman. He is a native of Missouri. The mother, Margaret (Jacobs) Splawn, was born in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Campbell is a native of Parker Bottom, Yakima county, where she was born in 1860. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have one child, George W., born in Yakima City in 1890. Mr. Campbell is a Democrat. He owns a farm and a considerable amount of fine stock. He is a man of influence in local affairs and holds the respect of all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

JAMES HARVEY, residing on rural free delivery route No. 2, three miles southwest of North Yakima, is one of the sterling farmer-citizens of the Yakima country, and has been particularly successful in the raising of hops, his yards being among the best in the county. His birthplace is far-away Scotland, where, in the year 1858, he came into the home of David and Martha (Fitsimmons) Harvey, both of whom were also natives of the British Isles. His father and mother both died at their home in Scotland. The subject of this sketch was reared among the hills and heaths of his native country, there receiving his education and serving his apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade. For a year and a half he worked at his trade in Glasgow. In 1880 he sought the shores of America, and after carefully looking over the country, located in Yakima City, where for ten years he was employed at his trade. At the end of that time he decided to permanently settle in the Yakima valley, and accordingly purchased seventy acres of land one mile west of the town. During the next fourteen years he farmed and worked at his trade, gradually accumulating a valuable property and learning American methods of farming. About the year 1892 the Yakima country took up hop culture in earnest, and in that year Mr. Harvey set out a twelve-acre yard, purchasing twelve acres of school land for that purpose. Two years later he added twenty-five acres to his holdings and set out an additional ten acres in hops, and he has lately purchased an adjoining yard of fourteen acres. For the first five years he used the pole system; then changed to the trellis system, his yard being the second one in the county to adopt this improvement. The middle nineties were not encouraging years to the Yakima hop grower, but Mr. Harvey had faith in the business and patiently withstood his trials, and in the end has prospered. Last year (1903), he raised thirty-one and one-half tons, all of which have brought very satisfactory prices. Mr. Harvey has three brothers: William, living in Scotland; David and Thomas, living in Yakima county; and one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Pogue, who also lives in Scotland. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party. His property interests consist of one hundred and twenty acres of high grade agricultural land, of which forty-two acres are in hops, thirty in alfalfa, thirty in wheat and the balance in pasture grasses; he also owns a half-interest in a band of two thousand five hundred sheep. Mr. Harvey is a substantial and respected citizen, belonging to that class which all sections are proud to number among their residents.

MRS. MARY A. SPLAWN, widow of William H. H. Splawn, resides upon a small, well-improved farm three miles west and an equal distance south of the city of North Yakima, where she commands the respect and esteem of her neighbors and a large circle of friends. Born in Oregon, in 1852, she is the daughter of James W. and Nancy J. (Miller) Allen, pioneers of the Northwest. Her father was born in Massachusetts, and during his early life followed the carpenter trade and sailing. When still a young man he settled in Iowa, where he was married, and in 1851 crossed the Plains to Oregon, using ox teams. In that far western territory he settled on Eagle creek, where he built a mill. After a fifteen years' residence in Oregon, Mr. Allen removed to the Ahtanum valley, Washington, 1866, and there lived until his death in 1891. This hardy pioneer was of English extraction. His wife and her parents were natives of Illinois and pioneers of that state and Iowa. She died at the mature age of seventy-eight. Mary Allen was educated in the common schools of Oregon and came to the Yakima county with her parents in 1866. There, when only fourteen years of age, she was married to Horris M. Benton, and to this union were born the only children she has: Mary M., born February 6, 1867, now the wife of D. D. Reynolds; and Sarah C., born December 8, 1879, now the wife of C. E. Finberg, of North Yakima. In 1879, after the matrimonial ties which bound her to H. M. Benton had been dissolved, she was married to William H. H. Splawn, a member of the noted Splawn family of the northwestern pioneers and a nephew of William, Charles and A. Jackson Splawn. Her husband came to Yakima county in 1870. He died some years ago, leaving no children. Mrs. Splawn owns a twenty-acre tract of fine land on Ahtanum creek, nine acres being in alfalfa and the remainder plow land, several cows and a number of horses, and from this real and personal property derives a steady, substantial income. She is bravely facing the world alone and daily demonstrates the ability of her sex to safely take the helm of life into its own hands when necessity so wills.

EUGENE ROUNDTREE, one of the scores of prosperous, contented farmers in the Ahtanum valley, is a native of Illinois, born in 1855 to John and Lydia (Spooner) Roundtree, the father a Missourian, the mother a native of Kentucky. John Roundtree came to Illinois in early days and from there, in 1859, crossed the Plains to Puget Sound, where he became one of Washington's oldest pioneers and lived the remainder of his years. The subject of this article was only four years old when his parents came to Washington, but withstood the fatiguing trip without injury to his health. At the age of nine he left home and went to Oregon, where for two years he worked at various tasks; he then went to Jacksonville, and when only thirteen years old was as far south as California. Six years later he returned to Oregon, staying at Eugene a year. In 1882 he came into Klickitat county, and for two years farmed leased property. Soon after he purchased a piece of railroad land, later sold it, and until 1897 was engaged in farming and stock raising in that county. In that year he removed to Yakima county, purchased forty acres in Wide Hollow, sold it, bought ten acres on Nob Hill, sold that, and with the proceeds acquired the twenty-acre farm in the Ahtanum valley, where he now lives. The fall of 1878 marks the date of his marriage to Irene Young, of Klickitat county. Her parents were Daniel and Alizan (Henton) Young, both of whom are dead. Her father was born in Ohio, was a pioneer of Illinois and Missouri, and in 1847 crossed the Plains by ox teams to Oregon, where Irene was born in Washington county, 1859. Subsequently, her father, then a widower, became a resident of Klickitat county and there died. She was married when eighteen years old. Her brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Mary J. Story (deceased); John, living at Cottage Grove, Oregon; Joseph, living at Goldendale, and Elam, living at Little Rock, Washington. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Roundtree have been born four children: Nettie, July 9, 1883; Eddie, October 12, 1885; Maudie, May 19, 1890; and Ethel (deceased), February 18, 1895; all being born in Klickitat county, except Maudie, whose birthplace is Chehalis, Washington. Politically, Mr. Roundtree is a steadfast supporter of the Republican party. Seventeen acres of his farm are producing alfalfa, the balance being in garden. Eight head of excellent dairy stock are also no unimportant source of income. Mr. and Mrs. Roundtree have reason to feel proud of their comfortable home and the position they occupy among their friends and neighbors.

DAVID HARVEY, living on his ranch six miles southwest of the city of North Yakima, is of foreign birth and parentage, having been born in Scotland, in 1852, to the union of David and Martha (Fitsimmons) Harvey. His father was a farmer and lived and died near the place of his birth, his death occurring at the age of seventy. Until twenty-eight, the younger David remained at home, attending school and assisting his father on the farm, but in 1880 he immigrated to the United States, coming direct to the territory of Washington. Here he decided to settle on the Wenas river, and accordingly rented a ranch there, and for five years was engaged in raising sheep and farming. He then moved to Wide Hollow creek and again leased land, this time for six years. Finally, however, in 1891, he purchased the land where his home is at present, paying especial attention to hop growing. In 1893 he set out eight acres in hops, and the following season doubled that acreage, and his yard now comprises sixteen acres. Last year he picked twelve tons of hops, which commanded the most satisfying prices hop growers have received for some time. Since removing to his present home Mr. Harvey has also given attention to raising stock, success crowning his efforts in both farming and stock raising. He has three brothers, William in Scotland, Thomas in North Yakima, and James in the Ahtanum valley, and one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Pollock, also living in Scotland. Mr. Harvey was united in wedlock in 1885 to Miss Anna McCreddie, the daughter of James and Maggie (Gracie) McCreddie, whose biographies will be found on another page. Both are natives of Ireland. They emigrated from the British Isles in 1894, and are now living at Mabton. Mrs. Harvey was born in Scotland in 1857 and was educated in the public schools of that country. She came to America in 1885. Three children brighten the Harvey home: Maggie J., born January 2, 1887; Annie B., October 23, 1890; and Francis R., born September 18, 1902. Both Mr. and Mrs. Harvey are church members, the husband belonging to the Presbyterian and the wife to the Baptist church. In politics, he is a liberal Republican, loyal to the basic principles of the party, but ever ready to support the best man nominated when the destruction of policies is not involved. Mr. Harvey's stock interests have been referred to. In this line he is making a specialty of breeding fine Hereford stock, the major number of his band of sixty-five cattle belonging to that breed. He also has several fine horses. His ranch contains one hundred and twenty acres, of which forty are in salt-grass, fifty are producing Yakima's check for gold—alfalfa—and sixteen acres are devoted to the production of hops, in which the Yakima valley excels. Mr. Harvey and his wife have a host of warm friends, who contribute not a little to the enjoyment of one's life, and as a man of strict integrity, ability and substantial worth, he commands the respect of all with whom he comes in contact.

STEPHEN WADE. The subject of this biography is a native of England, born in 1831, his parents being John and Mary (Symons) Wade, also of English birth and extraction. John Wade was born in 1798; his wife in 1806. The paternal ancestry has been traced back as far as 1333 to William Wade, who was assessed ten pounds six shillings and eight pence, by King Edward, to carry on the war against the Scotch, and in the family have been many of note. The Symons family is also a distinguished English family, Mary Symons being the daughter of John, who was in his life time mayor of the borough of Bosiney. This place is of historic interest, having been the residence of King Arthur, the last king of the ancient Britons. Stephen Wade lived in England until his father immigrated to Canada in 1848, and attended both English and Canadian schools. When he became of age, however, his father sent him to England to dispose of property belonging to the family, a mission which he successfully accomplished, returning to the home-stead in America two years later. Subsequently he returned to England, in 1858, and was there united in marriage with Miss Frances Wade, daughter of William and Mary (Wakham) Wade. Frances Wade was born in England, in the year 1826, received a public school education, and at the age of thirty-two was married to Mr. Wade. Returning to America, Mr. Wade engaged in farming, first in Canada, then in South Dakota, where he lived nine years. In 1890 he went farther west, settling in the thriving metropolis of Tacoma, where he conducted a grocery business for three years. Fortunately, he was able to sell his business before the full force of the panic struck the Northwest, and with the proceeds purchased the farm where he now lives. Prosperity has now smiled upon him and industry and pluck have not been lacking in his character, as the result of which he possesses a fine ranch in a most desirable locality. They have five children: John S., born February 13, 1859, in Canada; Stephen, November 23, 1860, in Canada; William, February 19, 1862, in Canada; Mrs. Mary Bray, June 26, 1866, in Canada; and Charles, also born in Canada, January 26, 1870. Mr. Wade is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and both himself and wife partake of the Episcopal communion. In politics, he is an active Democrat, taking part in all general campaigns. During all his life he has been an ardent friend of educational institutions and for thirty years past has been a member of school boards in his community. At present he is clerk of school district No. 26. His property, jointly with his sons' interests, consists of eighty acres, forty-five of which are raising alfalfa; ten are in hops; six in orchard, and the balance in plow land. Besides this real property, he owns one hundred and fifty head of cattle, fifteen head of horses and small stock. Mr. Wade is one of the county's substantial men in every respect, and is highly esteemed in his community.

GEORGE WILSON, living in North Yakima, is one of Yakima county's substantial and highly respected citizens and successful business men—a man who has made the most of his opportunities since arriving in the rich Yakima valley in 1877. His parents, William and Isabella (Vernou) Wilson, were natives of Scotland, where they lived and died, the father being a farmer. The son George was born there in the year 1851 and there received his education, remaining at home until twenty-three years of age, when he set out into the world to seek his fortune. In 1876 he crossed the Atlantic, landing in New York city, whence he went by rail to San Francisco, where he accepted a position with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. After remaining with that company a short time he prospected in Arizona, farmed in Oregon, and finally, in the fall of 1877, came to Yakima county, where his first work was in a logging camp near Soda Springs. There he worked until May, 1878, and then settled on government land on Wide Hollow, but did not use his citizenship rights on the claim, purchasing another man's squatter rights to a quarter section and moving thither. Subsequently, he bought a tract of eighty-one acres of deeded land, and later purchased a section of railroad land in the Coviche valley, the latter tract being valuable principally for grazing purposes. For twenty years Mr. Wilson was engaged in farming and stock raising, but in 1901 he sold his ranch and stock interests and removed to North Yakima, where he erected the handsome brick block which bears his name. This sightly structure stands on the southeast corner of Yakima avenue and Third street and is occupied by stores and offices. Mr. Wilson also bought, at this time, a five-acre tract of suburban property, upon which he built a fine eight-room modern residence, where he now lives. In 1884 he made a trip to his birthplace and was there united in marriage to Anna MacMecken, daughter of Hugh and Ann (Fernie) MacMecken. Mrs. Wilson was born in 1856 and was given a good education in the common schools of her native land. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have been born the following children: Anna, born in 1885; William, in 1887; Robina, in 1889; Georgina, in 1892, and Harry, in 1900; Yakima county being the birthplace of all. Mr. Wilson and his wife are devoted members of the Presbyterian faith. In politics, he is a staunch Republican and a supporter of the present administration.

JOHN J. TYLER, whose home is in North Yakima, is one of the early settlers of Yakima county, with whose history he has been prominently identified. His life has been one of varied experiences, the field of action ranging from New York to Washington and from Alaska to Central America. Born in Yates, Orleans county, New York, in 1850, the son of John H. and Saloma M. (Gates) Tyler, he comes of old Puritan stock, both parents having been natives of Vermont and descendants of Revolutionary war veterans. John H. Tyler was in the War of 1812, and for some time represented his county in the legislature. The father died in 1856; the mother several years later. John J. Tyler lived with his parents on the farm and attended school, including a period at the Yates Academy, until young manhood, when he began to teach school. He taught and farmed, alternately, until 1877, when he came west, stopping first in Seattle, where he commenced work in the large jewelry house of W. G. Jameson. A year later he went to Tacoma and opened a small jewelry store, but after a year's experience abandoned this business and removed to Ellensburg, where he accepted a clerkship in the store of John A. Shoudy and subsequently engaged in carpentering. In 1882, as the candidate of the Republican party, he was elected sheriff of Yakima county, an event which necessitated his residing in Yakima City. So well did he administer the office that he was re-elected in 1884 and faithfully served the people until failing health compelled him to resign, in May, 1886. Three years in Honduras, Central America, followed, during which he was engaged in placing mining machinery, and another year in Dallas, Texas, elapsed before his return to Yakima county, in improved health. He then engaged in mining in the Okanogan region for four years. The year 1896 saw him in Alaska, where he spent a season mining, and after a year in Oregon, placing machinery in the Blue River country, Mr. Tyler again returned to the Alaskan mines. While in Alaska the last time he was on the scene of the great snowslide which killed fifty-seven people, and was among the rescuers. Returning again to the states, Mr. Tyler spent several months on the coast and then came once more to North Yakima, arriving in July, 1902, where he is now engaged as a building contractor.

His marriage to Miss Kate F. Fuehrbach, a native of Missouri, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Casper Fuehrbach, took place in 1888. In 1883 Miss Fuehrbach was appointed to fill the office of auditor and county clerk of Yakima county, the auditor-elect having died. Her father came to North Yakima from St. Charles, Missouri, in 1881, and at the present writing is conducting a barber shop in the first mentioned city. Mr. Tyler has one sister, two half-sisters, and one half-brother, all living in the east, and also two sons, Willard and Gilbert, living in California. The sons are from a former marriage of Mr. Tyler. He is affiliated with both the Masons and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in politics has always been a Republican. Mr. Tyler owns a ranch, lying six miles west of North Yakima, which he is leasing at present. As a courageous, energetic pioneer, an efficient public officer and a respected citizen who has been in the past, and is now, identified with the upbuilding of the community, Mr. Tyler is accorded a place in this volume.

WILLIAM H. VESSEY, whose home is situated in North Yakima, is one of the leading stockmen in central Washington. Born in Portland, Oregon, October 13, 1860, he is the son of two pioneers of the Northwest. John and Ann (Harer) Vessey, of English descent. John Vessey was born in England and came to America in 1843, settling first in New York. In 1849 he went to California by way of Cape Horn, and for a year was busy with pick and shovel in the mines of the new El Dorado. He then came to Portland and was married. Mr. Vessey continued to follow his trade, that of a mechanic, and other pursuits, in the Willamette valley until 1879, when he moved to Walla Walla; he died there in 1900. The Harer family came to Oregon from Arkansas, that state being Ann Harer's birthplace. They came in the emigration of 1852. While in the Blue mountains, the wearisome journey nearly accomplished and the promised land almost within sight, father and mother became ill with the cholera and died after a short sickness, having consecrated their lives to the spread of civilization into the Northwest. The little orphan girl was cared for by other emigrants, and subsequently became the wife of Mr. Vessey; she died November 25, 1880. William H. Vessey received a common school education in Portland. When only thirteen years old, however, he began to do for himself, entering the employ of William Humes, in a salmon cannery. After a year's experience in this work the youth labored on a farm in Washington county until 1876, coming to Walla Walla in the fall of that year and entering the service of his uncle, caring for stock. A year later he engaged in ranging sheep, learning the business thoroughly, so that in 1882 he was able to care successfully for his own herds. Mr. Vessey ranged his herds in Umatilla county until 1889, when he moved into the lower Yakima valley. Since that date he has made either Kiona or Prosser his headquarters. Since coming to Washington Mr. Vessey has entered into partnership with another Yakima stockman, and together they range from twelve thousand to fifteen thousand sheep each year.

Mr. Vessey was married in Walla Walla, 1883, to Miss Mary E. Defreecce, the daughter of James Defreecce. Both parents were natives of Missouri, the children of pioneers; were married in that state and in 1879 crossed the Plains to Umatilla county, Oregon, settling near Milton. In 1888 Mr. Defreecce immigrated to the Big Bend region, Washington, and lived near Davenport until his death. Mrs. Vessey was born in Nebraska in 1865, and was educated in the common schools of Nebraska and Oregon, marrying at the age of eighteen. Their only child, Estella, born in Oregon, July 29, 1884, died April 25, 1893. Mr. Vessey is fraternally affiliated with the Elks. Mrs. Vessey is connected with the Episcopal church. Mr. Vessey is prominent in the Republican party, and in 1903 was appointed and confirmed as one of Washington's state fair commissioners, but declined the honor. The co-partnership in which he is interested has among its assets sixteen thousand acres of grazing land in Yakima county, a section of wheat land in cultivation, one hundred and sixty acres irrigated by the Sunnyside canal, twenty acres in the Ahtanum valley, a quarter-section near Mabton, considerable city property in North Yakima and Prosser, one hundred head of horses and seven thousand head of sheep; in all of which he has a half-interest, giving him an unusually valuable property. His faithful industry has won him deserved success in business, which, added to his reputation as a man of high principle and to his personal congeniality, gives him a position of influence in the Yakima country. Mr. and Mrs. Vessey enjoy the friendship of all with whom they are associated.

ABRAHAM W. MORRISON, residing six miles west of the city of North Yakima, has been a successful farmer in Yakima county for nearly a quarter of a century. Born in Pike county, Illinois, in 1843, he is the son of James D. and Lydia (Lee) Morrison, natives of Pennsylvania and Indiana respectively. His father moved from Pennsylvania to Indiana, thence to Illinois, where he lived sixteen years, and finally settled in Missouri, where his death occurred in 1870. Abraham worked with his father on the farm in Illinois and Missouri until the Civil war burst over the nation. At that time he was eighteen years old and, his qualifications being sufficient to permit of his acceptance, he enlisted in Company E, Seventh Missouri cavalry, in which he valiantly served his flag for three years one month and eleven days, participating in the famous battles of Pea Ridge, Cross Hollows and Lone Jack, besides many smaller ones. His army life came to an end in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1864, when he was mustered out. Returning home, he remained there until his father's death. The succeeding fall he was married, and in the spring of 1877 the young husband and wife crossed the Plains by mule teams to the Willamette valley. There they lived until the fall of 1880, then moved to Washington, where Mr. Morrison filed a homestead claim to a quarter section lying near Prosser. In the new home he followed farming and stock raising successfully for many years. He then sold his place and moved into the Yakima valley, choosing as a residence a place one and one-half miles southwest of North Yakima, where he lived a year previous to buying his present ranch on Wide Hollow. His bride in 1870 was Miss Alma Lybyer, daughter of Daniel and Rachel (Carpenter) Lybyer, both of Dutch descent. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and lived the greater portion of his life in Indiana, and died in Missouri; the mother was born in Indiana and reared eight children. Mrs. Morrison, who was a native of Indiana, born in 1854, was educated in the common schools of that state, and was seventeen years old at the time of her marriage to Mr. Morrison. Their happy home was recently covered by a pall of sorrow, placed there by the grim reaper, September 21, 1903, when husband and children watched the light of life in the eyes of her they loved so well flicker out forever. She was the mother of six children—George W., born in 1871; James D., 1874; Gertie, 1876; Roy, 1879; Mrs. Edith Stair, 1881, living at Mabton; and Jessie, 1884, at home. Mr. Morrison has five brothers and sisters, as follows: Mrs. Mary A. Chapman, living in Oregon; Mrs. Nancy Turnbaugh, in Missouri; Mrs. Maria Carr, in Kansas; John L., in Ahtanum valley, and James W., also in the Ahtanum. Mr. Morrison is a member of the Masonic order, and in politics a stalwart Democrat. As the successful candidate of his party, he served as one of Yakima county's commissioners during the years 1887-8, making an excellent record. His ranch is divided as follows: Fifty-five acres in alfalfa; ten acres in clover and timothy; twelve acres in a hop yard, from which he harvested thirteen tons last fall; five acres in bearing orchard; and the balance in plow land and building sites. His stock interests include eleven horses, thirty hogs and several head of fine cattle. As a substantial citizen of his county, a man devoted to his home, and of generous impulses, he is esteemed by his fellow men.

CHARLES LONGMIRE, living in North Yakima, is one of the prominent stockmen and land owners in Yakima county, and for thirty-two years has been identified with its growth and upbuilding, having settled upon its bunch-grass plains in 1872. He has watched the desert transformed into a garden, has witnessed the rise of the county from one of small importance into a position among the leading counties of the state, and himself has joined with others in rolling onward the wheel of progress. Born in Illinois, May 30, 1848, the son of Charles and Susanna (Roderick) Longmire, he bears the name of a family a portion of which became well known pioneers of California. His father crossed the Plains to California with his family in 1854, where they resided until the death of the father, in the sixties. The family farmed and raised stock, and the mother passed away in the early seventies. At the new home in California, Charles was given as good an education as possible under the circumstances, and remained at home until of age, when he commenced farming on his own place. Until May 6, 1872, he lived in California, but on that date he started for the Yakima country, where he immediately entered the stock raising and farming industries, in which he is at present engaged, though living in the city. In 1853 James Longmire and his family left the prairies of Illinois and began a memorable trip across the Plains and mountains to the farthest settlement in the Northwest, the Olympia and Steilacoom settlement on Puget Sound. There they settled on Yelm prairie, where the mother, Varinda (Taylor) Longmire, still lives in her seventy-seventh year. To this place Charles Longmire journeyed in 1860 and there married Miss Laura M. Longmire, the fifth of a family of eleven children, the others being Elcain, David, Talatha Kandle, John, Melissa Rice, Martha Conine, Frank, Robert, George and James, all of whom but James are living. Charles Longmire's brothers and sisters are as follows: Simon, living in Washington; Andrew, a California farmer; Cyrus, Lewis and Leonard, also in California; Susanna Shaw, Ellen McIntyre and Martha, residents of California also. Eight children were the issue of the marriage, three of whom—Edith, Wilmer and Emma—are dead. The others are Mrs. Louisa Backer, whose home is in Yakima county; Merritt, Mrs. Ora Taylor, Mett and Lewis, all of whom except Louisa were born in Yakima county. Mr. Longmire is a Democrat in politics, but is such an admirer of President Roosevelt that he will support him for a second term as chief executive of the United States. In county affairs he votes for the most capable man. Both himself and wife are members of the Congregational church. Six hundred and sixty-nine acres of fine farming land in Yakima county, two houses and lots in the city of North Yakima and considerable stock constitute the major portion of Mr. Longmire's worldly possessions, and the management of this property occupies most of his time. A hardy life on the frontier, full of rough knocks and interesting experiences, the excitement of numerous Indian scares, among which may be mentioned the one of 1878 in Yakima county, prosperity in financial matters and a good home have fitted Mr. and Mrs. Longmire for the enjoyment of their declining years—a reward justly due them.

WILLIAM H. WHIPPLE. The subject of this biographical sketch is a well known and highly respected stockman residing in North Yakima, where he is engaged in buying and shipping cattle, horses and sheep. His whole life has been a preparation for this difficult business, requiring as it does long experience, a thorough knowledge of stock and keen business abilities, so that it is not strange that Mr. Whipple has reaped success. He was born in New York state in the year 1848, his parents being Eli and Marion (Bosworth) Whipple, pioneers and natives of that state, where both are buried. The Bosworths were sailors and citizens of Massachusetts before removing to New York. William H. very early in life manifested unusual business ability, as may be seen from the fact that when only twenty years old he purchased a farm, paying seven thousand five hundred dollars therefor. His father died when our subject was only seven years of age, leaving the son to secure his education as best he could and otherwise do for himself. By working industriously on dairy farms the fatherless boy was able to not only secure an education, but obtain a better start in life than do most young men. Ten years he continued in the dairy business in New York. He then sold out and removed to Nebraska, where he was engaged in the same occupation for the following five years. In 1883 he went to California, remained there a short time and drove back to Nebraska, visiting several mining camps on the journey. Arriving at his old home, he again engaged in dairying and successfully carried on that business until 1891, when he again turned westward, locating his home in Salt Lake City. Thence he went to Ogden, where he conducted a hotel for two years, and then purchased a band of sheep at Idaho Falls, Idaho. Two years later he came to North Yakima, where for two years previous to entering the present commission business he owned a meat market. He was married to Helen E., daughter of Harvey and Harriet (Webb) Knickerbocker, natives of New York, in New York state. Her paternal ancestors were of Holland Dutch descent; the maternal ancestors of French descent, Mrs. Knickerbocker being one of fourteen children. Both grandparents are dead. Helen E. Knickerbocker was born in New York in 1848 and was married at the age of twenty. One child was the result of this union, William K. Whipple, born in New York, June 11, 1870, and now living in North Yakima. Mr. Whipple belongs to the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, is a stalwart Republican and a member of the Methodist church. He owns valuable city property and is one of the leading business men of central Washington's progressive metropolis.

DANIEL W. NELSON, farmer and stockman, living in the Naches valley, is a member of the well known Nelson family of pioneers, who were among the earliest settlers in central Washington and the first permanent settlers on the Naches river. The head of this family, Judge John B. Nelson, was born in Indiana in 1817; the mother, Clarissa (James) Nelson, was a Kentuckian, born the same year as her husband. Through many a wilderness and over many a trail these two indomitable pioneers went, ever seeking the westernmost west and always hovering along the frontier, reaching their journey's end at last in the beautiful valley of the Naches, where they laid down life's burdens. Daniel W. was born in Oregon, March 29, 1851, seven years after the arrival of his parents in the Willamette valley, and there his education was begun. In the sixties the Nelsons removed to the Klickitat valley and finally, in 1865, brought their stock over the divide into the Yakima country and took claims near the mouth of the Naches river. A little later they moved through the gap and into the valley proper, Daniel remaining with his parents until seventeen years old, when he went to Oregon and assisted in laying the first twenty miles of railroad track built from Portland up to Parrott creek. The following spring he entered the blacksmithing department of the Oregon & California Railroad Company. When this company was merged into the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, Daniel worked for that corporation two years, after which he began prospecting in the Cascade mountains, with the result that he became one of the discoverers of the Gold Hill placers in 1876. Together with H. L. Tucker, George Gibbs and James Robinson, he mined in that district until 1880, spending, besides his time, his share of two thousand eight hundred dollars in taking out an aggregate of one thousand four hundred dollars in dust. Since then the district has become one of importance. After another year in railroad work, Mr. Nelson became a freighter between The Dalles and Yakima City, at which occupation he continued until 1872, when he filed a pre-emption claim to the land that he at present occupies as his home. The quarter section was eventually, however, deeded to him as a homestead. With the exception of one year, that of 1900, when he went to Alaska and spent a year in the Nome district, in which he located a claim eighteen miles northwest of Nome City, Mr. Nelson has lived on his place in the Naches valley, farming and raising stock. Mr. Nelson's brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Margaret Frush, Jasper, Mrs. Elizabeth VanSickle, Thomas B., John J., George W., Adam, Mrs. Alice Sinclair, Arabella and Mrs. Louisa Dix. Mr. Nelson and Miss Isabella Drysdale, daughter of George and Margaret (Shearer) Drysdale, natives of Nova Scotia, where both were born in 1820 and where the latter is still living, were united in marriage, and to them have been born the following children: Helen F., born September 14, 1885, now attending the North Yakima High school; Daniel D., born March 6, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are members of the Congregational church, and Mr. Nelson belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood. Fourteen hundred acres of land stand in his name, including the well improved ranch he lives upon. He leases three sections of grazing land and has a herd of sixty cattle. The possession of this valuable property speaks well for the industry that Mr. Nelson has displayed, and such is his integrity that those who know him consider his word as good as his bond.

JOSEPH F. CHAMBERLAIN, one of the proprietors of the Wenas livery stables, North Yakima, is the son of James L. and Christiana (Kincaid) Chamberlain, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively, his mother being born in 1832 and his father in 1830. His father crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1851 and his mother came to the Willamette valley with her parents a year later, where, August 7, 1853, the two young immigrants were united in marriage. A varied life in California and Oregon followed, but in 1878 they came to Klickitat county and subsequently to Yakima county, and in these two political divisions they have since lived. Mr. Chamberlain was a pioneer merchant at Cleveland and Prosser. At present, in their declining years, they are happily settled on a fine suburban tract near the city of North Yakima. To them have been born the following children, of which the subject of this biography was one: John G., July 1, 1854, now dead; Mrs. America J. Hamilton, September, 1856, living in Klickitat county; Mrs. Mary E. Grant, December 15, 1858, living in Oregon; Ida B. (deceased), born February 20, 1861; Paul P., March 15, 1862, living in Klickitat county; Joseph F., August 27, 1868; William F., 1871 (deceased); Erwin L., March 15, 1872, living on the reservation; Frances, August 9, 1865 (deceased); Mrs. Emily White, November 24, 1874, living on the Naches river, and James B., April 7, 1878, living in North Yakima (see his biography). Joseph F. was educated in Oregon and Washington. When he was ten years old his parents moved to Klickitat county and there, at the age of eleven, young Chamberlain manfully took his part in the pioneer life around him, riding the range for J. M. Baxter, then for Sharkey and later for Snipes & Allen; his work, however, not being confined to his home county. A four years' service for the Moxee Company followed and in 1895 the purchase of a ranch on the Naches. Subsequently Mr. Chamberlain removed to the Wenas and in 1902 came to North Yakima, where he engaged in the transfer business and continued at this occupation until November, 1903, when he and his brother James bought the Wenas livery stables. In 1894 he was married to Miss Maggie R. Mowery, a daughter of James and Lizzie (Cordell) Mowery, her father being a coal merchant in Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. Chamberlain was born in Kansas in the centennial year, educated in the schools of her native state and married at the age of nineteen. She has two brothers and one sister: Charles, living in North Yakima, and John, whose home is in Kansas City, and Mrs. Laura Davis, who lives in North Yakima. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain have been born six children: Charles, born on the Naches in 1896; Edgar and Edwin, twins, born in North Yakima, 1898; Mildred and Netia, twins, 1899, and Alvin, born in North Yakima in 1902. Mr. Chamberlain is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and in politics, is affiliated with the Democratic party, in which he is an active worker. Besides his real estate interests and his interest in the livery business, he owns a fine bunch of sixty-five cattle and several horses. He is one of North Yakima's progressive business men and wide-awake citizens, and by his genial qualities has drawn to his side hosts of loyal friends.

JAMES B. CHAMBERLAIN. As among the energetic, bright young business men of the bustling city of North Yakima, the subject of this biographical sketch deserves mention. At the age of twenty-five he is a partner in a thriving livery business, which bids fair to prosper and grow, and during his quarter of a century of life has taken a full share of the trials and struggles incident to the development of a western valley. His parents, James L. and Christiana (Kincaid) Chamberlain, were pioneers of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively, and crossed the Plains in the early fifties, settling in the Willamette valley, Oregon. A short account of their lives will be found in the biography of their son, Joseph F. Just before leaving Oregon for Klickitat county, in 1878, the son James was born, his birthday being April 7th. In Klickitat county he remained until four years old, when his parents removed to Yakima county, where his education was completed. When seventeen years of age James entered the occupation so general in bunch-grass regions, that of riding the range, and at this and ranching he labored until 1899, when he entered the service of the government as a packer. In this department he was chiefly occupied in transporting stores and equipage of surveying parties, a pleasant as well as healthy vocation for any young man. Four years he remained in Uncle Sam's employ. Then, in 1903, he and his brother Joseph formed a partnership and purchased the Wenas stables on South First street, North Yakima. As with many another young man in his twenties, Mr. Chamberlain has found a strong, loving helpmeet in life's work in the person of his wife, formerly Miss Daisy M. Labbee, whom he married in 1903 at North Yakima. She is a native of Illinois, born in 1876, the daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Foiles) Labbee, both of whom were also natives of Illinois. Her father came to North Yakima in 1901, and now resides in Toppenish. Mrs. Chamberlain was educated in the common schools of her native state and was graduated at the Bloomington, Illinois, College. She taught school a number of years. Mr. Chamberlain is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Brotherhood, and politically, is an ardent Democrat. His prospects for a long, useful life are indeed bright.

WILLIAM TERRY. Of all the tradesmen in a pioneer community none is more important than the skillful, brawny blacksmith; no neighborhood is complete without him, and, as the country is settled, no man has greater demands made upon his time. His forge, covered by a crude roofing, is usually the first business enterprise to be established in the new settlement, and it would sometimes seem that life would come to a standstill without his assistance. To this class of our citizenship belongs William Terry, living in North Yakima, where he conducts a well equipped smithy. Born in the state of Illinois, March 27, 1851, he comes of old Virginia stock, his parents being James and Lucinda (Metzker) Terry, of German extraction. They lived in Illinois twenty years, and then moved to Missouri, where the father died. William remained at home until he was twenty years of age, meanwhile receiving a fair schooling, when he went to Iowa and there took up in earnest the trade he had partly learned in Missouri. But in 1876 the far western field attracted him so strongly that he went to Walla Walla, where he was engaged at his trade three years. Then he removed to Pendleton, where two years of his life were spent; thence to Pilot Rock for a short stay; thence into Grant county, Oregon, and, after two years there, returned to Washington and settled in North Yakima in 1880. While comparatively a new resident of Yakima county, he filed a homestead claim to a quarter section in the Coviche valley, and there lived five years, finally disposing of it and returning to the city, where he opened the shop he is at present conducting. His marriage to Miss Emma Weddle, of Walla Walla, took place in 1883. She was born in the Willamette valley in 1803, the daughter of Jasper and Jane (Sutton) Weddle, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Weddle was one of Oregon's earliest pioneers, and is now living in Yakima county. Mrs. Weddle was the mother of eleven children, of whom nine are living: Frank, Mrs. Eliza Laswell, David D., Mrs. Ellen Laswell, Mrs. Esther Little, Mrs. Anna Chase, Mrs. L. Foster and Joseph, besides Mrs. Terry. The Terry home has been brightened by the following children: Nellie, born February 22, 1885; Glenn, born March 13, 1887; Winnie, October 3, 1889; William, August 9, 1892; Bun, April 3, 1894; Camma, September 2, 1898; and Emma, February 7, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Terry are members of the Baptist church in North Yakima. He is an ardent admirer of President Roosevelt and a strong Republican. Mr. Terry owns the business building and grounds at 108 South First street, and bears the reputation among his fellow men of being a first-class blacksmith and a good citizen.

DANIEL G. GOODMAN. With the decline of the once great master industry of the Yakima country, cattle raising, has come the steady growth of the sheep business, until at the present time it is entitled to a position among the three or four leading occupations of that section. On every great range the business of sheep raising has met with most discouraging obstacles, but, despite the strenuous opposition manifested to the introduction of sheep, they have come, remained and multiplied, remunerating their owners amply for the trouble and extra expense involved in their rearing. Fortunately, in the Yakima region no serious clashes have occurred to mar the fortunes of the advancing sheep men, but, rather, wise, conservative counsel has prevailed, and the range difficulties have been satisfactorily adjusted. No one among the sheep men has been more prominently identified with the upbuilding and conservation of that industry than has the subject of this sketch. For eighteen years he has been a leading sheep man, owning at one time sixteen thousand sheep, and none has been more progressive or capable among the stockmen than he. Missouri, the birthplace of so many pioneers of the far west, is also Mr. Goodman's birthplace, the year being 1860. His parents were Joseph and Elizabeth (Stutsman) Goodman. Both have long since crossed the Great Divide of life. Joseph Goodman was by occupation a farmer and carpenter and a pioneer successively of Iowa, Illinois, California, Missouri and Umatilla county, Oregon. He died at his Oregon home. In 1858, he came to California via the Isthmus, and in 1862 again came west, having returned east some time previously. He located on what is now known as the Hudson Bay Farm, in Umatilla county, where, with the exception of two years spent in the Willamette valley, he lived the balance of his days. Mrs. Goodman died at the age of sixty-two, revered and mourned by twelve children. Daniel received his education in Umatilla county, being only two years old when his parents crossed the Plains to Oregon. At the age of twelve he began riding the range for the various stockmen in Oregon, working for wages until he was seventeen, when he purchased a band of horses from the Indians and drove them to the site of Sprague, Washington, where he took up a land claim. This was during the building of the Northern Pacific across Washington. The following spring he built a fine stone corral at Washtuckna lake, which he made headquarters for four years, during which time he followed horse raising. He then disposed of his holdings, borrowed more money from John McCloud and W. P. Sturgis, of Umatilla county, and entered the sheep business in Umatilla county, where he remained three years. In 1886, he removed his large band of sheep to the Rattlesnake range of hills, Yakima county, where he lived the following five years, in 1891 taking up his abode at Kiona. Nine years later he came to North Yakima, his present home. With a multitude of others, he was caught in the financial panic of 1893, during which he sold four hundred thousand pounds of wool at four and one-quarter cents, and sheep at from seventy-five cents to one dollar and fifty cents a head. In 1895, Mr. Goodman was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Agor, a native of sunny France, born in 1870. There, too, she was educated, and, in 1886, accompanied by her sister and two brothers, left its shores, coming direct to California. After a year's residence in San Francisco, she came to North Yakima, where she was married. One child has blessed the union, Daniel L., born at North Yakima, June 10, 1899. Mr. Goodman has three brothers, William S. and Ira W., living near Walla Walla, and Enos B., living near Milton, Oregon; and one sister, Mrs. Mary Swartz, who also lives near Milton. Mrs. Goodman is a zealous member of the Catholic church. Politically, Mr. Goodman is a strong Republican, being especially loyal to the tariff policy of that party. That he has been gratifyingly successful in the accumulation of worldly goods may be easily seen from the fact that he owns at least twelve thousand acres of grazing land, to which he is constantly adding, and a band of six thousand sheep. Truly, he is one of the substantial, respected citizens of the county.

DANIEL SINCLAIR, No. 103 North Sixth street, North Yakima, is a sterling man, citizen and husband in every sense of the word, as all who know him can well testify, and it is a pleasure to chronicle his life in these pages. What perseverance, indomitable energy and courage, and steadfast adherence to correct principles will accomplish is a lesson that the younger generation can well afford to learn from such a life. Born in 1845 on the peninsula of Nova Scotia, he is the son of early pioneers of that famed little section of North America. His father, Donald Sinclair, was a Scotchman by birth, and, with the exception of the first five years, spent his entire life in the land of his adoption. Jane McNeil, the mother, was also born on Scotch soil. The son, Daniel, was educated in the schools of Nova Scotia and remained at home until he was nineteen years of age, when the tempting world led him to determine to seek his fortune in the United States. With this idea in view he went to Iowa in 1867, and there for five years was engaged in farming. Then he crossed the Plains to Seattle, Washington, and for three years conducted a logging camp on the Snohomish river. While on the Sound, in 1872, he purchased land where a portion of the present city of Everett stands, but, in 1875, sold land from which he might have reaped an immense fortune in later years. Four years later, in 1879, he came to Yakima county, and, the following year, filed a pre-emption claim to one hundred and twenty acres and a homestead claim to eighty acres, all lying in the Naches valley. Subsequently he purchased an adjoining forty-acre tract, and, on this magnificent ranch of two hundred and forty acres, he lived for twenty-two years, farming and raising stock. He disposed of this farm to advantage during 1901, and removed to North Yakima, but still retains considerable property in the same vicinity. Mr. Sinclair's marriage to Miss Annie M., daughter of Duncan and Jessie (Murray) Cameron, took place in California in 1886. Her parents were natives of Nova Scotia, living and dying there, and Nova Scotia was her birthplace, the date being 1853. Three children—Jean, Malcolm and Jessie—brought happiness into the Sinclair home, and then brought the terrible sorrows which follow in the wake of death. Jean, the oldest child, was born in 1887; Malcolm in 1889, and Jessie in 1892. Malcolm lived only two years, the others died in August, 1902, at Oakland, California. Mr. Sinclair has two brothers, John H. and Alexander, both of whom live in Nova Scotia, the former being a lawyer, and two sisters, Mrs. Mary M. Bishop, living at North Yakima, and Mrs. Kate McBain, of Fitchburg, Massachusetts. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also a devoted member of the Presbyterian church. In political matters, Mr. Sinclair takes his stand with the Republican party. Besides his home in North Yakima, he owns three thousand acres of grazing land, sixty head of cattle and horses, and other property. In bringing this biography to a close, it is only necessary to say further that Mr. Sinclair is a representative citizen and deserving of a place in these chronicles of the pioneer inhabitants of the Yakima region.

WILLIAM L. WRIGHT owns one of the finest orchards in the Yakima country, and is a fruit grower of prominence in eastern Washington. He comes of a long line of American pioneers, the Wrights having come to Pennsylvania with William Penn in the seventeenth century, and were prominent in the settlement of the middle west. His father, Paschal L. Wright, was born in Pennsylvania, and emigrated therefrom to Illinois, in 1838, where he lived until his death at the age of sixty-eight. Many important offices were held by him, he was a pillar in the Presbyterian church of his community, and a man highly respected by all. Wrightsville, Pennsylvania, was named in honor of his father. The mother, Jane C. (Lawson) Wright, was also a native of the Quaker state, where her forefathers came two hundred years ago. She died in Illinois at an advanced age. William L. received a common and high school education at his home in Illinois, and worked for his father on the farm until of age, when he took the management of the place for an interest in the production. After his father's death, when William was twenty-four years old, he having been born on the farm in Stephens county, in 1851, he assumed full control of the place, buying out the other heirs, and there farmed for nineteen years. Then, in 1894, he immigrated to the Northwest, purchasing a tract of twenty-five acres of sage-brush land, half a mile west of North Yakima. By commendable energy and skill, he has transformed this bit of wilderness into one of the prettiest and most productive fruit farms to be found in central Washington; and a more ideal spot for a home in the Yakima valley could not well be found. Since his orchard came into bearing, Mr. Wright has taken many premiums at different fairs, his latest conquests in this direction being first premiums for the excellence of his fruit exhibited at the Washington state fair held in 1903, and at the Inter-State fair held last fall in Spokane. At Shannon, Illinois, March 11, 1875, Mr. Wright was united in marriage to Miss Lura, daughter of Thomas and Esther (Foster) Buckley, natives of Pennsylvania, and descendants of the earliest pioneers of that state. The father came to Illinois in the early days, where he conducted a drug store and operated an iron foundry at Mount Carroll. In 1858, he joined the rush to Pike's Peak, but the venture, like those of so many others in 1858 and 1859, was bootless, and he returned home. Mrs. Wright was born at Mount Carroll, and was educated in the Freeport common and high schools. After graduation, she taught school for four years, and was then married. Four children have blessed the Wright household: John Howard, born at Freeport, December 21, 1878; William C., born in Illinois, June 10, 1883; Helen B., born in Illinois, September 18, 1885, and Grace E., who was born in Illinois, August 28, 1891, and who died at North Yakima, in 1894. John went to the Spanish-American war as a sergeant in Company E, First Washington volunteers, and, after a service of eighteen months, returned with the company to North Yakima, where he now resides. He is now second lieutenant of the Yakima company of the Washington National Guard. William is a successful shoe salesman. Mr. Wright is a member of the Order of Washington, belongs to the Presbyterian church in North Yakima, of which he is one of the trustees, and is one of the stalwarts in the Republican party. He is president of the Schanno Ditch Company, clerk of school district No. 25, and a forceful leader in various other enterprises in the county. But it is as one of the most successful fruit growers in the state that Mr. Wright's influence is most felt, and that he himself takes greatest pride. At present he is president of the Yakima County Horticultural Society and Fruit Growers' Union, and is serving as first vice-president of the Inland Empire Horticultural and Floricultural Association, in all of which organizations he is a power. He has recently been appointed by the St. Louis fair commission of the state as general manager of the horticultural department of the state's exhibit at St. Louis, and will remain in that city until the close of the exposition. This is a lucrative position, and an office of considerable importance, and Mr. Wright is well worthy the appointment. That he is recognized throughout the state as one of the commonwealth's most capable, upright and progressive citizens is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Wright is one of the Washington state fair commissioners, and his standing and popularity in Yakima county are attested by the multitude of friends he has made.

FLAVEIUS A. CURRY, a paint and oil merchant in North Yakima, where he resides at No. 25 South Second street, was born in Iowa, December 23, 1858, and is the son of Michael Curry, a native of West Virginia, who went to Iowa in 1852, becoming one of its pioneers. Subsequently the father removed to Missouri, and lived there for twenty years, after which he took up his abode in Kansas, where he still lives at a ripe old age. The son, Flaveius, worked on his father's farm until he reached the age of twenty-one, receiving a good education in his boyhood, and then left the shelter of his home to make his own way in the world. His first work was that of cutting railroad ties, at which occupation he continued until 1886. In that year he immigrated to Washington, settling in the Horse Heaven region, south of Prosser, where he filed a pre-emption claim to a fine tract of land. He remained there only one year, however, going to work for the Northern Pacific on the famous Stampede tunnel. A year later he returned to the Horse Heaven country, went thence to the Rattlesnake springs, where he made his home for four years, and in 1890 took up his residence in North Yakima. After working at various occupations in this city for thirteen years, he opened a general paint and oil store in 1903, which gives every indication of a prosperous growth. Mr. Curry was married to Miss Agnes Matteson, in North Yakima, December 11, 1898. Her parents are James and Adeline (Mullen) Matteson, natives of New York and Pennsylvania respectively. She was born in Minnesota, November 17, 1873, received a high school education, and was granted a teacher's certificate in Minnesota, but never taught school. In Seattle, Washington, she learned the printer's trade, and worked at it for some time previous to her marriage. Mr. Curry is a member of two fraternal orders, the Knights of Pythias and the Eagles. His wife is an active member of the Christian church. In political matters, Mr. Curry is an enthusiastic Republican, and an energetic worker in every campaign, attending all preliminary caucuses and primaries, and county and district conventions. He is a pushing business man, and commands the respect and friendship of all who come in contact with him, either in a business or a social way.

THOMAS W. DAVIDSON is one of the prominent commission merchants of North Yakima, and as such is respected as a capable, progressive and straightforward business man and citizen. Wisconsin is his native state, he having been born in Brown county in 1862. His parents were David, a native born Scotchman, who came to Canada when a boy, and to Wisconsin at a later date, and Melinda (Wilson) Davidson, of English descent, and born in New York state in 1842. His father was born in 1824 and died in 1902. The subject of this biography was fortunate in securing a good education in the schools of Brown county, and remained with his parents until twenty-one years old, when he followed Horace Greeley's advice to young men by coming west to Washington. He made Yakima county his destination, and, arriving there, took charge of the Yeates sawmill on the Naches river, where he worked for three and one-half years. He then returned to Wisconsin, remained there for a like period, and engaged in the lumbering business. In 1889, however, he again turned westward, and settled permanently in the county where he now lives. After lumbering a year, he leased a ranch in the Naches valley, industriously cultivated it for three years, and in 1893 moved to North Yakima, and entered the commission business, at which he has been successful. He is associated with the firm of C. E. Jones & Company. In 1886, he and Miss Ann, daughter of Elijah S. and Jessie (Davidson) Yeates, were united in the bonds of matrimony, and to this union have been born the two children whose names follow: Harold C., born in Brown county, Wisconsin, July 15, 1888; Jeannette, born in North Yakima, February 6, 1900. Mr. Yeates is an Englishman by birth, coming to America when a boy of fifteen years, and settling in Wisconsin. In 1849, he crossed the Plains by ox teams to California, later lived in Nevada, and finally became a pioneer of the Yakima country. The mother was a native of Scotland. Mrs. Davidson was born in Green Bay, Wisconsin, in 1869, and became the wife of Mr. Davidson at the age of nineteen. She has five sisters living, four of whom are married: Mrs. Jennie Joannas, Mrs. Maggie Keiser, Mrs. Jessie Hessin, Mrs. Mary Parsons and Isabella. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson are both church members, he belonging to the Episcopal and she to the Presbyterian church. Of the two great political parties of the country, Mr. Davidson believes that the Republicans are the more capable of administering the nation's affairs, and is, therefore, a member of that party. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson own their own home in North Yakima, and some other city property, and, as good and respected citizens and members of a large social circle, are prosperous and contented, and willing to bide the future.

CHARLES R. HARRIS, the subject of this biography, was born in Madison, Indiana, in 1854, the son of Samuel M. and Mary A. (Voorhees) Harris, both natives and pioneers of the Hoosier state and both of English descent. Samuel M. followed the occupations of farmer, cooper and merchant at different times in his life, and, after a residence of twenty years in Mississippi, came to Yakima county in 1891, where he died eight years later. The mother was united in marriage with Mr. Harris in Indiana and came with him to Yakima county, surviving her husband only one year. Charles received his early schooling in Indiana, leaving there with his parents upon their removal to Mississippi, in which state he finished his education and left the family hearth to go forth alone into the world and work out as best he could the problem of life. For six years he was engaged in the sawmill business. He then entered his father's store as a clerk, and remained in that capacity three years, and was then taken into the firm, the style of the firm name being S. M. Harris & Son. Three years later he purchased his father's interest in the business, and was sole owner for three years. At the end of that period his wife fell heir to the old family homestead, a plantation of 800 acres. In order to look after this extensive property Mr. Harris disposed of his mercantile business, and for two years devoted his time to the management of the plantation. Unfortunate reverses in business checked his prosperity for the time being, and he decided to immigrate to the far west and begin life anew, a plan which he put into execution by removing to North Yakima, Washington, in 1889. After a varied experience in several lines, including contracting, restaurant keeping, and clerking for Lombard & Horsey and the Co-Operative Store Company, Mr. Harris in 1891 again entered into partnership with his father in conducting a general store in North Yakima. He bought his father's interest in the business, and for a year and a half the business prospered exceedingly, only to receive a very serious setback by fire, nearly everything being destroyed. However, the doors were re-opened as soon as possible, and the business conducted by father and son until the former's death in 1899, after which our subject continued the business until 1902 when, on account of failing health, he was forced to sell the mercantile business. Mr. Harris and Miss Emma M. Powell, daughter of Jethro and Mary A. (Roberts) Powell, were united in the bonds of matrimony, November 24, 1881, in Mississippi. Her father was a Mississippian, her mother a native of Connecticut. Mrs. Harris was born in Mississippi in 1857, and received her education at Bloomington, Illinois. For several years previous to her marriage she taught school in the south. To this union have been born five children, as follows: Sanford M. (deceased), May 11, 1883; Stella P. (deceased), October 15, 1884; Earl D., April 19, 1886; Marian W. (deceased), February 26, 1893; Robert W. (deceased), April 21, 1899. The first three were born in Mississippi, the remaining two in Yakima county. Fraternally, Mr. Harris is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is also a member of the Methodist church of North Yakima, and a strong Prohibitionist in politics. By dint of much energy and perseverance he has accumulated considerable property, which includes ten acres of fine fruit and hay land in the Moxee valley, a three hundred and twenty-acre desert land claim, and one thousand shares of stock in the Yakima Land Company. These, together with other interests, require his constant attention and place him on the list of Yakima's substantial and useful citizens.

JOHN L. LASSWELL, proprietor of the Hotel Lasswell, North Yakima, and a representative citizen of Yakima county, comes of a distinguished family of northwestern pioneers, he himself having been born in Oregon in 1858. His parents were Isaac and Rachel (McNary) Lasswell, natives of Iowa and Illinois respectively, his father being born in 1820 and the mother three years later. Isaac Lasswell crossed the Plains with ox teams and settled in Clackamas county, Oregon, where he lived until 1861, then removed to Walla Walla. From Walla Walla he came to the Yakima country in 1876, settling in the Cowiche valley. His death occurred at this place in the Naches valley in 1896. In Oregon he married Rachel McNary, whose father, James McNary, crossed the Plains in 1843, as captain of the first emigrant train bound for the Willamette valley. This train became famous in history for another reason than having been the pioneer train, for it was these emigrants who discovered the Blue Bucket gold diggings, the search for which led to the settlement of eastern Oregon by miners in 1861-2. For half a century and more the Blue Bucket diggings have been a will-o'-the-wisp to thousands of tireless prospectors, and today are as little known as in 1843. Rachel McNary was with her father on this memorable journey. She died at the Naches river home. John L. Lasswell came to Yakima county with his parents in 1876, remaining with them until 1878, when he settled upon pre-emption and homestead claims and engaged in stock raising. For twenty years he uninterruptedly continued this residence in the Naches valley, his election as county assessor in 1896 finally calling him to the city of North Yakima, where he has since lived the better part of the time. In 1899 he opened a mercantile establishment, but abandoned this business after a year's experience. Last year (1903) he built the Lasswell Hotel block, in which is his home. Mr. Lasswell and Miss Mary E. Weddle, daughter of Jasper and Mary J. (Sutton) Weddle, pioneers of Indiana who crossed the Plains to Oregon and Washington in 1863 and subsequently became residents of Yakima county, were united in wedlock in 1885. At the time of her marriage Mrs. Lasswell was only sixteen years old, having been born in 1869. She was reared in Oregon. Their children in the order of their birth are as follows: Mary E., born December 19, 1886; Isaac J., November 19, 1888; Minnie E., November 30, 1890; Cleve J., December 30, 1892; Rosa J., January 31, 1895; William C., December 8, 1896; Lela V., November 3, 1898, and Ben E., May 24, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Lasswell are members of the Christian church, and he belongs also to the Woodmen of the World, being a member of the North Yakima lodge. Of real property, Mr. Lasswell owns a quarter-section of improved farming land in the Cowiche valley, the Lasswell block in North Yakima, and several fine residence lots in the same city. As an upright citizen, a devoted husband and father and a capable business man, Mr. Lasswell enjoys the respect of his fellow men and, as hardy pioneers who have taken part in the development of Yakima county, both he and Mrs. Lasswell are gladly accorded a place among these chronicles.

WILLIAM L. HILDRETH, living near Yakima City on rural free delivery route No. 2, belongs to that noble and probably greatest army of industrial America to whom all others owe first allegiance—the tillers of the soil. For an entire life time he has assiduously devoted himself to this occupation, and his untiring energy and strict attention to work have not been without their just and pleasurable rewards and substantial reimbursement. His birthplace is the Empire state, the date of that important event in his life being January 22, 1836, and his parents, Jonathan and Julia A. (Vanlassel) Hildreth, both of whom also claimed New York as their birthplace. The elder Hildreth came of pioneer stock, as did also the mother. He was a mechanic by trade, and successfully pursued his occupation in York state until 1872, when he removed to Iowa, which became his final resting place. His ardent love of country led him in 1812 to enlist in the army which administered to England her second humiliating defeat on Yankee soil. The younger Hildreth remained at home, where he received a common school education until twelve years of age, when he left the parental roof and obtained work on a farm. For the next eight years we find him so engaged in New York state. He then went to Michigan, where he remained a year; thence to Iowa, his home for four years; thence to Wisconsin, which was his abiding place three years, his stay here being followed by a residence of four years in Iowa, and in 1868 by his immigration to Washington territory, Vancouver being his first objective point. There he lived for twenty years, successfully engaged in farming and stock raising, but in 1888 the opportunities presented by the thriving Yakima country appealed so strongly to him that he removed there and began raising hops in the Yakima valley. Four years later, or in 1892, he became a pioneer in the newly opened Sunnyside section and there lived for five years. In 1897 he again located his home in the beautiful Yakima valley, where he still lives, leasing the Watson place near Yakima City. Mr. Hildreth's marriage took place in the state of Iowa in the year 1859, the bride being Miss Sarah J., daughter of Benjamin and Olive (Harris) Brooks, her father being of English extraction and the mother Scotch. Benjamin Brooks was born in Vermont and was one of Iowa's first settlers, locating in that section in 1836. Mrs. Brooks' birthplace was New York. Sarah (Brooks) Hildreth is a native of Iowa, having been born in that state in 1840. There, also, she received her education and was married, at the age of eighteen. Their children, seven in number, are: Daniel H., living in Vancouver, born in Iowa, May 5, 1858; Curtis (deceased), born in Iowa, February 10, 1860; Milton, born in Wisconsin, January 29, 1861; Allen (deceased), born in Iowa, June 25, 1865; Mrs. Clara Cook, living at North Yakima, born in Vancouver, January 18, 1868; Frank, at home, born in Vancouver, August 15, 1872; Mary (deceased), born in Vancouver, 1874. Mr. Hildreth organized the first Republican club, called the "John C. Fremont club," started in this locality, and has been an ardent follower of Republican principles for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Hildreth are members of the Christian church and are held in high esteem and respect by all who know them.

GEORGE W. NELSON is engaged in farming on rural free delivery route No. 3, six miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, February 5, 1853. His father, John B. Nelson, was born in Indiana in 1817 and died December 13, 1893. The father crossed the Plains in 1845 with his family and located in Oregon, where he engaged in blacksmithing. He spent some time in California during the gold excitement of forty-nine. He located at different points in the Northwest and in 1868 took up a homestead on the Naches river, in what is now Yakima county. His wife, mother of the subject, was Clara (Jones) Nelson, born in Kentucky in 1817 and died July 26, 1893. Mr. Nelson was educated in the common schools of this state and has lived at his present home since he was twelve years old. He was married in North Yakima, February 15, 1893, to Miss Edith G. Herron, who was born in Pennsylvania, February 23, 1875. She was the daughter of David K. and Mary (Warren) Herron, natives of Pennsylvania and now residents of North Yakima. Her brothers and sisters, Anna B. (Herron) Brown, Grace J. (Herron) Marsh, Lena Herron and John Herron, also live at North Yakima. Mr. Nelson was the seventh of a family of eleven children, nine of whom are now living, as follows: Margaret Ann Frush, of Portland; Elizabeth Vansycle, of North Yakima; Thomas B., John, Daniel W. and Alice Sinclair, of Yakima county; Louisa Dix, of North Yakima, Washington; Arabella, Seattle; Adam and Jasper, who are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have three children, as follows: Herbert A., born April 19, 1894; Park A., born January 16, 1898, and Berna G., born August 3, 1901. Mr. Nelson is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood of North Yakima and is a Republican. He was elected road supervisor in 1897 and served two terms, the first year by appointment. He and his wife attend the Congregational church. He has a good forty-acre farm and a nice home. His grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier and was wounded. His father was recognized as one of the leading pioneers of the county and was generally known as Judge Nelson. The family is highly respected.

SIMEON PALMER is a farmer living six and one-half miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington, on rural free delivery route No. 3. He was born in Rhode Island, January 28, 1838, being the son of Dr. Horatio A. Palmer and Martha (Wells) Palmer. His father was born in Boston in 1810 and was a graduate of Yale. His mother was born on the Isle of Wight in 1814 and died in 1888. Mr. Palmer comes of old Puritan stock. His grandfather, Simeon Palmer, was born on Providence plantation, Little Compton. The grant for this plantation was given to the Palmer family direct from the crown when the first Palmers came to this country and settled on Massachusetts bay in 1630.

Mr. Palmer was educated in the common schools of his native state and from twelve years of age until he was seventeen he attended the Judge Hoar private school at Concord, Massachusetts. Later he attended different collegiate institutes. When twenty-two he engaged in farming in Alabama. Later he conducted a hotel in Massachusetts and farmed in that state. Then he moved to Colorado, where he was a member of the Greeley colony for a year. He opened a sanitarium on Elkhorn river, which he sold after one year. He engaged in business in Wyoming for a short time, and in 1877 moved to Yakima county, where he has since been engaged in farming.

Mr. Palmer's brother and sisters are: Mary S. (Palmer) Reed, of Denver Colorado, wife of the vice-president of the Kinsey Agricultural Company; Frances S. (Palmer) Houghton, of Denver, and Horatio A. B. Palmer, a Denver assayer. The latter was a soldier in the Civil war and was captured and imprisoned at Andersonville five months before being exchanged.

Mr. Palmer is a Republican. He owns seventy-nine acres of farm land, about one hundred head of range cattle and thirty-five head of dairy stock. He is very well read. Mr. Palmer is a man with a big heart and tender sympathies, especially toward children, and has interested himself in a number of orphans, to whom he has given a home and an education. He is of high intelligence, and is a quiet, studious and successful man, thoroughly respected by all who know him.

JOHN J. NELSON, a farmer living on rural free delivery route No. 3, seven and one-half miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington, is a member of one of the pioneer families of Yakima county, his father being the third settler in the county. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, December 22, 1848, and is the son of John B. Nelson and Clara (Janes) Nelson, both deceased. He was educated in the common schools of his native state and Washington, and when sixteen years old engaged in stock raising and farming with his father. In the spring of 1864 the family moved to the mouth of the Yakima river, but in the spring of 1865 moved to the Naches, where our subject has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He took up his present farm as a homestead in 1878. When a child, Mr. Nelson's lower limbs were partially paralyzed from an excessive administration of quinine, but despite his crippled condition he is active and performs as much labor as the generality of able-bodied men. He was married in North Yakima, January 11, 1901, to Miss Hattie Kine Rambo, who was born in Nebraska, April 28, 1875. She was the eldest of the eight children of Samuel and Ellen (King) Kine. Mr. Nelson's brothers and sisters were: Jasper (deceased), Margaret, Elizabeth, Thomas, Daniel, George and Adam (deceased), Alice, Arabella and Louisa. Margaret lives in Oregon and the others in Yakima county. Mr. Nelson and his wife belong to the Seventh Day Adventist church, of which denomination her father is a preacher. Mr. Nelson is a Republican. He owns fifty acres of fine farming land, a two-acre orchard, and has a neat modern house on the place and a good barn. His place is known as Locust Grove farm. He is a successful and well posted farmer, respected by all.

WALTER T. WHITE is a successful farmer living on rural free delivery route No. 3, eight miles northwest of the city of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Utah, November 29, 1866, and was the son of John and Anna (Creswick) White, both natives of England, and both now deceased. His mother was born in London, England, September 19, 1838, and died in Payette valley, Idaho, April 15, 1891. He went to school in Utah until he was thirteen years old and then came to the Naches valley with his mother and located on the farm, where he now resides. He has followed farming ever since with the exception of one year he spent in Okanogan county in stock raising. He was for a time interested in the butchering business at North Yakima.

Mr. White was married in Yakima county, October 18, 1893, to Miss Emma J. Chamberlain, who was born in Oregon, November 24, 1874. She is the daughter of James L. and Christina (Kincaid) Chamberlain, now living in this county. She was the youngest girl of a family of five boys and five girls. Two of the girls and one boy are dead. Mr. White's brothers and sisters are: Louisa (White) Turley, of Boise, Idaho; John White, a farmer and stock raiser in Utah; Mary E. (White) Leach, wife of F. M. Leach, a Yakima county farmer; Joseph S. White, a farmer of Malott, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. White have three children, as follows: Harry, born September 16, 1895;

Florence A. White, born June 26, 1898, and Lowena C., born March 4, 1903. Mr. White is an Odd Fellow, a member of the Rebekahs and of the Woodmen of the World. His wife is noble grand of the Rebekah lodge. He is a Republican. He owns about one hundred and sixty acres of farm land, of which ninety acres are in cultivation. He has eight acres in hops. He has a nice home and a large hop house. He has his own irrigation water rights and is making his farm one of the best in the county. He is industrious and popular with his neighbors, a man of influence in local affairs, progressive in his ideas and one of the more successful agriculturists of the valley.

JAMES K. JARRATT is engaged in farming, nine miles northwest of North Yakima, on rural free delivery route No. 3. Mr. Jarratt was born in Hopkins county, Kentucky, April 7, 1845, and was the son of John J. Jarratt, a farmer and drover, and of Millie (Veasey) Jarratt, both of whom are dead. Mr. Jarratt has one brother, John F., who is farming in Kentucky. He left school when seventeen years old and enlisted in company E, Twelfth Kentucky cavalry, and served until October, 1865, when he received an honorable discharge. In 1869 he was the victim of accidents, which crippled him for life. His right hand was injured by the accidental discharge of a gun and a leg was permanently shortened and weakened by a kick on the knee from an ox. When his injuries permitted, he entered an academy near Owensburg and studied three years. Later he taught school, was deputy assessor and was elected constable of Vanover, Kentucky. In 1880 he went to Nebraska and later to Oklahoma. He was driven out by government troops and went to Kansas. There he engaged in the restaurant business. A year later he opened a restaurant at Pueblo, Colorado, and after two years went to Portland, Oregon. Later he moved to Goldendale, Washington, where he was appointed deputy sheriff. He resigned two years and a half later to engage in farming. He sold out and opened a store at Vancouver; sold that and moved to Yakima county, August 1, 1900, and purchased a piece of raw sage-brush land, which he has since converted into a fine farm. He was married in Goldendale, May 2, 1888, to Nancy A. (Stumps) Meeker, who was born in Iowa, February 1, 1855, and who was the daughter of John and Mary (Johnson) Stumps. Her brothers and sisters were: William H., Oliver T., Sarah (Stumps) Nelson, Leonard, Jacob and Ulysses, both dead; Elmer E. Stumps and Etta (Stumps) Tuttle. Mr. Jarratt is a Democrat. In 1893 he was burned out and lost practically everything he had. His indomitable pluck and industry have brought to him since a comfortable property, including a farm of fourteen acres, a good house and a large barn.

MRS. LINNIE ROWE. Among the forces which have wrought the subjugation of the west, the pioneer women deserve a higher place than is usually accorded them by annalists. Their part may not always appeal so powerfully to the story-teller, being less picturesque, as a general rule, than that played by the sterner sex, but theirs was nevertheless the harder role to maintain. All the dangers and privations were shared by them, while the loneliness and isolation bore much more heavily upon them than upon their husbands and brothers, whose lot permitted a larger and more diversified sphere of activity. While not numbered among the earliest pioneers of Yakima county, the lady whose name gives caption to this article has certainly seen her share of pioneer conditions, and her peculiar circumstances have compelled her to bear burdens unusual even in a new country. She has, however, proven herself mistress of the situation, winning the esteem and honor always due and always willingly accorded those who conquer in the battle of life, at the same time acquiring a confident bearing and a force of character not possible to those nursed in the lap of luxury. Mrs. Rowe has had the advantage of good heredity. Her grandfather, John McCormick, was a pioneer of the pioneers, being the man who located the land upon which the city of Indianapolis now stands. Born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, in 1779, he had moved west to Indiana with his family, when thirty years old, and gained the distinction of having built, in March of the year 1818, the first house in Indianapolis. His wife was the first white woman in that city. Until his death, in 1828, he was numbered among the leading lights of his home town and his reputation was at least state-wide. Of Scotch descent, he was, nevertheless, a thorough American, serving with distinction throughout the whole of the War of 1812. Our subject's father, John W. McCormick, was born in Fayette county, Indiana, in 1813. He became identified with the early agricultural development of his native state, in which he spent his entire life, passing away when Mrs. Rowe was about two and a half years old. The mother of our subject, Susana (Gregg) McCormick, was a native of Frankfort, Kentucky, born June 21, 1823. She received an unusually good education in the schools of that city, notwithstanding the fact that at the early age of sixteen she was married. She died January 12, 1890, at Cartersburg, Indiana. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Rowe, David Gregg, was born near Richmond, Virginia, in 1781, and served throughout the entire War of 1812. His wife, Sophia (Case) Gregg, was a Virginian also, but the couple early moved to a plantation near Frankfort, Kentucky, where their family was raised. Prior to the Mexican war, they bought a tract of land on an Indian reservation in Delaware county, Indiana, which later made them well-to-do. Mrs. Rowe, of whom we write, was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, July 10, 1850. She received unusually good educational advantages, taking a course in the public schools of her native city and one in the Young Ladies' Baptist Institute there. For a time she taught school, but an early marriage cut short her professional career. At seventeen she became the wife of William Rowe, a native of Boston, Massachusetts, born October 14, 1839. He belonged to one of the most highly esteemed families of the Old Bay state, and his father, William Henry Harrison Rowe, was a godson of the noted president whose name he bore and who was an intimate friend of the family. He began his education in the public schools of his native city, but finished in the normal schools of Pennsylvania, to which state his parents had taken him when quite young. When he was twenty he taught his first term near Sing Sing, New York. In 1860, he went to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he accepted a position as bookkeeper for a steel manufacturing company. He remained with them two or three years, then migrated to Indianapolis, where his father was and where he obtained employment as bookkeeper for the Indianapolis Rolling Mill. He soon became general manager, which position he held for fourteen years, though for three months during the continuance of the Civil war he was absent, having gone as a volunteer to take part in the conflict. After leaving the mill company, he entered the employ of the First National Bank of Indianapolis. He was with them several years, then engaged in the insurance business on his own account, continuing therein until 1889, when his health failed, making it necessary for him to retire from active business. In 1893, he came to Yakima county. The change did him much good, but later he experienced a change for the worse in his physical condition and June 28, 1900, he died. In his family were one brother, Alexander, now deceased, and one sister, Sarah E. Rowe Baldwin, of Erie, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Rowe preceded her husband to Yakima county, coming in 1889, in which year she entered the place that is now her home, situated on the divide between the upper and lower Naches valleys, eleven miles from North Yakima. It was here that an opportunity was given for the exercise of the unusual force of character which was her heritage. Although she knew little about farming, she engaged with energy in the business in hand, and it was very largely through her efforts and management, her husband being an invalid, that a sage-brush desert tract was converted into a splendid farm. Of her one hundred and thirty-two acres, ten are in hops, fourteen in orchard and sixty-five in hay, while twelve acres above the ditch are in wheat and the remainder is turned to good advantage in the pasturing of cattle and other live stock. The place is supplied with a fine eight-room, modern house, two barns, and other outbuildings, while the stock attached to it consists of fifty-five head of mixed cattle and a dairy of twenty cows. The invalidism of Mr. Rowe caused the place to be burdened, at the time of his death, with debt, but by hard work and good management Mrs. Rowe has cleared this off. In her battle with circumstances she has become very skillful in the elaboration of all the products of dairy and farm, and she is very frequently a prize winner at state and county fairs. The second year of the North Yakima state fair she received first prize for butter making. In addition to the holdings above mentioned, she has a one-fifteenth interest in the Naches Cattle Land Company.

At present Mrs. Rowe is a resident of North Yakima, having left her farm for a year's rest, but she is too energetic and ambitious to rest much, and is giving attention to many things which others would consider hard work. She has always been an active churchwoman and deeply interested in religious and benevolent work, as well as in the activities of society in general. Indeed, she has fully demonstrated her ability to live successfully the strenuous, independent, useful life which many women in these days have come to regard as the ideal life for them. Mrs. Rowe has had four brothers and sisters, namely, William H., of Kansas City, Kansas; Mary Burger, of Galena, Ohio; Fannie deceased, and Julia C. Tincher, of Indianapolis. Her children are Katie J. Hedges, born in Indianapolis, May 4, 1868, now living near North Yakima; William H., born in Indianapolis, September 8, 1869, died in Tacoma, Washington, at the age of twenty years one month and twenty-two days; Charles A., born in Indianapolis, August 10, 1872, died when eleven months old; Linnie, born in Indianapolis, November 24, 1873, died when four days old; Deborah C., born in Indianapolis, April 25, 1877, died in September, 1878; Walter R., born in Indianapolis, May 21, 1884, now first sergeant of company E, Washington National Guard, which position he has held for three years (he will graduate from the North Yakima high school in 1905), and Linnie, born in Indianapolis, August 13, 1887, now a high school girl, a member of the class which graduates in 1907.

JOSEPH O. CLARK is a farmer and fruit raiser whose home is eight miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Vermont, November 29, 1838, and was the son of Ozias and Mary (Gookins) Clark, both natives of that state. He attended the common schools until he was seventeen. Then he attended the Mettewee academy and taught school that winter. In 1858 he entered the Burr and Burton seminary at Manchester, and was there until 1860, teaching during vacation. He then commenced to study medicine, which he continued until August 18, 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, Fourteenth Vermont infantry. He served during a portion of the war, and was honorably discharged July 30, 1863. He resumed his medical studies, and in March, 1865, received his diploma from the University of New York. He practiced his profession in Vermont five years, and, April 13, 1870, he came to Washington under appointment as government physician to Neahbay reservation, but, arriving too late, was transferred to Fort Simcoe. He held that position until January 11, 1871, when there was a change of agents and physicians. He moved to Yakima, where he taught school and practiced medicine for four years. He had taken up a homestead, and he moved there and farmed until he could prove up. Then he moved to North Yakima, and remained until 1895, when he located on his present farm. He was married December 25, 1873, to Miss Dora C. Craft, who was born in Oregon, December 28, 1855. She was the daughter of William A. and Amanda (Vannuys) Craft. Mrs. Clark had two brothers and a sister: Alice (Craft) Davis, William H. Craft (now deceased), and Charles F. Craft. Mr. Clark's brothers are: Fitch Clark (deceased); Siras, living in Vermont; John G., living in Louisiana; Aaron, of Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have eight children: Joseph R., farming in Vermont; Cyrus, Mary E. (Clark) Converse, Dora E. (Clark) Low, William M., John H., George A. and Jay O. Clark. Mr. Clark is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a Republican. He has filled public offices on a number of occasions with much success. He was school superintendent two years, was appointed and elected justice of the peace different terms, was police judge of North Yakima. He served from 1877 to 1886 as examining surgeon for pensions at North Yakima. At various times he has served as deputy auditor, assessor and sheriff. He is now serving as road supervisor. He owns eighty acres of farm land, and a house and lot in North Yakima. He taught the first public school in Yakima county. He is well educated and a man of rare ability and good judgment.

JOHN F. McCCLURE. The pioneer farmer whose name commences this biographical sketch has been a resident of Wide Hollow basin since 1876, when he came to Yakima county. In that more than a quarter of a century spent in central Washington, he has undergone the trials incident to the civilizing of a great isolated section, has joyfully watched the gradual settlement of the valley of the Yakima and its tributary valleys and neighboring hills, and now in his mature manhood is reaping the fruits of courage, perseverance and energy. A Kentuckian by birth, having come into the home of William and Margaret (Acre) McClure in the year 1844, John McClure grew to his majority in the blue-grass state, and there attended the public schools. William McClure was born in Virginia in 1800 and emigrated to the sparsely settled state of Indiana thirty years later. His declining years were spent in Kentucky, where, before being long in the middle west, he was united in marriage to Margaret Acre, who was a native of that state. Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, young McClure was naturally a tireless, thrifty worker, and prospered from his youth. After leaving home, he spent four years in Indiana and then went westward to Colorado, settling in Fremont county, where he followed agricultural pursuits until 1876, or for a period of six years. That year he migrated to Washington territory, and there, in Wide Hollow basin, filed a pre-emption claim to a quarter section of excellent land upon which he is at present living. The continuity of his residence in the county has been broken but once, in 1902, when he made a trip to his old Kentucky home. Two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Bryant and Mrs. Martha E. Gooch, live in that state; also a brother, James M., whose home is the old McClure homestead. Mr. McClure, although not a man of family, is thoroughly devoted to the educational interests of his country and is honored by his fellow citizens of Wide Hollow by a position on the school board of that district—a substantial indication of the esteem and trust in which he is held by those who best know him. Seventy-five acres of the quarter section are producing alfalfa, one acre is in orchard, forty acres are plow land, and the remainder is pasture. Excellent buildings have been erected on the place, and other improvements made, which make it a comfortable home. As it is only six miles southwest of the city, it is on a rural free delivery route, No. 4, and its possessor all the conveniences of a suburban residence. Politically, Mr. McClure is a Democrat, but, as a lover of good government and a progressive man, he is liberal-minded on this question as well as others.

SAMUEL B. HUGHS, residing upon his farm, seven miles west and three south of North Yakima, where he is engaged extensively in hop raising, is one of the early pioneers of the county, having settled in the Ahtanum valley in 1871. He is also a pioneer of Oregon, where he lived for several years prior to moving to Washington, and he comes from pioneer stock. He was born in Ohio in 1822, from the marriage of Asa and Sallie (O'Neil) Hughs. The former, a Kentuckian by birth and of Welsh parentage, moved to the new country of Ohio in the very early days and then went to Iowa in 1836, where he finally departed this life. The mother was a Tennessean by birth, and her ancestors, who were of English descent, were pioneers in that state. Our subject was sixteen when his parents moved to Iowa; and here he lived and farmed until 1865, when he crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling near Forest Grove, where he purchased a ranch and farmed for six years. He sold out at that time and moved to his present location, purchased a claim on the Ahtanum, where he lived for five years, proving up, then moved to Yakima City. Here he opened a livery barn, which he ran until 1885, at which time he moved to the new town of North Yakima, just then building, and engaged in the livery business, which he followed four years. He then sold out and moved upon the farm, where he has since lived. He was married in Iowa, in 1848, to Miss Mary A. Brown, to which union four children, Lewis, William, Taylor and Wallace, were born. His wife died in Idaho in 1865, while en route across the Plains. He was married again in 1867, in Oregon, to Mrs. Louise F. (Brown) Catching, a native of Missouri, born in 1843. She moved from her native state to Oregon with her parents, when but three years of age; there she was educated and married to Mr. Hughs at the age of twenty-three. Her father, Benjamin Brown, was born in Kentucky in 1812, moved to Missouri in an early day, and from there took his family to Oregon in 1847, locating in Washington county, where he resided until his death. Her mother, Lavina (Murrie) Brown, was born in Tennessee in 1815, of Irish parents. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hughs were born three children: Wilbur, Benjamin and Arthur. The family are members of the Christian church, and, politically, Mr. Hughs is an active Democrat. He owns a well improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres, with a good seven-room house, and in addition to growing hops on an extensive scale, he also raises a great deal of stock, cattle, horses and hogs. He is counted one of the thrifty, substantial citizens of his community and county, and one who can be depended upon at all times.

JOHN COWAN was born in Scotland, May 26, 1842, and is engaged in farming and stock raising, seventeen miles north of North Yakima, Washington. His postoffice is Wenas. His father, John Cowan, was born in 1790, and his mother, Margaret (McNeil) Cowan, was born in 1808. Both are natives of Scotland. Their other children were: James Cowan, who is dead; Anna (Cowan) Milvain and Maggie (Cowan) Wilson, both living in Scotland. Mr. Cowan was educated in the common schools and an academy in Scotland, and when seventeen years old he engaged in farming. He followed that for twenty-one years, with great success. In June, 1880, he left Scotland and came directly to Yakima county, and soon afterward purchased his present place. He was married in Scotland, June 8, 1880, to Margaret Kerr, daughter of Charles and Margaret (Jackson) Kerr, all natives of Scotland. She was the third child of a family of eight, all of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Cowan have six children, born as follows: Maggie, August 16, 1881; Anna, March 7, 1884; Charles, December, 23, 1885; James, November 9, 1887; Mary, October 17, 1889, and Robert, November 29, 1892. Mr. Cowan is a Democrat, and belongs to the Presbyterian church. He owns one hundred and sixty acres of land, which is under irrigation, a house and barn, and has about one hundred head of cattle and horses. He is a thoroughly informed farmer in all of its branches, and is making a success of his work in this county.

JOHN B. HITT is a farmer, living at Wenas, Washington, northwest of North Yakima. He was born in Missouri, November 25, 1854, being the son of Jacob H. and Elizabeth (Whobery) Hitt. His father was born in Virginia, about 1818, and is now dead. His mother was a native of Missouri, and is still living. Mr. Hitt was educated in the common schools of his native state. When he was fifteen years old, he engaged in labor on his father's farm, his father being dead, and he remained there until 1876. Then he moved to Kansas, where he remained a short time. Then, after a short visit in Colorado, he came to Yakima City, in August, 1883. He followed different employments there for eight years. In 1891, he purchased a relinquishment to one hundred and sixty acres of land, on Iowa Flat, and farmed there until 1904. Of this farm he had about forty acres under cultivation and under irrigation. In 1904, he sold all his land on Iowa Flat and purchased six hundred and forty acres on the Umtanum, about twenty-eight miles northwest of North Yakima. Mr. Hitt is the sixth child of a family of seven girls and five boys, all of whom are living. He is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist church. In political matters, he is a Democrat. He owns two hundred and forty acres of land, free from debt, and a good house and about forty-five head of horses and cattle. He is progressive and industrious, and is gradually adding to his property and wealth.

MILTON SHEARER was born in Iowa, November 20, 1849, and is now engaged in farming, six miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington.

on the line of rural free delivery route No. 3. His father, Joel Shearer, was born in North Carolina, about 1823, and served in the Mexican war. His mother, Emily (Tyler) Shearer, was born in Missouri about 1833, and was a second cousin of President Tyler. Both are dead. They had four children, the others being: Joel S. Shearer, of Grangeville, Idaho; Robert Shearer, of Colfax, Washington, and John W. Shearer, who was killed by a kick of a horse when seven years old. Mr. Shearer attended school in Iowa, and crossed the Plains with his parents, in 1864, to Oregon. There he completed his education. When he was eighteen years old he engaged in farming with his father. After he was twenty he farmed for himself. In 1880, he moved to Klickitat county and farmed and conducted a dairy farm for a number of years, and later traded for town property and lived in Goldendale four years. He then moved to Yakima county, and, after leasing a farm for five years, purchased his present home. He was married in Oregon, October 5, 1871, to Miss Susan J. Flanary, who was born in that state, September 14, 1855. Her father, Thomas G. Flanary, was born in Missouri, in 1828, and died in 1899. Her mother, Emily (Chamberlain) Flanary, was a native of Kentucky, and died in 1899, at the age of sixty-six years. Mrs. Shearer's brothers and sisters are: Sonora Hess, of Yakima county; William P. Flanary, a photographer, of this state; Letitia A. Bonebrake, wife of a Goldendale, Washington, physician, and Jasper W. Flanary, city electrician, at Pomeroy, Washington. Mr. Shearer has been the father of nine children, as follows: Walter, born September 29, 1874; Charles E. Shearer, born August 2, 1876; Thomas A., born October 13, 1878; Emily E., born November 29, 1880; Josie C. (Shearer) Mitchell, born December 24, 1882; Allen Shearer, born October 8, 1885; Eunice Shearer, born September 25, 1886; Orin A., born August 5, 1888, and Glenn H. Shearer, born August 20, 1896. Walter, Thomas, Emily and Allen died within a year, three of them in the same week. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer belong to the Baptist church. He is a Democrat. He is possessed of rare business judgment and ability, as is evidenced by the fact that in the past six years he has accumulated a property valued at ten thousand dollars, and also has very promising mining interests north of the Cascade tunnel. Mrs. Shearer is the owner of an estate at Goldendale, worth two thousand dollars. They are well esteemed by their neighbors and acquaintances for their many excellent qualities. Mr. Shearer and wife made a trip back to his old Iowa home this year, which he had not seen since leaving it as a boy, forty years ago, and also visited the great St. Louis exposition.

JOHN LOUDON, farmer and stockman, living six miles southeast of North Yakima, came to Yakima county in 1883. Mr. Loudon is a native of Scotland, where he was born, December 12, 1848, the son of John and Janet (Templeton) Loudon. His parents were natives of Scotland; his father, born in 1813, died in Scotland in 1860; the mother, born in 1826, died in New Zealand in 1873. Mr. Loudon is the oldest of a family of seven children, all born in Scotland. One brother, William, died in Yakima county in 1885. One brother and four sisters are living in New Zealand; their names follow: Gavin, Mrs. Jessie Thompson, Mrs. Anna Copeland, Mrs. Elizabeth Drummond and Mrs. Maggie Mansfield. The marriage of John Loudon and Miss Maggie Gordon was celebrated in New Zealand in 1882. Miss Gordon was born in Scotland, February 7, 1864, the daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Stewart) Gordon. The parents are dead. Mrs. Loudon was the fifth of a family of twelve children, all of whom reached the age of maturity before a death occurred. Their names are as follows: James Gordon, living in Australia; Mary and Anna, living in Scotland; Alexander, Stewart, Jane, Henry, Peter and William, living in New Zealand; John and Bella, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Loudon have been blessed with six children, all born in Yakima county: John, born October 17, 1884; Lizzie, born December 9, 1885; William, born May 10, 1887; Gavin, born July 4, 1888; Alexander, born February 8, 1890, and Jessie, born April 5, 1891. Mr. Loudon spent his youth in his native land, and received his education in tuition schools. When he was sixteen years old the family removed to New Zealand, and for twenty years he followed farming there with excellent success, being the fourth largest wheat grower on the island. He was also prominently connected with road and county business, being from 1876 to 1882 a member of the Waimate road board and county council. In 1883 he disposed of his interests there, and, coming direct to Yakima county, purchased six hundred and forty acres of railroad land on the Cowiche, and, for eleven years, engaged in the stock business. He then sold his stock ranch and purchased seventy acres, where he now resides, and which he has developed into one of the most desirable homes in the valley. Although gradually working out of the stock business, that he may give his time entirely to the farm, he still has two hundred head of cattle. Mr. and Mrs. Loudon are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Loudon is a prominent Mason, and, in politics, an active and influential Republican. He has always been especially interested in educational matters; has been a member of his home school board almost continuously since settling in the valley. As one of the active participants in the development of the valley, and as a man of enterprise and strictest integrity, he has the confidence and highest respect of all who know him.

he settled on first coming to the county in 1880, is one of the sturdy men who came from the east to the Pacific coast in an early day, making the trip from Iowa to California, in 1862, with ox teams. He was born in Canada of English parents in January, 1834, where he lived with his father until twenty, working with him upon the farm. The father, whose name was John, was a native of England, going to Canada in the early thirties, leaving his family in England, where he later sent for them. He died in Canada. The mother, Eliza (Pickard) Howson, was born in Canada and married at an early age; she died at the birth of her son Thomas. At the age of twenty-two, our subject moved to Iowa and engaged in farming for six years. He then farmed for some eighteen years in California, coming directly from there to Yakima county, where he took up a pre-emption on the Naches, where he lived until 1886, when he removed near Kittitas county and took up a homestead near Lake Cle-Elum, which he proved up on and still owns. He later returned to his farm in Yakima county, where he has since continued to reside. He was united in marriage in Canada, in 1856, to Miss Ellen Pickard, a native of Canada and the daughter of John and Ann (Adkinson) Pickard, the former a native of England, who came first to Canada, later moving to Iowa, and in 1862 crossed the Plains to California, where he finally passed away. The mother was of Canadian birth. Mr. and Mrs. Howson have three children—Josiah, born in California in 1863; Chester, born in same state in 1865; and Sylvester H., born in same state in 1867. They are connected with the Seventh Day Adventist church. Mr. Howson owns four hundred and sixty-two acres of land, the greater portion timber and pasture. He is counted an upright, worthy citizen.

DAYTON D. REYNOLDS, living upon his farm five miles west and three south of North Yakima, has been a resident of the county ever since he was eleven years of age, at which time he came to this country with his parents, Jesse W. and Susan E. (Garoutte) Reynolds. His father was born in Missouri in 1838, his parents being David and Mary (Kelley) Reynolds, natives of Tennessee. Jesse W. was a pioneer of Missouri, and was a veteran of the late Civil war, in which he served during almost its entire length, a portion of the time with Capt. Abernathy. He moved to Kansas in 1876; to Union county, Oregon, in 1877, and to the Ahtanum valley, Washington, in 1884, where he still resides. Young Reynolds remained at home until nineteen, and then began working out; at which he accumulated sufficient money to purchase a twenty-acre tract of land near the fair grounds, on which he resided some five years. He then sold the land and purchased his present place in 1900. He was married in Ellensburg, April 6, 1896, to Mrs. Mary Libby, daughter of Horace M. and Mary (Allen) Benton. Her father, a native of Connecticut, was in early life a sea captain, and came to the Yakima valley in 1866, where he resided until his death. A portrait of Horace M. Benton is reproduced in this volume. Mrs. Reynolds' mother was a native of Oregon, her people being among the first settlers in Yakima county, where she still lives. Mrs. Reynolds was born in the Ahtanum valley, February 6, 1867, the first white child that valley ever produced. She was first married to A. L. Libby, to which union was born one child, Mabel. Mrs. Reynolds has one sister, Sarah C. Finburn, North Yakima. Mrs. Reynolds is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Her husband is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically, he is aligned with the Republican party, of which he is an active member. He is a successful grower of hops, and is accumulating considerable stock. He is counted a good citizen and a desirable neighbor.

ALFRED SINCLAIR is engaged in farming and stock raising twelve miles northwest of North Yakima. He is the son of Hugh and Frances (Bishop) Sinclair, both natives of Nova Scotia, in which country he also was born, August 27, 1867. He was educated there, and when twelve years old came to the United States with his parents and located in the upper Naches valley. He attended the common schools in this county and worked with his father until he was twenty-one years old, since which time he has been accumulating for himself, although he has always been connected with his father in business. He was married at Tacoma December 31, 1896, to Miss Grace McMillan, who was born in Sumner, Washington, November 16, 1874, and who was the daughter of James McMillan, now deceased, and Mary (Stone) McMillan, of Tacoma. Her brothers and sisters are: Ida (McMillan) Pierce, of England; Clyde (McMillan) Shanks, of Portland, Oregon; Edith (McMillan) Pritchard, of Alaska, and Roy McMillan, also of Alaska. Mr. Sinclair's brothers and sisters are: Clara J. (Sinclair) Sloan, of North Yakima; Winnie F., now dead; Edgar, also deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have two children—James K., born May 1, 1898, and Francis, born March 1, 1900, both in Tacoma. Mr. Sinclair is a charter member of North Yakima lodge, No. 53, Knights of Pythias. In politics, he is an active Republican, though he votes for the man in local elections. He has been very successful in business, and now owns one hundred and seventy-three acres in his home farm, a one-fifteenth interest in the Naches Cattle Land Company, which has seventeen sections, and a one-third interest in two sections of railroad land. He has an eight-room house and two good barns, one hundred and seventy-five head of cattle and about twenty horses. He is industrious and deserving of the popularity he enjoys.

JOHN MCPHEE, who lives twelve miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington, is a farmer and stock raiser. He was born in Nova Scotia May 27, 1836, and was the son of Archibald and Jennett (McPhie) McPhee, both natives of Scotland, who have died. He was educated in Canada, and left school when twenty years old and engaged as miller in his father's flour-mill. He also farmed. He was thus employed with fair success for twenty-three years. He moved to the Naches valley July 17, 1882, and the following year purchased his present farm. This was one of the first farms cultivated in the upper Naches valley. During the first year of his residence he was engaged in logging for a time. He was married in Canada December 19, 1871, to Miss Isabell Sinclair, who was born in Nova Scotia February 10, 1844. She was the daughter of John and Elizabeth (McKenzie) Sinclair, both of Scotch parentage and now deceased. She was the only girl of a family of twelve children. But three of her brothers are yet living. Mr. McPhee's brothers and sister were: Dougald, now dead, Hugh and Archibald, of Nova Scotia, and Mary (McPhee) McEachern, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. McPhee have the following children: William S., Bessie J., Minnie F., Archie, Edna R., Ruby M. Mr. McPhee is a Democrat, and he and his family are members of the Presbyterian church. He has one hundred and forty-three acres in his farm, a nice nine-room house of modern construction and a good barn. He has about seven acres in hops and a good hop house. He is one of the successful farmers of the district and highly respected.

HENRY SEDGE is government forest ranger and a farmer whose home is fifteen miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Ohio October 4, 1855, the son of Alexander and Elenor (Stone) Sedge, both of whom are dead. His brothers and sisters were: Freling, now dead; George, of Oregon; John W., of Missouri; Florence (Sedge) Foley, deceased; William P., of Oregon; Charles and Morgan, living in Missouri; Taylor, deceased.

Mr. Sedge attended common school in Ohio and a high school in Virginia. He left school when about twelve years of age, and when his parents moved to Missouri he went to Texas and entered the service of a cattle owner as cowboy, an occupation which he followed until 1874, when he was injured by being thrown and tramped on by a horse, so went to California for his health. He followed the general merchandise business there until 1881, then moved to Klickitat county, Washington, and engaged in farming and stock raising. He sold out in 1890 and opened a butcher shop at Yakima City, but the hard times coming on he gave up the business and located a farm on the Nile river in Yakima county, which he cultivated until 1899. He also established the first and only sawmill there. In the fall of 1899 he bought the farm he is now cultivating. In May of that year he had been appointed forest ranger for that part of the Rainier reserve east of the Cascade mountains, a position which he still holds. He is the only ranger east of the Cascades holding a second grade. He was married in California September 3, 1879, to Miss Sarah E. Plumley, who was born in California December 23, 1855, the daughter of Alonzo and Julia (Chilson) Plumley. She was the third of twelve children. Mr. and Mrs. Sedge have the following children: Julia, born August 21, 1880; Olive, September 3, 1884; Maude, March 4, 1886; William H., June 3, 1888; Lillian S., December 10, 1890; Alonzo, January 1, 1893, and Willard, February 15, 1897. Mr. Sedge is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics is an active Republican. He has a good farm of forty-five acres and a fine house. Besides being a successful agriculturist, he is considered one of the best forest rangers in the government service.

WILLIAM S. CLARK is a native of Missouri and was born June 16, 1858. He is engaged in farming and stock raising seventeen miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. His parents, John H. and Mary J. (Moore) Clark, are both dead. His father was born in Ohio about 1822 and was a Mexican war veteran. Mr. Clark attended school in Kansas until he was sixteen years old. In 1876 he crossed the Plains with his parents to Washington, stopping a year on the way in Wyoming. They remained at Walla Walla, Washington, about thirty months, and then came to the upper Naches valley and located on government land. Mr. Clark has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married at Yakima City November, 1882, to Miss Elizabeth Kincaid, who was born in Oregon July 29, 1861. Her parents were James and Martha A. (Liscomb) Kincaid. She was the second child of a family of seven. Mr. Clark's brothers and sisters were: Winfield, Priscilla, Martha, Amanda, John and Flora, who are dead; Nancy J. (Clark) Stevens, of Yakima county; Clara A. (Clark) Case, of Yakima county, and Mary E. (Clark) Beck, of Yakima county, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark have the following children: Charles, born September 18, 1883; Clarence, born April 10, 1885; Winfield, born November 3, 1886; Jessie, born March 11, 1890; Clara, born August 12, 1891; John, born February 10, 1896, and Marian, born November 15, 1898. Mr. Clark is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and is a Republican. He has about two hundred and forty acres of land, a good house and barn, and has about sixty acres of his place under cultivation. He has a nice orchard of ten acres and about one hundred head of cattle and horses. He is a successful agriculturist and stands high in the community as a substantial and progressive citizen.

NEWTON KINCAID is a farmer and stock raiser residing about twelve miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. He was born in Oregon June 8, 1870, the son of James and Martha Ann (Liscomb) Kincaid, both residents of this state. His brothers and sisters are: Mary J. (Kincaid) Burnett, Elizabeth (Kincaid) Clark, William Kincaid, John (deceased), Samuel and James Kincaid. He was educated in the common schools of Oregon and Washington, chiefly in those of the latter state, for he was only six years old when his parents moved to the Naches valley. Since he was eighteen years old he has been engaged in farming and stock raising, with the exception of three years when he served in the Philippines in the army of the United States, as a member of Company E, Second regiment, Washington volunteers. On completion of his service with the army he returned to the farm, and he has since been engaged there continuously. He owns about one hundred and sixty acres of land, a good house and barn, and some twenty head of horses and cattle. He is also the owner of the Brown Horse mines. It is a gold and copper proposition from which assays as high as thirty-three dollars and twenty-five cents to the ton have been received and, encouraged by the showing, Mr. Kincaid has started a tunnel to develop the property. He is an ambitious, industrious man, and is fast acquiring wealth. In politics, he is an enthusiastic supporter of President Roosevelt.

WINFIELD S. STEVENS is a farmer and stock raiser living twenty-five miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. He gets his mail in that city. He was born in Ohio June 29, 1851, the son of John and Louisa (Landers) Stevens. He was educated in the schools of his native state until he was sixteen years old, when he engaged in farm work for his father. In 1869 he moved to Pennsylvania, where he worked at lumbering for four years. He returned then to his father's farm, remaining until 1876, then started west, making stops at Lincoln, Illinois, in the Wisconsin lumber camps, and in Wyoming. Finally, in 1877, he arrived at Walla Walla and engaged in farming. In 1880 he sold out, came to Yakima county, and located on railroad land, but, disposing of his improvements in 1888, he then squatted on his present farm, one of the finest in the valley. It is known as the Buckeye ranch.

Mr. Stevens was married at North Yakima December 23, 1880, to Miss Nancy J. Clark, who was born in Missouri January 22, 1854. Her parents, John and Mary (Moore) Clark, are both dead. Her father was born in Ohio in 1823, and her mother in Indiana in 1830. She was the third of a family of ten, of whom six are dead. Mr. Stevens' brothers and sisters were: Temperance (Stevens) Roler, Levi Stevens, Steward A. Stevens, Mary (Stevens) Ferris, Henry M. Stevens, Effie J. (Stevens) Holden, Caroline and Sarah E. Stevens, both dead; Alfred Stevens and Ennis Stevens. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have four children—Edmund E., born September 16, 1881; John, born July 25, 1885; Mary L., born June 28, 1887, and William T., born September 4, 1889. Mr. Stevens is a Democrat. He owns two hundred acres of land, about fifty-five acres of which are under cultivation; also a good home and barn. He has, moreover, a third interest in about forty-five hundred acres of grazing land and ninety head of horses and cattle. He is considered to be one of the most progressive and public spirited citizens of the valley, being always to the front in matters affecting the betterment of the community, and having been liberal in contributing time and money to build about seven miles of heavy road from the upper Naches valley to the Nile valley. He is a man of high character, industrious and deservedly popular.

WILLIAM A. J. McDANIEL (deceased) was a farmer and stock raiser who lived two miles north of Nile, Washington. He was born in Adams county, Illinois, April 4, 1836. His father, William McDaniels, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1778, and died in 1838. He was of Scotch descent, and served in the War of 1812. His mother, Frances B. (Embree) McDaniel, was born in Kentucky, March 22, 1806. When he was two years old his parents moved to Missouri, where his father died. When he was eight years old he came with his mother to Oregon, crossing the Plains in an ox wagon. They lived in Polk county, where his mother took up a donation claim. He went to school there until 1848, and then went to Salem and attended the Methodist mission school. September 18, 1849, he went to California during the gold excitement. He returned in 1850 and attended school until 1854.

October 15, 1855, he enlisted in Company G, First Oregon volunteers, and at once came to Yakima county to fight Indians, who were on the war-path. He was mustered out May 8, 1856, after many engagements. He then engaged in farming and stock raising in Oregon until 1863, when he went to Boise, Idaho, and spent two years mining and conducting a butchering business. In 1865, he came to Yakima county and located on a farm. He followed farming from this date till the time of his death. He was married in Yakima county, June 2, 1872, to Elizabeth E. (Lindsey) Grant, daughter of Walter and Elizabeth A. (Bennett) Lindsey, who was born in Ohio, June 18, 1838. Her brothers and sisters are: Rachel, Jesse, William, John, Edward, Sarah and George. His brothers and sisters are: Elisha, Joshua, Nancy, Elizabeth, Margaret and John, all of whom except Joshua, are dead. His children are: John (deceased); William E., born May 8, 1876; Mary F. (McDaniel) Newman, born February 9, 1878; Charles P., born April 4, 1879, and Laura A., born August 23, 1881. Mr. McDaniel was a Democrat. He was living on unsurveyed land, on which he had improvements valued at three thousand six hundred dollars. For many years he received a pension from the government for his services as a volunteer in the Indian wars. He was one of the best-known old-timers of the Northwest, and was familiarly known as "Uncle Andy." He was highly respected by all. Concerning his death we quote the following from a North Yakima paper: "William A. J. McDaniel, a well-known old pioneer of the Yakima valley, died at the residence of his son-in-law, John Lindsay, of Fruitvale, at one o'clock p. m., Wednesday, April 27, 1904. He was a man of many sterling qualities who had many warm friends, particularly among the old settlers. For several years he had made his home in the Nile settlement, where he had taken up a homestead and where his hospitable home was always open to all who chanced that way. In the death of 'Uncle' Andy McDaniel we feel that we have lost a good friend, and we sincerely regret his taking off."

JAMES A. BECK. Among the men who have had a prominent part in the development of Yakima county, he whose name forms the caption of this article is certainly to be counted as one. For many years a resident of this valley, he has enjoyed good opportunities to stamp his impress upon it, and he has made the most of such opportunities, making his influence especially felt in agriculture and irrigation, though he has ever manifested a deep interest in everything tending to promote the general welfare of his community. Born in Indiana, June 26, 1853, he nevertheless spent many of his childhood's years in Missouri, but the force of Horace Greeley's advice, "Go west, young man," soon began to influence him, and, in 1865, he came to Washington territory. In Whitman seminary, Walla Walla, he received an unusually thorough and broad education. When eighteen years old he took up the study of law, and for two years Blackstone and Kent were his companions, but he then turned his attention to theology. A year was spent in study for the ministry. The year 1866 found him in Yakima county. His parents, John W. and Martha G. (Goodwin) Beck, who were likewise natives of the Hoosier state, had also come west, becoming prominent pioneers of the Yakima valley. Some of their early experiences are chronicled in another portion of this volume. Upon their farm James worked for a few years, but in 1878 he took a homestead on what has now become so famous as Nob Hill, near North Yakima. It was during his residence there that he accomplished one of his greatest undertakings for the good of the general public by becoming the originator of the Hubbard ditch, which, he says, was the first high line canal in the state. Until 1888, Mr. Beck busied himself in the cultivation and improvement of his own home place, after which he sold out and purchased the parental homestead. This he farmed for eight years. In 1896, however, he sold it also and purchased from the railway company his present home, situated at Nile. To the cultivation and improvement of his half section of land he has since devoted himself with assiduity and zeal. His long experience in farming under the conditions obtaining in Yakima county and his wisely directed industry have enabled him to build up a home of which he has reason to be proud. His ranch is supplied with a good house, also fine barn and outbuildings and an abundance of live stock of all kinds.

Mr. Beck was married at North Yakima, January 5, 1888, the lady being Vestina McKillips, a native of Iowa, born August 18, 1857. She is the daughter of John and Electa (Wheelock) McKillips and the fifth child of a family of eight, all of whom are now dead except herself and brother John. Mr. Beck had three brothers, Roshell, deceased, and Douglas and Orlando, living in this county. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Beck consists of three children, John, born October 10, 1898; Bessie, born February 22, 1890, and Charles, born November 5, 1892. In political faith, Mr. Beck is a Democrat, while in religion he belongs to the vast concourse of people who believe in the truth of spiritualism, as do also his wife and family. The Nile postoffice is on his place, and for the past five years he has been postmaster. Mr. Beck is still in the prime of life, and the memory of early experiences is as fresh in his mind as if they were occurrences of yesterday; he relates these experiences in an interesting and zestful manner, as he would more recent happenings. He was an active participant in many of the stirring events of the early days. He assisted in the capture of the Indians who murdered the Perkins family in 1879, and witnessed the hanging of the murderers.

WILLIAM D. BECK, who lives at No. 4 South Kittitas avenue, in North Yakima, Washington, is a farmer and stock raiser. He was born in Owen county, Indiana, January 3, 1856. He received his early education at Walla Walla, Washington, having come west with his parents when he was but nine years old. He left there when he was thirteen, and came to Yakima county, where he attended school. When he was twenty-one he left school. Before that time he had become interested in cattle raising. In 1873, he was employed by W. R. Ballard in the survey of the Yakima Indian reservation, and was later engaged in the survey of the Northern Pacific through the Cascades. In 1878, he located a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres and an eighty acre timber culture claim, and has followed farming much of the time since. He now has the mail contract between North Yakima and Nile. He was married at Old Yakima, June 10, 1877, to Miss Frances Cook. There was one child, who died. He was separated from his wife in October, 1879, and September 21, 1881, he married Senora E. Morrison, who was born in Illinois March 4, 1862. Her parents were John L. and Caroline (Belch) Morrison. Three children were born: Ruby, September 9, 1882; Pearl, March 24, 1884, and Senora, December 7, 1885. The mother died May 12, 1887. Mr. Beck was again married May 24, 1891, to Mary Etta Clark, who was born in Kansas, November 8, 1868, and who was the daughter of John and Mary (Moore) Clark. To this union three girls were born: Georgia M., April 2, 1892; Lilly A., June 25, 1894, and Clara B., July 7, 1897. Mr. Beck is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and is a Roosevelt man. He has about one hundred and twenty acres on the Nile river and two lots and a good home in North Yakima. He owns about thirty head of horses and cattle. He is active and energetic and quite popular.

JOHN CAMERON is a native of Canada, where he was born April 22, 1860, and is engaged in farming twelve miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. His father, Donald Cameron, was born in Nova Scotia in 1824 and is dead. His mother, Jane E. (Jardine) Cameron, was born in Canada in 1833 and still lives there. He was educated in Canada and left there when twenty-two years old and located in Chippewa, Wisconsin, where he engaged in blacksmith work, a trade he had learned in his native land. He came to Washington in 1888. While employed with the Blakely Mill Company, he learned the trade of machinist. After eleven years he quit on account of his health and engaged in the oyster business. Failing health compelled him to sell out in 1901, and he moved to Yakima county and bought two hundred and forty acres of farm land, to which he has added two hundred and forty acres more. Later, he sold the farm first purchased and now lives on the last purchase. He was married in New Westminster, Canada, June 28, 1897, to Mrs. Minnie S. Countryman, who was born in Iowa, August 27, 1870. She had two children by a former marriage, Samuel, born July 14, 1886, and Winnie Maude, born July 1, 1889. Mr. Cameron has one child, Bertie, born March 8, 1894. Mr. Cameron's brothers and sisters are: Lizzie, Margaret (dead), James, David, Jennette, Allen, Burgess and Howard. Mr. Cameron is a Democrat. He has two hundred and forty acres of land and a good house and barn, seventeen head of horses and cattle, and has some city property at West Seattle. He is a substantial citizen who stands well in the community.

ROBERT E. CAMERON is a farmer and stock raiser, living twenty miles north of North Yakima, Washington. His postoffice is Wenas. He was born in California, October 23, 1873, being the son of Ephraim and Emily (Butler) Cameron, now Chambers. Mr. Cameron came to Yakima county with his parents when he was two years old, and received a meager education in the common schools here. When he was sixteen years old he began farm work. He worked on his mother's ranch for four years, and then leased land on the Indian reservation for one year. Then he leased the farm he is now occupying. He was married at North Yakima, November 10, 1901, to Miss Maude Best, who was born in Missouri, July, 1882. She was the daughter of Joseph and Sarah Best. Her brothers and sisters are: Anna, Martha, Richard, Callie, Etta, Minnie and Joseph. Mr. Cameron has a brother and sister: John F. and Clara. Mr. Cameron is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and is a Republican. He has about thirty head of horses and cattle, and owns half of forty acres of land in the Wenas valley. He is well liked and a hard working citizen.

JOHN F. CAMERON is engaged in running a dairy farm, eighteen miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. His postoffice address is Wenas. He was born in California, September 11, 1871, and he is the son of Ephraim Cameron, born in Ohio, May 26, 1830, and of Emily (Butler) Cameron, who was born in Illinois, December 25, 1846. His parents came to Yakima county when he was three years old. He attended school here until he was fifteen. He then engaged in farm work and stock raising until he was twenty-three years old, when he leased the farm he is now working, in partnership with his brother, until 1895, since which time he has run it alone. He was married at North Yakima, July 4, 1895, to Miss Lorena Longmire, who was born in Oregon, April 4, 1876, and who was the daughter of Simeon and Eliza (Plimm) Longmire, both residents of Ellensburg. Her sisters and brothers follow: Addelmer, Ada, Wayne, Addie and Ellsworth. Mr. Cameron's brother and sister are Robert and Clara. Mr. Cameron is a Republican, and he takes considerable interest in matters political. He has served as road supervisor. He owns a half interest in forty acres of land, and has twenty-three milk cows and about forty-five head of cattle and horses. Ten miles northwest of his home is located a sawmill, of which he is part owner. The capacity of the mill is eight thousand to ten thousand feet of lumber per day. A box factory is operated in connection. Mr. Cameron is a hard worker, and is building up a valuable property.

ROBERT H. KANDLE is engaged in conducting his farm, fifteen miles northwest of North Yakima, Washington. His postoffice is Wenas. He is a native of Indiana, born March 10, 1847. His father was born in Indiana, and came thence to Washington by team in 1851. His mother, Margaret (Hill) Kandle, was born in Ireland, in 1817, and died May 23, 1879. Their other children were a pair of twins, who died in infancy; Garrett, who is also dead; George B. Kandle, of Tacoma; William A. Kandle, of Pierce county, and Franklin J. Kandle, county commissioner of Yakima.

Mr. Kandle was educated in the schools of Thurston county, and when twenty-two years old he engaged in teaching. In 1871 he came to Yakima county, and began raising stock, and that year he located on the farm now owned by the Taylor heirs. He sold his stock and farm in 1874, returned to Thurston county, and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1901 he sold out there, and purchased his present farm.

He was married in Thurston county, June 5, 1870, to Miss Tillatha Longmire, daughter of James and Varinda (Taylor) Longmire, both natives of Indiana. She was born in Indiana, August 8, 1850, and was the third of a family of eleven children, all of whom but one are living in this state.

Mr. and Mrs. Kandle have nine children, as follows: James, born March 13, 1871; Thomas Walter, March 31, 1872; Maggie Anderson, born June 1, 1874; Anna Reynolds, born June 3, 1877; Cora Anderson, born August 17, 1879; Ella Brunner, born March 16, 1881; Frank, born January 22, 1883; George, born January 1, 1885; Flora, born January 16, 1891.

Mr. Kandle is a Republican. He has two hundred and twenty acres of land, two lots in Olympia and two good farm houses. He is one of the leading farmers of his district, and well liked by all.

WILLIAM FLYNN, whose address is Wenas postoffice, Yakima county, is one of the pioneers of the state, having settled here in 1866. He was born in Ireland, in 1839, his parents, Patrick and Katherine (McCall) Flynn, both being natives of the Emerald Isle. When he was but eighteen months of age his parents immigrated to the United States, settling in New York City, where they resided for many years. Here our subject grew to man's estate. The war came on at this time, and the young man, fired with the true sentiment of patriotism and love for his country, at once enlisted, and was assigned to the duty of teamster, which position he continued to hold until the close of the rebellion. He then came west to what was then Washington Territory, in 1866, and engaged as packer for the government in the Indian war. He served through these exciting times, being a participant in the various expeditions, and a witness of the many events of interest and danger. At the close of this war, he took up land and became a farmer and stock raiser, in which business he has continued until recent years, when he retired from active duty. He has been a very successful business man, always reaping more or less financial returns from all of his ventures, until he has accumulated a vast amount of land, which he counts by the hundreds of acres. He has been identified with the progress and general development of his community and county, and may justly be denominated a progressive citizen and a desirable neighbor.

Mr. Flynn is one of a family of four children, two boys and two girls. The brother he has not heard from in a number of years; the sisters came to this country, and were married, but died young. He has been raised in the Catholic faith. Politically, he is a pronounced Democrat. In addition to his large real estate holdings and other interests, he is a stockholder in the Yakima bank.

WILLIAM M. BADGER, contractor and builder, at North Yakima, came to the Pacific coast in 1875, since which time he has made his home respectively in California, Oregon and Washington, in all of which states he has been actively connected with the upbuilding of the country, his calling especially fitting him for the accomplishment of such ends. His father, Robert Badger, was a native of Ohio, born in 1812, where he followed farming for years. Edith (Morris) Badger, his mother, was born in Ohio in 1815. Our subject was born, reared and educated in the Buckeye state, attending school there until nineteen years of age, and working with his father upon the home farm. He then learned the trade of carpenter and cabinet maker, and engaged in business for himself, having become an expert workman at the age of twenty-one. In 1861, at the age of twenty-two, he responded to the first call of President Lincoln for volunteers to put down the rebellion, enlisting first in Company G, Ninth Indiana infantry volunteers, under Colonel R. H. Milroy, and later in Company K, Sixty-eighth Ohio volunteers. He served to the close of the war, being discharged at Buford Isle, South Carolina, April 11, 1865. He was engaged in thirty-one battles, among the number being Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Vicksburg, through all of which he came unscathed. At the close of the war he returned to Williams county, Ohio, and engaged in farming for several years. Later he moved to Indiana, and then to Minnesota, in both of which states he followed farming and carpentering. He was carried away by the western fever in 1875, and at that time immigrated to the Golden state, where he farmed and worked at his trade for a number of years, later going to Oregon. His next move was to Yakima county, in March, 1883, where he was one of the very first to settle in the "Horse Heaven" country. He claims the distinction of having built the first cabin in that now famous wheat district. After six years' residence there he moved to North Yakima and established himself in the building and contracting business, which he has followed continuously and successfully since.

Mr. Badger was married in Ohio October 4, 1862, to Sarah Elizabeth Russell, a native of Massachusetts, born in 1842. She is now deceased. To this marriage were born five children, three of whom, Charles, Mrs. Alice R. Ritchie, and Mrs. Bertha Weaver, are still living. Our subject has three brothers and one sister living, as follows: Ervin M., an ex-soldier; Mrs. Phoebe A. Derby, in California; James F., ex-representative of Douglas county, Washington, and Robert M., residing in Oregon. His deceased brother, Charles A., was twice wounded in the Civil war, and was a prisoner in Libby prison and at Belle Island. Mrs. Badger's father and one brother, William Russell, served with distinction in the war. Fraternally, Mr. Badger is connected with the Masons, Eastern Star, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Grand Army of the Republic. Politically, he is a Democrat. He is a good citizen, and is still comfortably fixed in this world's goods, after having dealt generously with his children.

ELIJAH S. YEATES, boot and shoe dealer in North Yakima, was born in England May 19,

1832, and came to the United States in 1851. His parents, Frances and Jane (Hodgkiss) Yeates, were both of English birth and ancestry. The father was a shoemaker by occupation and was also an ex-soldier, having served for over six years in the British army, from which he at last purchased his discharge and settled down to his trade. Our subject attended tuition school until the age of fifteen, when he entered his father's shop and learned the trade of shoemaker. At the age of seventeen he ran away from home and traveled for three years throughout the British Isles, working at his trade. In 1851, he went on a sailing trip, and landed in the United States in the spring of 1852, going directly to Green Bay, Wisconsin, where he worked in a shop for a time and then established himself in a shop of his own. He then learned the trade of machinist, working at this until 1857, when he was thrown out of employment by the hard times, and in 1859 crossed the Plains to California. He mined there for some nine years, but not meeting with the desired success in this line of employment, he engaged in the shoe and harness business, following the construction of the Central Pacific railroad. Later he settled at Elko, Nevada, in the shoe and jewelry business, continuing there for some six years, when he sold out and went to Tuscarora, Nevada, where he engaged in the same lines of business. In 1885, he came to Yakima City, and opened up in the boot and shoe line, moving the next spring to the present site of North Yakima, at the time of the location of that city, and he has continued here in business ever since, being identified with the town's growth from its start to the present time. In 1886, he took up one hundred and sixty acres in the upper Naches valley, and there established a sawmill, from which was supplied the greater portion of the lumber that was used in the construction of the original North Yakima and the Selah canal. He was united in marriage in Green Bay, Wisconsin, in the spring of 1854, to Jessie Davidson, a native of Montreal, Canada. Her parents were Scotch, the father, John Davidson, being born at Firth, Scotland. Mr. Yeates is the oldest of a family of three and an only son. Of the two daughters, Ann Jeffery is dead, and Emma B. Lovelace, the youngest, is residing in California. He comes from a family of high standing in England, and traces his ancestry back many generations. His grandfather, Thomas Yeates, was for twenty-four years parish clerk at Upton, England, where he was honored and esteemed by all who knew him. Mr. Yeates is an energetic, progressive citizen, and has always been actively identified with the rustling, pushing element of the communities where he has lived. He has constructed since coming to the Pacific coast fifty-four business and residence buildings for his own use, and has expended thousands of dollars in the development of mines. He has eight children: Jane Johanes, Wisconsin; Margaret Keyser, Nevada; Jessie Hesson, Nevada; Emma J., deceased; Mary D. Parsons, North Yakima; Bell, Yeates and Frank, deceased. Socially, he is identified with the Masonic order, of which he is past master. For many years he was a high official in Odd Fellowship. Politically, he is a Republican. He has followed the banner of that party through the vicissitudes of war as well as in the halcyon days of peace. He has been honored with office in the past and was at one time county superintendent of public instruction of Elko county, Nevada.

JAMES D. McINTOSH, teacher and ranch owner, in Selah valley, Yakima county, dates his residence in the county from 1893. He was born in Illinois in 1857. His father, John S. McIntosh, was a native of Maryland, and the mother, Esther J. (Manchester) McIntosh, was born in Canada in 1822. They are both now deceased. Subject's maternal grandfather was an Englishman by birth, and a subject of King George III at the time of the American revolution for independence, but his sense of justice and right caused him to cast his lot with the revolutionists, and he enlisted in colonists' cause heart and soul, undergoing all the hardships and deprivations of those perilous times with the cheerfulness of the born patriot and soldier. His feet were so badly frozen on one of the expeditions in which he participated that he was captured by the British. Subject received his higher education in the high school and the academy of Rockford, Illinois, a diploma being granted him from the latter educational institution in 1880. He then taught awhile in the academy, and later moved to Kansas, where he resided for many years, teaching school and music all of the time—in fact, he has followed teaching continuously since his graduation in 1880. In 1893, he came west and settled in the Selah valley, where he purchased his present place and began teaching. He taught the first school in that valley. He was married, August 2, 1887, at Deerfield, Iowa, to Jennie M. Goodlander, a native of Rockford, Illinois, where she was born, May 1, 1857. Her father, Henry H. Goodlander, was a native of New York, but lived most of his life in Pennsylvania. He was a veteran of the Civil war. The mother, Elizabeth (Fisher) Goodlander, was born in Ohio in 1836, and is now deceased. Subject had five brothers and one sister, all of whom are dead but Jerome J. and Joseph E. Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh have four children: Alberta M., Gladys, Jean M. and Clarence D. Mr. McIntosh is a staunch Republican, and he and wife are active members of the Baptist church.

He is a man of decided literary tastes, and is highly respected and esteemed by those by whom he is best known.

ROBERT W. SCOTT, farmer and stock raiser in the south Naches valley, Yakima county, was born in Canada, December 11, 1866. His father, Robert Scott, was born in Scotland in 1840 and emigrated with his parents to Canada when quite small. He was a resident of the vicinity of Galt, Ontario, until about nineteen years old, when he came to the United States and settled in Illinois, where he was married April 16, 1863. He enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois infantry and served three months, then was discharged on account of disability. In 1865 he took his family, consisting of wife and one son, and went back to Canada, where the subject of this sketch was born. When he was about six weeks old, however, they came back to the United States, settling in southwest Missouri, where they resided until R. W. was about seventeen years old. In 1884 they immigrated to Washington and settled in the south Naches valley, where he was engaged in farming with his father for several years, also in working with him as a carpenter. During this time he made a trip to Idaho, where for a while he worked in a sawmill. His father being elected to the office of county assessor, he was appointed deputy and did field work for two years. In 1900 he and his brothers, Charles E. and Tom H., purchased one hundred and sixty acres in the Naches valley. He has since purchased two other tracts of one hundred and sixty acres and one hundred and twenty-six acres in Cowiche and Naches valleys respectively, on the latter of which he now resides.

Mr. Scott was married December 11, 1900, in North Yakima, the lady being Elsie A. French, a native of Minnesota, born August 18, 1882. Her father and mother, Angus and Alice (Hawn) French, were natives of Canada, and had ten children, of whom Mrs. Scott was fourth, and all of whom are living but three. Mr. Scott was the second of eleven children: Walter D., Robert W., Charles E., Maggie S., James N., Tom H., Harry H., Amy K., Bert E., George R. and an infant brother who died, Walter D. and Maggie S. being deceased also. The rest are all residents of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have two children, Thelma Alice and Raymond W.

Fraternally, Mr. Scott is connected with the Royal Tribe of Joseph, and in politics, he is a Republican. He gives a great deal of attention to stock raising and dairying.

LOUIS LANCH, a pioneer of Yakima county of the year 1879, is one of the successful farmers of Cowiche valley. He was born in Germany.

September 25, 1847. His father, David Lanch, was water tender in the mines of that country and died in 1853 of rheumatism contracted in underground work. His mother, Eva (Buhl) Lanch, now deceased, was also of German birth. When nineteen, our subject came to the United States, and settled in Wisconsin, where he engaged in farming for a time and then in stone quarrying. Although he had been educated in the fatherland, he was ambitious to learn the ways and language of his adopted country as soon and perfectly as possible, and while his time was occupied working in daytime he attended night schools for two years, thus fitting himself for future usefulness in the new country. He went to Pennsylvania in 1868 and engaged in general work, depositing his savings in the bank, all of which were swept away in a bank failure in 1873, leaving him stranded. He headed then for the Pacific coast. Engaging in steamboating in California, he again saved up some money. In 1879, he came to Yakima county and located in the Cowlitz valley, where he is now living, taking up the first land in his township. He was married in Yakima county in the fall of 1883 to Melissa Weddel, who died seven years later, leaving four children, Frank, William, Bell and Martha, all of whom are dead but the first named. He was married a second time in Yakima county on May 7, 1897, to Augusta (Kriebel) Schoenroke, a native of Germany, in the hospitals of which country she took a thorough nurse's training course. She now has a diploma granted her for proficiency. Her parents were August and Charlotte (Flocha) Kriebel, both natives of Germany, where the latter still lives at the ripe old age of 77. The father died in 1863. She has two brothers and one sister living: Gustave, a farmer in Yakima county; Paul, in Germany, and Christianna Bosse, in New York. Mr. and Mrs. Lanch are both members of the Lutheran church. Mr. Lanch is a prosperous farmer and stock raiser. He owns a fine farm eighteen miles from North Yakima, well stocked and with good orchard and other improvements. He is a public spirited citizen, and has always been identified with all movements for the betterment of his community, and especially is this true in educational matters, he having built at his own expense and maintained for the year 1896 the school in his district, No. 14. The number of his friends is only limited by the extent of his acquaintance, and he is widely known.

ORLIN I. HART, dairy farmer in the Cowlitz valley, fourteen miles northwest of North Yakima, is one of the pioneers of his county, having lived there since 1877. His father, Orlin I. Sr., was a native of Pennsylvania and was one of the early pioneers who crossed the Plains to

Oregon and underwent the many hardships of those brave men and women who staked their lives and their all on the cast and blazed the way of civilization, making the path easier for the oncoming generations. Our subject's mother, Mary J. (McCalister) Hart, was a native of Kentucky; she was also called upon to undergo the rough experiences of pioneer living. In this new land of the extreme western frontier, the subject of this sketch first saw the light May 19, 1865, and before he was old enough to realize his surroundings, his parents, in 1867, moved to Yakima county and settled near Yakima City. Here young Hart attended the city schools until fifteen, when he abandoned his home surroundings and school and went on the range as a rider. He followed this business five years and then engaged in the stock business for himself, in which he met with excellent success for a number of years. Finally he moved his stock into the Okanogan country and there in the winter of 1890 met with disaster along with hundreds of others, the winter of 1889-90 being memorable in central Washington for its length and severity. After meeting with this reverse, Mr. Hart returned to North Yakima in 1892 and engaged in the dairy business, which he continued there until 1901, when he removed to his present home in the Cowlitz valley. He was married in Yakima county, November 30, 1899, to Jessie Elliott, a native of Kansas, born October 1, 1876, to the union of James and Harriet (Butner) Elliott. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott are living with Mr. and Mrs. Hart, owning the land upon which Mr. Elliott and Mr. Hart carry on a dairy business. Mr. Elliott was born in South Shenango, Pennsylvania, January 23, 1837, his parents being John and Mary (Porter) Elliott, the father a native of Shenango also, the mother born in Ireland in 1808. James was reared on a farm, remaining with his parents until eighteen years old, when he went to Greene county, Wisconsin, and learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1857, he settled upon government land in Shawnee county, Kansas, and a year later joined his father in Jefferson county. In the spring of 1859, he joined the rush to Pike's peak; returned the following year minus a fortune. The next year he returned to the mines, where he worked until 1862, when he became blacksmith and horse-shoer for the Overland Stage Company, which carried the mail between North Platte and Fort Bridger. Then he went to Utah and in 1864 placed a freighting outfit on the road between Utah and Virginia City, Montana. After two years of this exciting work and a year in Helena, in October, 1867, he returned to Kansas and for twenty years farmed in Wilson county. However, in the spring of 1880, he again sought the far West, settling on his Cowlitz ranch, which he purchased from A. J. Lewis. Here, hale and heartly, he is contentedly spending the winter of his life. Mrs. Hart has four brothers and sisters: Jay, a ranchman on the Cowiche; Ola, attending the North Yakima High school; Don, at home, and Mrs. Effie Donley, who also lives in the Cowiche valley. Mr. Hart is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically, he is a Democrat. He is a member of the Catholic communion. Prosperous and respected, both Mr. Hart and Mr. Elliott are members of that type of citizenship which is most desirable in any community.

EDWARD A. LINDSEY, a native son of Yakima county, resides upon his place just without the limits of North Yakima. He was born in the city of Yakima, July 16, 1868. His parents, William and Addie J. (Wright) Lindsey, came to Yakima county in an early day, where they resided until the seventies, when they moved to the Willamette valley, Oregon. They remained there but three years, when they returned to Yakima county. Young Lindsey first attended school in Oregon and later, on their return to Washington, he attended the winter schools of that state until seventeen. He then went out to do for himself, working at farm work in the Kittitas valley. He then employed himself attending stock until 1890, when he went to the Nile valley and squatted upon a tract of land there, which he held for a short time. Then managed the ranch of A. J. Splawn for a season, at the end of which time he purchased an eighty-acre tract on the Cowiche creek. Selling this after a short time, he leased land and raised hops for a couple of seasons, then ranched for five years on the north fork of the Cowiche. He was married in Yakima county, November 17, 1892, to Ida Parker, daughter of Jefferson and Lydia (Sumner) Parker. Mrs. Lindsey was born in Missouri, June 2, 1871. She has brothers and sisters living, as follows: Joseph, Thomas, Eva Daverin and Leroy, all residing in Yakima county. Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey have two children: Harry and William, born respectively in 1894 and 1896. Mr. Lindsey is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and Mrs. Lindsey is a member of the Christian church. Politically, he is a Democrat, but outside of serving his school district as director for three years he has never been an office holder or seeker. He owns his home place, and is interested in mines in the Swauk country.

ISAAC DAVIS, farmer on the Cowiche and veteran of the Civil war, was born in Hardin county, Illinois, March 15, 1840. His father, John Davis, was a farmer in Indiana, where he was born, April 5, 1813. His mother, Nancy (Hughes)

Davis, was born in Illinois, January 31, 1819. Our subject, after reaching the age of sixteen, went to live with his uncle, Asa Davis, helping him on the farm and at the same time learning the cooper trade. In the spring of 1861, when he had reached the age of twenty-two, the call came to the patriotic citizens of the country to arouse to defend their nation from disruption and dissolution, and at the first call he enlisted in Company A, Twenty-ninth Illinois infantry, and continued throughout the entire war in the service of his country, receiving his discharge at Hempstead, Texas, November 6, 1865. He was in nine engagements, among the number being the battles at Forts Donelson and Henry, the battle of Shiloh and the siege of Vicksburg. At the battle of Shiloh he was wounded in the face and contracted rheumatism, from which he has since been a sufferer, and for which disability he draws a pension. At the close of the war he returned to Illinois and engaged in farming and cooping for a number of years, removing in 1873 to Kansas, where he made his home for fifteen years, following agricultural pursuits. In the fall of 1888 he moved to Yakima county and purchased a farm, and at the end of a year bought out a relinquishment on a quarter section of land, upon which he moved, and where he has since resided. He was married in Illinois, November 20, 1866, to Hannah C. Hufford, a native of Illinois, the date of her birth being December 25, 1846. Her father, Abram Hufford, was a native of Virginia. The mother, whose maiden name was Betsy Patterson, was a native of Illinois. Mrs. Davis was an only child. The subject of this article had one brother, Abraham, who enlisted in the war when a mere boy and never returned home, dying while in service. His sister Sarah, the oldest one of the family, is also dead, as are also two half-brothers and sisters. Mr. Davis has eight children living and two dead: Laura A. Willard, Flora A. Fear, Charles T., Cora D. Fear, James E., Maggie Parker, Mary E., and Laura M. Mr. Davis is a Republican, and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Religiously, he is connected with the Holiness church. He owns an eighty-acre farm, well stocked, and is enjoying life.

JOHN O'NEAL, who lives on his farm on the Cowiche, sixteen miles northwest of North Yakima, is not only a pioneer of Yakima county, but is a native born Washingtonian, having made his advent into the world in Thurston county, Washington, September 22, 1862. He comes from pioneer stock, his father, Abijah O'Neal, having crossed the Plains from his native state, Indiana, to Oregon, in 1852, when he was in his twenty-sixth year. He passed through all of the early Indian wars in Oregon and Washington, and is credited with being a most willing and efficient Indian fighter in his day. Subject's mother, Melinda J. (Underwood) O'Neal, was born in Illinois in 1827, and died in 1874. She was of German and her husband of Irish descent. Mr. O'Neal was educated at Olympia, and at the age of thirteen came to Yakima county with his parents and settled in the Cowiche valley. Here he grew up, working with his father and attending school in the winters. He continued with his father until his death in 1887, when he assumed control of the estate, and has continued to operate the place ever since. He was married in North Yakima, March 10, 1889, to Jane Reynolds, who was the second of a family of four girls and five boys. Her eldest sister, Mary, resides in Missouri, and John, Date, Amy Fear, Sadie Carr, Frank, Sell W., and Jesse, all live in Washington. Our subject's children are: Charles, Freddie, John and Anna, twins; Alice and Myron. Mr. O'Neal was next to the youngest of a family of six children; their names are: Charles, Margaret Butler, Mary, William and Anna Butler. Mrs. O'Neal's parents, Jesse W. and Susan Reynolds, live on the Ahtanum, where they are engaged in farming. Mr. O'Neal, fraternally, is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America; politically, he is an active Democrat, always taking interest in the success of his party and the election of his friends. He has prospered in this world's goods, owning a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres, well stocked, and town property in North Yakima, besides other interests. He is well esteemed among his neighbors and acquaintances.

WILLIAM WESLEY BEEKS. Although the subject of this biography is yet in the very prime of his life and appears even younger than his age would portend, there are probably few older pioneers of the Northwest than he. For fifty-six years he has lived in this section of the United States, having been born in Washington county, Oregon, June 24, 1848, and during his more than half a century of residence in this section he has witnessed one of the most rapid and marvelous developments for that space of time that any portion of this country has ever undergone. His father, Jacob Beeks, was born in Ohio in 1819, and was the son of George Beeks, a native born pioneer of Indiana. Thus is a chain of paternal pioneers established which reaches over more than a century of the nation's history, each man carrying the Stars and Stripes farther and farther westward. Jacob Beeks married Mary A. Beal, a native of Pennsylvania, and the daughter of George and Rosa Beal, whose ancestry is pioneer American. William's intrepid pioneer parents crossed the great Plains and mountain ranges lying between Ohio and Oregon and settled upon a donation claim in Washington county in the year 1847, and there the son lived with them until sixteen years of age. His father was a breeder of fine running stock, and, as a boy, William attained a reputation as a track rider on the Oregon circuit. But at the age of sixteen he set out into the wide world to make his own way. In 1864, with his uncle, Charles Beeks, he took a band of cattle north to British Columbia, passing through the uninhabited Yakima valley in 1854. Returning, he continued to ride the range until the Bannock Indian war of 1878, when he enlisted under General Howard. He participated in nearly all the battles and skirmishes of that campaign. The following year he was with the troops who quelled the rebellion at the Warm Spring agency, Oregon, and at the lava beds distinguished himself by rescuing his wounded captain from the clutches of the redskins. The troops had made an unsuccessful charge, and among those who had gone down before the fire was their gallant captain. Trooper Beeks, when he saw how matters stood, made a daring run to the Indians' fortifications, fastened a rope around his captain's body and dragged him to a place of safety within the line, all under a terrific fire. After this campaign the young man returned to Klickitat county, where he had previously been employed as foreman for Rean & Smith, and purchased a ranch, entering the stock business on his own account. To this county, also, came his father and mother, and there, too, his mother died in 1893. His father lived until the ripe old age of eighty-three, laying down life's burdens in North Yakima two years ago. Mr. Beeks met with success in the stock industry, but suffered very severe losses in the middle nineties, at which time he had one hundred and eighty head of blooded horses. In 1897 he drove a band of horses to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and there disposed of them for good prices. Upon his return he took up his residence in Yakima county, where he has since lived, engaged in buying and selling stock and raising cattle and horses. He still owns a quarter section of farming land, situated eleven miles east of Goldendale, though his home is now in North Yakima. Mr. Beeks was married in Washington county, Oregon, September 4, 1877, to Miss Irene Dorson, daughter of John and Mary (Dickson) Dorson, Southerners by birth. Irene Dorson was born in Missouri and died in Klickitat county in 1885, leaving the following children: Mrs. Anna Remley, born in Klickitat county, living near Centralia; Mrs. Ada Holt, born in Klickitat county, living at Toppenish; and Mrs. Lillie Armstrong, born on the Ahtanum, and living in Yakima county. Mr. Beeks had four sisters and one brother: Philip, now dead; Mrs. Charity Tuttle and Mrs. Rosa Butler, living at Yakima City; Mrs. Mary Stump and Mrs. Josephine Bacon, living in North Yakima. In 1889 Mr. Beeks was again married, his bride being Mrs. Eliza A. Rowley, born in Missouri in 1807, to the union of Mr. and Mrs. John Martin. As a pioneer and a progressive, esteemed citizen of the Yakima country, Mr. Beeks is justly entitled to a place in this history.

WILLIAM A. LINSE, living three miles west of North Yakima, is one of Yakima county's successful fruit growers and a man of substantial standing in his community. Born in Germany, February 9, 1844, he is the son of German parents, M. Henry and Mary E. (Remtly) Linse, the former born in 1805, the latter in 1815. Both are still living, residents of South Dakota. William was the sixth of a family of twelve children, the others being Minnie, dead; Henry E., Mrs. Minnie Pabst, Dora, Frederick, Edward, Mrs. Louisa Oertli, Mrs. Mary Simon, Sarah, Mrs. Amelia Rade and Mrs. Elizabeth Christ. He came to America when four years of age, his parents settling near Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he attended the public schools ten years. Then he commenced making his own way in the world, working for wages until 1862, when he responded to his country's call by enlisting in Company G, Twenty-fifth Wisconsin volunteers, under Captain W. Darwin. In this company he served until mustered out June 14, 1865, at Madison, Wisconsin. While in the army, Mr. Linse took part in every battle fought by Sherman between Chattanooga and the sea, and was wounded in the battle of Smithfield, the last one of a series of twenty-two. He now draws a pension. After the close of the war he engaged in farming on his father's place, purchasing it, and for thirteen years remained in Wisconsin. Then he sold out, moved to Minnesota, farmed there four years, then migrated to South Dakota. There he filed upon three hundred and twenty acres, and purchased an additional four hundred and eighty acres, and on this immense farm lived the succeeding eighteen years, selling it for seven thousand dollars in 1897 and removing to Yakima county. Here he purchased a tract of land near North Yakima, which he sold in 1902, purchasing with a portion of the proceeds his present home. He now devotes his attention to the growing of apples, peaches, cherries, melons, etc.

December 13, 1866, Mr. Linse married Miss Elizabeth Oertli, born in Switzerland, in 1847, the daughter of Henry and Madgeline Oertli, both of whom are now dead. She was the sixth of a family of thirteen children, ten of whom are now living, all residing in America. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Linse have been born the following children: William G., September 14, 1867, Wisconsin, a farmer in South Dakota; Mrs. Emma Smith, June 14, 1869, Wisconsin, living in Yakima county; Lydia, Wisconsin, deceased; Henry, March 5, 1874, Wisconsin, living in Yakima county; Mrs. Louisa Siagle, August 12, 1882, Minnesota, living in Yakima county. Mr. Linse is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and that he is a public-spirited man is shown by the fact that he served eight years as road supervisor in Wisconsin and six years as school treasurer in Dakota. Politically, he is a Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Evangelical church. On his fruit ranch of seventeen acres he has erected commodious and comfortable buildings and other improvements designed to add to the comforts of home. With sufficient property to insure their spending the remainder of their days in the quiet enjoyment of life's blessings and in the consciousness that each of their children has been well started in life, Mr. and Mrs. Linse are content.

JAMES M. EGLIN, who is a resident of the city of North Yakima, is engaged in buying and selling horses, in which occupation he has been successful and made himself well known throughout central Washington. He is also one of Yakima county's pioneers, having come here in 1871. Indiana is his birthplace, and there he was born November 24, 1845, the son of Cornelius and Margaret Ann (Dolson) Eglin. The father was born in New York in 1798 and died in Indiana at the age of sixty-two; the mother's birthplace was also New York, her birthyear being 1806, and she died in Oregon eleven years after her husband's demise. James lived in Indiana until nineteen, meanwhile attending school; at that age he went to the Montana placer mines, where he worked two years. In 1866 he pushed farther westward, settling in Benton county, Oregon, where for eight years he was the proprietor of a successful transfer business, Corvallis being his home. But in 1875 he sold this business and purchased three hundred and forty-five acres of land, where he farmed two years, and then migrated to the Ahtanum valley, Washington. Here he became one of the first successful sheep raisers, owning at one time six thousand head. The severe winter of 1889-90 seriously crippled Mr. Eglin's business affairs, as the result of which he left the Yakima country for a time, going to Victoria, British Columbia, where he lived with his daughter. In 1892 he returned to Yakima county and filed on a quarter section of land, which he farmed until three years ago. At that time he sold his land and engaged in his present business. Miss Frances M. Kerns, whose parents were natives of Pennsylvania and of Dutch descent, was united in marriage to Mr. Eglin at Corvallis February 28, 1868. She was born in Ohio, November 3, 1849, and was the youngest of six children—

Mary, Alice, John, Milton, Arthur and herself. Her sisters are now Mrs. Mary Kiger and Mrs. Alice Tucker. Mr. Eglin's brothers and sisters are: John, Thomas (who is now dead), Mrs. Lucinda Clement, Abraham D., George W., Mrs. Margaret A. Ferguson and Sobrina, who is also dead. To Mr. and Mrs. Eglin have been born the following children: Mrs. Sarah E. Cameron, January 30, 1869, now dead; Lucinda, died in infancy; Mrs. Ivy Card, April 6, 1874, living near Spokane; Mrs. Rosella Flint, March 11, 1876, living at Sunnyside; Fred C., May 3, 1877, proprietor of Eglin's feed stables, North Yakima; Mrs. Jessie Perry, June 1, 1882, living at Milan, Washington; and Mrs. Neva Field, July 1, 1887, living in Yakima county. Mr. Eglin served a term as sheep inspector of the state of Washington, and has many times refused nominations for county offices in both Oregon and Washington, being more interested in seeing his friends elected than in holding office himself. He belongs to the Republican party. Mrs. Eglin is a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Eglin is recognized as an expert in his business, and is well regarded by all who know him.

JOHN ROBSON BELL, farmer and stock raiser, living in the Moxee valley, six miles southeast of North Yakima, was born January 28, 1847, in Scotland, and during his life has lived in a greater variety of climes than falls to the lot of most men. The fact that he and scores of other travelers have finally concluded to permanently settle in the Yakima country is worthy of deep consideration. Dumfries was his birthplace and Irvin and Jennie (Robson) Bell, natives of Scotland, where they lived and died, were his parents. The father lived near Thomas Carlyle and was himself a man of talent in literary work. John Bell attended the public schools of Scotland and when seventeen years of age was graduated by the Annan Academy. The following two years he spent in a mercantile house; then was at home for a year and a half. At the age of twenty-one he left the British Isles, going to Australia, where he mined two years. Following this the stock industry attracted him so strongly that he purchased a band of horses and prepared to live in New Zealand. The animals failed to withstand the rough voyage, however, so that Mr. Bell was forced to give up horse raising and instead he farmed and mined, living in New Zealand until 1884. In that year he immigrated to America, taking land in the Cowiche valley. There he farmed two years and then accepted the superintendency of the Moxee Company's immense ranch, occupying this responsible position nearly three years. He then purchased a farm in the Moxee basin, or valley, and on it has since resided. In New Zealand, October 28, 1874, he was united in marriage to Miss Jean Cochrane, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Patterson) Cochrane, parents and daughter being of Scottish birth and descent. The mother still lives, residing in New Zealand. Mr. Bell has the following brothers and sisters: George, Jeanette, James, Bessie, Irving, Bella, Mary, Jean, Arthur and Isabel, all born in Scotland. Mrs. Bell was the oldest of a family of six girls and six boys. To Mr. and Mrs. Bell have been born the following children, the first of whom is dead: Irving, Lillie, John, William and George, living in Yakima county, the youngest at home. Both parents are devoted members of the Presbyterian church, in which they are active. Mr. Bell is a staunch supporter and admirer of President Theodore Roosevelt and a thorough believer in the fundamental principles of the Republican party, though liberal minded. Upon his sixty-acre ranch he produces all of the staple crops of central Washington and there he has built a comfortable home. His stock interests include three hundred head of cattle and about fifty head of horses. Mr. Bell has been a successful man during his entire life and is considered a substantial, progressive man of sterling character by all with whom he comes in contact. A host of friends testify to the congeniality of Mr. and Mrs. Bell.

ERNEST S. HILL, living eleven and one-half miles southeast of North Yakima, is one of Yakima county's progressive young farmers and a prominent hop grower. Born in Polk county, Wisconsin, February 12, 1864, he is the son of Nelson and Mary (Colton) Hill, the former a native of New York, the latter of Wisconsin, where both died. His education was obtained in the public schools of Wisconsin, ending in his seventeenth year, when he began steady work for his father. A year later his mother's death broke up the home and sent him into the world to do for himself. At first he was employed in the sawmills of Polk county, remaining at that occupation ten years. Then he immigrated to the Pacific Northwest, arriving at North Yakima December 24, 1890. In Yakima county he and his brother purchased W. H. Packett's sawmill on the Altanum and operated it until 1893, when ill-judged timber purchases, due to his inexperience with western timber, and the financial stringency forced him into bankruptcy. But with commendable energy and courage he immediately went into the hop raising industry, cultivating this profitable crop on leased land until 1900, when he was able to purchase his present ranch in the Moxee coulee. Mr. Hill was united in marriage to Miss Emma Lang at North Yakima in 1892. She passed into the valley of the shadow November 26, 1899, leaving, besides her husband, three children: Floyd, born October 21, 1893; Clell, May 2, 1898, and Emma, November 26, 1899. These are Mr. Hill's only children. June 23, 1901, he was again married, his bride this time being Miss Mary B. Case, born in Illinois, November 30, 1865, to the union of David and Mary A. (Mull) Case. The father was a New York farmer, born in that state in 1831 to Jonathan and Theresa (McDowell) Case, also natives of New York. John Mull was a native born pioneer of Indiana, 1816 being the year of his birth, and his wife, Rachel (Fuller) Mull, was also a native of Indiana, born in the year 1823. Mrs. Hill had the following brothers and sisters: Ella, Franklin and James, now dead; Mrs. Rachel Marsh, living in Illinois; John R., conducting a confectionery in North Yakima. Mr. Hill is the ninth child of eleven children, of whom seven are living: Mrs. Cleona Beal, in Wisconsin; Edward, in Yakima county; Milzer, in North Dakota; Mrs. Rusha Parson, in Wisconsin; Mary, also in Wisconsin; Mrs. Eva Guy, in Wyoming. Mr. Hill is affiliated with the order of Yeomen, and in political matters is a staunch Republican. Mrs. Hill is a member of the Baptist church. Socially, he and his wife are popular and have a host of friends. The ranch consists of eighty acres, of which twenty-two are in a hop yard and the balance principally in hay and a young orchard. A strictly modern, eleven-room house, commodious hop house, dryer and baling house, a fine barn and other substantial buildings make the place both comfortable and more valuable than it would otherwise be. Mr. Hill has by his progressiveness, energy and ability raised himself to a position among the most successful ranchmen of the county, especially in hop growing, and by his many commendable traits of character has gained the esteem of his fellow men.

NELSON J. DICKSON, living ten miles southeast of North Yakima, is a native of Brooklyn, New York, born February 21, 1859, to the union of James M. and Alzina (Nelson) Dickson, both born in Vermont, where the mother died when Nelson was a baby. Reverend James M. Dickson, D. D., of Scotch descent, has been in ministerial work for upwards of forty-six years and for ten years past has been pastor of the Reformed Church of East New York. He is at present living in retirement in Brooklyn. Nelson Dickson attended school in New York and New Jersey and for three years studied at the Montgomery Academy, leaving that institution when seventeen years of age to engage in the mercantile business. The first three years of his experience were had in Boston; then he came west to Kansas City, and for seven years was in the service of Bullene, Moores & Emery. In 1886, he came to the territory of Washington, settling in Yakima county. Here he farmed a year, then managed a bottling works in North Yakima for three years and in 1890 purchased a farm in the lower Moxee valley. Four years later he sold this place and leased land near Tampico for another four years. Six years ago he obtained a relinquishment title to the eighty acre tract where he now lives, and upon which he has a homestead filing. Mr. Dickson was married, September 9, 1880, to Miss Alethe Conrad, born in Illinois, February 22, 1865, the daughter of James H. and Mary A. (Gere) Conrad. The father was a native of New York, the mother a native of Illinois; both are living in Yakima county. Alethe was the oldest of seven children, her brothers and sisters being: Palmer, Mrs. Lennia M. Sickler, Warren B., Elosia, Ray Y. and Purdy J. Mr. Dickson has one brother, Clarence, and one sister, Margarella M., both living in New York. To Mr. and Mrs. Dickson have been born the following children, all in Yakima county: James G., February 7, 1891; Warren G., October 29, 1893; Clarence P., September 18, 1895; Mary H., May 15, 1898; Allen D. and Alethe, twins, March 27, 1900, and Kezzia, October 4, 1903. Mr. Dickson belongs to the Brotherhood of American Yeomen; he and his wife are members of the Christian church, and politically, Mr. Dickson takes his stand with the Democratic party. He has a fine five-acre orchard, but the major portion of his land is in hay; he also owns fifty head of cattle and horses. His time is spent in dairying and in the horse and cattle business. Mr. Dickson is a successful farmer and is respected and esteemed by all who know him.

JAMES H. CONRAD, pioneer citizen of Yakima county and one of its prominent stockmen, resides in the Moxee valley, nine and a half miles southeast of the city of North Yakima, whose site he well knew before even a railroad was thought of by the little handful of settlers in the country. He came to the Yakima valley when there were not more than two score permanent residents in the Kittitas valley and only two or three hundred people in what is now Yakima county; and because of his prominence in the county's early life, no history of that section would be complete without a biographical sketch of him. James H. Conrad was born in Tompkins county, New York, March 28, 1839, the son of Samuel R. and Keziah (Hollister) Conrad, natives of Connecticut and New York state, respectively. James was educated in the district schools of the community where he spent his boyhood, leaving school when about eighteen. When he reached his majority he went to Maryland for a year and in the spring of 1858 took his first step westward, settling in Illinois, where he was engaged in the drug business for five years and subsequently in farming. In 1871 he decided to go farther west, and in that year came to Yakima county, arriving April 20th. In that erstwhile stock range he filed upon land lying on the upper Ahtanum, where he, too, engaged in raising cattle and horses and tilling the soil. During the Indian troubles of 1877-8-9 he was acting as deputy sheriff and in that capacity was prominently identified with the Perkins affair. He was one of the party which discovered the bodies of Perkins and his wife, he and an Indian name Stick Joe being the first to find them, aided in the arrest and conviction of the Indian murderers and placed the death caps and pinions upon the murderers who were hanged. In 1896, Mr. Conrad moved to the Moxee valley, where he has since been engaged in farming and raising stock. He was married, August 5, 1863, in Illinois, to Miss Mary A. Gere, the daughter of James S. and Elizabeth (Lyons) Gere, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively. Mrs. Conrad was born in Illinois, the date of her birth being August 24, 1844, and had the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Emma Wright, Warren B., living in Illinois; Mrs. Olive Radebaugh, Mrs. Nettie Murphy, now dead, and Mrs. Alice Lochrie, living in Iowa. Mr. Conrad was an only son and had three sisters. Mrs. Hestira Wilson, now dead; Mrs. Martha Beardslay, living in Illinois, and Mrs. Mary Vickers, living in New York City. To Mr. and Mrs. Conrad have been born seven children, six of whom are still living: Mrs. Alethe Dickson, February 22, 1866; Palmer, December 24, 1868; Mrs. May Sickler, January 23, 1870; Barclay W., December 3, 1871; Elosia (deceased), May 10, 1879; Ray Y., August 30, 1880, and Purdy J., February 7, 1883. In political matters, Mr. Conrad is an active Democrat, taking part in all county elections, and is every ready to aid a friend whom he believes worthy of office. Mrs. Conrad is a member of the Baptist church, in which she is a zealous worker, and both she and her husband are justly proud of the circle of friends in which they move. Mr. Conrad has by energy and economy accumulated a goodly holding of property, of which we may mention his forty acre ranch, seventy head of cattle and about two hundred head of horses. He is looked upon as a substantial citizen, and as a pioneer of central Washington is known far and wide throughout that region.

JAMES H. GANO. When the reader considers the fact that the subject of this biography came to the Moxee valley at the age of fifty-six, with a large family and exhausted means of support, it is but the recording of his thought to say that Mr. Gano is a man of unusual pluck, courage, perseverance and energy. At the age of sixty-seven he is apparently as capable as ever, and is reckoned as one of the leading farmers of the Yakima valley. Champaign county, Ohio, is his birthplace, and his birthday was December 3, 1837, his parents being Isaac and Nancy (Hogg) Gano. The father was born in Virginia, April 25, 1811; the mother in Clark county, Ohio, July 19, 1819. She was a cousin of Governor Hogg of Texas fame. James Gano received his education in the district schools of Ohio, leaving school when seventeen years old, and at once commencing steady work for his father on the farm. When twenty-two, he left the home place and leased a farm in his own name. Subsequently he purchased a place and for thirty-five years, counting from the time he began working for himself, he was engaged in farming in Ohio. So many misfortunes came upon him, however, in the shape of floods, droughts, etc., that in the fall of 1862 he immigrated to the Northwest, where he was convinced that irrigated crops rarely failed. Settling in Yakima county, he spent a year farming on another's land, becoming acquainted with irrigation methods; then he filed upon his present place in the upper Moxee valley, the land being covered by sage-brush and without water. However, it was situated in what is known as the artesian area, and after many discouraging efforts Mr. Gano was able to tap the basin and place his land under cultivation. Today his place is one of the best in the district and upon it stand a comfortable home and other farm buildings. Mr. Gano was united in marriage in Ohio, April 26, 1860, to Miss Rhoda M. Gardner. She was born in that state, December 11, 1841, the daughter of John and Sophia (Huff) Gardner, natives of New York and West Virginia respectively. The father was born in 1803 and died at the age of sixty-nine; the mother was born in 1807 and died in her forty-seventh year. Rhoda Gardner was the seventh child in a family of eleven, seven of whom are now living: Rhodes, Benjamin, Mrs. Martha Ray, George, Mrs. Mary Shockey, Mrs. Frankie Trumbo and Mrs. Gano. Mr. Gano has two brothers living, David S., in Ohio, and Charles L., in California; and one sister, Mrs. Sarah J. Baldwin, in Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Gano's children are as follows: William H., born May 15, 1861, living in Ohio; Mrs. Ida J. Benson, July 6, 1862, in North Yakima; George A. and Mrs. Emma J. Purdy, April 13, 1864, living in Yakima county; Mrs. Elva Heffelfinger, April 3, 1869, living in Ohio; Mrs. Estelle McElree, April 13, 1872, living in Ohio; Mrs. Avanel Patterson, August 28, 1875, living in California; Ira J., February 6, 1877, in Yakima county; and Wesley E., August 25, 1881, at home. Miss Avanel Gano's marriage to Mr. Patterson took place at the family home on the evening of October 7-

MRS. MARTHA A. CHENEY.

Mr. and Mrs. Patterson reside in Fresno, California, where he owns considerable city property and is interested in a lumber and planing mill. Both are highly esteemed young people. Mr. Gano was instrumental in the establishment of Artesian postoffice and was its postmaster and carrier until 1901, when he resigned, having successfully promoted rural free delivery route No. 1. He was also prominent in the organization of school district No. 40, and cleared the site for its schoolhouse and was the first director appointed by the county school superintendent, serving in that capacity seven years. As road supervisor of his precinct, he has located all the roads in the district. Mr. and Mrs. Gano are members of the Methodist church and are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mr. Gano's property interests consist of eighty acres of improved land, twenty head of milch cows and ten head of horses. He is a substantial citizen and a successful, progressive man.

MRS. MARTHA A. (McALISTER) CHENEY, a pioneer and the daughter of pioneers, is a successful farmer and stock raiser, living five miles southeast of North Yakima. In her youth she was known as Miss Martha McAlister and was born in Missouri, May 20, 1839, the daughter of James and Charlotte (Smith) McAlister. James McAlister was a Kentuckian by birth and was a member of 1844 in Washington, where he finally died. The mother was born in Tennessee and is also dead. In 1844 the family crossed the Plains from Missouri, the daughter Martha being at the time in her fifth year. In September, 1845, they located at Olympia, witnessing the erection of the first building in that settlement. Until her sixteenth year Miss McAlister attended school, improving every opportunity to obtain an education. Educational privileges were very limited at that time and it was frequently necessary to employ an instructor to come to the house and give private lessons. By studious application to the work, however, she succeeded in acquiring a fair education in spite of the unusual difficulties attending the course. Discontinuing her studies at the age of sixteen, she spent two years at home, assisting her mother in the care of the house, and at the end of this time, October 11, 1855, she was married in Olympia to Joseph Bunting, who was afterward killed by the Indians while mining in Arizona. The family moved later to Yakima county and here Mrs. Bunting was again married, this time in North Yakima, in 1870, to Carlos Cheney. After twelve years of married life death again entered the home, the husband departing this life from natural causes March 22, 1891. Mrs. Cheney has eleven brothers and sisters, all living but three; their names follow: America, George W., John,

Eliza J., Julia A., Sarah A., Elizabeth, James, William, Louisa and Charlotte. Her children by her first husband are the following: George Bunting, born in Olympia November 7, 1856, now in California; Charlotte (Bunting) Granger, born on Chambers' Prairie, September 8, 1858, wife of William Granger, living east of North Yakima; Blanch (Bunting) Perkins, born on the Nesqually, September 20, 1860, killed in Yakima county by the Indians, July 9, 1877, an account of whose atrocious murder will be found in one of the general chapters of this work; Eliza (Bunting) Percival, born in Steilacoom, July 17, 1862, now in California; James Bunting, born in Steilacoom, January 13, 1864, and Frank H. Bunting, born January 8, 1871, now living with his mother. By her second husband, Mrs. Cheney has one son, Fred A. Cheney, born May 23, 1881, living in Yakima county. Mrs. Cheney belongs to the Woman's Relief Corps and is a member of the Methodist church. She owns three hundred acres of farm land, fifty head of cattle and horses and one hundred head of sheep. The farm is one of the best found in the valley, and the dwelling is a modern and model house of nine rooms. No one is better entitled to honorable mention in the history of Yakima county than is Mrs. Cheney, who has faced the hardships of pioneer life and shared in the wonderful development of the country. She is highly respected as a woman of undaunted courage, of strict integrity, of excellent business qualification, and it is with pleasure that we enroll her with the honored citizens of Yakima county.

LINCOLN J. GREENWALT, foreman of the well-known land, canal and improvement company, the Moxee Company, resides five miles southeast of North Yakima, on rural free delivery route No. 1. Lincoln J. Greenwalt is a native of Andrew county, Missouri, where he was born September 1, 1867. His father, who makes his home with him, is Abraham Greenwalt, a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent, born in 1835. His mother, Louisa (Billings) Greenwalt, was also a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent, born in 1836; she has been dead some years. In 1858, when Lincoln was but one year old, the parents moved to California and he remained with them until his twenty-first year. He obtained a good education in the district schools of California, continuing his studies until he was seventeen. Leaving school at this age, he worked with his father until 1879, when they removed to Oregon. They remained in Oregon but one winter, however, and came on to Yakima City in 1880. Here Lincoln Greenwalt engaged in the stock business, ranging his cattle on the Indian reservation, and continuing in the business with good success until 1889. At this time he sold out his stock interests and purchased a farm in the Ahtanum valley, engaging for four years in its cultivation and management. In 1893, he sold the Ahtanum farm and entered the employ of the Moxee Company. This company has one of the most extensive ranches in the county; operates an irrigation canal, and engages in diversified farming on a very large scale. The history of the corporation will be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Greenwalt's position as foreman is one of importance and of great responsibility, and the fact that he has so long retained the place is evidence of his peculiar fitness for the position. Lincoln Greenwalt is fourth in a family of six children, all of whom are living; their names follow: Benton, Mary (Greenwalt) Cryder, Hattie (Greenwalt) Hackett, Walter, and Zelma (Greenwalt) Hackett. Walter lives in California; the others in Yakima county. Mr. Greenwalt was married in Yakima county, February 11, 1900, to Miss Dollie Millican, who was born in Yakima City, October 16, 1878, the daughter of James and Sarah (Agy) Millican, natives of Missouri; both parents are dead. Mrs. Greenwalt has three brothers and three sisters, as follows: Lee, Etta (Millican) Jackson, Frank, John, Rose (Millican) Stone and Ella (Millican) Lampson. All are living in Yakima county except Mrs. Stone, who resides in Kittitas county, and all were born in Yakima county except Lee, whose birthplace was Oregon. Mrs. Greenwalt is a member of the Presbyterian church. In politics, Mr. Greenwalt is a Republican. His fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen and the Woodmen of the World. He is a man of influence in local affairs, of progressive ideas and strict integrity; is ranked with the more successful farmers and stockmen of the county, and is highly respected by all who know him.

JOSEPH M. BROWN, a horticulturist, whose home is one and one-half miles southeast of North Yakima, is an esteemed citizen of the county and well worthy a place of honor on the pages of this volume. His father was James Brown, a native of Indiana, born in 1825; he died when the son Joseph was but three years old. His wife, the mother of the subject of this article, was Mary (Crosley) Brown, also a native of Indiana, born in 1823; she has been dead a number of years. Mr. Brown was born in Missouri, April 18, 1857, and remained at home until fourteen years of age. He was the youngest of a family of six children; in his youth he was troubled with a cancer, and, fearing it would prove a great disadvantage to him in later life in agricultural pursuits, he was very desirous of obtaining such an education as would enable him to follow other pursuits should he so desire. The family being large and the school opportunities of his home neighborhood being poor, he left home when fourteen and went to Nebraska, where he secured employment on a farm at sixteen dollars per month in a neighborhood where the school privileges were much better than at home. Here for a number of years he worked on the farm in the summer and attended the district schools in the winter. He afterwards spent two years in the high school at Tecumseh, Nebraska, being graduated in January, 1879. In October of the same year he was married in Syracuse, Nebraska, to Miss Jessie F. Wells. He at once purchased a farm on credit, canceling the obligation, eighteen hundred dollars, at the end of two years. In 1883, he sold out and moved to the Horse Heaven country in Yakima county, Washington, and for nine years followed the breeding of Clydesdale draft horses, his imported Scottish Knight being a well known horse of that region. While a resident of Yakima county he served two terms as county commissioner. In 1892, he came to North Yakima and purchased fifteen acres of land, where he now resides, at that time desert sage-brush land, now a beautiful orchard of apples and apricots, in which nestles the comfortable home of the family. Mr. Brown served the Republicans of the county in one campaign as their candidate for county clerk, and was elected. During this term and for two years as insurance solicitor, he was a resident of North Yakima. During Mr. Brown's residence in North Yakima he was very popular with his Republican friends and had a bright political future before him; but preferred the associations of home and rural pursuits, and hence returned to his fruit ranch. Besides being a staunch Republican, he is prominent in Masonic circles and has a long list of fraternal and political friends. He has brothers and sisters as follows: Samuel W., deceased; Ethan A., of North Yakima; Mrs. Melissa A. Brady, deceased; James F., of Kansas; Mrs. Nancy J. Estes, of Wenatchee, Washington. Mrs. Brown was born in Wisconsin, October 13, 1856, the daughter of Gilbert and Mary (Kelley) Wells, both natives of New Hampshire and of English parentage. Mrs. Brown has one brother living, Lewellyn A. Wells, of Nebraska. She has two sisters and one brother dead: Clara, Ermina E. and Forest. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born the following children: Harry E., Nebraska, September 16, 1880; Frank W., Klickitat county, April 21, 1884, the first white child born in the Horse Heaven country; Edna M., Washington, March 13, 1886; Benjamin F., May 16, 1888; Mary E., October 10, 1890; Pearl M., November 26, 1892; Joseph M., Jr., December 25, 1894, and George D., May 21, 1898, all in Washington. When the youngest child, George, was born, he was totally blind, but the sight of one eye was completely restored and of the other nearly so, by Dr. P. V. Wing, of the Fannie Paddock hospital, Tacoma. Although he could not speak until three years old, he has developed into a remarkably intelligent child; he is a natural musician, and, at the age of six, plays well on the piano and organ. His accomplishments are a wonder to all who know him. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are highly esteemed by neighbors and by their many friends.

MRS. ELIZABETH (COCHRANE) CARMICHAEL. Among the many women who have bravely and successfully fought the battle of life in the great Northwest, and shared equally with the men in its development, none is more worthy of a place in this volume than is Mrs. Elizabeth Carmichael, of Yakima City. She was born in Scotland January 6, 1858, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Patterson) Cochrane, both natives of Scotland. The father was born in 1818 and died in New Zealand in 1884. The mother was born March 26, 1828, and is still living in New Zealand. Mrs. Carmichael went with her parents from Scotland to New Zealand in 1865. There she attended school until her eighteenth year and afterwards taught one year as assistant instructor in the primary department of the public schools. After spending one year with her parents she was married, in New Zealand, May 17, 1878, to William Loudon. In 1884 they left New Zealand and in August of that year reached Yakima county, Washington, and went into the stock business on the Cowiche. The following year (1885) Mr. Loudon died and Mrs. Loudon at once moved to Yakima City, opened a store of general merchandise, at the same time receiving the appointment as postmistress; she held this appointment for nine years. April 9, 1898, Mrs. Loudon married Colin Carmichael and in July of the same year sold her stock of merchandise at Yakima City. Mr. and Mrs. Carmichael then went to Santa Rosa, California, and for a time engaged in the purchase and sale of hops. March 23, 1899, Mr. Carmichael died in Santa Rosa, and, in September of the same year, Mrs. Carmichael returned to Yakima City and purchased one hundred and fifty acres of land adjoining the town, at once beginning its cultivation. In April, 1900, she again opened a general merchandise store and in September, 1902, established the Yakima City creamery, which is still in successful operation. Mrs. Carmichael is now secretary and treasurer of the Washington State Dairy Association and takes a lively interest in the development of the industry. She is also specially interested in educational matters and is an active member of the Presbyterian church. She has one of the most beautiful and comfortable homes in Yakima county and enjoys the esteem of a very large circle of friends and acquaintances. She has four sons: James A.

Loudon, born in New Zealand, December 28, 1879, and now receiving teller of the First National bank, North Yakima, a graduate of the Santa Rosa (California) business college; William Loudon, born in New Zealand, April 24, 1881, manager of the Yakima City creamery; John P. Loudon, born in New Zealand, October 30, 1883, graduate of the North Yakima high school, 1902; Guy Loudon, born in Yakima county, December 22, 1885, assistant manager of the Yakima City creamery.

EDWARD REMY. One of the successful fruit growers of Yakima county is Edward Remy, whose home is two and one-half miles southeast of North Yakima. Nowhere may be seen to better advantage the transforming effects of water and the skill of man upon the barren sage-brush plains of the west than at Mr. Remy's home; the wealth of foliage in season, the hanging fruit and the trailing berry vines, and in their midst the comfortable dwelling, making an ideal home to which Mr. and Mrs. Remy and their three children are naturally very much attached. Mr. Remy is a native of Belgium, where he was born November 12, 1860. His father was Peter J. Remy, a glass-blower by trade, born in Belgium in 1830; he died in Yakima county in 1902. The mother was Mary (Richir) Remy, also born in Belgium; she died in her native country when her son Edward was seventeen years old. During his youth, Edward attended the schools of his native land. At the age of nineteen, having already learned the glass-blower's trade, he came to the United States and located in Ohio, following his trade in the glass works at Kent for two years. He was afterwards employed for three years in the glass works of New Albany, Indiana, and later in those of Rock Island, Illinois. In 1887 he went to Ottawa, Illinois, where he remained, still in his trade, until 1893. This year marks the close of his career as a glass-blower. He came then to Yakima county, Washington, and purchased the land where he has since made his home. July 16, 1883, Mr. Remy and Miss Mary Deeley were united in marriage in New Albany, Indiana. Miss Deeley was born in England, November 2, 1863, the daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Deeley, both natives of England. Her father died in his native country and her mother is still living, now a resident of Yakima county. Mr. Remy has three brothers and three sisters: Felician, a glass-blower living in Indiana; Mary (Remy) Dandoy, in Belgium; Juliett (Remy) Brigod, in Indiana; Peter J., an Indiana farmer; Julius, a glass-blower in Indiana; Esther (Remy) Andris, also living in Indiana. Mrs. Remy has one sister and one brother: Phoebe, a native of England, living in North Yakima, and Samuel, born in England, now an Indiana glass-blower. Three children have come into the Remy home: Mary, born in New Albany, Indiana, February 20, 1884; Alice, born in Rock Island, Illinois, April 20, 1886; Edward, born in Ottawa, Illinois, March 10, 1889. Mr. Remy is an active Republican and holds membership in the fraternal orders Modern Woodmen of America and the Masons. Mr. and Mrs. Remy and their two daughters are members of the Methodist church. On his home place Mr. Remy produces several varieties of fruits and berries and always makes exhibits at state and local fairs. At the last state fair held at North Yakima he was awarded special premiums on apples, pears, prunes and plums. He is a progressive and an energetic horticulturist. He was recently appointed on the board of county supervisors, but declined to serve, his interests being centered in his orchard and his home. Mr. and Mrs. Remy are highly respected and have many warm friends.

WILLIAM E. THORNTON, a pioneer of 1872, lives two and one-half miles southwest of North Yakima, where he is engaged in farming. He was born in Holt county, Missouri, August 13, 1848, the son of Frank and Elizabeth Thornton. His parents died when he was a small child and he was placed in the charge of an aunt, Mrs. Mary Russell. In 1851 the aunt crossed the Plains with ox teams to Oregon, occupying six months in making the journey, encountering many obstacles and escaping many dangers en route, one man of the party, Wash Stewart, being killed by the Indians. William Thornton spent his youth in Oregon and, until his fifteenth year, attended the common schools of that state, later graduating from a Portland business college. At the age of fifteen, he began making his own way in life; at eighteen he entered the employ of a sash and door factory, learning the business; two years later learning the painter's trade and eventually becoming a sign writer and decorator. In 1872 he came to Yakima county and until 1886 was engaged in the stock business, at the same time working, at intervals, at his trade as a sign writer. He built the first high trellis hop yard in the state at a cost per acre of one hundred and fifteen dollars. He was one of the promoters and builders of the Konnewock and the Naches and Coviche high ditches. In the late seventies he was one of the party that made the search for the Indian murderers of the Perkins family, assisted in the capture of Chief Moses and acted as his guard; also helped to arrest the chief at a later date. Aside from agricultural pursuits, he has always been more or less interested in mining. He is one of the principal holders of Gold Hill property; owns the Inca group in Yakima county; the Minnie T. group on Crystal mountain, a one-third interest in the Reliance group and a one-half interest in the Rara Avis group, the last three properties in Pierce county. Like many more who came to the county in the early days, he has suffered reverses and found much to endure and overcome. In the cold winter of 1881-82 he lost four hundred and ninety-five out of five hundred head of stock and in the panic of 1893 his losses footed twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. Thornton is a relative, in direct line, of Judge J. Quinn Thornton, who figured so prominently in early Oregon affairs; was a delegate from Oregon to congress during Polk's administration, and was the author of a history of Oregon and California. Mr. Thornton was married in Yakima county June 10, 1896, to Mrs. Alice (Tilton) McLean, daughter of Major Joseph Tilton, a native of Pennsylvania and a veteran of the Civil war. Mr. Thornton has one sister, Mrs. Rebecca Keller, living in Nebraska. Mr. Thornton is a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity and is active and influential in the councils of the Democratic party. He is a Methodist in religious convictions, and for years his sweet, strong tenor voice was heard each Sunday in the North Yakima church. Unfortunately, however, his voice has now lost much of its sweetness and power. He is widely known as one of the earlier pioneers of central Washington, as a man of strictest integrity and excellent executive ability and both he and Mrs. Thornton are highly esteemed by all with whom they are associated in public or in the home life.

OSCAR VANSYCKLE, a pioneer of 1871, is now engaged in market gardening at Yakima City. He was born in Ohio, March 1, 1845. His father was John M. Vansyckle, a native of New York, a Wells-Fargo express agent, and a pioneer of California and Oregon. He went to California in the spring of the year 1852, as agent for Wells, Fargo & Company at Stockton. In 1855, he was transferred to San Francisco, where he served as superintendent of the same company in the express department. In 1857, he went to Portland, Oregon, and opened there the banking department of the Wells-Fargo Company. He engaged in the hotel business in Portland in 1859, but in the following year removed to Wallula, Washington Territory, as agent for Thompson Coe and as quartermaster agent. The mother was Susanna E. (Rensford) Vansyckle, born in 1827; she died December 15, 1903, in Seattle, at the age of seventy-seven. Her father was an English sea captain. Mr. Vansyckle spent his youth in Portland, where he attended school and assisted his father in the hotel. In 1865 Oscar Vansyckle came to Yakima county, Washington, with cattle, which he looked after on the range, being allowed the increase for a number of years for his share of the profits. After several years in the stock business, he engaged for four years with his brother-in-law, Dan Nelson, and H. L. Tucker, in prospecting and mining in various localities, but without success. He then located in Yakima City and engaged in the hotel business, remaining so occupied for about four years. At the end of this time the railroad was built through the town and its residents nearly all moved to the new town of North Yakima. Mr. Vansyckle remained, however, served as postmaster for a number of years and has since followed market gardening. In Portland, Oregon, November 19, 1876, Mr. Vansyckle was married to Mrs. Elizabeth (Nelson) Mauldin, daughter of Judge J. B. Nelson, a prominent pioneer of Yakima county. Mrs. Vansyckle was born in Missouri October 14, 1843. Her children by her first husband are: Pearl (Mauldin) Rudkin, born in Klickitat county, August 6, 1862, living in Yakima county; Frederick A. Mauldin, born in Klickitat county, April 9, 1864, a mine carpenter living in Idaho; Mrs. Cora Gardner, born in Yakima county, April 19, 1867, living in Okanogan county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Vansyckle are: Mrs. Clara Noble, born December 15, 1877; Edith, born July 23, 1880, died April 25, 1882; John M., born July 18, 1883. Mr. Vansyckle is an active member of the Democratic party and always takes a lively interest in the success of the party. Mrs. Vansyckle is active in church circles and belongs to the Christian congregation. Both are worthy of a place of honor among the pioneers of Yakima county, and they are held in high esteem by all who have been associated with them in the development and progress of the valley where they have for so long a time made their home.

JOSEPH RICHARTZ, a successful dairy farmer of Yakima county, lives one mile east of North Yakima. Germany is the country of his nativity and the date of his birth was June 16, 1854. He is the son of Henry and Mary (Stiles) Richartz, both natives of Germany and both dead. Until his twelfth year Joseph Richartz attended school in his native land, but was obliged to discontinue his studies at this age on account of the death of his father, which made it necessary for him to assist in the support of his mother, his four elder brothers being at the time serving their allotted years in the German army. He was variously employed for a number of years, but, when seventeen, began to learn the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for eighteen years, with the exception of three years spent in the army. Becoming acquainted with the opportunities offered in America to the industrious and ambitious, to gain a competency and a desirable and permanent home, he decided to try his fortunes in this country and accordingly, in 1881, he embarked with his family for the United States. Shortly after his arrival he located near St. Paul, Minnesota, and followed his trade there for several years; eventually, however, having to leave that section on account of his failing health. In the fall of the year 1887 he came to Yakima county, landing here with twenty-five cents in his pocket and having with him a large family, for which he must provide. For a time he engaged in farm work, chopping cord wood and in common labor of any kind that he could find to do, using goods boxes for tables and chairs in the home and doing without many of the ordinary comforts of home life. He managed to keep himself employed, however, and prospered, so that, in 1888, he was able to purchase a homestead relinquishment to eighty acres of land, paying therefor the sum of one hundred dollars. With twenty-five dollars of remaining capital he moved his family to the farm, and, with the assistance of his wife, dug a well and erected a small dwelling. For several years he carried supplies to the home on his back and got but small returns from the land. Then the Condon ditch was built and he gave half of his farm for water privileges, which made his remaining forty acres much more valuable. In 1897 he sold for three thousand dollars and at once purchased two hundred and forty acres where he now resides. This farm he has developed into one of the most valuable in the county, with a commodious and comfortable dwelling, a large barn sixty by seventy-six feet in dimensions and forty-four feet high, and has stocked the place with twenty-one milk cows and sixty additional head of cattle and horses. Mr. Richartz has four brothers and two sisters living: Nicholas, Peter, Mathias, Fred, Mrs. Susanna Kline and Mrs. Eva Knot, all living in Germany excepting Nicholas, who is in this country. Mr. Richartz was married in Germany, January 15, 1880, to Miss Elizabeth Powley, who was born in Germany, March 16, 1860, the daughter of Theodore and Helen (Custer) Powley. This faithful wife and devoted mother died October 31, 1903. She was the mother of the following children: Nicholas, Henry and Bernard, deceased; Frank, born in Minnesota, July 28, 1883; John born in Minnesota, January 24, 1885; Mary, February 27, 1888; Gertrude, November 22, 1890; Joseph, February 22, 1893; Henry, December 28, 1895; Louisa, October 12, 1897; Theodore, June 8, 1900, all born in North Yakima. Mr. Richartz is a Catholic. In politics, he is a Republican. He is classed with the energetic and successful agriculturists who have been active factors in the wonderful development of Yakima county, is a man well known and influential in local affairs, and he commands the respect and confidence of all who know him.

JOHN MORRISEY, a farmer and stock raiser, whose home is nine miles northwest of North Yakima, is a native of Ireland, born March 20, 1837. He is the son of David and Nora (Walsh) Morrissey, also natives of Ireland. The father started for America when the son John was thirteen years old, but died at sea. The mother died in Chicago, aged eighty years. John Morrissey received his early education in his native country, and continued his studies in Canada, having immigrated to that country when seventeen years old. For ten years he worked on farms and in sawmills in Canada and then removed to Illinois, continuing in farm work there for about five years, after which he was located in the saloon business for seven additional years in Chicago. Concluding that the Northwest offered special inducements to one wishing to establish a permanent home, he left Chicago in quest of a desirable location. He stopped for a few months in Nebraska but, not being suited with the country, came on to Washington and settled on the homestead where he has ever since resided, April 16, 1877. Here he has four hundred acres of land which he has developed from its primitive wildness to a high state of cultivation; he is also one of a company of seventeen that owns one thousand acres devoted to grazing purposes, where are ranged cattle, horses and other stock. The homestead is equipped with a good residence and hop house, and a large barn; it is an ideal home and is a lasting monument to the industry and integrity of its owner. Mr. Morrissey was married in Chicago, Illinois, October 15, 1873, to Miss Mary Walsh, a native of Ireland, where she was born September 14, 1850. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Morrissey are: Michael, deceased; Francis, living in Canada; Morris, living in Texas; Bridget (Morrissey) Mahoney, living in Chicago; Thomas and David, deceased; Richard, living in Chicago. Mrs. Morrissey has two brothers, Thomas and John Walsh, both natives of Ireland, the latter a citizen of North Yakima. To Mr. and Mrs. Morrissey have been born the following children: Mary J. (Morrissey) Loughon, born in Chicago, July 12, 1874, living in Yakima county; John D. Morrissey, born in Nebraska May 14, 1876, a citizen of Yakima county; Thomas and Anna (Morrissey) Lemon, twins, deceased; Edward J., born in Yakima City November 1, 1880; James F., born in Yakima county May 4, 1882; Agnes, born November 17, 1884; Francis Joseph, born June 15, 1888. Mr. Morrissey is a Democrat and takes active interest in the success of his party. He and Mrs. Morrissey are members of the Catholic church. They have recently built a good home in North Yakima. Mr. Morrissey is widely known over the county as one of the earlier pioneers of the central part of Washington; is a man of influence in local affairs and, by all who know him, is highly respected as a man of integrity and real worth. It is a pleasure to accord him a place of honor among the pioneers of Yakima county.

MICHAEL PROBACH, merchant tailor, resides at No. 701 North Second street, in the city of North Yakima, and has been in business in the city since 1889. The town of Koln, Rhine Province, Germany, is the place of his nativity, his birthday being June 1, 1850. He is the son of Gerhard and Katherina (Stanger) Probach, both native born Germans. The parents are both dead. Michael Probach spent his youth and early manhood in the land of his birth. He attended school until thirteen years old; then quit the school room for the active duties of life. At fifteen he began to learn the tailor's trade, which he followed successfully until 1882 in his native land. For some time he had been considering the advisability of coming to America, impressed as he was by the superior advantages offered here to one seeking a permanent home and lucrative employment, and in 1882, his plans having been completed, he embarked for the United States. He worked for a time as a journeyman tailor in Denver and in other Colorado towns, but eventually opened a shop at Silver Cliff, that state, and conducted it successfully for two years. At the end of this time, in 1886, he sold his Silver Cliff establishment and returned to Germany, remaining for eighteen months. Having tasted life in America, however, he was not content to remain in the old country and, in 1888, he returned to the United States, settling first at Pendleton, Oregon, where he opened an establishment. After operating in Pendleton for one year he sold his business and came to North Yakima, where he has since remained and where he has become a leading merchant tailor. He purchased the establishment of Hugo Sigmund and, at this old stand, which was the first tailor shop opened in North Yakima, he is now doing an exceptionally good business. He is rated with the successful business men of the metropolis of central Washington. Of the three children born to his parents, he is the only one living; he has lost one brother and one sister, John and Minnie. Mr. Probach was married in Germany July 24, 1872, to Miss Gertrude Schmidt, who was born in Germany in 1845, the daughter of John and Lonisa (Stanger) Schmidt, natives of Germany. The father is dead. The mother, born in Germany in 1823, is now living with her daughter in North Yakima. To Mr. and Mrs. Probach have been born the following children: Louisa (Probach) Schwartz, Mary, Peter, Anna, Aloysius, and Paul, all born in Germany; Kathe, Gertrude, and Genevive, born in North Yakima. Mr. and Mrs. Probach are members of the Catholic church. Mr. Probach is a Democrat in politics and always takes a lively interest in the success of his party. He is somewhat interested in city property, owning five good lots and an attractive and modern eight-room dwelling. He is energetic and progressive, is making a success of his business and holds the respect of all with whom he comes in contact in business or home life.

ORLANDO BECK, county fruit inspector of Yakima county, fruit grower and horticulturist, is a pioneer of Yakima as well as one of its leading citizens today. He is best known as an expert orchardist and certainly has done much toward bringing his home county to the high position it now occupies in that industry. His father, Judge John W. Beck, was one of the first men in central Washington to raise fruit and was the first nurseryman in Yakima county, to which he came with his family in 1869, and in whose history he is an important character. Judge and Mrs. Martha M. (Goodwin) Beck were pioneers of Missouri, from which they crossed the Plains in 1865, under the guidance of Dr. L. H. Goodwin, to Walla Walla. At the time of this trip Orlando was only eight years of age, having been born in Sullivan county, Missouri, November 4, 1857, but he bravely did his share of guard duty and other work. His education was obtained mostly in Missouri and in the schools of Walla Walla. After living four years in Walla Walla county, the Becks went to Yakima county and settled in the Yakima valley. The father's long and useful life was brought to a close by sickness at his home in North Yakima in the summer of 1903; Mrs. Beck, hale and hearty for one of her age, survived her husband and continues to live in the metropolis of the county. In 1878 Orlando Beck settled on a homestead in the Yakima valley. This land now forms a portion of the site of North Yakima. Mr. Beck found agricultural pursuits congenial and profitable and since 1878 has been so engaged on his own account.

In 1880 he was united in marriage to Miss Corrina Southern, born in Iowa, August 4, 1864, the daughter of Braxton D. and Nancy J. (Veach) Southern. They were early settlers in the Yakima country also, and for many years have been esteemed residents of Kittitas county. Their biography will be found elsewhere in these pages. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Beck have been born three children, one of whom, Jennie, born February 14, 1881, is dead, and two of whom, Eva S., born August 12, 1884, and Edna, born February 8, 1886, are living. Mr. and Mrs. Beck are well known in social and fraternal circles. Mr. Beck being the present venerable consul of Yakima lodge, No. 5,550, M. W. A., and having served as adviser of the lodge for three years previously. Mrs. Beck is an earnest worker in the Congregational church of which she is a member. Politically, Mr. Beck is a Republican and has served a term as deputy sheriff under the administration of his party, and is now in the seventh year of incumbency as fruit inspector. He was one of the promoters of the Union Ditch Company, of which organization he has been president for the past three years. He is an active participant in all elections held in the county. Besides owning a large block of stock in the Elizabeth Mining Company, operating in the Gold Hill district, Mr. Beck is the possessor of a fine home in the suburbs of North Yakima, the tract consisting of five acres, four of which are set out in orchard. He is a substantial citizen; one who is a factor in the progress of his section of the state.

FRANK B. SHARDLOW, who has been a resident of Yakima county since 1880, is one of the substantial business men and real estate owners of North Yakima. He was born in Rochester, New York, July 15, 1855, and there he spent his youth and early manhood, receiving a good education in the public schools of his native town. In 1873 he went to California, where he learned the glider's trade, a handicraft which he followed successfully until 1880, when, as before stated, he came to Yakima county. Locating at Yakima City, he entered the employ of Alva Churchill, and when North Yakima was established in 1885, he, with Mr. Churchill as a partner in the venture, erected one of the first business buildings. It was located on the northeast corner of Front street and Yakima avenue. In 1886 he went to Ellensburg, where construction work on the Northern Pacific Railroad was then in progress, and for two years thereafter he was engaged in a successful business. In 1888, however, he returned to North Yakima, where his home has ever since been. In 1893 he purchased eighty acres of sage-brush land under the big Sunnyside canal, near Zillah, and eventually he placed it under a high state of cultivation. He gave most of his attention to hop raising, and won from a twenty-acre hop yard an average yield of two thousand one hundred pounds per acre. Other staple crops were also produced with success.

In 1902 Mr. Shardlow disposed of his farm to good advantage and at once erected one of the finest business blocks in North Yakima, a three-story brick of modern design and workmanship, situated on the southeast corner of Front street and Yakima avenue, facing the avenue.

May 10, 1888, our subject married Mrs. Jennie P. Munson, a native of Vancouver, Washington, and the daughter of Josiah and Lucinda (Hatton) Lee. Her father was born in Orange county, Indiana, January 27, 1834, came west by ox team when nineteen years old and located at Vancouver, Washington. Thence at a later date he went to Whitman county, in the same state, and from that to Innisfail, Alberta, Northwest Territory, where the family now resides. Mrs. Shardlow had eight brothers and sisters, of whom the oldest sister, Edith R., died some years ago, leaving two children, Archie and Viola Jones, now aged nineteen and eighteen years respectively, who are making their home with Mrs. Shardlow. Albert B. Lee, a brother of Mrs. Shardlow, born in Vancouver some thirty-six years ago, had been a resident of Whitman county until 1901, when he moved to his large cattle ranch at Riparia. Selling this in 1903, he has gone to join his father in Alberta, Canada.

Mrs. Shardlow came to North Yakima in 1878, and on November 13, 1880, married S. T. Munson, then county auditor of Yakima county. Christmas of the following year a daughter was born to them, whom they named Clare and who died when a year and a half old. Six months later Mr. Munson died also, his demise occurring in California. He had been elected county auditor three times and had served for a season as clerk of the court in Yakima City. By her present husband, Mrs. Shardlow has one daughter, Lois Lee Shardlow, now about four years old.

Fraternally, Mr. Shardlow is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in politics, he is a Republican, supporting the cause that he conceives to be just in county, state and nation. As a business man he is enterprising and successful, while his intercourse with his fellow citizens has been in all respects such as to win for him their esteem and regard.

JAMES A. MABRY (deceased) was until 1901, when he retired from active business, the proprietor of a harness store and shop in North Yakima. Between that date and his death, which occurred at the family home, No. 512 North First street, North Yakima, November 27, 1903, from pulmonary disease, he had lived quietly with his family, patiently biding the day when his soul should be ushered into eternity. His wife and four children survive him. James A. Mabry was born at Vancouver, Washington, September 23, 1857, to the union of Walter P. and Mary (Stalcup) Mabry, natives of Indiana, where they were married. In 1844 this doughty Indiana pioneer and his faithful wife crossed the Plains and settled near Vancouver, Washington, becoming two of the very earliest pioneers of the Northwest. Mr. Mabry came to Yakima county in 1870 and there lived until he died in 1873. Among the children left to mourn his loss was James, who was then only fifteen years old. For ten years the young man worked on ranches and rode the range, giving little attention to educational matters until he became of age, when he acquired a fair education by diligent application at winter night schools. Then he bought seventeen acres of the old Nelson homestead on the Naches and there began raising hops. Five years later, in 1887, he removed to North Yakima and in 1888 sold his stock interests and invested his money in the harness business, in which he was successfully engaged until failing health forced his abandonment of it. He left but one brother, Charles, who is living in North Yakima, four sisters having preceded him to the life beyond.

In 1883, at Yakima City, Mr. Mabry was united in marriage to Emma Parker, the daughter of William and Harriet (Buckmaster) Parker, pioneers of the Northwest. Her father was a native of Illinois, where he spent his boyhood and young manhood farming and stock raising, crossing the Plains to California in 1849 with his father, where he engaged in mining. William remained in the West, marrying at The Dalles and becoming a pioneer of Goldendale, Washington. He died in Yakima county in 1875. The mother's birthplace was Ohio, the date of her birth being 1844, and that of her death 1897. Mrs. Mabry was born at Fort Simco, Yakima county, July 19, 1867, and can therefore lay claim to being one of that county's earliest pioneers. Her education was obtained in the district schools. When only sixteen years old she became the wife of Mr. Mabry. To Mr. and Mrs. Mabry have been born the following children: Harry, July 29, 1884; Charles, October 16, 1888; Eunice, March 30, 1893; Eva, March 31, 1896. Mr. Mabry was a member of the Tribe of Joseph order; also a devout member of the Congregational church. In politics, he was an active Republican. Of real estate he owned ten acres, a highly improved tract of orchard land, situated on the Naches river. In life he was an esteemed citizen; in death he is mourned by a multitude of friends to whom his taking away was a distinct shock.

ANDREW J. LEWIS, deceased. With the death of the subject of this biographical chronicle, January 11, 1904, there passed away one of Yakima county's oldest pioneers, worthiest citizens and most highly esteemed residents. He planted his vine and fig tree in the Yakima valley a generation ago and diligently toiled for the welfare of his home and for the advancement of the community's best interests, ever a man of sterling character, public-spirited, courageous, energetic and able. Mr. Lewis was born April 8, 1831, at Danville, Indiana, the son of Henry and Hannah (Griffith) Lewis. His boyhood was spent upon his father's farm and attending the common school of that neighborhood, but when seventeen years old, he began work at brick making for Mr. Parker, and when twenty-one he left the old home to seek his fortunes in the Wabash valley. The country pleased him and for the next nine years of his life the young man followed farming in that section, leaving Indiana for Kansas about 1857, where he settled upon a pre-emption claim. A few years later he returned to Illinois and in April, 1861, enlisted in company E, Sixteenth Illinois infantry, to fight for the honor and preservation of the Union. He served under General Grant in the Western army, that regiment being reserved for special duty during the war, until September, 1863, when he received an honorable discharge. The far Northwest appealed to him as best suited for a home, and in 1865 he joined a wagon train en route to Clarke county, Washington territory, making the journey with ox teams. In 1871 he came to the little settlement in the Yakima valley, locating on what is now known as the Mabry place near North Yakima. The following spring he went up the Ahtanum and filed upon land, but subsequently established his permanent home upon a railroad section in the Covich valley, where his death occurred after a lingering illness. This ranch consists of three hundred acres, all except sixty of which are under water and in a highly improved condition. For many years Mr. Lewis was engaged in raising horses, but abandoned this industry in late years. The home he left is a most substantial monument to his ability, energy and perseverance. Mr. Lewis was always an active member of the Republican party and for many years was a member of the county central committee. He served the county as one of its commissioners in its early days, and surely no better indication of his standing among his fellow neighbors can be found than the fact that for a quarter of a century he served them as school director. He was a zealous member of the Grand Army of the Republic. The last sad rites held over the departed veteran, pioneer and citizen took place in North Yakima, where all that was mortal was laid to its eternal rest.

Mr. Lewis was married, December 15, 1860, at Mount Sterling, Brown county, Illinois, to Miss Isabella L. Parker, a daughter of the Hoosier state. Her parents were Thomas C. and Nancy S. (Harvey) Parker. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis were blessed with the following children: George W., deceased; A. Grant, S. Sherman, Mrs. Mary E. Grewell, (deceased); Mrs. Laura J. Fowler; Abraham L., deceased; Mrs. Alta A. Clancy; Mrs. Adelia D. Austin, Mrs. Lola LaForge, Mrs. L. Florence Talbert; and Lodosca A., deceased. S. Sherman was born during the trip across the Plains. For many years Mrs. Lewis taught school, not giving up the work until increased family cares compelled her to do so. She is a member of the Church of God; and is held in high personal esteem by all who know her.

THOMAS KELLY (deceased) was a prominent and extensive farmer and stock raiser, living twelve miles northwest of North Yakima. He was a Kentuckian by birth, born February 28, 1829, and was the son of Samuel and Nancy (Kennedy) Kelly, both natives of Virginia, who settled in Kentucky when it was a primeval forest. Thomas Kelly spent his youth and early manhood in his native state. In those days the public school system had not as yet been inaugurated and he received his education in subscription schools. His time was divided between the school and the home farm until his sixteenth year. At this time he quit his studies and for one year worked on the farm of a brother-in-law. For two years longer he continued at farm work in the vicinity of his father's home and, in 1848, at the age of nineteen, started overland for Oregon, enduring all the hardships and facing all the dangers incident to the Plains trip in those days, trailing its desert wastes and, in his own language, "Fording all the creeks and rivers between Kentucky and Oregon." Arriving in Oregon, he took up a donation claim on the Willamette river and on a portion of this claim the city of Portland now stands. Here he engaged in milling lumber for five years. In 1854 he sold his sawmill and began farming, which he followed on his Oregon homestead until 1871, coming at that time to Yakima county, Washington, and taking up land where he lived at the time of his death, November 15, 1903. This valuable ranch, on which Mrs. Kelly still resides, consists of five hundred and fifteen acres; is well stocked with cattle and horses, and well equipped with implements, a large barn and a comfortable dwelling. It is a monument to the industry, integrity and capability of the honored pioneer who found it a wilderness waste and made of it an ideal home for his family.

Mr. Kelly was married in Oregon, March 10, 1853, to Miss Christiana E. Sunderland, a native of Illinois, born in 1837. She was the daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Schaeffer) Sunderland, her father a native of Indiana and her mother of Illinois; neither are living. Mrs. Kelly has brothers and sisters, all residents of Portland, Oregon, as follows: Albert Milton Sunderland, Mrs. Elizabeth Farrell, Mrs. Harriet Paddock, Mrs. Mary Mock, Mrs. Rosa Gupton, Mrs. Lydia Lott and Frances F. Flickenstein. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kelly are: Mrs. Martha Osborn, Mrs. Sena Ritter, Henry, Mrs. Nanney Bolton, Mrs. Lura Parrish, Mrs. Minnie Stevens and Wilbur Kelly. Mrs. Bolton and the son Wilbur were born in Yakima county; all the others in Oregon. All the children live in Yakima county excepting Mrs. Stevens, who resides in Kittitas county. Mr. Kelly was a member of the Methodist church, to which Mrs. Kelly also belongs. He was a Republican in politics, though not an active politician. He served as justice of the peace in his precinct and was influential in all the public affairs of the township in which he resided. While a resident of Oregon he took an active part in quelling the Indian uprisings in the fifties and at one time was a member of the Oregon mounted volunteers, organized to protect the settlers from Indian depredations, for which service a pension was granted him, after a lapse of almost fifty years, the notification reaching his family two days after his death. He was a man well known and greatly esteemed and is worthy of respectful remembrance as a pioneer of Yakima county.

H. F. THOMPSON, of the Thompson Music Company, North Yakima, is one of that city's energetic young business men. He was born in Jordan, Minnesota, July 6, 1871, the son of Enoch A. and Mary E. (Payne) Thompson, natives of Virginia and Indiana respectively. His father has led a life of varied experiences. Previous to 1861 he was manager of the John Robinson circus, but at the call to arms enlisted and served as a special scout under General McClellan during the war. In this capacity he made the special report of the battle of Antietam and was thrice captured, escaping each time from his captors. As a young man he was a pioneer of Minnesota, where he settled in 1865, at the age of twenty-four. The maternal side of the house was descended from Lord Paul of London, England, the date of Mrs. Thompson's birth being 1847. H. F. Thompson grew to manhood in the city of Minneapolis, where he was graduated by the high school and Carty Brothers' College. He was also graduated by the Northwestern Conservatory of Music. He inherited his talent for music from his father. Until 1901 he lived in Minneapolis, teaching music and playing in theater orchestras, but in that year came to North Yakima and accepted a position with Briggs & Dam, also continuing teaching. January 1, 1903, marks his entrance into the business life of North Yakima in a proprietary way, and the first year has proven an auspicious and highly successful one. In Minneapolis, June 17, 1896, he was united in marriage to Belle C., daughter of D. M. Rand, of that city. Her father is a prominent and wealthy citizen of Minneapolis, an ex-alderman and at one time owner of the Minneapolis Provision Company. During the Civil war, he was a sailor aboard the Niagara, and at present is one of the head officers of the Naval Veterans' Association. Mrs. Thompson is a skilled musician and instructor. She has a brother in North Yakima, H. J. Rand, who is proprietor of the Columbia meat market. Mr. Thompson has the following brothers and sisters: W. P., a miller in Minneapolis; Myrtle V., also of Minneapolis, of great renown as a musician and said to be one of the finest lady violinists in the country; Marion, whose husband, Professor Hauk, is dean of the Minneapolis Academy of Music. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have one child, Willard R., born in 1899. Mr. Thompson is affiliated with several fraternal orders, being a member of the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Maccabees, Fraternal Brotherhood and Patriotic Sons of America. In politics, he is an ardent admirer of President Roosevelt. He owns several pieces of city property, including two houses and three lots and is a thorough believer in the permanency and rise of Yakima real estate values. As might be expected, Mr. Thompson is prominent in musical affairs of North Yakima, being the director of the forty-piece mandolin club of that city. He held a similar position in Minneapolis. In both a business and a social way Mr. Thompson and his wife are winning the esteem and respect of all who come in contact with them.

MAHLON SYMMONDS, although among the more recent settlers in Yakima county, is nevertheless thoroughly identified with the reclamation of central Washington, of which Yakima county is a portion, having resided in the great Columbia basin for nearly a decade and a half. In that time he has watched the marvelous growth of the Big Bend region, and for that matter all of central Washington, from a sparsely inhabited grazing section into one of the finest farming and fruit raising portions of the Northwest. More than that, he himself has taken a part in the transformation. Mahlon Symmonds was born in Hancock county, Illinois, June 25, 1858, his parents being L. F. and Nancy (Tyner) Symmonds, natives of the Buckeye and Hoosier states respectively, the father having been one of Ohio's pioneers. Both are still living in the east. Like the majority of our successful men, Mr. Symmonds was reared upon the farm. After attending the common schools he went to Carthage college and there was a schoolmate of Judge Carroll B. Graves, of Ellensburg. After graduation he took up in earnest the profession of pedagogy, teaching in Illinois and Kansas until 1891. In that year he came to the Northwest, settling in Lincoln county, where he secured homestead and timber culture claims north of Wilbur and engaged in farming and stock raising, meeting with success from the first. The panic of '03 was very severely felt by residents of the Big Bend country and Mr. Symmonds, in common with others, suffered, though not so severely because he found work at his old profession of teaching school and for four years was thus able to greatly relieve his financial stress. He came to Washington with four hundred dollars as his cash capital; a short time ago he sold his property in Lincoln county for ten thousand dollars. Tiring of the cold winters, he came to the Yakima valley, noted as possessing the mildest climate in the Northwest, and there purchased his present holding of land near the city of North Yakima and also two thousand acres under the projected high line ditch. Last fall he brought his herd of sixty-five cattle to Sunnyside, where they were wintered. The family expect to make their home in North Yakima, that the children may have the best of school advantages. Mr. Symmonds and Anna Reis, daughter of Russell B. and Eliza (Leonard) Reis, were united in marriage in Illinois, September 5, 1888, and to this union have been born seven children: Kenneth, Raymond, Loyal R., Esther, Minnie, Burchard and Ivan. Mr. Reis is a native of Ohio and Mrs. Reis a native of Illinois. Both are now residents of Washington. Mr. Symmonds is an enthusiastic member of three fraternal orders, the Maccabees, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Woodmen of the World, belonging to Wilbur Camp, 415 of the latter order. Neither of the old line political parties counts him as one of its members, he being a supporter of Socialism. As a man of ability, substantial ideas and integrity he has been welcomed to his new home and will undoubtedly become a man of influence in the community.

REV. JAMES WILBUR HELM, for thirteen years past in charge of the Methodist Episcopal church interests at Fort Simcoe, is one of the early pioneers of the Northwest and a man commanding the high respect which should be associated with his profession. His parents, George W. and Julia A. (Henderson) Helm, were pioneers of the middle west, the father having been born August 6, 1825, in Kentucky and settled in Missouri in his sixteenth year. In 1845 he joined the historical train of emigrants which sought the shores of the distant Pacific and great Columbia river in that year and assisted materially in saving to the United States the region now comprising the northwestern group of states. In this same wagon train was the Henderson family, who settled in Yamhill county, where subsequently George W. Helm married the daughter Julia. The subject of our sketch was born to this union in 1849, Marion county being his birthplace. In 1863 the Helms left Oregon and settled in the Klickitat valley, where for the succeeding thirty years George W. Helm was a prominent stockman. After a year's residence in Seattle, he went to California and there, in 1902, passed to his eternal rest. The mother died in Portland.

James Helm was educated in Salem, Oregon, finishing his schooling with a course in the Willamette University. Until he was of age, the young man remained at home, but, having attained his majority, he boldly set out into the world to hew his own way. The first year, that of 1872, he spent in the employ of Phelps & Wadley, extensive stock men; then he and his uncle formed a partnership and for several years handled stock. In 1880 Mr. Helm went to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and from that point assisted in driving one thousand six hundred head of cattle across the Plains to Wasco, Oregon. About this time Mr. Helm abandoned the stock business and commenced in earnest his real life work, that of preaching the Gospel. Between 1882 and 1885 he was a lay preacher in Klickitat county, but in the latter year he was admitted to the Columbia River Conference of the Methodist church and assigned to the Bickleton circuit, seventy miles in length. A year later he was placed on the Wasco circuit and after a like period of service in Oregon, returned to Bickleton, where he remained two years. Then he was assigned to the west Klickitat circuit, spent a year on the Harrington circuit and finally, in 1891, came into his present reservation charge. He has three brothers, Charles, at Priest Rapids, Thomas and Eugene in British Columbia, and one sister, Mrs. Josephine Welsh, who lives at Cheney.

Mr. Helm and Miss Carrie Vest, daughter of James E. and Catherine (Abbott) Vest, were united by Hymen's bonds near Tyler, Lincoln county, Washington, in 1897. Her parents are natives of Indiana and were married in Illinois in 1864. James E. Vest is a graduate of McKinley college, Illinois, and during his early life followed the profession of teaching. In 1885 he immigrated to Washington, locating in Sprague, where he lived a year and then engaged in farming fifteen miles northeast of that town, upon which place he and his wife still reside. He was elected assessor of Lincoln county in 1892, serving four years. Mr. Vest served through the Civil war in the Twenty-second Illinois infantry. Mrs. Vest was reared and educated in Illinois, where in Bond county, July 5, 1865, Mrs. Helm was born. She attended the public schools of Illinois; also the state normal at Cheney, Washington. For ten years she was engaged in teaching school and during her father's administration of the assessor's office, acted as his deputy. Mrs. Helm has four sisters, Mrs. Minnie Kelly, in Spokane, and Martha, Mary and Mable at home, besides whom she had one brother, Charles E., now dead. Two children brighten the Helm home, Jay V., born July 2, 1898, and Katherine M., January 2, 1902, the reservation being their birthplace. Mr. Helm is identified with the Republican party. Rev. and Mrs. Helm are highly esteemed for their many sterling qualities and are strong factors in the noble work of redeeming the red men from their primitive condition and leading them into civilized lives—continuing the grand work so well begun by Father Wilbur.

JOHN J. HADLEY, ranchman, living near Fort Simcoe on the Yakima Indian reservation, is a typical westerner belonging to that type of frontiersmen, soldiers and settlers whose fearless, adventurous lives have given us such an interesting chapter in national life. The pioneer to whom we refer was born in France, September 24, 1828, and is the son of Frank and Elizabeth (Browne) Hadley, the father being of French descent, the mother of German. Frank Hadley was born in 1744, served as a high officer in Napoleon's armies and died in 1833 after a distinguished army life. The son John, after his father's death, was brought to New York by an uncle and there educated. When fourteen years old his uncle took him around the Horn to California and in 1847 he joined the first gold miners in that state. In eighteen months he took out twenty-six thousand dollars exclusive of expenses. A visit to New York and to his mother and stepfather in Pennsylvania followed; then a trip to St. Louis, after which he went to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and enlisted for five years in the regular army. Eighteen months after enlistment, he was advanced to the grade of a sergeant. Upon his discharge at Los Angeles, California, the soldier commenced carrying the express between that city and Fort Marhaver, in which he was employed fourteen months; then visited San Francisco, Seattle, The Dalles and Walla Walla, where he entered the employ of the government again, driving cattle. Following this he opened a livery stable at Bannock, Idaho, was burned out and returned to Walla Walla. There he conducted a livery for four years, then visited Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, where he helped to build the first log cabin erected in that town, also helped construct the Tacoma mill, and in July, 1870, came to Yakima county. In Yakima county his first work was for George Taylor as a cowboy; then he worked for Joseph Bowser a year. In the spring of 1874 he married the widow of Nathan Olney. Until the fall of 1880 Mr. and Mrs. Hadley lived on the Ahtanum, but in that year Mr. Hadley re-entered the government's employ, being stationed at Fort Simcoe under Agent Wilbur. He was thus employed six years. Mrs. Hadley then sold her interest in the Ahtanum ranch and they removed to the reservation, where Mr. Hadley has since been engaged in farming and stock raising.

As Nathan Olney was one of the best known of Yakima's pioneers, a brief review of his life may not be out of place here. He was born in 1825, a native of Illinois, and crossed the Plains in that pathfinding immigration train which wended its uncertain way to the distant Columbia river settlement in the year 1843. After a varied experience in operating a ferry boat across the Shoultz river and in the mines of California, he returned to The Dalles, where he married Jennette, a Wasco Indian, having in the meantime lost his first wife. At The Dalles he conducted a store for several years. At the time of the terrible Salt Lake massacre, Mr. Olney raised a company of volunteers and as its captain was engaged for eight months on that expedition. Subsequently he served as a government scout several years. After a year in the Hawaiian Islands, Mr. Olney was appointed Indian agent of the Hot Springs reservation, resigned after six months' experience and served for a time as Indian agent at The Dalles. He served as sheriff of Wasco county and as mayor of The Dalles with credit. In 1864 he became the first permanent settler on the Ahtanum, where his death occurred in 1866. Besides his wife he left four children: Frank, Mrs. Melvina Lincoln, William and George, all born at The Dalles and all now living on the Yakima reservation. Mr. Olney was very favorably known throughout the Northwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Hadley have one child, Charles, born on the Ahtanum in 1879. Few men have had fuller experiences or more interesting ones than has Mr. Hadley, and a complete story of his life would occupy most of this volume.

JAY A. LYNCH, superintendent of the Fort Simcoe Indian school and special disbursing agent of the interior department on the Yakima reservation, is a man of high standing among his associates, a man of broad and successful experience in life and well qualified to administer the affairs connected with the maintenance of the reservation. With the exception of four years, Mr. Lynch has had charge of the Yakimas since the spring of 1891, and it is a testimonial to his ability and integrity—this long service under the critical scrutiny of the public's eyes during a period when the Indian is passing through a transitional stage and reservations are unpopular.

Mr. Lynch is a native of Coshocton county, Ohio, born in 1850 to the marriage of James and Sarah (Platt) Lynch, of Irish and Scotch descent, respectively. James Lynch was born in Ireland, and came to Ohio with his parents when a young man. There he first tilled the soil for a living; then engaged in building railroads in the middle west. He went to Wisconsin in an early day and there secured the contract for building the first railroad constructed in that state. Subsequently he retired from this business and, removing to Minnesota in 1864, lived on his farm there until his death in 1873. Sarah Platt was born in Newark, New Jersey, going to Ohio with her parents when a girl and there marrying Mr. Lynch. The subject of this biography attended the district schools of Wisconsin and Minnesota, remaining on the farm until he was twenty-two years of age. His first independent work was in Cottonwood county, Minnesota, where he entered the master industry of his state—lumbering. For three years he was engaged in this occupation and in selling farm machinery. In 1876 he sought a newer field of labor in the far west, coming to Dayton, Washington Territory. Here his first work was that of a clerk in a general store for two years. Then he purchased a sawmill in Garfield county, making his headquarters at Pomeroy. After ten years of profitable endeavor in this field, he sold the business and a year later moved to Dayton. In the spring of 1890 he was appointed special agent of recorded indebtedness in this state for the census bureau, serving until the following March, when President Harrison appointed him Indian agent of the Yakima reservation. Immediately he took up his new duties with energy and success, but was handicapped in maturing his plans by the change of administration at Washington, in 1893, President Cleveland relieving him and appointing in his stead Judge Erwin. Mr. Lynch returned to Dayton and during the ensuing four years dealt in real estate and grain. However, the installation of President McKinley recalled Mr. Lynch from private life and again placed him in charge of the government's wards in Yakima county. He continued to serve as agent until that office was abolished in July, 1902, when Mr. Lynch was appointed to his present position, which in reality still leaves him in full charge of the Yakima work.

At Dayton, in 1889, Mr. Lynch was united in marriage to Mrs. F. E. Spaulding. She is the daughter of Allen D. and Laura (Wood) Scott, born in Vermont and New York respectively. The father removed to Iowa when a young man and died there in 1857. He was of Holland Dutch descent. Their marriage took place at Malone, New York. Mrs. Lynch was born in 1848 in Clayton county, Iowa, but received her education in Minnesota, going there with her mother when ten years old. At the age of seventeen Miss Scott was married to J. Q. Spaulding, who, after a residence in St. Paul, in 1878, came to Pendleton, Oregon. In Oregon he traveled for a commercial house. While traveling on the stage between Pomeroy, his home, and Lewiston, in 1887, the stage was overturned, mortally injuring Mr. Spaulding, his death occurring the day following. Mr. Lynch is affiliated with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and Elks and is a member of the Episcopal church; Mrs. Lynch belongs to the Rebekah lodge at Dayton. She is universally credited with having the finest and largest collection of Indian curios and baskets in Washington and one of the best in the Northwest. The collection is well worth a special visit to Fort Simcoe. Mr. Lynch has always taken a deep and active interest in public affairs, and besides being honored with the positions of trust before mentioned, he served on the first council elected in Pomeroy. He has attended every Republican state convention held in Washington and is recognized as an influential party man. This volume would indeed be incomplete without an account of the life of Superintendent Lynch and his estimable wife, who have for so many years been prominently identified with the political, business and social life of the Yakima country.

WILLIAM L. SHEARER, for the past eight years agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and postmaster, at Toppenish, Washington, is a native of Monroe county, Missouri, where he was born October 31, 1862. He is the son of James M. and Hester (Kennett) Shearer, the father a native of Missouri and the mother of Kentucky. James M. Shearer followed farming and railroading in Missouri; he was of pioneer Kentucky ancestry, his father coming from Kentucky to Missouri in early days and his grandfather being a merchant prince and land owner in the Blue Grass state. The Kennetts, the mother's family, were also among the earliest pioneers of Kentucky, whose conquest of its primeval forests and savage natives forms a most interesting chapter of United States history. William L. Shearer spent the years of his youth and early manhood in Missouri. As a boy he worked with his father on the farm and attended school, his education being completed in Savannah, Missouri. At the age of fourteen, in 1876, his father having met with financial reverses, he entered the offices of the Burlington railroad as messenger boy, soon learned telegraphy, and afterward became their agent, serving them for several years in this capacity at Savannah and King City, Missouri, and at Davis City, Iowa. After three years as agent at Davis City, in September, 1890, he resigned his position and came to Spokane, Washington, and, shortly after his arrival, accepted the position of agent for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Marshall Junction, remaining there for seven years. In 1896, at his own request, he was transferred to Toppenish, where he has since remained as agent for the company. On coming here he was also appointed postmaster. In addition to discharging his duties faithfully in his official capacities, he engages in farming lands leased from the Indians. He has also invested extensively in valley lands outside of the reservation, and now owns a half interest in two thousand five hundred acres above the canal in the Sunnyside district, which is yearly increasing in value. While having extensive private interests to look after, he has always found time to devote to the general advancement of the town and to any measures having in view the improvement of general conditions. Through his efforts Toppenish has one of the best public schools in the county and indeed, for a town with its population, one of the best in central Washington. In view of the fact that a great deal of preliminary work has to be done in order to secure the permit for its establishment, too much credit can not be given the prime movers in the undertaking. In his efforts to advance the edu-catational facilities of the town he has been ably assisted by William McAuliff, E. Lawrence and N. H. Lillie. The school has been equipped with a library, maps and all the apparatus necessary in the advanced methods of instruction. Mr. Shearer has been a school director since its establishment.

January 1, 1890, Mr. Shearer was married in Missouri, to Miss Emma Hoffman, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of Robert T. Hoffman, a pioneer of northern Missouri. Mrs. Shearer's mother was a descendant of the distinguished Burr family, Pennsylvania Quakers. To Mr. and Mrs. Shearer have been born three children: Paul H., eleven years old; Preston, eight years old, and Robert F., six years old. Mr. Shearer's fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Modern Woodmen. In the past he has been a Democrat, having supported ex-President Cleveland in his campaigns, but is now a staunch friend of President Roosevelt. He is a man of exceptional business ability, of generous impulses, and is popular with all classes. Fair and honorable in all his dealings with others, of strictest integrity, progressive and public spirited, he has won and retains the confidence and esteem of his fellow men.

PETER QUEEN, a leaser on the Yakima Indian reservation, resides one and one-half miles northwest of Toppenish. He is a native of Scotland, born in 1867. His father, James Queen, a native of Scotland, was born in 1809 and died in 1897. His mother, Ann (McMarkin) Queen, was born in Hamilton, Scotland, 1827, and died in 1891, at the age of sixty-four. The son, Peter Queen, spent his early life in his native country, working with his father on the farm and attending school. At the age of eighteen he left the paternal roof and engaged in various occupations for his own support. He had a number of friends in America with whom he was in correspondence and through whom he learned of the many opportunities afforded here to the industrious and persevering, to gain a competence and an enviable station in life. He at length determined to try his fortune in the land of promise and, in 1891, took passage from Scotland to the United States, arriving at Seattle, Washington, February 27th of the same year. For seven years he rented land in the Sound country, near Auburn, and followed farming with varying success. In 1898 he went to Alaska, spending eighteen months in the Dawson region, with two partners, and meeting with fairly good success from a financial standpoint. Returning to Washington in 1899, he located on his present farm near Toppenish, leasing the land from the Indians. He has engaged chiefly in growing potatoes, of which he has raised four crops. With Joseph McCloud as a partner, he cultivates one hundred and sixty acres of land, having in 1903 planted one hundred and thirty-five acres to potatoes, a part yielding eleven tons per acre, and the whole tract averaging seven tons per acre. He also raises considerable grain, his crop of wheat and barley yielding in 1903 seventy-two and one-half bushels per acre. To the production of grain and potatoes he adds the breeding of Plymouth Rock chickens, with which he has been very successful. September 1, 1903, Mr. Queen was married to Miss Rose Devon, a native of Portland, Oregon, and the daughter of John and Ellen (Dealins) Devon. Mrs. Queen's parents died when she was an infant and she was raised by an older sister. Fraternally, Mr. Queen is connected with the Woodmen of the World and in politics he is a Republican. He has witnessed the growth of Toppenish from a village of one store, a hotel and a church to a populous town, and has seen the surrounding country developed with equal rapidity. He is a man of energy and enterprise, of sound principles and sterling manhood; is making a success of life in the true sense of the term, and commands the confidence and respect of all who know him.

FRANK A. HOLT, farmer and stockman residing at Toppenish, has been in the Northwest for more than half a century and in that time has witnessed nearly every phase of western life that can be imagined in his various occupations as prospector, miner, stage driver, stockman and farmer. Both his parents were pioneers, born and reared on the frontier, so it was only natural that the son inherited a love for the free, untrammelled life of the plains and mountains, and that mode of life he has followed since his arrival in this western country. Born in Knoxville, Tennessee, in the year 1845, he is the son of Thomas W. and Mary E. (Cardwell) Holt, themselves natives of the same state. His father immigrated to Kansas in the early part of the century and settled near Fort Scott, where he died in 1847, leaving two children, Samuel H. and Frank A. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Holt married John L. Kline and with him and her children started across the Plains to Oregon in 1853. Death intercepted her, however, for eighty miles south of Boise, Idaho, she was mortally stricken with disease and there buried on the sage-brush plains. Frank lived with his step-father until sixteen years old, meanwhile attending school, and then went to California, where for two years he followed packing into the mines. In 1862 he returned to Oregon for the winter, and the next spring commenced riding the range in Walla Walla county, Washington. A year later he took charge of a stage line running out of Idaho City; he then visited Lewiston and Warren's mining camp, where he mined one season, and finally returned to Lewiston, his home for the using thirty years. For several years after his arrival in Lewiston, Mr. Holt operated in the mining camps of Pierce City, Elk City, Warren, Florence, Salmon river and the Clearwater river. He then entered the stock business, devoting his attention principally to horses, remaining in that business for a quarter of a century. In 1894 he was so strongly attracted by the Yakima country that he removed to Yakima county and settled at Toppenish, where he still lives, farming and raising stock. Mr. Holt's marriage took place in 1869 at Lewiston, his bride being Miss Emma Cox, daughter of William Cox. Her father was born in Kentucky, crossed the Plains in the early fifties, and died in Lewiston in 1899. He was one of the carpenters who erected the buildings at Fort Simcoe. Mrs. Holt was born in The Dalles, in 1855, July 4, was educated in Walla Walla, and married when only fourteen years old. She died at Toppenish in 1895, leaving the following children: Mrs. Laura Robbins, born April 4, 1870; Francis, May 29, 1873; Robert D., February 9, 1877, who is employed by the government in the Santa Fe Indian school, New Mexico; Thomas L., June 11, 1879; William H., August 30, 1881; Frederick C., December 27, 1883, and Mary B. Holt, April 2, 1888, Lewiston being the birthplace of all. March 22, 1899, Mr. Holt was married a second time, Annie J. Robbins becoming his wife. She is the daughter of Jesse and Angeline (Wright) Robbins, natives of Tennessee and Iowa, respectively, and both deceased. Mr. Holt is a member of the Methodist church. Politically, he is a Republican. His property interests consist of eighty acres of fine farming land at Toppenish, a band of forty horses and other stock. He is a prosperous ranchman and a citizen of substantial standing.

CHARLES H. NEWELL, stockman, owner of a large portion of the townsite of Goldendale and also of the Hotel Toppenish at Toppenish, is one of the leading citizens of central Washington and a man without whose biography this history would be incomplete. A native of the Buckeye state, where he was born in 1847, he is one of the children of Samuel and Mary (Flack) Newell, also natives of Ohio. The father was a blacksmith by trade. While a small boy, Charles lost his father, thus depriving him of the care and guidance that none can give so well. However, his mother married again and with her family removed to Kansas in 1859, where they lived four years. Then they immigrated to Colorado, where they spent a year in Denver and the mines, and in 1864 continued their western journey to Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley. There the son Charles finished his education. At sixteen years of age, he commenced farming on shares; two years later he rented a farm and resided thereon until 1870, when he bought a band of cattle in Oregon and the following spring brought them to the Klickitat county range. He kept the band until the summer of 1872. Then he returned to Oregon and farmed until 1877, still owning an interest in stock in Klickitat county, to which place he removed his family at this time and filed on a homestead ten miles from Goldendale, where he lived until 1891. In 1879 he formed a partnership with W. D. Hoxter for the purpose of dealing in horses and land, a partnership which lasted for many years, four years of which time, from 1879 to 1883, they sold stock in Oregon. Among their largest shipments were those of 1884, when seven hundred horses were driven across the Plains to Nebraska, where they were shipped to Ohio; of 1885, when four hundred and seventeen head of horses were shipped from Prosser to the New York market; and of 1886, when shipments were made to New York and two carloads sent as far east as Rhode Island. They shipped east until 1888, when they began sending their horses to the Sound and California. In 1892 they shipped extensively to Minnesota. Mr. Newell has made himself very widely known on account of his connection with the horse industry and is still an extensive operator in this line, shipping horses all over the United States. In 1871 Mr. Newell's step-father filed on a portion of the townsite of Goldendale and there in 1897 his aged mother passed into the world beyond. Mr. Newell has one brother, Robert J., who lives in Klickitat county, and one sister, Mrs. Olive Hendricks, also a resident of Klickitat county. The year 1876 witnessed Mr. Newell's marriage in Oregon to Miss Mary Wren, daughter of Michael and Christena (Monroe) Wren, natives of Canada. Michael Wren was a pioneer of the Northwest, entering the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company when that corporation practically owned this section of the United States. The Monroes were also employees of this great company. Mrs. Newell was born in Washington county, Oregon, 1862, and there attended school until she was seventeen years old, when her marriage took place. Mr. and Mrs. Newell have only one child, Charles H., Junior, born at Goldendale, December 9, 1900. Mrs. Newell is a member of the Presbyterian communion and also a member of the Rebekahs, her husband being an Odd Fellow; he also belongs to the United Artisans. Mr. Newell has prospered unusually in a worldly way, owning the largest individual interest held in the townsite of Goldendale, several additions being in his name, besides which he has a quarter section adjoining Goldendale, one hundred cattle and a band of six hundred horses. He is also interested deeply in mining, possessing considerable stock. Few men in central Washington have more ably grasped the opportunities presented by that thriving section of the state than has Mr. Newell, and as a pioneer, keen business man and a man of sterling character he is esteemed and respected.

WILLIAM McAULIFF, residing a mile southeast of Toppenish, is one of Yakima county's leading farmers and stockmen and is a man of stability and influence in his community. His whole life, from his birth at The Dalles in 1859 to the present writing, has been spent in the Northwest and in this section of the United States his experience has been a varied as well as a successful one. Of English and Irish extraction, he is the son of James and Isabella (Kincaid) McAuliff, the mother being of Irish birth. The paternal ancestry of Mr. McAuliff is quite interesting. James was born on the island of Malta, in European waters, in the year 1828, his father being a lieutenant in the British army at that time and stationed there. The son James immigrated to the United States in 1842 and three years later enlisted in Company D, Second United States infantry, at Buffalo, New York. He served all through the Mexican war, in which he was twice wounded, and at its close was transferred to the Fourth infantry. In this regiment he served two years, re-enlisted in 1850, and in 1852 went to California with his company. Subsequently he was mustered out at The Dalles, his rank then being first duty sergeant. In 1855, under a proclamation of the governor of Oregon, he raised a company of volunteers and as its captain participated in the famous Walla Walla campaign of that year, the Indian tribes of eastern Washington and Oregon being the objects of chastisement. Captain McAuliff's company was in the four days' fight just below the Whitman mission, and for gallantry both captain and company were commended officially by the colonel commanding and the governors. This brave old veteran, the father of William, is peacefully passing the remainder of his life in the city of Walla Walla. William was educated in Walla Walla and there learned telegraphy when a young man. When only seventeen years old the ambitious Irish lad was placed in full charge of an office and for the next nine years of his life continued to follow the occupation of a telegrapher. In 1881 he joined the Northern Pacific forces in Montana in the capacity of chief packer for surveying parties and as such spent sixteen months in that mountainous region. He then brought the pack-trains to the Yakima valley, where he wintered in 1881-2, remaining with the surveying parties until June, 1882, when for a short time he became wagon master for the same corporation. Subsequently he shipped the outfit to Seattle, went to Walla Walla on a visit and in 1883 returned to Yakima county and engaged in raising stock. For twelve years he assiduously devoted himself to that industry, after which he gradually paid more and more attention to farming, and today owns one of the finest farms in the county.

In 1883 Mr. McAuliff was married to Mary Morencie, whose father was of French extraction and whose mother was a native of the Northwest. Mrs. McAuliff was born at The Dalles in 1866, was educated in Olympia and was married at the age of seventeen to Mr. McAuliff. To this union have been born the following children: Mrs. Meda Siverly, October 1, 1884; Francis, July 24, 1887; George, May 14, 1890; Thomas, February 26, 1892; Patrick V., July 24, 1896; and Mary L., June 27, 1901. Mr. McAuliff has one sister, Mrs. Annie Clowe, living in Walla Walla; and two brothers, Thomas, living in Portland, and Frank, living on the Yakima reservation. Both Mr. and Mrs. McAuliff are members of the Catholic church. Politically, he is a Democrat, though of liberal views. That Mr. McAuliff is a friend of educational interests and counted by his neighbors as an able friend, is shown by the fact that for six years he has held the position of school director in his district. His fine ranch of four hundred and eighty acres of improved land, sixty head of cattle and fifty horses constitute his property holdings.

BERT E. PARTON, one of the leading stockmen of Yakima county, has been closely identified with the stock interests of that section since 1872, when, as a mere lad of ten years, he came to the Yakima river with his uncle. As a youth, Mr. Parton witnessed the utilization of the vast central Washington range by tens of thousands of cattle and horses and, as a man, he has seen the exhaustion of most of this great pasture, the beginnings of its reclamation and the transformation of much of it into emerald fields of alfalfa and sightly orchards. In the land where thirty years of his life have been spent, he has made a happy home and acquired both affluence and influence, as the result of energy and ability, combined with other commendable qualities of character.

Mr. Parton was born January 6, 1862, at Albany, Oregon, his parents being Frank and Lucy (Morgan) Parton, natives of England and Iowa, respectively, the mother of Welsh descent. In early manhood, the father crossed the seas, coming to California in its "golden days," where he was married and lived for some time. Thence he removed to Oregon, where he successfully followed his profession, that of a millwright, many years, or until his death at Waitsburg, Washington, in 1895. Bert received his education in the common and high schools of Albany, short intermissions occurring between his school attendance. As before stated, in 1872 he first came to Washington, where he remained two years with his uncle. Then followed a short attendance at school, two years more on the Yakima, this time with J. B. Huntington, an influential stockman, another short period at school, another stay in Yakima, another winter in school, and, in 1880, permanent settlement in Washington, at which time he entered the service of Snipes & Allen. For five years he did faithful work for this great firm. Then he began business for himself and since 1885 has been raising stock and farming in and around Toppenish, his home now being at No. 12 North Third street, North Yakima.

Mr. Parton was married in North Yakima, March 17, 1885, the bride being Miss Sarah, daughter of Joseph and Mary Robbins, pioneers of Oregon and the Cowiche valley, Yakima county. The daughter, Sarah, was born in Cascade, Oregon, in 1862, educated in the common schools of her native state and was married at the age of twenty-two. She has three brothers: Thomas, living at Toppenish; Isaac, at Seattle; and Oscar, whose home is at Toppenish also. Mr. Parton was two sisters: Mrs. Carrie Staten, living in Portland, and Mrs. Germina Wing, living in Spokane; also one brother, William, who lives at Toppenish. Three children bless the Parton home: Bert, born December 27, 1888; Corbie, born January 22, 1892; and Ruth, November 9, 1894; all of whom may claim Yakima county as their birthplace. Mr. and Mrs. Parton are members of the Christian church, in which they are active workers. Politically, Mr. Parton is a steadfast Republican, as well as an energetic one. While the family home is in the city of North Yakima, Mr. Parton is compelled to be at Toppenish much of his time in order to give personal attention to his three hundred and forty-acre ranch at that point. More than two-thirds of this tract is under cultivation, from which it may be seen that it is no light task to manage this branch of his interests. His stock interests are large, more than one thousand horses and one hundred cattle belonging to him. As a pioneer, the usual number of obstacles and losses have fallen in his pathway, but those very obstructions have brought out the qualities which, not only in Mr. Parton's case, but in the lives of many other pioneers, have won for them the success they deserve.

ARCHIE W. McDONALD. The man whose name commences this biographical sketch is president of the Washington Nursery Company with headquarters at Toppenish, and one of Yakima county's most enterprising young business men. Like thousands of other successful men living in the United States, he was born and reared in Canada, but came to this country to make his permanent home. Ontario is his birthplace and the year of his birth was 1866. Both parents, Duncan and Agnes (McIntire), were natives of Scotland, immigrating to Canada in 1858, and there making their home until death. The father's demise occurred in 1870. After receiving a good public school education in Canada, the subject of this sketch, at the age of eighteen, followed farming for a time; then traveled four years for a Canadian nursery company, gaining his first insight into that work. In 1894 he crossed the border and took up his abode in the Willamette valley, Oregon. In that region he lived eight years, traveling for the Oregon Nursery Company as field manager of that business. So successful was he in this line of work that he determined to enter the nursery business on his own account, and with this idea organized, in March, 1903, the company of which he is president and Leon Girod secretary and treasurer. The company leased three hundred and fifty acres near the town and opened an office in Toppenish. Fifty acres of the land are in nursery stock, seventy-five are ready for use in the spring of 1904, one hundred and twenty-five acres are in alfalfa, and the balance is in grain, hay or reserve tracts. All the rye-grass, hay and grain used on the tract are grown by the company. Most flattering prospects are before this young commercial enterprise, and it is receiving hearty support from all who examine into its methods.

Mr. McDonald was married in September, 1900, in Oregon, to Miss Bessie Settlementire, of Tangent. She is a native of that state. Mr. McDonald is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Foresters, and is identified with the Republican party. Both himself and wife are esteemed personally for their many genial, sterling qualities, and Mr. McDonald is respected as a capable, aggressive business man.

LEON GIROD, of the Washington Nursery Company, Toppenish, of which he is the secretary and treasurer, is a native son of Switzerland, born at St. Imier, March 13, 1867; but has lived the major portion of his life in America and is counted as a loyal citizen of his adopted country and a capable, progressive young business man. His father, Gustave A., was born in Switzerland, February 23, 1830, and in early life followed the profession of teaching; the mother, Sophia A. (Balmer) Girod, was born in Switzerland, February 10, 1834. In 1882 they came to the United States with their family, and settled first in Wayne county, Ohio. Four years later the family removed to Illinois, lived there five years, and removed thence to Brooks, Oregon, where Mr. Girod is at present farming. Of the sixteen children born to this union, Leon Girod is the ninth. He received an education in French and German in Europe, besides a public school education. Upon the family's arrival in the United States, he commenced farming in Ohio. Subsequently he farmed in western Kansas, Illinois, Ohio, Colorado and Oregon, living near Brooks, Oregon, until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. At the call to arms he left his farm and immediately enlisted in Company K, Second Oregon volunteers, April 23, 1898, participating in the Philippine campaign. He was at Cavite, in the battle of Manila, August 13, 1898, the Filipino repulse before Manila in February, 1899, and in many other important battles and skirmishes, returning finally with his regiment in July, 1899. After being mustered out of the service, in which he fought for the honor and preservation of his country, he returned to the plow. A year later he accepted a position as traveling salesman for the Oregon Nursery Company, and in this position visited California, Mexico, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and British Columbia. This was not his first experience in this business, as he had devoted considerable time to it while farming. In March, 1903, he became one of the organizers of the Washington Nursery Company, one of Yakima county's newest but most thrifty enterprises, which is growing with astonishing rapidity. The company has three hundred and fifty acres of land near Toppenish, most of which is in cultivation and one hundred and twenty-five of which are set out with young nursery stock.

Mr. Girod and Miss Sadie Wenger were united in the holy union of matrimony January 12, 1893, but upon July 24, 1897, the happiness of their home was rudely shattered by a visit of the grim reaper, who took the faithful, loving wife and mother from her earthly abode and carried her spirit into the home beyond. Mrs. Girod was a native of Monroe, Wisconsin, where she was born November 24, 1871. One daughter, Leona, born at Salem, June 21, 1895, was the fruit of this union. Mr. Girod is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and in political matters is actively identified with the Republican party. As a young man of true worth and ability, and appreciative of the grand opportunities with which he is surrounded, success along all lines lies in his path.

EDWARD G. FLEMING, one of the white leasers operating near Toppenish, is also holding a responsible position in the sales department of the Toppenish Trading Company, and is one of the energetic residents of the Toppenish section. He traces his ancestry back to residents of Scotland and northern Ireland, and dominant in his nature are those characteristics for which the Scotchman is especially noted. Mr. Fleming was born in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, July, 1863, to the union of James T. and Adeline (Lawton) Fleming, natives of the same state. The father, a retired merchant and extensive land owner, is living in Linn county, Missouri, whence he came in 1866, at the advanced age of sixty-nine years. The mother died in 1894 at the age of fifty-six. The son Edward came to Missouri with his parents at the age of three, and during his youth attended the public schools and at odd times worked in his father's store. When only fourteen years old he commenced working for himself, laboring for wages during the summer and continuing his school work in the winter. In 1884 he left Missouri, going to southern California, where he entered the real estate business at San Diego. During the next five years he was unusually successful, but reverses finally overtook him and induced him to seek his fortune in Seattle. There he entered the confectionery and stationery business, but a year later the building and stock were destroyed by fire. After a short period spent in conducting a restaurant, Mr. Fleming removed to Ellensburg in 1891, entering the store of R. B. Wilson in that city, with whom he remained eight years. While engaged in the mercantile business he also owned and operated a stock ranch. In 1899 he sold his Kittitas property and came to Toppenish. Here his first work was as bookkeeper for the Toppenish Trading Company, but two years of this kind of employment so injured his health that he leased a tract of land and commenced raising hay, grain and stock. At present he controls five hundred acres two miles north of Toppenish, and is counted as one of the most successful leasers on the reservation.

Mr. Fleming was married in 1887 to Miss Maggie Lindsey, of Missouri, in which state she was born in 1868 to Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lindsey. Mrs. Lindsey's maiden name was Kelly. Mr. Lindsey, who is a veteran of the Civil war, is a hardware merchant of Pike county, Illinois. Two children brighten the Fleming home: Mae, born June 26, 1890, and Paul, born September 6, 1897. Mr. Fleming is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Odd Fellows; his wife is a member of the Women of Woodcraft. As an energetic Republican he attends all important caucuses and conventions and is ever loyal to party principles. He also takes an active interest in educational matters, and in all other matters pertaining to the upbuilding of the community.

JOSEPH McLEOD. One of the most extensive farmers on the Yakima reservation, as also one of the most successful and most highly esteemed, is the subject of this biography. He is one of the sturdy, substantial citizens whom Nova Scotia has produced, reared to manhood and then generously contributed to swell the citizenship of the great American republic. His birthday was July 12, 1851, and his parents were George and Nancy (Monroe) McLeod, both natives of the Scottish highlands, who came to Nova Scotia shortly after being united in marriage and when still in the spring-time of life. Both died in 1878, their deaths occurring about the same time. Until twenty years old Joseph lived upon his father's farm, meanwhile attending school; but at that age he left the parental roof and engaged in logging in Clearfield county, Pennsylvania. Then he worked on the boundary survey between the United States and British Columbia for one year, 1872, the company's headquarters being Fort Garry on the Red River of the North. Following this experience, he went to California, where he was engaged a year in lumbering in the redwood forests of Mendocino county. In 1874 he came north to Puget Sound, taking a ranch claim in Whatcom county. A six years' residence on the western slope was followed by his removal to the Kittitas valley in 1880. There he accumulated a holding of five hundred and sixty acres of land and for fourteen years was successfully occupied with general farming, and stock raising. Then he went into the newly opened Sunnyside district and farmed two years. A year of mining in British Columbia was succeeded by Mr. McLeod's decision to settle on the reservation near Toppenish. His lease was one of the first consummated and since its date hundreds of others have been granted by the Indians. At first he raised only grain, but experiments demonstrating the adaptability of the soil and climate to the production of alfalfa, fruit, etc., as in the Yakima valley, Mr. McLeod has gradually seeded his land to alfalfa, and many different varieties of products, principally hay, grain and potatoes. His farm contains five hundred and sixty acres and last season he raised one thousand five hundred and twenty-five tons of hay, two thousand five hundred and twenty six sacks of oats, barley, etc., and three hundred tons of potatoes. In the haying season he employed twenty-four men, eleven on the baler and fourteen on a steam thresher. His expenses in 1903 lacked only a few dollars of being ten thousand dollars, from which an excellent idea of the leasing interests may be obtained. Mr. McLeod is convinced that the opportunities presented by Yakima county are really unsurpassed in the United States and his own case is an excellent illustration of what may be accomplished by an energetic, able man. Mr. McLeod has four brothers and sisters: Mrs. Margaret Whittier, living in Whatcom county; Alexander, also in Whatcom county; William, living in Kittitas, and Miss Anna McLeod, living in Seattle. In politics, as in most public questions, Mr. McLeod is independent, though actively interested. He is now one of the leading agriculturists of Yakima county and is a man of integrity and substantial abilities and character.

ERVIN L. CHAMBERLAIN, residing four miles west of Toppenish, is a prosperous young ranchman most of whose life has been spent in the Yakima and Klickitat regions. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, March 15, 1872, his parents being James L. and Christiana (Kincaid) Chamberlain, of English and German descent, respectively. James L. Chamberlain was born in 1827 and in 1852 crossed the Plains from Missouri to Oregon, taking a donation claim in the Willamette valley. There he lived until 1877, when he removed to Klickitat county; in 1883 he came to North Yakima, where he and his faithful pioneer wife, who bravely crossed the Plains with him, are still living. At the tender age of thirteen Ervin received his formal initiation into the master industry of the region—cattle raising—by entering the employ of Ben Snipes as a range rider. The next few years he rode for Snipes, Baxter and other stockmen all through northern Oregon and southern Washington. In 1885, he joined his father, grandfather and brothers at North Yakima in a stock raising enterprise, in which they were quite successful. Ervin bought land in the Naches valley and until 1900 continued to range stock and farm. In 1900 he removed to North Yakima from his home in the Naches and lived there until January 1, 1903, on which date he took possession of the hundred-acre tract of leased land on which he is at present residing.

November 15, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain was united in marriage to Miss Rosa M. Parker, a native of Kansas, where she was born in 1880 to Riley and Eliza J. Parker. Her parents reside in Yakima county now. Mr. Chamberlain has six brothers and sisters: Paul P. and Mrs. Jane Hamilton, living in Klickitat county; Joseph F., James B. and Mrs. Emma White, residents of Yakima county; and Mrs. Mary J. Grant, living in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain have two children, Viola, born February, 1899, and Lloyd L., born September 25, 1902. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen and Woodmen of the World, and is a Democrat in politics, attending all conventions and caucuses of his party in his community. At present Mr. Chamberlain is devoting his entire attention to farming, having disposed of his stock interests. He is an energetic, successful ranchman who has a host of friends.

WILLIAM E. LAWRENCE, a resident of Toppenish, is chief clerk in the large establishment of the Toppenish Trading Company at that point, and one of the town's most progressive citizens. Logan county, Illinois, is his birthplace and September 17, 1863, was the date of his birth. His parents, James and Ann K. (Griffith) Lawrence, were born in Ohio in February, 1825, and September 15, 1830, respectively. The father was a pioneer of central Illinois, and the paternal ancestors were pioneers of Virginia. The Lawrences served in the Revolutionary war and three brothers of James were in the Civil war. He died in 1870. Mrs. Lawrence is living in Champaign, Illinois. Her ancestors, of German and Scotch extraction, were pioneer patriots of America, and three of her brothers served their country in 1861-5. William E. spent his early years upon the farm and attending school, beginning to care for himself at a very young age. He learned the trade of a miller and from the age of nineteen to twenty-two worked at that occupation, near Detroit, Michigan. Subsequently he returned to Illinois and there, by working during the day and studying at night, in four years secured enough education to pass a teacher's examination. Having obtained his certificate, he accepted a position and during the next four years, or until 1889, taught school in his native state. In that year he joined his brother, J. G. Lawrence, principal of the North Yakima schools, working for Hyman Harris three years and a half. Following this, he was elected secretary and superintendent of the Moxee Company, remaining with that corporation about six years. In 1898 Mr. Lawrence came to Toppenish, and leasing land near there, engaged in farming, utilizing one hundred and forty acres. His principal crops were grain and onions, in the raising of which he was quite successful. However, last year Mr. Lawrence accepted the present responsible position he holds with the Toppenish Trading Company, with whom he has since continued.

Mr. Lawrence was united in marriage in 1892 in Illinois to Miss Pauline W. Kreuger. She is the daughter of Charles and Mary (Schlorf) Kreuger, natives of Germany. Mr. Kreuger served throughout the Civil war and was a successful merchant until his death in 1900; the mother is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have one child, Lowell W., born July 14, 1893. Mr. Lawrence has the following brothers and sisters: Joseph G., John C., Rollin H., Harold, Warren H. and Lulu C. Lowry. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. In political matters he takes his stand with the Republican party. Together with W. L. Shearer, W. J. McAuliff and N. H. Leslie, Mr. Lawrence was prominently identified with the opening of a public school at Toppenish, despite the great obstacles encountered. He is an able business man, popular and esteemed by all who know him.

FRANK H. MILLICAN, manager of the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber Company's business at Toppenish, is a native of Washington, born in Walla Walla, August 24, 1872. As a native of the state and a son of pioneer parents, he is doubly entitled to a place of honor in a work of this character, and we are pleased to enroll his name with those who have been active factors in the development of the great Northwest. He is the son of John M. and Mary (Hayward) Millican, born Oregonians. John M. Millican was a stockman, born in LaFayette, Yamhill county, Oregon, into which state his father had immigrated from Ireland in the forties. He was a veteran of the early Oregon Indian wars. The mother of the subject of this biography was born in The Dalles, Oregon, and now lives in Walla Walla. She is the daughter of Benjamin Burnett Hayward, a pioneer of Wisconsin, who crossed the Plains with his wife in 1852, settling in The Dalles, where he operated a hotel and stage line. In 1862 he moved to Walla Walla, Washington, remaining in his old business, however. He was a conductor on the first railroad that was built in Washington. The road was built by Dr. Dorsey S. Baker and extended from Walla Walla to Wallula. The first rails used on this road were of wood, strapped on the top with iron. Mr. Hayward died in Walla Walla, October 18, 1902. Frank H. Millican spent his early life in and about Walla Walla, working on the farm and attending school, following his common school course with one term in Whitman college. At the age of sixteen he left the paternal roof and sought to gain a livelihood by his own efforts, securing employment at first as driver of a street car. He then went to Dayton, Washington, and afterwards spent four years in Oregon and California, a portion of the time as a stage driver, eventually, however, returning to Walla Walla, and, in the fall of 1897, coming to Toppenish. April 29, 1898, he enlisted in Company E, First Washington volunteers, for service in the Spanish-American war, going with the company first to Tacoma and afterwards to San Francisco, where five months were spent in camp. October 25, 1898, the company set sail for Manila, reaching its destination in November, but not landing until December. Mr. Millican was in the battle of Manila, February 4 and 5, 1899, and in the first and second battles of Pateros; he was on the firing line from the first to the last of the nine months spent on the island. He returned to San Francisco in October, 1899, and, after a visit with friends and relatives in Walla Walla, spent some time in North Yakima, one winter in Tacoma, and in 1902 came to Toppenish as bookkeeper for the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber Company. In the month of January, 1903, he was promoted to the position of manager, in which capacity he is still acting. In politics, Mr. Millican is a staunch supporter of President Roosevelt. He is a man of exceptional business qualifications and has proven an efficient manager of his company's affairs. He is energetic and progressive in his ideas, a man of correct principles and strictest integrity, of influence in local affairs and, as a man and a citizen, commands the esteem and respect of all with whom he comes in contact.

ANDREW H. RANDLER, a leaser of lands on the Yakima Indian reservation, living one-fourth of a mile south of Toppenish, has been a resident of Yakima county for six years and has been exceptionally successful in the production of the cereals. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Lancaster county, November, 1866. He is the son of Michael and Fannie (Heslet) Randler, the father a native of Germany and the mother of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Michael Randler came to the United States when a young man; was a soldier in the Civil war, during which he was captured and confined for seventeen months in the noted Andersonville prison; he died in Pennsylvania in 1901. His wife, the mother of Andrew Randler, still lives. The son Andrew spent the years of his youth in his native state, working on the farm with his father until nineteen, when he was married and began farming for himself. In addition to the production of cereal crops he dealt extensively in cattle, buying and feeding on the farm for the city markets, and finding it a very profitable business. After following this business successfully for over twelve years, he decided on a change of location, being possessed with a desire to test the advantages of the Northwest. Accordingly, in 1898, he sold out his Pennsylvania interests and came to Washington, stopping first in New Whatcom (now Bellingham). Not being able to locate there to good advantage, he remained but a few months, coming to Yakima county in the fall of the same year and taking charge of a dairy ranch, which he conducted successfully for about four years. In 1902 he located on the reservation and began farming. He purchased a relinquishment to a lease on a large ranch from which, in 1903, he harvested 30,000 bushels of oats, barley and wheat, some of the land sown to oats yielding 110 bushels per acre. He also operates a steam thresher and a hay press. Mr. Randler is one of a family of nine children. The names of his brothers and sisters follow: Alice, Elizabeth, Mary, Kate, Harry, William, Eli and Michael. March 21, 1885, Mr. Randler was married to Miss Alice Young, a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Myers) Young, also natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Randler have five children, as follows: Fannie, Howard, Alice, Leona and Mable. Mr. Randler's fraternal connections are with the Woodmen of the World, and in political matters he votes with the Republican party. He believes the Yakima valley to be an ideal country in which men of energy can make desirable and permanent homes. He is himself a man of energy and good business ability, of sound principles and strict integrity; is meeting with success and enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

WILLIAM HARRISON MARBLE. One of the successful fruit and hop growers of Yakima county, is William H. Marble, whose farm is located nine miles northwest of Toppenish, on rural free delivery route No. 1. Subject of sketch was born in Kennebec county, Maine, April 5, 1837. His early education was obtained in the common schools of his native state. This was supplemented by a course in the Hampden Academy, from which he was graduated in 1859, a classmate of former Vice-President Hamlin's son. At the age of twenty-three he engaged in the lumber business and later tried farming for a time. He then moved to Illinois and for eighteen months followed the grocery business; selling out at the end of this time and going to Nebraska, where he farmed for twenty years, with the exception of two years during which the hardware and implement trade claimed his attention. In all these ventures he met with good success. Leaving Nebraska, he went to northwestern Kansas and invested heavily in land, this investment proving unfortunate, eventually costing him all the accumulations of former years of toil. In 1889 he came to Washington, remaining here for two years. Satisfying himself that the country had a prosperous future before it, he went back to Kansas, straightened out his affairs there and prepared to return to this state for permanent settlement. He again reached Washington in 1894, landing in Yakima county without a dollar of capital. He at once leased the farm on which he now resides, one of the first to be improved in Parker Bottom, and, from the proceeds of three years' crops, was enabled to purchase and pay for the farm which he now owns. Mr. Marble was in Illinois when the Civil war broke out and in 1862 organized a company of which he was commissioned captain. They went into service as Company I, Eighty-fifth Illinois volunteers. At the expiration of one year affairs at home compelled Captain Marble to resign his commission and leave the company, which was afterwards commanded by Captain Collins. During his service Captain Marble participated in the battles of Perryville, Kentucky, and Stone River, Tennessee. During his residence in Nebraska, Mr. Marble served one term in the state legislature, elected by the Democratic party in 1885. At this session he succeeded in getting an important transportation bill advanced from the bottom to the top of the calendar and passed; this bill required railroads to receive freight in car load lots from other roads at junction points, and proved of great advantage to his constituents. William H. Marble is the son of Hiram and Rosanna (Smith) Marble, the father a native of New Hampshire and the mother of Maine. He was married in Illinois, August 26, 1860, to Miss Sarah J. Council, daughter of Alfred F. and Hannah C. (Michen) Council, Southern people who were wealthy planters and slaveholders in ante-bellum days. Mr. Marble was second in a family of eight children, whose names follow: Andrew, a North Dakota druggist; Allen, farming in Parker Bottom; Sarah (Marble) Richardson, deceased; John, deceased; Charles E., a police officer in Tacoma; Wallace, deceased, and Thursa (Marble) Darr, whose husband is a carpenter in Tacoma. To Mr. and Mrs. Marble have been born three daughters and four sons, whose names and dates and places of birth follow: Bell D., Illinois, March 26, 1862, deceased; Hiram F., Illinois, February 13, 1864, a civil engineer living in North Yakima; Henry A., Illinois, May 24, 1866, civil engineer; Elsie M. (Marble) Wallace, Nebraska, October 2, 1868, living in Spokane; Jasper W., Nebraska, August 22, 1871, now in North Yakima; Harry E., Nebraska, March 9, 1874, editor and manager of the Melton Valley News, published at Twisk, Okanogan county, Washington, and Ruby R., Nebraska, November 15, 1878, and married March 14, 1904, to Herman A. D. Trauck, of the Hypotheke Bank, Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Marble are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Marble was one of the organizers of the Parker Presbyterian church in 1897. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias; is prominent in local affairs and a man of influence wherever he is known. Mr. and Mrs. Marble are held in high esteem by all with whom they are associated, in public or in the home life.

JAMES S. WILLIAMS is a successful farmer and fruit grower, residing fifteen miles northwest of Toppenish, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He was born in Missouri on December 9, 1857, the son of John B. and Nancy J. (Jennings) Williams. His father, now dead, was born in Missouri in 1828, and followed school teaching for thirty-five years. His mother, also dead, was a native of Virginia, born in 1832. Mr. Williams spent his youth in Missouri and, until nineteen years old, attended the common schools of that section, receiving a good education. At this age he began to do for himself and eventually became a locomotive engineer, his first work being on the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad. He afterwards farmed for a short time, but, in 1890, left Missouri for the west and came direct to the state of Washington. For a time he ran an engine for a lumber company, remaining with them for one year, then going to Sedro, Washington, where for several months he was similarly employed. In 1895 he again made a change of location, this time coming to Yakima county, where he was first employed in running an engine in a saw mill on the Wenas. Afterwards he engaged for a few years in farm work and then leased twenty acres of orchard near Zillah, receiving one-half the crop for his care of the place. The first year he sold three thousand two hundred dollars' worth of apples. The second year was a failure. The third year he sold six thousand dollars' worth of fruit. After the first year's crop he purchased twenty acres of land near Zillah, selling it a few months later for double the amount paid for it. In 1901 he bought his present place of one hundred and sixty acres, which he has greatly improved, making it a very valuable property, and on which there is a bearing orchard of ten acres. Mr. Williams has two brothers and one sister: George W., in Missouri; Frances (Williams) Smith, of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Vernon H., farming in Yakima county. Mr. Williams was married in Missouri in 1880, to Miss Alice Chambers, who was born in Addison county, Missouri, November 10, 1862, the daughter of Robert and Martha J. (Harris) Chambers. To Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been born three sons and two daughters as follows: Harry, February 10, 1885; Guy, October 30, 1887; Earl, September 5, 1888, Nebraska being their birthplace; Mabel, in Washington, November 15, 1890, and Nellie in Oregon, September 25, 1893. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Williams is a prominent Mason and an active Democrat. He is a man of energy and excellent business foresight, fair and honorable in his dealings with his fellows, and is held in high esteem by all with whom he comes in contact.

VERNON H. WILLIAMS, a farmer and stock raiser, whose home is six miles northwest of Toppenish, on rural free delivery route No. 1, has been a citizen of Washington since 1883, and of Yakima county since 1885. During his twenty years' residence in the state he has participated in its wonderful development and has become one of its substantial citizens. Mr. Williams is a native of Missouri, where he was born October 25, 1865. He is the son of John B. and Nancy J. (Jennings) Williams, his father a native of Missouri and his mother of Virginia; both parents are dead. Mr. Williams spent his youth in Missouri, receiving his education in the common schools of that state. In 1883, at the age of eighteen, he left home and came to Walla Walla, Washington, where he worked for one year on a fruit farm. The next year he spent on the Sound, in Snohomish county, where he filed on a homestead. At the end of the year he made a relinquishment of his homestead right for a fair consideration, and came to Yakima county. This was in 1885, and until 1900 he was employed on hay ranches in various localities. In the year last named he purchased sixteen acres of land in Parker Bottom, where he now resides, and has since been occupied in cultivating and improving it, and has now a very desirable home as the reward of industry and perseverance. In 1882, Mr. Williams was married, in Missouri, to Miss Rachel E. Harper, who was born in Ohio in 1863, the daughter of Peter J. and Hannah (Williams) Harper, natives of England; both parents are dead. Mrs. Williams is the youngest of a family of four girls and three boys. Their names follow: Mrs. Diana Hurt, living in Yakima county; Mrs. Sophia Eickelberger, living in Ohio; Fred, living in Yakima county; Thomas, deceased; Mrs. Addie Carns, living in Seattle, and Owen, living in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Two sons and three daughters have come into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Williams: Jessie, born in Missouri in 1886; John and Myrtle, twins, born in Walla Walla, Washington, in 1888; Richard, born in Snohomish county, Washington, 1892, and Bessie, born in Yakima county, 1893. Politically, Mr. Williams affiliates with the Republican party. Fraternally, he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a man of strict integrity, of progressive ideas, of influence in local matters, and holds the esteem and respect of his fellow men.

MILTON W. BREWER, an agriculturist, living eight miles northwest of Toppenish, is a native Washingtonian, and has spent his entire life in the state. As a pioneer of the state, and the son of a pioneer, we are pleased to accord him a place of honor in these records which are to be handed down to succeeding generations. Mr. Brewer is the son of Oliver and Margaret (Stevens) Brewer; his father a native of Arkansas, born in 1834; his mother a native of Georgia, born in 1836. The parents are still living, citizens of Chehalis county, Washington. Rev. Oliver Brewer is a minister of the Methodist church. In 1852 he and his wife crossed the Plains from Arkansas to Oregon, settling on a donation claim on Fern ridge. After remaining here for three years they moved to Thurston county, Washington, and here the son Milton was born August 5, 1861. The family subsequently moved to Chehalis county, where Milton spent his youth and early manhood, receiving his education in the common schools. In his eighteenth year he discontinued his studies, but remained with his parents until twenty-three, when he married and engaged in farming in Chehalis county. In 1899 he sold his interests there and came to Yakima county, purchasing the farm where he now resides. This farm consists of thirty-two acres, of which he has made a valuable property and a comfortable home. He keeps a number of dairy cows, diversifying the products of the farm, and finding the venture very profitable. Mr. Brewer was married in Oakville, Washington, January 12, 1884, to Miss Jennie Newton, whose native state is Illinois, where she was born September 14, 1862. Her father died when she was a child. Her mother, Mrs. Delia Newton, lives in Chehalis county, Washington. Mr. Brewer has two brothers and one sister, living in Washington. Their names follow: Mrs. Charity (Brewer) Baker, Alonzo and Loren. To Mr. and Mrs. Brewer have been born the following children: Orpha, born June 18, 1885; Pearl, born August 31, 1888; Della, born April 21, 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer and daughter are members of the Methodist church. In political matters, Mr. Brewer affiliates with the Republican party and always takes a lively interest in the success of his party. He is known as a man of honor and uprightness, fair in all his dealings with his fellow men, and has the confidence and respect of neighbors and friends.

OWEN B. WHITSON, farmer and fruit grower, resides seven miles northwest of Toppenish. He has lived in Yakima county for sixteen years, having located here in 1887. For a number of years he was variously employed in different parts of the county, and has been closely identified with much of its wonderful development. He was employed on the North Yakima water supply ditch, afterwards by the Washington Irrigation Company on the Sunnyside ditch, and has spent a great deal of time in the improvement of raw land. He has developed the farm on which he resides from a sagebrush plain to a high state of cultivation, and has made of it a very productive tract and a comfortable home. He assisted in the building of the first church erected in Zillah, donating his labor. He was one of the organizers of School district No. 50, together with Rev. F. Walden and Mrs. James Beattie, one of the best in the county, having in the beginning twenty-seven pupils; was one of the first directors, and is now a member of the board. The first teacher employed here was Miss Harriet Sawyer. The district was organized in February, 1890. Mr. Whitson was born in Kansas, April 18, 1861, the son of Jesse and Lonisa (Bond) Whitson. His father, now dead, was born in Indiana in 1830; the mother is now living in Michigan. The son, Owen, received his education in Indiana. At the age of twenty he quit school and began to do for himself. Two years later he moved to Traverse, Michigan, remaining there four years, and at the end of that time coming to Yakima county, Washington. In 1899 he leased forty acres of school land, his present home, and is improving it with the intention of buying it when it is placed on the market. Three acres of orchard have been set out, and the balance is in hay, the hay land yielding one hundred and twenty-five tons per year. Mr. Whitson has the following brothers: George and Orange J., in Michigan; Ellis J. (an engineer), and Lawrence, in Nebraska; two brothers died when small children. In 1892 Mr. Whitson was married to Miss Carrie Van Buskirk, at North Yakima. She is the oldest daughter of a family of ten children, all still living but two. Kansas is her native state, where she was born in 1870, the daughter of Reuben and Julia A. (Walrod) Van Buskirk, the father a native of Indiana, born in 1831, and the mother of Illinois, born in 1851; the parents are residents of North Yakima. Four children have come to bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Whitson, their names as follows: Lutetia, born December 23, 1893; Marion, July 4, 1898; Hazel, June 17, 1900, and Julia, April 12, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Whitson attend the Christian church. In political principles Mr. Whitson is a Prohibitionist. He is progressive in his ideas and his opinions are valued in local affairs. A man of integrity, always honorable and fair in his dealings with his fellow men, he has earned and holds their confidence and respect.

JOSIAH D. LAUGHLIN, farmer and fruit grower, resides four miles northeast of Toppenish, on rural free delivery route No. 1. Although but comparatively a recent arrival in Yakima county, he has already become thoroughly identified with its interests, and during the last four years has assisted materially in the reclamation of its arid lands. Mr. Laughlin is a native of Ohio, born in Pike county, October 13, 1847. He is the son of William H. and Selina (Brill) Laughlin, both natives of Pennsylvania; the father, now dead, was born in 1818, and the mother, living in Ohio, born in 1822. Mr. Laughlin received his education in the schools of his native state, and, after the completion of his studies, engaged for a time in teaching. At the beginning of the Civil war he was too young for enlistment, but in 1864, at the age of seventeen, he enlisted in Company G, Ninety-first Ohio volunteers, and served with this regiment for eighteen months. One memory that thrills him even at this late date is that of Sheridan's famous ride to Winchester, of which he was an eye-witness. After the close of the war he followed teaching for two years, and then entered the employ of the Chicago, Danville & Vincennes railroad, remaining in the car department for three years, at Danville, Illinois. At the end of this time he removed to Iowa, where he followed farming successfully for sixteen years. In 1900 he came to Washington and located on his present farm, purchasing forty acres at first and adding twenty more later. This tract he has developed from its wild state and has made of it a very productive farm and a comfortable home. A commodious and an attractive dwelling and other buildings have been erected, and eleven acres of orchard set out, which is just beginning to bear. Mr. Laughlin was married in Illinois, November 22, 1874, to Miss Martha J. Howser, who was born in Ohio, March 8, 1854, the daughter of Jonathan N. and Margaret (Dillman) Howser, natives of Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin have been born the following children: Mrs. Cleo M. Stephenson, living in Iowa; Byron B., in Sedro Woolley, Washington; Ossie M. and Effie G., engaged in teaching school in Yakima county, living with parents; and David R., also at home. In political matters Mr. Laughlin advocates Republican principles; he is a man of progressive ideas, of correct principles, and fair in his dealings with others; is recognized as a man of integrity, whose influence is always exerted in the right direction, and commands the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

ALEX TIEO. It is a pleasure to chronicle the life of the man whose name stands at the beginning of this biography, for he is one of the native Indians of the Northwest who has accepted the white man's ways and, by personal effort, raised himself to a leadership among his brothers of the red skin. His ability, honesty and energy have also won for him high opinions from those of the white race, and none among the Indians upon the reservation is held in greater respect than Alex Tieo. He was born in Vancouver, in 1855, his father being Cowlipe Tieo, a native of Honolulu, and his mother a native of Washcum, or Wasco, Oregon. When a child he was taken to Oregon City and in 1872 came to Cascade. When twenty-three years old Alex began railroading on the little six-mile line at the Cascades, and by perseverance arose to the position of conductor from that of brakeman. Then for a time he worked at the steamboat business, and subsequently for eight years operated a flatboat on the Columbia between The Dalles and the Cascades. Ten years ago he came to Yakima county as foreman of a hop picking crew, and the same year settled upon allotted land in the Yakima reservation. When he is not farming he engages in picking hops, having been for many years field foreman for Max Jackson and Dell Hitchcock. Mr. Tieo has taken and is taking a prominent part in ditch construction on the reservation, being at the present time Indian foreman of the new government canal, commenced October 7, 1903. He was also foreman of Indian forces on the ditch extending twelve miles southeast of Wapato and on all the laterals that have been built. He was married the first time to Mary Bonifar, a Cascade Indian, who is now dead. Two children resulted from this union: Wilson and Harry. His second marriage was to Mabel, a Tumwater Indian, and to this union no children have been born. On his one hundred and sixty acre, improved ranch, of which one hundred and twenty acres are in cultivation, he raises hay, potatoes, wheat and all kinds of vegetables, besides cattle and horses in large numbers. This ranch was the first one occupied on that prairie. Mr. Tieo has made much of his opportunities and as a progressive, honest, skilled man is a leader whom his race would do well to follow.

MICHELLE MARTINEAU, retired steamboat captain and sailing master and at present living upon his two hundred and forty acre ranch three and a half miles west of Toppenish, is the son of one of the noted pioneers of the Northwest, and himself is a man of striking character, well known in the later history of the Northwest. His father, Michelle Martineau, senior, was a native of Montreal, Quebec, of Canadian French stock. Early in life he came into the wilderness of western Canada, accompanying Doctor McLoughlin to his post at Vancouver. First the father served as a mail carrier in the Rocky Mountain region, working for the Hudson's Bay Company; then he entered other departments of the service, traveling all through the west. It is said that he and another white man named Bozmah were the first whites to find Doctor Whitman's body after the massacre. History refers to this intrepid French Canadian in dealing with the story of the west. He was at one time accused of killing John McCoy, another well-known pioneer. The senior Martineau died in 1902. The mother was a Wickham, a member of the Cascade tribe of Indians. Her father was Chief Tompha, hanged in 1856 at the Cascades by order of Colonel Wright. She died in 1871.

The younger Martineau was born at Vancouver in 1848, while Oregon was yet a territory, and the only settlements in the Northwest were along the Columbia and Willamette rivers and on Puget Sound. He was reared at Portland, the Cascades and The Dalles, thoroughly imbibing the free, restless, dashing spirit of the life around him. At the age of sixteen he entered the steamboat business in the kitchen department, rising thence very rapidly to engineer and then to a captain's berth. He was the first captain of the General Humphreys, plying between the upper Cascades and The Dalles in 1879. He has been captain of all the steamers owned by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company and has served the government fleet on the Columbia and its tributaries, among the steamers under his captaincy being the R. Thompson, the Harvest Queen, Emma Howard and the Modoc. In 1898 he went into the Alaskan waters for an English syndicate. There he was captain of the Flora, the first boat built on the Yukon river, and since 1898 he has spent each season on the Yukon. In 1903 he had charge of the Frantz. Early in his steamboat experience he was recognized as one of the ablest masters on the Columbia river, and each year since has added to his reputation in that line. He has, however, decided to retire from his steamboat life, and with that end in view will take charge of his ranch, now under lease, as soon as the lease expires this year. His property interests consist of this ranch, which is all under water, and mining property in the Yukon region.

In 1874 Mr. Martineau was united in marriage to Martha Tiew, a native of Oregon City, whose parents were Cowlike Tiew, a native of the Sandwich Islands, and Ticashara (Winner) Tiew, a member of The Dalles tribe of Columbia River Indians. Mrs. Martineau is a sister of Alex Tiew, Indian foreman of the new government ditch being built near Wapato. Captain Martineau is a member of the Sailors and Masters' Association of America. The captain is a man of ability and is an excellent representative of the old school of Northwestern pioneers whose courage, energy and perseverance have made it possible to reclaim the Pacific coast of America from its original wild condition and place the stamp of civilization upon it.

HORACE MARK GILBERT, of the firm of Richey & Gilbert, at Toppenish, and general manager of the extensive business carried on by that strong company, is one of Yakima county's leading business men and citizens—a man who has won the place he occupies through sheer merit alone. He is a native of Geneseo, Illinois, where he was born October 22, 1862, to the union of Nathaniel C. and Francelia (Amsden) Gilbert. The father was born in New York February 10, 1834, and is a descendant of a pioneer American family bearing that name. His mother was related to Nathaniel Greene, from whom is taken the name Nathaniel. Early in life Nathaniel C. Gilbert settled in Illinois, where he is still living, and where he has attained to prominence and affluence. The mother was born September 7, 1840, and traces her ancestry back to James Otis, a pioneer Bostonian.

Horace Gilbert has spent the major portion of his life in Illinois, not having come west until 1897. In his native state he secured a thorough public school education, after which he received, in 1885, an A. B. degree from Knox college, and subsequently was honored by an A. M. degree. He was reared on his father's farm and after finishing his education, continued to devote his attention to farming, managing his father's four hundred-acre place on shares. As this was the best farm in the county, the successful management of it is a tribute to Mr. Gilbert's skill in that line. He also operated extensively in cattle, sheep and hogs. However, in November, 1897, he sold his interests and immigrated to North Yakima. His first purchase of land in the Yakima valley was a twenty-acre tract a mile west of town. This he bought for eighty dollars an acre. He has improved the land and has made there a delightful and comfortable home. In 1899 he began operations at Toppenish, organizing the Richey & Gilbert Company, composed of James Richey, F. A. Hall, Clyde Richey and himself. This firm has leased and cleared 2,000 acres adjoining the town of Toppenish and for a long time has furnished the Northern Pacific approximately sixty cars per month of hay, potatoes, grain, fruit, stock, etc., for shipment. It is one of the largest concerns of its kind in central Washington.

Marion H. Richey, a daughter of James and Anna (Hamilton) Richey, was united in marriage to Mr. Gilbert, February 15, 1893, in Illinois. She is a native of La Salle county, and after being graduated by Knox college in the same class of which her husband was a member, taught school several years in the Peoria public schools. Her father was born in Ohio, 1829, and was brought to Illinois by his parents the year following. He was a successful farmer of Illinois during most of his life, coming to North Yakima in 1890. There he died December 13, 1903. Her mother is still living. The Gilbert home has been blessed by six children, the oldest of whom is ten years of age: Curtiss Richey, Marion Lois, Elon James, Guida Margaret, Horace Nathaniel and Dorothy Irene. Both husband and wife are members of the Congregational church, Mr. Gilbert being a deacon. All his life Mr. Gilbert has been a public-spirited citizen and a man of influence among his fellow men. In Illinois he was elected president of the State Farmers' Alliance and received the nomination for representative in congress on an independent ticket. In the campaign which followed he made a strong canvass and, although defeated by a strong combination, ran two thousand five hundred votes ahead of the rest of his ticket. He is still an independent in political matters. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert are popular in social circles, and, as previously stated, he is recognized as one of the county's strong men.

FRED AUGUSTUS HALL, of the firm of Richey & Gilbert, Toppenish, one of Yakima county's sterling young business men, was born in LaSalle county, Illinois, in 1867, his parents being Stillman A. and Harriet (Beardsley) Hall. Stillman A. Hall, who with his wife now resides on their ranch, Valley View, on Nob Hill, North Yakima, is a native of Maine, the date of his birth in the Pine Tree state being 1838. His father was a pioneer of that state. When Lincoln issued his first call for troops, the son Stillman immediately responded by enlisting with the boys in blue, but soon after being mustered in was taken sick with fever and such were the ravages of the disease that he was honorably discharged from the service and never again enlisted. At present he is engaged in farming. The mother was born in Illinois in 1842, her parents settling in that state in 1836. Fred A. Hall spent his boyhood on the farm and in the schoolhouse. Later he entered the Illinois State University, by which he was graduated in 1893. After leaving college he engaged in the drug business at Tonica, Illinois, in which he remained seven years. In 1899 he sold this business and sought a richer field for his talents in the prosperous Northwest, arriving in North Yakima December 20th of that year. Immediately he entered the firm of which he is still a member. His company leases large tracts of Indian land, upon which they raise grain, hay, melons, potatoes, etc., besides which the company does an extensive commission business. Richey & Gilbert have erected a fine, commodious, stone warehouse at Toppenish and have materially assisted in the development of the country surrounding that point.

In 1894 Mr. Hall was united in marriage to Miss Luella Richey, a native of Illinois. She is the daughter of James and Anna (Hamilton) Richey, pioneers of Illinois, to which the father came in 1830. He was a prosperous farmer of that state until his removal to the Yakima valley in 1899. In Washington he became the senior member of the firm of Richey & Gilbert. His death occurred at the North Yakima home, December 13, 1903. Mrs. Richey survives her husband. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hall: Thorland Richey, July 30, 1896; Isabelle, May 29, 1900; and Burton Augustus, May 31, 1902, all of whom are living. Mr. Hall is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen, and politically, is a member of the Republican party. Both himself and wife are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and in business circles Mr. Hall is rapidly attaining prominence as a man of ability and integrity.

JOHN BAXTER, residing one mile northwest of the thriving town of Toppenish, is one of the reservation's successful and esteemed white farmers leasing Indian land. Born in Canada June 1, 1857, he is the son of Patrick and Jane Baxter, natives of Ireland and Canada respectively. Patrick Baxter came to Canada when a baby, and after reaching mature years engaged in agricultural pursuits which he still follows in the land of his adoption. The mother was of French descent; she died in 1878. The son John grew to manhood's estate upon his father's farm and at the age of twenty-one came to the United States, taking up his abode first in Cowlitz county, Washington, where he followed the lumber business for twenty years. His experience in this industry was mostly in the logging department. As a boy he did not have the advantages of even a common school education, a training whose worth he keenly appreciated when he became a man. So, with commendable ambition, he placed himself under the guidance of President Marsh of Forest Grove college, Oregon, and by patient, attentive study, when he was not at work earning a living, acquired much of the knowledge that his youth was denied. From the Cowlitz region he went, in 1808, to Puyallup and there farmed two years. Then he came to Yakima county and leased his present one hundred acre ranch near Toppenish. His marriage took place February 25, 1804, in Portland, Oregon, his bride being Miss Bertie Schumacher, of Oregon birth and German descent. Her parents are Dr. Charles and Margaret (Strauss) Schumacher. Doctor Schumacher emigrated from Germany to the United States when quite young and settled in Oregon, where he married Miss Strauss. She was born in Oregon to German parents. Mr. and Mrs. Schumacher reside in Portland. To Mr. and Mrs. Baxter have been born five children, Carl, May, Lucy, Walter and one yet unnamed, all of whom are living. Both parents are members of the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Baxter is an active Republican, attending all caucuses and conventions in his district. Upon his ranch he is successfully raising grain, potatoes and onions, besides breeding fine stock. He is making a specialty of Poland-China and Chester White hogs, of which he has a fine bunch. Mr. Baxter is a member of the true type of progressive citizenship of which America is so proud.

RICHARD FRANK LYONS. One of the men who have taken advantage of the excellent opportunities presented to energetic, capable white farmers by the fertile Indian lands surrounding Toppenish is the subject of this biography. He leases nearly half a section of land lying a mile and a half northwest of that trading point, and is known as one of the county's most successful ranchmen. Mr. Lyons was born in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, in 1847, to the marriage of Wesley and Lucretia (Crawford) Lyons, also natives of the Keystone state. The father was a farmer and lumberman. Both parents are dead. Until he was nineteen years old, Richard F. remained in Pennsylvania, working with his father and attending the public schools, but at that age he was seized with an intense longing to assist in subduing the far western wilds, and in 1863 courageously set forth upon his long journey to Oregon. Arriving at Oregon City, he decided to settle in the eastern part of the state and accordingly wended his way across the Cascades to Umatilla county. There he was engaged in various occupations, including riding the range, until 1872, when he entered the business of sheep raising. For twelve years and longer he ranged his growing bands in what are now Umatilla and Morrow counties, passing through the exciting dangers with which the residents of that section were confronted during the Bannock Indian war of 1878. In the later eighties he removed to the Horse Heaven country in Washington and there met his first serious reverse, during the hard winter of 1889-90, losing fully eight thousand head of sheep. At that period Mr. Lyons owned seventeen thousand head and was probably the most heavily interested sheep man in Washington; at least the largest sheep owner in Yakima county. Following this disaster came the panic of 1893, in which Mr. Lyons, with thousands of other western stockmen, was caught and financially embarrassed. However, he continued his business until 1898, when he sold his lands and stock and took charge of the one thousand one hundred acre ranch, known as the Snipes place, in Parker Bottom. Three years later, or in 1901, he came to Toppenish and leased three hundred acres of fine Indian land, upon which he now lives. This immense ranch is producing hay and grain. Mr. Lyons also devotes considerable attention to stock raising, owning two hundred head of high grade Poland-China hogs and about six hundred head of sheep. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, with membership in the Prosser lodge, and is identified with the Republican party. Mr. Lyons has many loyal friends and is highly respected as an active, also progressive stockman, farmer and citizen.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM STEVENS, one of the leading farmers of the Toppenish country, is a native of Suffolk county, New York, where, in the year 1836, he was born to the union of Halsey and Elizabeth (Halleck) Stevens. The father was also a native of that state, and died there in 1888. His ancestors for several generations were citizens of Connecticut. The mother, who died in 1898, was a niece of General Halleck, and had two other uncles who served with distinction in the Revolutionary war. The son, William, was occupied with attending school, farming and sailing on the Atlantic coast until eighteen years old, when he settled in Winona county, Minnesota, filing on government land. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company B, Seventh Minnesota infantry, the date of his enlistment being August, 1862. This regiment went to Fort Snelling before going south, and while stationed at that post was called upon to quell the Indians around Fort Ridgely and in Dakota. The Indians were captured, and thirty-nine of them executed at Mankato. During the Civil war Mr. Stevens was in many battles, the last being that at Spanish Fort, Mobile, Alabama. He was mustered out at Minnehaha Falls, August, 1865, and immediately engaged in farming and stock raising in Bates county, Missouri, remaining in that section for twenty years. Upon his return from the war he was elected captain of a militia company, and this fact, together with the fact that when a young man he was captain of a boat, has conferred the title of captain upon him in private life. In 1888 he came to Yakima county, purchasing a farm near North Yakima, and living a portion of the time in the city. The next twelve years we find him engaged in raising alfalfa, melons, etc., and breeding thoroughbred Plymouth Rock chickens. However, in 1900, he left the Yakima valley and leased a quarter section of land two miles and a quarter northwest of Toppenish, and on this place is now living, engaged in general farming and breeding Plymouth Rock chickens.

Mr. Stevens was married in Missouri, 1867, to Sophia Requa, daughter of Rev. William Requa, a Presbyterian missionary in Missouri and Arkansas. He was of French descent; the mother of Scotch. The father died in 1873. Mrs. Requa died five years previously. Mrs. Stevens was born in Missouri, and died in 1895 in the city of North Yakima, leaving, besides her husband, one son, Norman, to mourn their loss. The captain is an enthusiastic Republican, and is, of course, justly proud of his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. He is respected as a pioneer, a veteran of the Civil and Indian wars, and a substantial citizen, and is favorably known in his community.

ALLEN R. GRAHAM, clerk of Hotel Toppenish and manager of the livery operated in connection at Toppenish, Washington, is a native pioneer of the Northwest, having been born in Washington county, Oregon, twelve miles from Portland, in 1854. He is the son of John and Caroline M. (White) Graham, the father a native of Pennsylvania, of Scotch-Irish descent, and the mother a native of Canada, of English parentage. The parents are now living in The Dalles. John Graham, born in 1827, came to Oregon via Cape Horn when a young man, and settled on a claim of three hundred and twenty acres in Washington county, where he resided until 1870, moving then to Klickitat county, Washington, later to Sherman county, Oregon, and eventually to The Dalles. The mother of Allen Graham was a daughter of Richard Delorus White, who crossed the Plains in 1844, settled in Portland when it was a small town, and built the St. Charles hotel, at a cost of eighty thousand dollars. The subject of this article spent his youth in Washington county, Oregon, attending school and farming. At the age of sixteen years he came with his parents to Klickitat county, Washington, and for ten years was on the range almost continuously with stock. At the age of twenty-one he engaged in the stock business on his own account. For thirty-one years he was a resident of Klickitat county, the greater portion of the time in the stock business and in farming. For one year he owned a livery barn in Centerville. In 1900 he sold his Klickitat property, came to Yakima county, and purchased twenty acres of land near North Yakima, selling afterwards at a great advance over the purchasing price. He then bought a small tract near the fair grounds for a home, and, with his oldest son, leased a ranch on the Cowiche and conducted a dairy for one season, coming then to Toppenish and taking charge of the hotel and livery. In 1875 Mr. Graham was married in Klickitat county to Miss Eveline C. Saxon, a native of Illinois and the daughter of John and Mary J. (Free) Saxon. To Mr. and Mrs. Graham have been born the following children: Mrs. Marietta M. Grimes, living in Sherman county, Oregon; Edward A., North Yakima; Luther E., deceased; Frank A., Centerville, Klickitat county; Roy and Harry, Yakima county; Ora May, Bertha A. and Velma Lora, at home. Mr. Graham's fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is an active and an influential Republican. For years he was a member of the county central committee, serving a part of the time as chairman. He was a recognized leader in all the campaigns during his residence there. With the early history of the country Mr. Graham is very familiar; was in the Klickitat country at the time of the General Howard campaign against the Indians, remaining on his farm when the settlers stampeded for The Dalles on the strength of a rumor that the Indians were crossing the Columbia at Celilo. He is widely known by the pioneer settlers of the valley, enjoys the confidence and respect of all, and we are pleased to accord him a place of honor in this volume.

WILBUR SPENCER. That the American Indian can be successfully guided from his aboriginal ways and customs into the civilization of the white man and his shrewd, restless, stoical characteristics transformed into trained thought of a higher order, into energy and perseverance, is not a fallacious statement, as is evidenced by the life of the young Indian of whom we write. Better still, his adoption of progressive ways has served to only strengthen his influence among his red brothers and the example he sets before them has no little effect. Wilbur Spencer's father is the famous old Chief Spencer, who is still living at the age of one hundred and five years on the Yakima reservation. Spencer is by birth a Klickitat and Chinook Indian, and both before and after the treaty of 1855 served the Klickitats as a chief. Tah-pa-Sha (Chief Spencer) has always been a steadfast friend of the whites and in the fifties, despite the fact that while serving as a scout under Colonel Wright, Spencer's father, wife, son and baby were killed by over zealous white volunteers, he remained loyal in the treaty negotiations and pleaded for the new order of things. The massacred family were on their way to Gen. Sheridan's camp at the time they were murdered, the deed being accomplished by strangulation with ropes. In another portion of this work further reference will be made to this Indian patriarch. Wilbur's mother, Tona-ma-ahr, a Wasco Indian, died in 1893. The younger Spencer was born at the Tum-water fishery above The Dalles in June, 1865, and as a youth spent his time either at the home near Fort Simcoe, traveling with his father in the surrounding country as far as the Sound, or on the Columbia, at the fishery. In September, 1871, he commenced attending the Indian school at the agency, receiving most of his education under Father Wilbur, from whom he takes his given name. At the school he learned the trade of carpenter and cabinet maker and during vacations was employed at fifty cents a day building Indian houses on the reservation. Three years he was employed in clerical work at the agency. The year 1878 marked the end of his school life, a public whipping by his teacher, H. L. Powell, for alleged conversation with the girls of the schools, causing him to run away. Arriving on the Columbia he secured a position in the cannery business and upon his departure from the employ of the Eureka Packing Company in 1882, was presented with a suit of clothes as a token of the company's esteem. Agent Milroy appointed him as sawyer at the Yakima agency; subsequently he was employed in other departments; and in 1889 was entrusted by Agent Priestly with the responsible job of building a government sawmill. This work he successfully accomplished. Afterwards this mill, like its predecessor, was destroyed by fire. Under Agent Lynch, Mr. Spencer served as government engineer until that position was abolished by the department. Then he came upon his allotment, near Toppenish, where he is farming a portion of his land and leasing the balance. He owns a quarter section, one hundred and twenty acres are owned by some of the children and three others are entitled to allotments. His home was built in 1890 at a cost of one thousand dollars, and he owns another house a mile west of town, where he is temporarily residing. The ranches show evidences of thrift and are valuable properties.

Mr. Spencer was married April 2, 1899, to Josephine Peters, a member of the Grande Ronde tribe living near Portland. She was educated in the Chamowa Indian training school near Salem. To this marriage have been born four children: William H., January 22, 1900; George W., February 22, 1901; Casey S., March 10, 1902; Jerry, January 17, 1904. Mr. Spencer has only one brother, Lancaster, though he has several half-brothers. An article from Mr. Spencer's pen relating to the Yakima Indians appears elsewhere in this volume.

FRANK O. PAULGER, in charge of the Northern Pacific telegraph office at Toppenish, Washington, is an Englishman by descent and birth, having been born in England, June 24, 1869, to English parents. His father, John Paulger, came to America in 1879 and during most of his life was successfully engaged in the mercantile business. His death occurred in February, 1896. Ann (Hobson) Paulger was born in 1825, came to America with her husband in 1879 and is still living in Iowa, in the quiet contentment of a ripe old age. The subject of this sketch was reared, from the age of ten, at New Hartford, Iowa, where he received a high school education and learned telegraphy with his brother, the station agent at that point. When nineteen years old the young telegrapher was stationed at Linden, Iowa. From there he went as bill clerk to Fort Dodge; thence to Blair, Nebraska, as station agent. Afterwards he was transferred to Emerson, Nebraska, as station agent, where the next ten years of his life were spent. During this period he dealt to some extent in real estate, accumulating a considerable holding of property, and rose to a high position among his fellow citizens by reason of his ability and congenial qualities. For nine years he served as a member of the Emerson school board, and still takes a deep interest in educational matters. A trip to and a few months' stay in the City of Mexico followed his departure from Emerson, and in June, 1901, he accepted the position he now occupies at Toppenish, there being only a store and a warehouse at the station then. Mr. Paulger has one sister, Mrs. Anna Canfield, and two brothers, John and Fred W., living in Iowa. John is a grocer at Cedar Falls; Fred is engaged in business at New Hartford, where, also, the sister lives. Mr. Paulger is a Mason of high standing, being a member of the Shriners, and is also affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Highlanders. In politics, he has always taken an active interest and as the candidate of the Democratic party was elected treasurer of the township in which he resided in Nebraska. In every community where he has lived he has been regarded as a public spirited, progressive citizen and has been a factor in their development. His mother owns half a section of fine land near Emerson. Mr. Paulger is satisfied that the Yakima country is an unusually fine field for enterprising young men and intends to make it his permanent home. He is a young man of stability and talent, combined with integrity.

ALEXANDER FOSTER. Few residents of the Northwest have had a more exciting career than has the subject of this biography—adventurer, packer, miner, soldier and frontiersman. His birthplace is Vancouver, the old Hudson's Bay Company's post, and 1846 was the year of his birth. His father was George Foster, a Scotchman who came to Canada in early days, and in 1833 engaged as a gunsmith with the famous English fur company above mentioned. He died in the early fifties. His mother was Peggy, a member of The Dalles tribe of Indians. She died at The Dalles in 1861. Alexander Foster, of this review, was reared on the Columbia river, and upon the death of his mother commenced packing to British Columbia. Then he was engaged by Brostein & Binnard as a packer into the mining camps of Oro Fino, Elk City, Florence and Warren. He followed this occupation for private individuals, for corporations or for the government until about fifteen years ago. During that period he traveled all over the Northwest, worked under General Crook, was with the troops at the time Custer was massacred, served in the Nez Perce and Sheepwater campaigns in central Idaho, engaged in several other minor Indian campaigns, and was stationed in the government's employ at Colville for many years. He is a brother of William Foster, the noted Idaho scout, who met a tragic death on Camas prairie during the Nez Perce war in 1877, and he is familiar with all the details of that campaign in Idaho county. He was also one of the volunteers who sought to visit the field of the Custer massacre, and who were driven back by the Sioux. As a participant in the Nez Perce war he gained considerable distinction through his excellent services as chief packer and scout. A party in his charge buried the troopers of Captain Perry's command who were killed in White Bird canyon; he himself found his brother William, after the death of the latter at the hands of the Indians, and, digging a grave with a bowie knife, buried him. Over this grave the citizens of Idaho county in later years erected a monument in memory of the faithful scout, who gave his life in defense of the whites. Mr. Foster was an important witness in the court-martial trial of Lieutenant Catlin, he having been one of the party that rescued the Rains family during the Sheepwater outbreak. In 1879 he went to Lewiston, thence to Walla Walla, and finally took charge of a one hundred and twelve mile route terminating at Colville. Following his service there, he left the occupation of packing, and for many years resided on the Umatilla and Warm Springs Indian reservations in Oregon, serving for a time as government farmer in the industrial schools. In 1893 he came to the Yakima reservation and secured an allotment, upon which he moved in 1900, and there he has since lived. He owns a quarter section, and his children have title to four hundred acres. Mr. Foster is at present in the employ of Dell Williams at the old government ranch, six miles southwest of Toppenish.

In the early nineties he was married at Pendleton to Sarah Edwards, whose father was William Edwards, an Englishman, and whose mother was a Wasco Indian. The maternal grandmother was of Klickitat and Wasco blood; the grandfather of pure Wasco blood. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have five children of their own: Hazel, who is attending the Fort Simcoe school; George, William, Allie and Nora; besides whom there are three adopted children, Charlotte, Augustine and Harrison. Their father was Richard Edwards, one of the sons of William Edwards and a brother of Mrs. Foster. Upon the death of Richard Edwards, the children were adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Foster. All three own allotments, and are being educated at the government school at Fort Simcoe. Charlotte is a bright girl of fifteen summers, who is making the most of the opportunities offered her. The Foster family is probably one of the best known among the Indians and pioneer whites of Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

JACOB KALER, living three miles due south of Wapato, is one of Yakima county's substantial and influential farmer citizens. He first saw the light of day September 15, 1852, in Bartholomew county, Indiana, to which his father came in an early day. His father, Adam Kaler, was born in Germany in 1800, and after learning the blacksmith's trade, came to the United States. It is said that he built the first iron roller mill in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, now the home of the great iron and steel industry of America. He could manufacture nearly anything made of iron or steel, and was a man of learning and influence. He died in Indiana in 1871. The mother, Louise (Wentle) Kaler, was also a native of Germany. She was married to Mr. Kaler in Pennsylvania. Jacob attended school in Indiana, and at the age of eighteen commenced learning the butcher's trade with his brother at Columbus. After three years' apprenticeship, he entered the business on his own account, removing to Kansas in 1878, where he established his home in Greenwood county. For sixteen years he was engaged in handling cattle in that section, and for many years was highly successful, a sudden drop in prices crippling his finances. From Kansas he went to Stillwater, Oklahoma, and there followed the cattle business five years; then went to Chickasaw, Indian Territory, and for a year was likewise engaged. He finally disposed of his meat market at Chickasaw, and came to Yakima county, going on his present place November 10, 1901.

His marriage to Miss Eva Hayes took place October 20, 1878. She was born in Indiana, September 25, 1858, and is the daughter of Mahton and Susie (Fisher) Hayes, natives of Ohio and Virginia, respectively. Mr. Hayes was a farmer by occupation; he died in 1891. The mother lived twelve years longer, passing to her eternal rest in December, 1903, in Greenwood county, Kansas. Three children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kaler: Mrs. Fannie Jones, living on the reservation; Harry and Frank, residing at home. Mr. Kaler is identified with the Masonic fraternity, and in politics, has cast his lines with the Democratic party, as did his father before him. Mrs. Kaler is a member of the Christian church. In educational matters Mr. Kaler has long taken a substantial interest, and is at present serving the Wapato district as clerk of the board. Upon his ranch he is breeding thoroughbred Jersey cattle, and raising alfalfa, corn and hogs—a combination of products that has given the West a leading position in the world's husbandry. Mr. Kaler is counted as a force in the community and a factor in the county's progress.

W. H. REDMAN, canal and railroad construct-or, and at present foreman of the work on the new twelve-mile irrigation canal under construction for the exclusive use of the Yakima Indians, is a representative of the type of successful westerner whose birthplace is the eastern section of the United States. Of eastern birth, parentage and early training, this type of our western citizenship has fearlessly crossed the continent and by its energy, ability and enthusiasm on the new stage of action has been a tremendous power in molding the West into the condition in which it now appears. Mr. Redman was born in Boston, Massachusetts, June 1, 1862, to the union of James M. and Mary (Stuart) Redman, the father being of Irish descent, the mother of Scotch. James M. Redman was born in Dublin, Ireland, 1816, came to the United States in 1831 and died in 1899. He was a physician. The mother is a native of Worcester, Massachusetts, and is now in her seventy-second year. The subject of our sketch was educated in Lynn and at the Brockman Academy, and remained at home until eighteen years old. At that age he bade farewell to his eastern home and friends and came direct to the thriving town of Spokane Falls. Subsequently he joined the rush to the Coeur d'Alenes and as a pioneer of that region is familiar with the establishment of Mullan, Murray, Wardner, Wallace and other towns, and the discovery of the great silver-lead bonanzas in that district. In 1891 he left the Coeur d'Alenes, joining the Northern Pacific forces in Yakima and Kittitas counties. Six years later his fondness for this branch of engineering led him to accept a position with the forces constructing the White Pass Railroad in Alaska. For four years he remained in Alaska, engaged in constructing railroads, and in mining, meeting with fair success in both lines. He returned to the states in 1902, coming immediately to Yakima county, which he considers the best section of country in the world. Here he was selected by the government inspector to take charge of the government canal being built on the reservation and for the past month has been in active charge. Another W. H.

Redman, belonging to a different family, is superintendent and chief engineer of this canal, and Alexander Tiew, a native Yakima Indian, acts as Indian foreman and interpreter. When completed this canal will be twelve miles long and will bring several thousand acres of the finest land on the reservation under water. Mr. Redman is a man of recognized ability in construction work of this character and also in mining, and his wide and successful experience adds to his worth in these lines. He has traveled over the greater part of the west and has witnessed nearly every phase of western life. His home is in Ellensburg, where he is highly esteemed as a business man and a citizen.

ALEXANDER E. MCCREDY, founder of Wapato and engaged in the mercantile, commission and warehouse business at that station besides operating several large ranches near there, is one of Yakima county's substantial young business men and also a pioneer of that region. Born May 3, 1868, in Yamhill county, Oregon, to the union of William A. and Elizabeth (Beaman) McCredy, he is the son of two early pioneers of the Northwest and of the Middle West, thus coming naturally by his tendencies to seek out the frontier and there engage in the grand work of civilizing. William A. McCredy was born in Ohio, of Scotch parentage, in 1832, and later moved to Missouri, and in 1853, with his young wife, courageously set his face toward the Pacific, six months being required to make the long, dreary journey across the Plains and mountain ranges between the Middle West and the famed valley of the Willamette. Having arrived in the promised land, the young pioneer settled upon a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres and there lived until 1879. Among his first purchases in Oregon was a sack of flour, costing five dollars, from the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1879 he removed to the luxuriant ranges of Klickitat county, where he raised stock until advancing age forced him into quiet retirement. Mr. McCredy is now living in Cleaveland, Klickitat county. The mother was a native of Missouri, born in 1842; she died in 1896. The Beamans were descended from the old North Carolina family bearing that name and Mrs. McCredy's parents were pioneers of Bates county, Missouri. The son Alexander spent his early years in the stock business, securing an excellent education, however, at McMinnville College and the Portland Business College, besides a common school training. After leaving school he continued to raise stock until 1901. As a boy he witnessed the establishment of most of the towns in the Yakima country, as also the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad through that section of the territory. For seven years he resided in North Yakima, he and his brothers ranging stock in Yakima, Kittitas and

Klickitat counties. In 1901 he disposed of his stock interests to accept an appointment as post trader at Simcoe Side station. Because of his integrity, of his ability and his experience with and knowledge of the Yakima tribes, he was given this concession by the government and August 11, 1902, commenced the construction of the necessary buildings on the sage-brush plain adjoining the railroad tracks. Among his first acts was the securing of a postoffice at that point. In order to obtain this the government accepted Mr. McCredy's suggestion of the name Wapato, it being necessary to change the station's name because of a postoffice at Fort Simcoe. He has been and is a hard worker for the betterment of the Indians and the development of their lands and, because of this genuine interest, has won the friendship of the red men on the reservation. He secured the building of roads into Wapato and has taken the lead in developing the school at Wapato from a one-room institution into a school house containing four rooms, taught by three teachers and containing a high school department. Mr. McCredy emerged from bachelorhood June 14, 1900, at Webster City, Iowa, his bride being Miss Allie Barge, a daughter of Professor B. F. and Mrs. Carrie W. (Showers) Barge, of North Yakima. The father was born in the historic city of Concord, Massachusetts, February 2, 1834, and comes of Scotch stock, tracing the history of his family back to the landing of the Mayflower. Mrs. Barge is a native of Cambridge, Illinois, where she was born June 2, 1841, to pioneers of that state. A full biography of Mr. and Mrs. Barge will be found elsewhere in this volume, Mr. Barge being one of the most prominent citizens of central Washington and the first superintendent of the Ellensburg State Normal. Mrs. McCredy was born in Geneseo, Illinois. Mr. McCredy has four brothers and sisters: Mrs. Pauline Varner, living at McMinnville, Oregon, and George W., John T. and Leland, living at Bickleton. Mrs. McCredy has three sisters, Hattie Eberle and Cora Helen, residing at Williams, Iowa, and Mrs. Jennie Leckey, living at Eagle Grove, Iowa. Mrs. McCredy is a graduate of the Ellensburg Normal. As a wedding tour, Mr. and Mrs. McCredy traveled extensively in Europe, attending the Paris Exposition in 1900. He is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Elks. On political questions he takes his stand with the Republican party, of which he is an energetic member. Mrs. McCredy is connected with the Baptist church, in which organization she has for many years been an earnest worker. She is also postmistress at Wapato. Mr. McCredy's business interests are confined to his holdings in and around his home. In a social way Mr. and Mrs. McCredy are popular with all who meet them and find much satisfaction in a host of warm friendships. By his indomitable energy and perseverance Mr. McCredy has won for himself an enviable position in the commercial life of the county and is looked upon as a successful young citizen of ability and sterling qualities.

HARVEY JELLISON, engaged in conducting a dairy upon leased land near Wapato, was born at Cambridge, Henry county, Illinois, July 30, 1858. Four years later he came across the Plains with his parents, Thomas J. and Rebecca (Craig) Jellison, to Yamhill county, Oregon, where his childhood and boyhood were passed. The father, of Holland Dutch descent, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1828, and by trade is a wagon-maker. For many years he was postmaster at Amity, Oregon, where he still resides on his farm. He is one of the heirs to a fortune of many millions left by a distant Holland relative. The mother was born in Ohio in 1835 and died in December, 1877. At the age of twenty the son Harvey began to do for himself. For four years he was engaged in farming near Bozeman, Montana, returning to Oregon in 1884. The following year he settled in Ellensburg, where he farmed, teamed, hauled milk and worked in mercantile establishments nearly twelve years. In September, 1896, he removed to North Yakima, and for three years was a resident of that city. Then he came to Wapato and leased land from the Indians, where he has since been successfully engaged in farming and operating a dairy. Two years ago he opened a restaurant at Wapato, but after a year's experience sold the property. At present he owns forty head of cattle, twenty-two of which are milch cows; also eight head of fine horses. Mr. Jellison considers that the country surrounding Wapato is an ideal alfalfa country and thinks that it presents fine opportunities for a man of limited means. January 2, 1879, Mr. Jellison was married to Miss Adelaide Hager, daughter of Elijah and Susan (McCarty) Hager. Mrs. Jellison was born at Bethel, Oregon, in 1860, and was there married. Elijah Hager was born in Kentucky, in 1828, crossed the Plains in 1852 to California, was married in Oregon in 1859 and is now a resident of Wapato, Washington. The mother was born in Platte county, Missouri, her father owning the land upon which Platte City was established. Her parents crossed the Plains to Polk county, Oregon, in 1844, and there settled upon a donation claim. Mr. and Mrs. Jellison have four children, all of whom are living at home: Musetta, Avey, Iva and Bird. Mr. Jellison belongs to the Modern Woodmen, Woodmen of the World and the Royal Tribe of Joseph. Mrs. Jellison is a member of the Christian church. In political matters, Mr. Jellison is a staunch Democrat. He is a prosperous dairyman and a respected citizen of the county.

EDWARD STERLING SMITH, business manager of F. Grosheu's lands and shipping interests at Wapato, belongs to a family of Kentucky and Missouri pioneers and himself is a pioneer of Klickitat county, having come to Goldendale more than a quarter of a century ago. He is a native of Missouri, born in Scotland county, May 27, 1862, to William D. and Mary (Owens) Smith, natives of Kentucky. The father removed to Missouri in an early day and lived there until he crossed the Plains to the Idaho mines in 1865. Subsequently he returned; then in 1875 went to California, and in January, 1878, settled at the little frontier town, Goldendale, his family arriving the next year. Twice he was elected assessor and twice sheriff of Scotland county, Missouri, and in 1880 was chosen a member of the Washington territorial legislature. In 1882 he was the unsuccessful candidate of his party, the Democratic, for the office of probate judge of Klickitat county. He died at Goldendale in August, 1899. The mother is still living in Goldendale at the age of seventy-six. The subject of this sketch went to California with his parents in 1875 at the age of fourteen, later went to Oregon and then to Goldendale, receiving most of his schooling at the latter place. When twenty-two years old he bade farewell to his father's farm and shouldered the responsibilities of life alone. He engaged in agricultural pursuits, living near Centerville until 1897, when he removed to Zillah. There he farmed four years, leaving that place to assume his present position across the river at Wapato. A tract of eight hundred acres is under his management. Mr. Smith was married May 11, 1884, at Goldendale to Miss Martha J. Wheelis, a native daughter of California, where she was born, December 8, 1864. Her parents are Isom and Nancy (Bragg) Wheelis, of Tennessee and Missouri birth, respectively. For many years the father was minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. In pioneer days he crossed the Plains to California and there lived until 1880, when he moved to Goldendale, Washington, where he resided for six years, then to Cle-Elum, thence to Everson, and at last returned to California, where he died in May, 1900. Mrs. Wheelis is living at present in Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have three children: Rufus Orville, Vivian I. and Claude A., all of whom are at home. Fraternaly, Mr. Smith is connected with the Modern Woodmen; politically, he is an active and influential Democrat, having been for some time a committeeman in Klickitat county. Mrs. Smith is a devoted member of the Christian church. Mr. Smith's brothers and sisters are as follows: Mrs. Sallie Teel, Spokane; Thomas J., California; Mrs. Mary A. Hamilton, Goldendale; John H., county auditor of Klickitat county; Mrs. Emma Hamilton, Oregon City; Fred, California; and Lee, Lud B., Snighton D. and David C., Centerville. Mr. Smith is considered a man of sound integrity and a good, substantial citizen.

ARCHIE L. NORTON, manager of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company's branch yards at Wapato, is an able, popular young man with exceedingly bright prospects, a young American who has accomplished much thus far in his short life and, best of all, laid a substantial foundation for future growth. He was born in St. Charles, Minnesota, December 18, 1882, his parents being Thomas and Christina (Gilmour) Norton, also natives of St. Charles. The paternal ancestry is Irish, the maternal ancestry Scotch, a blood union that has produced many of our most successful men and women. The father lived in Minnesota the first thirty years of his life, immigrating with his family to North Yakima when that city was established in 1885. Here for many years he followed agricultural pursuits, as he had done in Minnesota, finally, however, engaging in the transfer business in North Yakima with which he is still occupied. Mrs. Norton was born in 1856. Archie has spent nearly his whole life in Yakima county. His education was received in the schools of North Yakima and included a high school course; also a supplementary course in bookkeeping and other business requirements. At the age of nineteen he entered the employ of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company at Lind, Washington, and previous to his promotion to the management of the Wapato branch was stationed at Kennewick and Mabton. He arrived at Wapato August 15, 1903, and at once opened a yard and began the construction of a warehouse which, when completed, will be the best one the company owns along the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific. Its dimensions are 40x150 feet, with an eight-foot porch surrounding the building. Besides a general lumber business, the Wapato branch will store and ship hops, potatoes, etc. All grades and sizes of finished and unfinished lumber, fruit boxes, ornamental work, etc., are carried by this corporation. Mr. Norton has one brother, William E., a harness-maker, and one sister, Alceda, both living in North Yakima. Fraternaly, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen. Wapato, he considers, is one of the coming important commercial centers of the county and as one of its business men is an indefatigable worker for its advancement. As an honest, industrious young citizen of ability and stability, a representative young American, Mr. Norton is respected and esteemed by all, who wish him only continued success and happiness.

ABNER J. SMITH, ranchman, lives three miles northwest of Wapato. It would be difficult to find a more typical representative of the old school of western pioneers than is the subject of this sketch. Few have had a more varied or exciting experience than has this frontiersman, Indian fighter, miner, freighter, farmer, stock raiser and traveler. As a pioneer of the Northwest, he is one of the earliest, having come to Oregon in 1843. Mr. Smith was born in Buchanan county, Missouri, May 10, 1838, to the union of Anderson and Ann (Enyart) Smith, natives of Kentucky, the birthplace of so many western pioneers. Anderson Smith crossed the Plains by ox teams to Oregon in 1843, settling upon a donation claim near Portland's site, where he lived until his death in 1873. The mother crossed the Plains with her husband and until her death lived in the Willamette valley also. Abner J. remained on the farm with his parents until seventeen years old, in February, 1856, enlisting as a volunteer to fight the rebellious Indians of the Northwest. He was in the famous campaign extending from Walla Walla west to the Yakima valley and thence south through Klickitat county to the Columbia, participating in several engagements, one on the Satus river. Upon being mustered out at Portland he joined Company K, Washington volunteers, serving under Captain Francis M. Goffs in eastern Oregon. An extended account of these wars will be found elsewhere in this volume. After these Indian campaigns, Mr. Smith made a trip to Fort Simcoe as government herder, and later lived at Vancouver, where he became well acquainted with Dr. McLoughlin of Hudson's Bay Company fame. In 1858 Mr. Smith drove a band of cattle to Jackson county, Oregon, and there engaged in mining a short time; then he went to Siskiyou county, California; thence to the Fraser river mines via The Dalles and Okanogan river, returning to Portland in the spring of 1861. Late that fall the wonderful Florence basin was discovered in Idaho and to it went our roving frontiersman, joining the mad stampede. A year later he visited the Canyon City mines in eastern Oregon, then went to Boise basin and Idaho City and finally closed his mining experience by spending two summers in the Warren diggings, although in subsequent years he visited Silver City (1871), Eureka, Nevada (1872), and Fraser river again (1873), besides engaging in a small way in washing the sands of the Columbia, near Umatilla. In 1873 he settled near Olympia and there for twenty-two years was successfully engaged in the oyster business, holding the responsible position of state oyster commissioner under Governor Rogers. Four years ago Mr. Smith purchased a ranch in Yakima county three miles below Zillah. In the fall of 1900 he came to his present home near Wapato, retaining the Zillah place until quite recently. Mr. Smith was married in the summer of 1896 to Mrs. Sophia

(Thomas) Howard, in whose veins flows the blood of the Yakima Indian race. One child, Frances Arilla, has resulted from this union, besides whom there are two daughters, Ida M. and Ara C., by a former marriage of Mr. Smith's. In political matters Mr. Smith is an unswerving Democrat. As the result of his service in Indian wars the government has placed him on the list of pensioners, his application having been allowed seven months ago. The grizzled old veteran and pioneer—one of the type rapidly becoming extinct—has done a full share in exploiting the natural advantages of the far West and in subduing the forces opposed to civilization and now, in the winter of life, is finding it most pleasant to spend his remaining years in the sunny, blooming Yakima country where he rode and fought half a century ago.

JOHN E. COMBS, a leaser of Indian land residing two and a half miles west of Wapato, is a prosperous, energetic young farmer of Yakima county. He was born in Noble county, Ohio, September 10, 1866, the son of Isaac M. and Agnes (Squires) Combs, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania respectively. The Combs family came to Ohio in the early part of the nineteenth century, John Combs' grandfather settling in Noble county when he was twelve years old. Isaac Combs was born and still lives on this old homestead. He assisted in the chase of Morgan, the Confederate raider, through Ohio in Civil war times. As an influential Republican Mr. Combs served his county two terms and part of another as commissioner and is still a force in his community. The mother was a member of the third generation of the Squires of Pennsylvania. The subject of this sketch passed his youth and early manhood in Ohio, receiving a substantial education in the common schools, supplemented by a business training in a Kansas City commercial school. At the conclusion of this two years' business course he accepted a position as collector in Kansas City, remaining there until March, 1891, when he came west to Spokane. In Washington he first settled at Oakesdale, where he farmed leased school land. The financial stringency of 1893 sent him into bankruptcy, but subsequently he recovered. The leased school land he still controls, having it rented. For a number of years Mr. Combs was receiving and shipping agent of the Pacific Coast Elevator Company's branch at Oakesdale and for a short time was employed in the mercantile business. In October, 1902, he came to Yakima county and the following March leased his present place of eighty acres. Mr. Combs has seven brothers and sisters: Frank D., owner of a planing mill and contractor at Caldwell, Ohio; Albert G., Charles M., Ode S., Cora M., Fred, and Estella F., all living in Ohio, the last named brother being a merchant in Bell Valley. Mr. Combs is united with the Modern Woodmen of America, is a member of the Presbyterian church and in politics is a Republican of most liberal views. He is satisfied that the Yakima country is one of the most favored spots in the Northwest and has shown a substantial token of his belief by becoming a citizen thereof. Although a new comer into the community, he has already won a position of influence among his fellow men.

ELIAS W. BAINTER, residing two miles southwest of Wapato, is a German-American farmer of unusually varied experience in the industry to which he has devoted a lifetime. Born in Hocking valley, Ohio, near the town of Logan, February 19, 1850, he is the son of Elias and Elizabeth (Easter) Bainter, the father being of German parentage but of American birth, while the mother was born in Germany. She came across the seas with her parents when a child. The father was born in 1810, and was one of the earliest pioneers of Hocking valley. He devoted his life to two noble pursuits, farming and preaching the Gospel, being a Methodist minister. The mother died in 1850; the father, nine years later. Elias, Junior, remained on his father's farm until eighteen years of age, meanwhile attending school. He then went to Illinois, the first step in his journey across the continent, and there for four years tilled the soil of Shelby county. In the fall of 1871 he pushed farther westward, settling in Harlan county, Nebraska, on government land. Ten years later he removed his home to Fillmore county, where for another ten years he farmed and raised stock with fair success. At the end of that decade, 1891, he took another step westward, living three years in Garfield county, Colorado; then moved to eastern Utah, and was there engaged in his favorite occupation until the fall of 1897, when he went northward into Box Elder county. Two years later, or in 1899, he continued his progress toward the Pacific, arriving in Yakima county in August of that year, and settling upon his present place near Wapato the following spring. Mr. Bainter believes that he has finally reached the peer of any farming country in the West, and in Yakima county he intends spending the remainder of his days. He was married September 13, 1877, in Fillmore county, Nebraska, to Miss Catherine L. Walker, the daughter of Thomas and Levina (Saylor) Walker. Thomas Walker was born in Maryland, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and died in January, 1885, in Nebraska. By occupation he was a successful farmer. The mother was of German descent. She died in June, 1901. Mrs. Bainter was born in Pennsylvania, in August, 1857, and came to Nebraska with her parents. To Mr. and Mrs. Bainter have been born the following children: Elmer C., at home; Mrs. Della Haye, living in North Yakima; Fred O., at home; Mrs. Mertie S. Washburn, a resident of Bellingham, Washington; Maisie L. and Ora B., both living at home. In political matters Mr. Bainter is tied to no particular party, but votes for the measures and men most satisfactory to him. While paying particular attention to the raising of potatoes and grain, in which he has been eminently successful, Mr. Bainter is also devoting considerable time and money to the breeding of thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs, attaining very good results. He is respected and esteemed as a substantial citizen of his community.

MARCUS D. MOODY, although his residence in Yakima county is one of less than three years' duration, has by his ability, strength of character and public spirit in that short period of time risen to a position of influence in his community. Living in a section of the county as yet considered a strip of frontier—the Yakima Indian reservation—Mr. Moody has taken an active part in the development of its natural resources, and the products of his ranch, situated four and a half miles southwest of Wapato, bear testimony to the fertility of the soil, the favorableness of the climate and his skill as a farmer. He was born in Caldwell county, North Carolina, January 22, 1863, to Robert H. and Bathsheba (Chambers) Moody, also natives of North Carolina, the father born May 10, 1822, and the mother November 28, 1830. Both parents were members of pioneer families in that state. The father's profession is that of a Baptist minister, and in this noble calling he has spent all the years of his manhood. The mother died in 1896, but Rev. R. H. Moody is still living, residing at Junction City, Kansas.

The subject of this biography received his early training in the duties of life on his father's farm and the farms of others in North Carolina, at the same time attending the common schools. When sixteen years old he went to Kansas with his parents, and there, five years later, he was married and commenced working for himself. Until 1887 he was engaged in farming and buying and selling land in Kansas, living in Rice county much of the time. In the western part of the state he pre-empted land, on which he lived until he went to California in 1887. He settled near Oakland, that state, where he lived for two and a half years, removing thence to Seattle. Here his home was until 1893, when central Washington attracted him so strongly as to induce him to file a homestead claim to a quarter section of fine land in Robinson canyon, Kittitas county. For seven years he made his home among the prosperous people of the Kittitas valley, where he drew to himself a host of friends; but in 1901 he discerned a better field for his endeavors in the great, virgin tract of Indian land along the Yakima river, below

North Yakima, so thither he came and there he has since lived, leasing a quarter section of the finest land.

Mr. Moody was married October 4, 1882, at Chase, Rice county, Kansas, to Miss Martha J. Kenton, a native of Kentucky, born in April, 1859, to the union of George W. and Elmira (Collins) Kenton. Her family—the Kentons—are members of the famous old Kentucky stock bearing that name, the Kentons with whom Daniel Boone fought in the conquest of Kentucky. George W. Kenton is still living at an advanced age at Raymond, Kansas, as is also his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Moody have been born eight children: Maude L., George R., Mary E., William T., Elmira B., Elvira E., Martha K. B., and David K., all of whom are living at home. As a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Mr. Moody holds the office of worthy adviser in the lodge to which he belongs; in political affairs he takes a deep interest and he is known as a stalwart Republican. In educational matters he is also deeply interested. He has been for many years a school director, at the present time being a member of the board in district No. 54 at Wapato. His service for the cause of education in both Kittitas and Yakima counties has been highly creditable to himself, and has brought out in strong light his abilities, perseverance and integrity as a citizen. His ranch produces hay, potatoes, grain and other products peculiarly adapted to the Yakima region.

PETER N. CAMPBELL, one of the prosperous and popular ranchmen engaged in farming on the reservation near Wapato, is of Scotch descent and endowed with those traits of character which have placed the Scotch people in the front ranks of our American citizenship, although as yet the subject of this biography is loyal to the British flag. He was born in Kent county, Ontario, in 1869, his parents being Peter and Isabella (McCarty) Campbell, born in Scotland in the years 1819 and 1825 respectively. The father came to New York in 1830 and subsequently settled in Canada with his parents. There he has successfully pursued farming and milling and with his wife still lives in the contentment of a ripe age. The mother came to Canada in 1838 and was there married to Mr. Campbell. Peter N. Campbell was educated in the public schools of Canada and also attended business college. For a time he acted as assistant bookkeeper in his father's mill. In 1882 the family went to Manitoba, where father and sons engaged in the elevator business at Portage la Prairie, also operating a grist-mill at that place. When Peter reached an age of judgment in business affairs he was placed in charge of the elevator, buying and shipping large quantities of grain. In connection with this business he and his brothers conducted a thousand-acre grain farm and bought and sold grain throughout the province. Mr. Campbell was thus successfully engaged until the middle nineties, when the financial stringency and other business troubles caused him to retire. In 1895 he sold his interests and came to North Yakima. For six years he leased and farmed two hundred and fifteen acres of land, known as the Dr. Morrison place, in the Yakima valley, raising hops, hay and fruit. Then, in 1901, he removed to his present home on the reservation, three and a half miles southwest of Wapato. On this eighty-acre farm he is prospering and gradually building up his interests.

He was married June 18, 1889, in Ontario, to Miss Mary Patterson, the daughter of John and Catherine (Smith) Patterson. The father was born in Scotland in 1819, came to Canada in his tenth year, where he lived, respected by all, until his death, September 7, 1903. The mother is of German descent, but of Canadian birth, and is still living. Mrs. Campbell was born in Ontario in 1865 and received her education at Ridgetown. Into Mr. and Mrs. Campbell's home have come five children, Roy, Vera, Pearl, Lorna and Ralph, the oldest of whom is thirteen and the youngest four. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are faithful members of the Christian church. He is affiliated with the Wapato camp of Modern Woodmen. Both he and his wife are highly esteemed as loyal, helpful friends and neighbors and he is recognized as a substantial, progressive citizen of integrity and true worth.

CHARLES D. LAWRENCE, who lives five miles southwest of Wapato on the reservation, where he leases a quarter section of fine land, is a native of Washington, Ohio, 1856 being the year of his birth. His father and mother were Henderson and Margaret (Fleming) Lawrence, he being born in Ohio in 1825, the son of two of the earliest pioneers of that region. His death occurred in 1862. The mother was a native of Scotland, who came to the United States when a young woman and died in Ohio in 1864 at the age of forty-two. She had a brother who accompanied the famous Fremont expedition to the Pacific. The son Charles when only seven years old was left an orphan. Fortunately, however, his aunt, Mrs. Lydia Lawrence-Hart, matron of the Marietta Orphans' Home for fifteen years beginning with 1869, took the young lad in charge and under her care he received a meager education and was instructed in farming. At the age of twenty he went to Corning, Iowa; a year later he engaged in farming for himself, living in Iowa nine years. Then he removed to Columbus, Nebraska. During his residence in Iowa, in 1878, a cyclone struck his home, destroying most of his property, grinding the house into kindling wood and carrying the family some distance, thought not seriously injuring them. In Nebraska he engaged in farming and stock raising extensively, living there nine years, during which period he prospered exceedingly. Then he sold out and spent two years in the Ozark mountains, Missouri, after which he lived successively in western Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas, Dakota, where he lived from 1895 to 1900, Idaho, and finally in June, 1902, settled upon his present place, where he intends remaining, as he considers the Yakima valley one of the best favored localities in the West.

Mr. Lawrence was married October 21, 1877, in Iowa, to Miss Mary J. Lock, born in Ohio, 1856, to the union of Jacob and Phoebe (Filman) Lock. Both father and mother were born in Prussia—in 1830 and 1829, respectively. Mr. Lock came to America when he was nineteen years old. In 1864 he settled in Iowa and later went to Nebraska, where he and his wife are still living. By trade he is a tailor. One of his brothers served in the Civil war and was present at the capture of Jefferson Davis. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence's children are as follows: Phoebe, Henry J., Simon, Lydia, Estella R., Charles D. and Rufus F. Mr. Lawrence is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Because of their congeniality, hospitality and true kindness Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have won the friendship of all with whom they came in contact, and the husband and father is considered a good citizen. His ranch is principally devoted to corn, alfalfa and potatoes.

REV. FREEMAN WALDEN, now engaged in fruit growing and hay farming, resides three miles northwest of Zillah. He was born in Indiana March 18, 1839, the son of Joseph and Rhoda (Sparks) Walden. His father was a native of Connecticut, born in 1792; was a physician and school teacher, a veteran of the War of 1812, and died in 1854. His mother was a native of Tennessee, born in 1812 and died in 1864. The son Freeman received a high school and college education in Iowa and taught school both before and after graduation. In 1862 he ceased his labors as a teacher and entered the ministry, in which calling he has ever since remained, although he has not preached for compensation since 1896. He came to Washington in 1888, locating at Waitsburg, where he had charge of a congregation for four years. Afterwards he had charge of the Christian church at North Yakima for several months, eventually resigning and going east. After one year in Clinton, Missouri, and one year in Boise, Idaho, he returned to Washington and was located first in Pomeroy and later in Ellensburg. Although he still preaches every Sunday, he closed his work in the ministry as a calling when he gave up the Ellensburg charge. In 1888 he was elected president of the first state convention of ministers and for one year served the association as a state evangelist. In 1898 he organized the first church in Zillah, at the present time an active and a growing congregation. Rev. Mr. Walden has always been a student of horticulture and many years ago published a book in Iowa entitled "The Small Fruit Guide." In 1891 he purchased eighty acres of land where he now lives and afterwards sent his sons here to start a nursery. This was successfully accomplished and one hundred thousand fruit trees were sold in the valley, besides those grown for the setting of a large orchard on the place. Other acres were afterwards added to the farm, which now consists of two hundred and six acres, sixty of which are in bearing orchard and forty more in young trees. Mr. Walden is known as the apple king of central Washington, and probably produces more and finer apples than any one else in the state. He personally superintended the packing of fifty boxes of apples which he sent to the Buffalo Exposition and which captured a gold medal. He is an acknowledged authority on horticulture; is editor of the horticultural department of The Ranch, a farm paper published at Seattle; is a regularly engaged lecturer before the farmers' institutes throughout the state, and has been invited to lecture on the subject in British Columbia and at other places.

Mr. Walden was married in Iowa in 1862, to Miss Mary O. Berry, who was born in the same state in 1840, the daughter of Samuel H. and Ellen (Barnes) Berry. The wife died in North Yakima in 1891; she was the mother of nine children. Mr. Walden was again married in 1892 to Mrs. Anna E. (Beeson) Van Voorhees, born in Ohio, July, 1843, the daughter of Samuel and Martha (Smith) Beeson. Mr. Walden has one brother living, Joseph, born in Iowa and now living in Minnesota. The following are the names of the children: A. Judson, James C., Lettie M., Leila, William B., Hattie and Mattie (twins), deceased; Smiley F., born in Iowa, April 22, 1867, married in North Yakima, October 25, 1893, to Miss Edna Van Buskirk; their children are: Francis L., Zella M., and Gladys B.; Francis M., born in Iowa, October 18, 1877, married, June 30, 1903, to Miss Myrtle Gale, living on the home farm. Mr. Walden's fraternal connections are with the Masons. In political matters he advocates the principles of the Republican party. The greater portion of his time is devoted to the superintendency of the fruit farm, which has yielded in some years a net income of one hundred dollars per acre. He always takes a special interest in educational matters and is identified with the organization of school district No. 50. He is widely known over central Washington for his work as a minister and as a horticulturist; is a man of influence in local and general affairs; has lived a very busy and a very useful life, and wherever known is highly esteemed and respected by his fellow men.

JOHN P. FOX, postmaster at Zillah, Washington, is a native of Ohio, where he was born July 17, 1847, the son of John and Mary (Fisher) Fox. His father was a farmer, born in Virginia, 1811, one of the first settlers in Vernon county, Wisconsin, where he died; he was of German and Irish descent. His mother, of German descent, was born in Pennsylvania in 1814 and died in Wisconsin. The son John attended school in Wisconsin until sixteen years old, when he began to earn his own living. At the age of twenty he opened a blacksmith shop, hiring a smith from whom he learned the trade, following this, with intervals spent in other occupations, until 1898. In 1870 he went to Minnesota and engaged in raising wheat; but the venture not proving successful, he returned to Wisconsin, farmed for four years and again opened a blacksmith shop. In 1887 he went to Champion, Nebraska, opened a shop and continued there until 1893, when he came to Washington, locating in Zillah. Here he bought a shop that had already been built, the first erected in the town, which he operated until he received the appointment as postmaster in 1898. In 1900 he purchased forty acres of land adjoining the town and has made of it one of the best farms in the vicinity. Two sisters, Mrs. Amanda Marsh and Mrs. Melissa Marsh, live in Nebraska; two brothers, Elias and LaFayette, live in Wisconsin. One sister and three brothers are dead; two of the brothers, members of Company I, Sixth Wisconsin volunteers, died while soldiers of the Civil war. Mr. Fox was married in Wisconsin, in 1868, to Miss Clarissa Allen, who was born in Wisconsin June 22, 1848, the daughter of John W. and Larina (Boyer) Allen, natives of New York. Miss Allen was fifth in a family of nine girls and four boys. Six of her brothers and sisters are living, as follows: Mrs. Harriet Bingham, Mrs. Amanda Lind, Mrs. Juliette Board, Mrs. Augusta Proctor, Thomas and Ethan Allen, all living in Wisconsin. John W. Allen, the father of Mrs. Fox, was a pioneer of the early forties in Wisconsin, a period when there were no railroads and when it was necessary to haul wheat by wagon to Milwaukee, a distance of ninety miles. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fox: Delmer, born in Wisconsin, May 27, 1869, now a real estate dealer in Zillah, married, and has one daughter, Gratia, born in Ashland, Wisconsin, 1895; George, born in Minnesota January 28, 1871, also married, and living in Zillah; and Walter, born in Wisconsin, April 9, 1880, living with his parents. Besides the farm, on which there are six acres of orchard, Mr. and Mrs. Fox have a comfortable home in Zillah. Mr. Fox is a Republican, and has fraternal connections with the Masons and with the Odd Fellows. He is an efficient postmaster, a man of energy and correct principles, well known for his sterling traits of character and highly respected by his fellow men.

WILLIS S. DOUGLASS, water superintendent of the big Sunnyside canal, who resides at Zillah, has been a citizen of Yakima county for fourteen years. He was born in the state of New York, March 25, 1874, the son of Joshua P. and Eliza (Robinson) Douglass. The elder Douglass was a native of New York, born in 1831, was a teacher by profession, and for a number of years was principal of the Utica, New York, schools. In the later years of his life he followed farming and died in Yakima county, November 20, 1902. His wife, the mother of Willis Douglass, also a native of New York, born in 1835, died in Yakima county, July 20, 1903. When the son Willis was but two years old his parents moved from New York to Nebraska and here he received his education in the common schools. When seventeen years old, in 1891, he came to Yakima county, Washington, and engaged at once in carpenter work for the Northern Pacific, Yakima and Kittitas Irrigation Company, the promoter of the Sunnyside canal. During the winter months he attended school and, in 1884, attended one term in the Woodcock academy. He continued with the irrigation company, was from time to time promoted, and when the canal changed owners, in 1889, he was made water superintendent, a position of many responsibilities, which he still holds. He has four sisters and two brothers: Mrs. Alice Walker and Mrs. Nannie Mudd, residing in Zillah; Joshua P., a printer, living in Chicago, Illinois; Grace, living on the home farm; Arthur, a law student in California, and Lena, a school teacher, living on the home farm. There is also a half-brother, Ernest M. Douglass, principal of the public schools at Sunnyside. Arthur Douglass has spent six years in the Philippines, three years as a soldier in a volunteer regiment. October 9, 1897, witnessed the marriage in North Yakima of Willis Douglass and Miss Ethel D. Eader, who was born in Danville, Illinois, March 18, 1880, the daughter of David and Mollie (Pridmore) Eader, natives of Illinois and now living in Indiana. Her father is a dealer in musical instruments and has several stores in eastern cities. Mrs. Douglass has three sisters: Mrs. Edith Stevens, in California; Mrs. Mable Henderson, in Seattle; and Gratia Eader, with her parents. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Douglass: Lucile, born August 1, 1898, and Clarence E., born October 10, 1901. The family attend the Christian church. Mr. Douglass' fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen and the Woodmen of the World. In political matters, he is an ardent supporter of President Roosevelt. His property interests consist of a valuable forty-acre farm, three and one-half miles east of Zillah, a comfortable home in the town and some real estate in Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Dougiass is known as a man of strict integrity, of exceptional business and executive ability, energetic and progressive, and he is held in high esteem by all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

GEORGE W. MASON, for fourteen years a resident of Yakima county, is now farming five miles east of Zillah. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born December 25, 1837, the son of Jacob and Amanda (Harroun) Mason, the father a native of Pennsylvania and a pioneer of Minnesota, and the mother a native of Vermont, born in 1806. Mr. Mason received his education in the common schools of Wisconsin; quit school at the age of nineteen and, until twenty-six years of age, assisted his parents on the farm. At this age he enlisted in Company B, Tenth Minnesota volunteer infantry, for service in the Civil war. He served from August 14, 1862, to May 22, 1865, the date of his honorable discharge, and during this time took part in some of the most important and decisive battles of the war. Prior to 1862 he saw service in Minnesota and Dakota against the Sioux Indians, participated in the hazardous engagements of the campaigns and escaped unharmed. For ten years after the war he engaged in farming in Minnesota. In 1875 he moved to Linn county, Oregon, and for three years farmed near Harrisburg, meeting with good success, but failing in health. In 1879 he removed to Goldendale, Washington, where for ten years he followed carpenter work and farming. In 1890 he again changed his location, this time going to North Yakima, where he opened a hotel and also worked at the carpenter's trade. In 1892 he purchased forty acres of land, where he now resides, and which he has transformed from a wild sage-brush tract to a very productive farm and a most comfortable home. On the farm is an orchard of four acres, a good dwelling and other buildings, and twenty head of stock, the result of energy and perseverance. While a resident of Minnesota, Mr. Mason served on the board of supervisors in his home county and also as township treasurer. He is now a district road supervisor of Yakima county. He put up the first building in the town of Prosser, hauling the lumber fifty miles. He has three sisters and two brothers living: Mrs. Camelia Sanborn, in Portland; Mrs. Lucinda Mills, in California; Mrs. Harriet Baker, in Minnesota; David, in Oregon, and Edgar E., in Klickitat county. In 1860 Mr. Mason was married in Minnesota to Miss Melinda Twitchell, who was born in Maine, August 18, 1844, the daughter of Hiram and Maria (Dodge) Twitchell, natives of Maine, and both long since dead. Mrs. Mason was the oldest of a family of six children. The names of her brother and sisters follow: William Twitchell; Mrs. Mary Mason, Klickitat county; Mrs. Anna Williams, Goldendale; Mrs. Helen Merton, Zillah, and Mrs. Effie Hackley, Cleveland, Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Mason have been born seven children, four in Minnesota and three in Washington: Mrs. Lettie Faulkner, born March 5, 1870, now in Cleveland, Washington; Mrs. Clara B. Sprague, September 17, 1871, living in Zillah; Artemas, May 2, 1873, farming near Zillah; Ralph, October 7, 1874, farming near Zillah; Albert, July 8, 1880; Jesse, January 17, 1883, and Ethel, May 10, 1886; the three younger children reside with the parents. Mr. Mason has resided nearly all of his years on the frontier and is familiar with the dangers and hardships of pioneer life. He has led a busy and a useful life; is a man of correct principles, fair and honorable in his dealings with others, and is held in high esteem by his fellow men wherever he is known.

ROBERT D. HEROD, for ten years a resident of Yakima county, resides in Zillah and operates one of the best farms in the section, situated a short distance from town. He is one of the most successful farmers in the valley. Mr. Herod is a native of Ontario, Canada, born June 6, 1862. He is the son of John and Eliza (Robinson) Herod, the father a farmer by occupation, born in England in 1823 and still living, in good health, in Canada; the mother (deceased) born in Canada in 1830. The son, Robert D., spent his youth and early manhood in the country of his birth and was there educated. He remained in school until twenty years old, engaging at this early age in contracting and building and remaining so occupied for five years. In 1889 he moved to Tacoma, Washington, and for a time followed brick laying, being very successful in this occupation. Shortly afterwards, because of his proficiency, he was made foreman by the contractor, A. E. Barrett, and eventually formed a partnership with him in the contracting and building business. The firm built some of the finest brick business blocks in Tacoma; they also built the science hall and the boys' dormitory at the State Agricultural College at Pullman, Washington. In 1894 Mr. Herod came to Yakima county and purchased thirty acres of land two miles from Zillah, which he transformed from a sage-brush wilderness into a beautiful fruit farm and an ideal home. In 1899 he went to British Columbia on a prospecting and mining trip but did not meet with very great success. Returning to the farm, he sold it in 1902 for seven thousand five hundred dollars. He then purchased eighty acres near Zillah, on which he is putting out forty-two acres of orchard and fifteen acres of hops; the remainder is seeded to alfalfa. Those who have assisted materially in the development of the Yakima valley, now one of the most famous agricultural regions of the Northwest, are entitled to special credit, and none has been more successful in this great work than Robert Herod. His industry has met its just reward and he is now the possessor of the valuable farm described above, besides a beautiful home in Zillah on which he has erected a fine eight-room dwelling. He also carries a paid-up, twenty-year endowment life policy for three thousand dollars and owns two thousand five hundred shares in the Kootenai-Tacoma mine in British Columbia. Mr. Herod is seventh in a family of ten children. One brother, John, lives in Detroit, Michigan; the other members of the family, whose names follow, live in Canada: Mrs. Rebecca Clark, William, Thomas, Mrs. Mary A. Ford, James, Charles, Edmund and Matilda. November 25, 1891, Mr. Herod was married in Tacoma to Miss Emma Thorndyke, a native of Canada and the daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Thorndyke, the father a native of England and the mother of Canada; both the parents are dead. Mrs. Herod's brothers and sisters are as follows: John Thorndyke, deceased, William, Mrs. Ellen J. Gibson, Mrs. Elizabeth Derbyshire, Mrs. Anna Salter, Edward, Joseph, Adela, Mrs. Hortense Oliver, and Mrs. Maria Oliver. Mrs. Gibson lives in Yakima county, Mrs. Derbyshire and Mrs. Salter in Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Hortense Oliver in England, and the others in Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Herod have one child, Alice Mignon, born in North Yakima, August 15, 1902. Husband and wife are members of the Episcopal communion. Mr. Herod is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and, as a politician, supports the principles of the Republican party. He is industrious, and progressive in his ideas; is a man of exceptional business ability and of the strictest integrity. He has good business foresight and an abiding faith in the future of the Yakima valley. He is a man of influence in local and county affairs, is making a success of life and, wherever known, is respected and highly esteemed by his fellow men.

ISAAC M. McCART, who came to Yakima county in 1893, is engaged in farming and fruit growing one-half mile east of Zillah. His birthplace was New Orleans, Louisiana, and the date of his birth September 15, 1853. He is the son of James R. and Matilda (Wheat) McCart, natives of Kentucky, both deceased. His father was a tobacco merchant, born April 17, 1827, and his mother was born February 9, 1833. Until fourteen years of age, the son of Isaac attended the common schools of Kentucky and Indiana, receiving a good education. During the next six years he learned the trade of a practical machinist and also became a mechanical engineer. Completing his apprenticeship at the age of twenty he went to Leavenworth, Kansas, and entered the employ of the Leavenworth Mining Company, continuing with them for five years as chief engineer in the boiler room and pump house; thence he went to Richmond, Missouri, and for four years acted as the chief engineer of mine No. 7. His next move was to Portland, Oregon, where for a time he was variously employed; then moving to Gray's Harbor, Washington, and remaining for eighteen months as first assistant engineer for the Cosmopolitan Commercial Company; thence to Ocosta, Washington, where for fourteen months he was chief engineer for A. P. Watton & Company. In 1893 he came to North Yakima and shortly afterwards to Zillah, where he purchased a homestead relinquishment to one hundred and sixty acres of land, on which he is still residing. Although having many obstacles to overcome, he has persevered in the work of improvement and now has one of the most productive and valuable farms in that part of the country. Not until the third year did he produce enough to meet expenses; then raising forty-six tons of potatoes on five acres, and selling for eleven dollars per ton, he was given a start and has since netted each year a good income from the place, thirty acres being directly under the big ditch and under a high state of cultivation. From one and one-fourth acres he sells each year four hundred dollars worth of strawberries, and from his orchard receives a handsome income. He is also a breeder of fine stock; has some registered Jersey and Shorthorn cattle, also a Hambletonian horse, a gelding, registered number, 79027. He has also a thoroughbred gelding, seven years old, that is considered a phenomenon; it is fifteen hands high and weighs one thousand three hundred and fifty pounds. In addition, he raises standard bred hogs and poultry. Mr. McCart has one sister and two brothers, Mrs. Florence E. Brown, Benjamin F. and James H. McCart, junior, living in Richmond, Missouri, and one sister, Mrs. Carrie B. Jones, in Centerville, Iowa. He was married in Washington, Indiana, in 1897, to Miss Katherine Herbert, who was born in Champaign, Illinois, October 25, 1858, the daughter of Dorsey and Mary (Moore) Herbert; the father (deceased), a native of Kentucky; the mother now living in Indiana. Mrs. McCart has three sisters and one brother, residents of Indiana: Mrs. Margaret B. Carter, Mrs. Mary E. Janott, Joseph Herbert and Mrs. Callie Hutchinson. Mr. and Mrs. McCart attend the Episcopal church. In politics, Mr. McCart is a Silver Republican and takes a lively interest in campaigns, taking the stump for his party in both state and national contests. He is a forceful and effective speaker. He is a man of integrity and influence, is making a success of life, is one of the substantial and reliable citizens of the county and commands the confidence and respect of all who know him.

GEORGE P. EATON, living five and five-eighths miles southeast of Zillah, is a native of New York state, born in Oxford, February 25, 1855, the son of Warren and Eliza (Penston) Eaton, the father (deceased) a farmer, born in Vermont in 1814, the mother, still living in Oxford, born in Utica, New York, September 12, 1818. The son, George, received his education in the Oxford academy and in Cornell university, being graduated from the latter institution with the class of 1878. After graduation he at once entered the employment of Dr. Jackson, of the Dansville (New York) Sanitarium, as his private secretary, continuing so employed until March, 1880, when he started for the Pacific coast, locating for a short time at Waitsburg, Washington, as reporter on the Waitsburg Times. During the same summer Mr. Eaton entered the surveying department of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, quitting in the fall of the year, and employing himself one term as a school teacher. From December, 1880, to October, 1881, he was engaged in the United States land office at Walla Walla, first as stenographer and later as clerk; thence going to Tacoma and entering the land department of the Northern Pacific railroad. He went to Portland, Oregon, when the company's office was removed there in September, 1882, and was promoted from clerk to assistant chief clerk, then to chief clerk, and eventually to assistant general land agent. He afterwards served for one year as secretary of the Washington State Immigration Association, and was subsequently for several years chief tax clerk for the Northern Pacific railroad at Tacoma. He is now secretary of the Sunnyside Railway Company, organized for the purpose of building a railroad from Toppenish to Prosser via Sunnyside, and is also president and general manager of the Sunnyside Farm Company. In 1891 he filed on three hundred and twenty acres of desert land five miles from Zillah, and began improvements in the spring of 1892, being among the first to begin improvements under the big ditch. This land he eventually sold to the Sunnyside Farm Company, of which he is president.

Mr. Eaton has three sisters: Mrs. Amanda C. Fletcher and Lizzie B. Eaton, of Oxford, New York, and Mrs. Emma M. Brown, of Waverly, New York. One brother, Charles B., is a member of the firm of Bowman, Bolster & Eaton, court stenographers, of Seattle. Another brother, James W., served in the Civil war in Company H, New York

heavy artillery, was taken prisoner in the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, and died in Salisbury prison in January, 1865.

Mr. Eaton was married to Miss Emma Kinnear, youngest daughter of William C. Kinnear and Elizabeth Kinnear, of Crawfordville, Iowa. Her parents died when she was a child. Mrs. Eaton came west with her brothers, Alvin L. Kinnear, deceased; Emera Kinnear, now a merchant of Spokane, Washington, and W. L. Kinnear, a merchant at Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, and her sister, Mary J. Williams, of Oakesdale, Washington. She received her education in St. Paul's school, Walla Walla, being one of the first graduates and afterwards a teacher in that institution. To Mr. and Mrs. Eaton have been born the following children: Emma K. Eaton, born in Portland, Oregon; Warren, born January 15, 1888; Edith, born February 22, 1890, and Clara, born June 25, 1895, the three younger children being born in Tacoma, Washington. Mrs. Eaton belongs to the Episcopal church. In political campaigns, Mr. Eaton supports the principles of the Republican party. He is a man of exceptional business and executive ability, of strict integrity, fair and honorable in his dealings with others, and is esteemed and respected by all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

CORNELIUS H. FURMAN, proprietor of the Hotel Zillah and dealer in real estate in Zillah, Washington, is a native of Illinois, where he was born August 6, 1855, the son of William and Maria (Morton) Furman. His father was a miller by trade, born in Rochester, New York, in 1826. His mother, born in Ohio, of Vermont parentage, in 1835, still lives, a resident of Zillah. The son, Cornelius, received his education in the schools of Wisconsin and Iowa, and, at the age of fifteen, quit his studies to assist his father on the farm. In the meantime, between the ages of eleven and fifteen, he had learned the miller's trade, and, at the age of seventeen, took charge of a flour-mill in southern Minnesota, continuing its operation for five years. From 1879 to 1889 he served the government most satisfactorily in the capacity of railway postal clerk. At the end of this time he engaged in the real estate and improvement business in the employ of the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company. During this period the disastrous Hinkley, Minnesota, fire occurred, which, spreading to adjacent territory, destroyed all the buildings on a farm belonging to Mr. Furman. He assisted in the rescue of the Hinkley sufferers, and at once rebuilt the farm buildings, which a short time afterwards were carried away by a cyclone. May 30, 1899, he left Minneapolis for Yakima county, Washington. Arriving here, he invested in some land near North Yakima, selling the same six months later at a fifty per cent advance over the purchase price. He then came to Zillah, and purchased the hotel and stage line, with which he has since been identified, and also engaged in the real estate business. He has since become interested in valley lands; owns forty acres in the vicinity of Zillah, and a number of lots in the town. He also has a fine bunch of horses and cattle. He is the oldest in a family of four children. The names of his three brothers follow: Benjamin C., deceased; Adilbert D., who served with the Fifteenth Minnesota boys in the Spanish-American war, now an electrician, living in Minnesota; and Charles B., a grain inspector, living in West Superior. Mr. Furman was married in Windom, Minnesota, December 20, 1878, to Miss Ella V. Hopkins, born in Pennsylvania, January 20, 1858, the daughter of Oliver and Rachel (Randolph) Hopkins, native of Pennsylvania and New York, respectively, and both dead. Mrs. Furman has one brother, Stephen Hopkins, a Minnesota farmer. She had two brothers who died in the Confederate prison at Andersonville. Mr. and Mrs. Furman have three daughters and one son, all born in Minnesota, as follows: Mrs. Mildred B. Haynor, of Faro, British Columbia; Mrs. Rachel M. McCormick, and Mrs. Clara M. Renahan, living in Yakima county; and Benjamin C., at home. Mr. and Mrs. Furman attend the Methodist church. In political matters, Mr. Furman is an influential Republican, and is now justice of the peace at Zillah. His fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, and Mrs. Furman is a member of the Royal Neighbors. He is a leading citizen and a man of influence in local affairs, of exceptional business ability and of strict integrity, and commands the respect and esteem of his fellow men.

JULIUS F. CRITTENDEN, for ten years a resident of Yakima county, is engaged in agricultural pursuits three miles southeast of Zillah. His native town is Saline, Michigan, where he was born September 20, 1851. His father, Byron B. Crittenden, was a farmer and a photographer, born in the state of New York in 1827. His mother, Eliza (Morgan) Crittenden, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1820. Both parents are dead. The son Julius spent his early life in his native state, where he received his education. At the age of twenty he quit his studies and for several years assisted his father on the farm, remaining so employed until 1880. At this time he entered the employ of the Michigan Central Railroad as a brakeman, remaining with them for seven years and eventually becoming a conductor. In this capacity he was afterwards employed by the Burlington railroad and later by the Chicago Great Western road. Concluding to abandon railroading as a life business, he resigned his position in 1894 and came directly to Washington, stopping for a short time in Tacoma. In May of this year he came to Zillah and purchased ten acres of arid sage-brush land and immediately commenced its improvement. He met with many reverses and was forced to endure many hardships, but being unable to get away, because of lack of means and for other reasons, he persevered, continuing his improvements, and by the year 1899 began to realize something from the farm. Since that year each season has witnessed an improvement in conditions. He eventually purchased fifteen acres adjoining the original investment and the whole tract has, by skill and industry, been transformed from its wild, arid state to a beautiful farm and home, on which is a splendid orchard containing six acres. One brother, Clarence Crittenden, is a printer, living in Seattle. The marriage of Julius Crittenden and Miss Carrie Lewis was celebrated in Michigan in 1872. Miss Lewis was born in Michigan November 24, 1856, the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Agard) Lewis, natives of Ohio, the father (deceased), born in 1804, and the mother, born in 1820, now living near Lansing, Michigan. Mrs. Crittenden has two brothers living, Daniel and Alfred Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden have two daughters and one son, all born in Michigan. Their names follow: Mrs. Blanche Smith, living in Connell, Washington; Mrs. Bessie Rowland, in Yakima county, and Earl J. Crittenden, at home. Byron B. Crittenden, father of the subject of this article, was a man well known in this section of the county and greatly revered and esteemed because of his genial nature and his devoutly Christian life. He was public spirited and charitable to a fault; assisted by donations of money and labor in the building of the Christian church at Zillah, of which he was a member and, following his death, near Zillah, January 13, 1901, his remains were followed to their last resting place by one of the largest processions of friends that has ever been witnessed in this part of the county. Mrs. Crittenden is a member of the Christian church. In political affairs, Mr. Crittenden is a Democrat; his fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias. He is industrious and energetic and hence is meeting with success; is a man of integrity and correct principles, and with his wife, shares the confidence and respect of all who know them.

JEREMIAH L. LEASE, agriculturist and fruit grower, resides three and one-half miles east of Zillah. He is a native of West Virginia, where he was born January 18, 1838. His father, John B. Lease (deceased), was a Maryland farmer, born 1806, and his mother, Susanna (Flick) Lease (deceased), was a Virginian, born 1810. Jeremiah Lease, although a resident of the state of Washington for seven years only, is a typical pioneer and frontiersman, the blazer of many a "spotted trail" over which the forerunners of civilization penetrated the wilds of the Middle West and the Northwest. He belongs to that class known as "self-made" men whose knowledge of the world has been gained by experience and observation rather than by years of application to study. His life has been spent on the frontier, where school privileges were not enjoyed and where opportunities for acquiring "knowledge from books" were not afforded. But he has been a man of resources, of industry and perseverance, and has faced the dangers and hardships of life with true courage, forcing success where many others have failed. In 1846, when he was eight years old, his parents moved from Virginia to an unsettled portion of Ohio; thence in a short time to the Wisconsin frontier; in 1870 to South Dakota; then to North Dakota, where settlement was made on the Cannon Ball river. He was there during the Indian troubles that unsettled the affairs of that region and was among the Indians at the time Chief Sitting Bull was slain. In 1897 he came to Washington, locating in Asotin county, and in 1901, came to Yakima county and purchased the land on which he now resides. Here he has a valuable farm and a comfortable home, ten acres of orchard and thirty acres of timothy and clover, twenty-five head of cattle and horses, and all the accumulations of the successful farmer. In 1860 Mr. Lease was married in Wisconsin to Miss Mary A. Shambaugh, who died a few years later in South Dakota. He was again married in Missouri in 1881 to Miss Emma Parsons. Mr. and Mrs. Lease have ten children, all living at home. Their names follow: Jeremiah, Jr., Thomas, Emanuel, Mary, Alonzo, Maude, Alice, James R., Katie and Frederick W. Mr. and Mrs. Lease worship with the Seventh Day Adventists. In politics, Mr. Lease votes with the Democratic party. Coming to the country comparatively a poor man, he has made a success of farming. He is known as a man of sound principles, fair and honorable in all ways, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellow men.

ARCHIE J. ELLIOTT, the well-known blacksmith of Zillah, Washington, is a native of Canada, born in the family home on the banks of the St. Lawrence river, in 1846. He is the son of Hiram and Margaret (Borden) Elliott, also natives of Canada. The father's ancestors were immigrants to Canada from the state of New York. In 1863 Hiram Elliott moved to Illinois and later to Iowa, where he died. His wife, the mother of Archie Elliott, died in Nebraska, in 1902. The son Archie received his education in Canada and in 1863 went with his parents to Illinois. At the age of eighteen he began learning the blacksmith's trade and spent the first few years in this trade in Illinois and Iowa. He was then for several years located in various cities, going first to Omaha, Nebraska; thence to Des Moines and Cedar Falls, Iowa; thence to Oregon, Illinois, where he formed a partnership with a cousin; thence to Hampton, Iowa, where he remained two years. Leaving Iowa again, he went to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and entered the employ of the government as a horseshoer and, eighteen months later, was sent to Fort Robinson, where, for thirteen years, he continued in the service of the United States. In the beginning of the Spanish-American war he was sent to Chickamauga, Georgia, where troops were being massed, and expected to be sent on to Cuba. He was held at Chickamauga during the summer, however, and in the fall of the year 1898 severed his connection with the government and went to Crawford, Nebraska, where he engaged for a time in farming. In 1900 he again changed locations, this time coming to Washington, overland with teams, arriving at Zillah July 14, and at once putting up a shop. Later, however, he rented a shop already built and in operation, and in turn rented his new building to a physician for an office, but has since built another shop. He has built up a good trade and is now recognized as one of the substantial citizens of the town. He has invested considerable capital in town property and now owns two residences, besides a number of business and residence lots. Mr. Elliott was married, in 1873, to Miss Nellie Quick, who died a few years later, leaving two children, George P. and Charles A. In 1807 he was again married, to Mrs. Rosa Hand. Mr. Elliott is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is making a success of his business in Zillah; is energetic and progressive, a man of generous impulses, esteemed by friends and acquaintances and respected by all with whom he comes in contact in a business or social way.

COLONEL A. C. WALKER, for fourteen years a citizen of Yakima county, Washington, is now engaged in farming and raising fruit two miles east of Zillah. Mr. Walker is a native of the old Bay state, having been born in Worcester county, Massachusetts, in 1834. He is the son of Walter and Salinda (Hill) Walker, natives of Massachusetts, father and son being born in the same county. The elder Walker was of English and French descent and his people settled in Massachusetts in a very early day. The son, A. C. Walker, was educated in his native state; attended the common and high schools and afterwards took the preparatory course required for matriculation in the colleges of Massachusetts. After the completion of his studies he was placed in a wholesale boot and shoe house, where he became thoroughly conversant with all departments of the business, and, until his coming to the Pacific Northwest, was always connected with some of the great manufacturing establishments of that great manufacturing state. After many years' close attention to his commercial interests he became possessed with the desire to see the Pacific coast country and, with this end in view, left Massachusetts in 1890 for Portland, Seattle and other points, thinking to spend six months in pleasurable rambles up and down the coast. After a visit to the cities named he came to Yakima county to spend a short time with a relative, Colonel Howlett, and, being delighted with the climate and with the wonderful possibilities of the country, he decided to remain, making it his permanent home. The first year was spent in the real estate business with Colonel Howlett in North Yakima. In the meanwhile he had taken up a timber claim, a desert claim and a homestead, the latter where he now resides, and eventually proved up on all the tracts. At that time the surveys for the great Sunnyside canal had not been made. When the canal was completed he gave the company eighty of his one hundred and sixty acres, for the water right on the other half, which he has improved and developed into one of the best producing farms in this section of the county, and has made of it also an ideal home. He has since added one hundred acres to his holdings in the valley, and at the present time engages principally in the raising of alfalfa. He was about the first homesteader to settle here, there being at the time absolutely no one permanently settled between this point and Prosser. Mr. Walker was married in Massachusetts in early life, but the wife died before his departure for the west. He has one son, Arthur, in the wholesale boot and shoe business in Boston. In 1901 he was again married to Miss Alice Douglas, a native of New York. Mr. Walker's fraternal connections are with the North Yakima lodge of Elks. In political matters he supports the principles of the Republican party and was a few years ago the party candidate for assessor, meeting defeat with the balance of the ticket. He is recognized as one of the most influential party leaders, both in local and state campaigns. He is a man of exceptional business and executive ability and is one of the more successful agriculturists of the valley. Fourteen years' residence in the county has not diminished his faith in its future, which he believes to be fraught with still greater possibilities in the further development of its natural resources. As a man of strictest integrity and honor, of progressive ideas and devotion to the advancement of the people among whom he has established a permanent home, he has won and retains the confidence and respect of all.

ALVIN DALTON, farmer and horticulturist, lives three miles southeast of Zillah. He was born in Columbia county, Wisconsin, July 26, 1847, the son of William and Clara (Bradley) Dalton, natives of Maine. William Dalton served under General Scott in the War of 1812, with Great Britain, and his father was a soldier in the Revolution. The parents are dead. They were pioneers in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Montana, going from Wisconsin to Minnesota in 1861, and shortly afterwards to Montana with the Captain Fisk immigrant train. At the time the last long, dreary and hazardous journey was made, Alvin Dalton was fourteen years old, his early youth having been spent in the common schools and on the farm in his native state. In 1865 he went to Colorado, and from there returned to Minnesota, where he remained four years. June 12, 1871, he was married in Sioux City, Iowa, to Miss Isabella Fogg, daughter of George and Nancy (Brown) Fogg, the father a veteran of the Civil war, who was sent to the middle Northwest to assist in quelling the Sioux Indians. He was of English descent. The parents of Mrs. Dalton are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Dalton, with her parents, went to Colorado in 1874 and engaged in farming, prospecting and raising stock; thence, in 1877, to the Black Hills, where Mr. Dalton followed mining for three years, assisting while there in putting in the first timbers in the famous Homestake mine. In 1882 he went to the Wood river, Idaho, mining region; thence to the Coeur d'Alene mines; thence to Thompson Falls, Montana, engaging during this period in mining and hunting. From Thompson Falls he went to Kootenai county, Idaho, and took up a ranch on the Pend d'Oreille lake, raising stock here for five years. During the floods of 1894 most of his stock perished and he decided upon another change in location. Selling out the same year, he came to Yakima county and took up the farm where he has since resided. He has made two trips to Alaska, the first, in 1897, with his son, Frank P., and the second in 1899. The two sons, Frank P. and Wallace Alvin, are now in that "land of the midnight sun." While there Mr. Dalton had many interesting experiences, at one time making a continuous journey of fourteen days with a pony and sleigh down the Yukon river on the ice from Skagway to Dawson, and again making a trip of seven hundred miles with his son, Frank, to the mines on Myrtle creek. In August of the same year he traveled down the Koukuk river from its head to the Yukon, then down the Yukon to St. Michaels and thence home.

Mr. and Mrs. Dalton have one daughter, Florence L., living at home. Mrs. Dalton is a member of the Episcopal church. Politically, Mr. Dalton is a Republican, but he believes there are some sound principles in the platform of the Socialists. He has a valuable farm of twenty acres, on which is a fine orchard of eight acres. Two years ago he realized $1,125 from the sale of apples. Mr. Dalton is a man of generous impulses, energetic and progressive, a typical pioneer, and commands the respect of his fellow men.

ARTHUR GURLEY.

ARTHUR GURLEY, for seven years a resident of Yakima county, is engaged in diversified farming three miles east and two south of Zillah. He is native of Park county, Indiana, where he was born April 3, 1857. His father, Joseph A. Gurley, of English descent, in his earlier days a teacher, and later in life a millwright and civil engineer, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, in 1830. He was a pioneer of Indiana, a veteran of the Civil war, serving in Company A, Eighty-fifth Indiana volunteers, and as a civil engineer, belonging to the bridge building corps that accompanied Sherman on his march to the sea. He was at one time taken prisoner and for nine months confined in the famous Libby prison. He died in Mobile, Alabama, in 1902. The mother of the subject of this biography is Sarah B. (Carty) Gurley, of Scotch-Irish descent. She is a native of Ohio, and in early life was a teacher. She is still living. Arthur Gurley spent his youth and early manhood in Indiana, where he received his education, finishing his studies in the Bloomingdale Academy. As a young man he worked in his father's pump factory, learning the trade and remaining with him until twenty-three years of age, when he entered the service of Fairbanks, Morse & Co., scale and windmill manufacturers, as a builder. At the end of three years he severed his connection with this company and moved to Coffey county, Kansas, and for a time farmed, both in Coffey and in Montgomery counties. In 1889 he again changed his location, this time coming to the coast, where for seven years he was variously employed. He built the Port Gamble mill; spent some time in the dairy business, and superintended the construction of sixteen bridges on the Belt Line Railroad. In 1897 he came to the Sunnyside district and eventually purchased his present farm of 100 acres, which he has developed into one of the most productive in the valley, and of which he has made an ideal home. He engages extensively in hop raising. His last two crops sold for $8,000, the crop of 1903 netting him $625 per acre. With farming he combines the breeding of draft horses, for which he is widely known, having brought the first heavy draft horses to the county and having for two years taken the first prize on his stock at the state fair. Mrs. Gurley is interested in mining property in the Swauk district. In 1883 Mr. Gurley was married to Miss Mary A. Pickard, who died in 1890. In 1892 he was again married to Miss Vesta Thomas, born in Douglas county, Oregon, in 1865, the daughter of Lawson and Isabella (Dysart) Thomas, pioneers of 1849 in the Oregon country. Mrs. Gurley grew to womanhood and was educated in her native state of Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Gurley have no children of their own, but have adopted and reared six, two of whom are now with them, attending the home school; they are Kittie M. and Claud. Another, May Thomas, is attending school in North Yakima. Mrs. Gurley is a member of the Christian church. In political matters Mr. Gurley supports the principles of the Republican party, but has always declined political preferment, although frequently importuned to become a party candidate. He is one of the leading and most popular citizens of his section of the country; is a man of strict integrity and excellent business ability, of pronounced influence in local and county affairs, progressive and public spirited, and is held in high esteem by all who are honored with his friendship.

EDD E. MUDD, whose home is in Zillah, Washington, is by trade a bridge carpenter, and has been a resident of Yakima county for about fourteen years. Illinois is his native state, and the date of his birth June 10, 1864. He is the son of LaFayette and Rosamund (Herbert) Mudd. His father was born in Kentucky, in 1844; was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in a Kentucky regiment, and was finally killed in a railroad accident in Illinois in 1868. His mother is a native of New York, born in 1838, and is now living with her son in Zillah. After the war of the Rebellion the family removed from Illinois to Kansas, and at Osage Mission, in that state, the son Edd received his education. He left school when twenty-one years of age, and for a number of years was engaged in various lines of business in Nebraska, Colorado and Washington. In 1891 he settled permanently in Zillah, and has since followed bridge work and masonry. He assisted in the construction of the Sunnyside and the Kennewick canals. Besides a comfortable home in Zillah, he owns twenty acres of land six and one-half miles east of Zillah, which is yearly increasing in value. Mr. Mudd was married in Nebraska, in 1880, to Miss Nannie L. Douglas, a native of New York, where she was born in 1871. She is the daughter of Joshua P. and Eliza J. (Robinson) Douglas, both natives of New York, and both now dead. Her mother was a schoolmate at Saratoga, New York, of "Samantha Allen" (in private life, Amanda M. Douglas), and was related to the New England Ingersolls and Whitneys. Charles Mudd, of Sunnyside; Mrs. Amy L. Adams, wife of a North Yakima civil engineer, and Mrs. Ada M. Zediker, living near Zillah, are brother and sisters of the subject of this article. To Mr. and Mrs. Mudd have been born the following children: Hazel M., born in Nebraska, 1891; Irma G., Yakima county, 1894; Herbert D., Zillah, 1898, and Edgar R., Zillah, 1902. Mr. Mudd's fraternal connections are with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen. He is a Democrat in politics and takes an active interest in political campaigns. He believes in a prosperous future for Yakima county, and has made a success of his trade and of his investments. He is energetic and industrious, and as a man of honor and integrity commands the respect of his neighbors and of all with whom he comes in contact.

GEORGE VETTER, ex-mayor and at the present time postmaster of Sunnyside, is one of that region's popular citizens, whose influence has long been felt in the public affairs of that section of the Yakima country. Coming into the Sunnyside region in 1894, in a period of slow development and many discouragements, he perseveringly toiled on his farm, steadily improving it, assisted his neighbors by kind words and deeds, remained loyal to the Sunnyside valley, encouraged others to do the same, and is now reaping a just reward and witnessing the ample fulfillment of early prophecies made concerning the valley's destiny. A native of Chicago, Illinois, this German-American was born August 25, 1849, in that erstwhile thriving town upon the southern shore of Lake Michigan, to the marriage of George and Ursula (Knecht) Vetter. The elder Vetter was born in Germany, 1827, and came to the United States in the year 1848; he died many years ago. The mother was also a native of Germany, born in 1826; she is living at Aberdeen, South Dakota. George Vetter received his school education in the city of Chicago and at the Northwestern college, Plainfield, Illinois, from which he was graduated in 1865. After leaving college, he engaged in the mercantile business at Deerfield, Illinois, remaining there five years. Then he returned to Chicago, and during the next six years devoted his attention to the commission trade. He sold this business in 1881, and was for a time employed as bookkeeper for a hardware firm in Peoria, but in 1883 he left Illinois to seek his fortune in South Dakota. Near Aberdeen he settled and there made his home for twelve years, occupied successfully in the master industry of the great northern plains—wheat raising. He was not entirely satisfied with Dakota, however, and learning of the recently opened irrigated district in a section of Washington noted for its genial climate, fertility and advantageous situation, Mr. Vetter disposed of his South Dakota ranch, and in 1894 came to the Sunnyside valley, where he has since lived. He purchased land from the Washington Irrigation Company, and until 1898 was engaged in agricultural work, but in that year sold the farm and removed to the town of Sunnyside that he might take charge of the postoffice there. He was serving as postmaster January 1 last, when the office was advanced to the presidential class, and he was appointed by President Roosevelt to continue in charge of Sunnyside's mails at a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars a year.

Mr. Vetter and Miss Florence H. Tupper were united by the bonds of matrimony at Deerfield, Illinois, in 1883. The bride's parents were Simeon and Alvira (Gifford) Tupper, natives of New York and Vermont, respectively; both are dead. Mrs. Vetter was born in Chicago in the year 1850 and was reared and educated in Illinois. Mr. Vetter has one brother, John S., register of the United States land office at Aberdeen, South Dakota; and one sister, Mrs. Julia W. Miller, also a resident of Aberdeen. Mr. and Mrs. Vetter have five children: George L., born in Illinois, 1884, living in Spokane as a Northern Pacific railroad engineer; Elmer J., also born in Illinois, and a Northern Pacific engineer, living in Spokane; Frank S., living at Sunnyside (biography elsewhere in this volume); Charles E., born in South Dakota, living with parents; and Mary L., also a native of South Dakota, and at home with her parents. Sunnyside's postmaster is one of the Civil war's youngest veterans, having enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Illinois volunteers when a lad of but sixteen years and serving three months, or until the close of hostilities. He is affiliated with one fraternity, the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In 1902, as the candidate of the Citizens' party, which stood for temperance or an anti-saloon policy, Mr. Vetter was elected as the second mayor of Sunnyside, there being practically no opposition. His administration, which terminated with his resignation late in 1903 on account of the pressure of postoffice work, was a progressive and a creditable one to all concerned. As a Republican, Mr. Vetter held several minor elective offices in South Dakota. He owns considerable Sunnyside property, including the postoffice building and a substantial, cozy, six-room residence. Mr. and Mrs. Vetter are highly esteemed as neighbors and friends, and his position as one of the county's progressive, upright and solid citizens is universally recognized.

JAMES HENDERSON, druggist, Sunnyside, Washington, has been a resident of Yakima county for about ten years, during which time he has become extensively interested in valley and timber lands, besides having built up an excellent drug business. Mr. Henderson was born in Wisconsin, January 10, 1868, the son of John and Isabella (Sanderson) Henderson, natives of Scotland; the mother, born in 1820, is still living in Minnesota. John Henderson was born in 1827 and was a pioneer of Wisconsin, having immigrated to that state with his wife an early day and participated in the development of its frontier. In 1870, when the son James was two years old, the family moved to Minnesota, where they again passed through a long period of pioneer life; the father died there in 1895. In the common and high schools of Wilmar, Minnesota, James received his education, and both during his course of study and after its completion he followed teaching, being very successful as an instructor. At the age of twenty he went to North Dakota, where he continued in school work, varying this with other occupations, receiving good wages and saving them, until 1891, when he returned to Paynesville, Minnesota, and purchased a drug store, beginning at once the study of pharmacy. After four years of successful business life he sold his stock of drugs at a good profit and came direct to Yakima county, Washington. Here he opened one of the first farms put under cultivation near Sunnyside and, although badly crippled financially by the panic of the early nineties, persevered in his efforts and eventually succeeded in putting the place on a paying basis, having at the time one of the best orchards of its size in central Washington. In 1895 he established his present business, which soon grew to such proportions that he was obliged to sell the farm in order that he might attend properly to the store. His is the only business now conducted in Sunnyside by its original owner.

The subject of this article is one of a family of seven children. His brothers and sisters are as follows: Mrs. Maggie Smithson, in Minnesota; Mrs. Dr. W. R. Henderson, Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. Jessie Hadley, Chicago; Peter, a salesman, Minnesota; John, Minnesota, and Hugh, a dentist living in Chicago.

Mr. Henderson was married in Minnesota, August 27, 1892, to Miss Isabella E. Brown, born in Paynesville, that state, April 5, 1870, the daughter of John J. and Ellen E. (Bennett) Brown, natives of Vermont, now living in Sunnyside. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have five children, the eldest born in Minnesota, the others in Yakima county, Marion, born February 16, 1894; Blanch, November 29, 1896; Bernice, January 29, 1898; Amy, September 4, 1900; Ruby, November 17, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Henderson is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen. In politics, he is a Democrat. September 2, 1902, he was elected, on the Citizens' ticket, the first mayor of Sunnyside. He served several years as a member of the school board and has also served as justice of the peace. Besides his business property and residence, he has become the possessor of a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, forty acres of land under the canal and one hundred and sixty acres of timber in the Cascades; also other real estate interests and a number of mining claims in Montana and Wyoming. Excellent business qualifications, correct principles and perseverance have enabled him to win success where many others have failed. He is one of the substantial and reliable citizens of Sunnyside and of Yakima county, a man of influence in local and county affairs and one who enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow men. He is proud of the fact that his oldest acquaintances are his staunchest friends and patrons.

WILLIAM B. CLOUD, a merchant of Sunnyside, has been a resident of Yakima county for ten years. He is a native of Monmouth county, New Jersey, born January 15, 1870, the son of William B. Cloud, Sr., and Anna (Walter) Cloud, natives of Delaware, now residents of Oklahoma. The mother was born in 1845. The father, born in 1836, is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in a Pennsylvania regiment. He was in the battle of Gettysburg and other decisive engagements of the war and was for some time a prisoner in the famous Libby prison. The subject of this biography is one of a family of six children and has five sisters living: Mrs. Anna Miller, Mrs. Lillie Stevens (a twin sister), Mrs. Clara Siegler, Mrs. Helen Satterlee, living in Oklahoma; Mrs. Jane Sisty, living in Sunnyside. In 1873, when the son William was three years old, the family moved to Iowa and here he spent the years of his youth and received his education in the common schools. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he engaged in farming for one year for a neighbor and the second year leased a farm and conducted it himself with satisfactory results. At the end of this time his parents removed to Nebraska, he going with them and farming for his father for one year. The second year in Nebraska he entered a general merchandise store in the capacity of a clerk and since that time has been almost continuously in mercantile pursuits. Leaving Nebraska, he went to Tacoma, Washington, in 1890, where he was for three years engaged in the grocery business; going thence to Oklahoma and for a short time clerking in a bakery; returning in 1894 to Washington and settling in Sunnyside as a clerk in a general store, remaining so employed for eighteen months. He then spent four years in Northport, a portion of the time in the lumber business and a portion in the grocery business, returning to Sunnyside in 1900 and purchasing land which he farmed for one year. Leaving the farm, he entered the employ of the Hub Mercantile Company, remaining with them for two years as manager. In December, 1902, he purchased a stock of goods and has since been conducting a clothing and furnishing establishment, and has built up a splendid business.

November 25, 1897, Mr. Cloud and Miss Cora E. Harper were united in marriage at Spokane, Washington. Mrs. Cloud is a native of Iowa, born in 1874, the daughter of George W. and Rebecca (Harvey) Harper, living in Iowa. Two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cloud died in infancy. Mr. Cloud is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in political matters supports the Republican party. He was elected a member of the Sunnyside city council in 1902. Besides an eight thousand-dollar stock of merchandise, he owns a valuable farm of forty acres near the town and a good business lot in the city. He is a man of energy, of recognized integrity, of progressive ideas and good business qualifications and, as one of the substantial business men of the city, he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

HENRY H. WENDE, mayor of Sunnyside, Washington, and a prominent lawyer of Yakima county, is a native of Wende, Erie county, New York, born July 28, 1870. He is the son of Herman A. and Mary (Ries) Wende, natives of Germany. The father was born near Gorlitz, Saxony, October 29, 1825, and died in the state of New York, March 15, 1892. The mother, still living in New York, was born in Lautenhausen, province of Hesse, Germany, February 15, 1833, and came to America alone at the age of fourteen; she and her husband met and were married in New York state. Henry H. Wende spent his youth and early manhood in his native county in New York, attending the district schools until his eighteenth year. He then entered Parker's Union school, a higher institution of learning, situated five miles from his home, attending for six months and walking to and from the school each day. At the close of this term he accepted a position as clerk in the master mechanic's office of the Sinnamahoning Valley Railroad at Austin, Pennsylvania, remaining there for five months and returning home on account of his father's illness. Following his return he was variously employed until September, 1894, when he entered the law department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, graduating therefrom June 24, 1896, with degree of Bachelor of Laws. After graduation he went to Buffalo, New York, where, until March 1, 1898, he was a clerk in the law office of J. W. Fisher. On the date named he was appointed clerk of the supreme court for Erie county, remaining in this position until January 1, 1901. April 10, 1902, he left New York and came to Yakima county, Washington, and one month later, May 4, opened a law office in Sunnyside; he rapidly built up and is now enjoying a lucrative practice.

Mr. Wende is the youngest of a family of seven children; he has brothers and sisters as follows: Gottfried, a lawyer of Buffalo, New York; Charles H., agent for the New York Central Railroad at Crittenden, New York; William H., postmaster at Millgrove, New York; Mrs. Anna W. Johnson, of Buffalo, New York; Mrs. Mary W. Cutler, of Buffalo, and Otto H., agent for the New York Central Railroad at Wende, New York. Fraternally, Mr. Wende is connected with the Masons, Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an influential Democrat and takes an active interest in the success of his party. December 8, 1903, he was elected the third mayor of Sunnyside. He is rapidly attaining prominence in the professional circles of Yakima county, is highly esteemed by a large circle of professional and social friends, and has before him a most promising future.

WILLIAM H. CLINE, a resident of Sunnyside and one of the commissioners of Yakima county, Washington, has followed farming under the Sunnyside canal successfully for ten years. He is a native of Indiana, born February 5, 1855, the son of John and Caroline (Ortt) Cline. The mother (deceased) was of German descent, born in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, in 1834. The father, now living in Des Moines, Iowa, was born in Indiana, April 8, 1833, and was a pioneer of Iowa, going there overland from Indiana in May, 1855. He was for thirty-one years in the mercantile business in Guthrie county, Iowa, and the business was continued by one of his sons until 1902. The son, William, spent his youth and early manhood in Panora, Guthrie county, Iowa, and was there educated in the public schools. Leaving school at the age of nineteen, he entered his father's store as a clerk, remaining with him until thirty-one years old, and having in the meantime a capital interest in the business. In addition to their general merchandise business, they had built up an immense grain trade and operated seven elevators along the line of the Des Moines and Northwestern Railroad. In 1885, having traded a farm for a stock of merchandise in De Witt, Nebraska, the subject of this biography found it necessary to go there and sell out the stock. This occupied eight months in 1885 and, in the spring of the year 1886, he went to Broken Bow, Nebraska, erected a brick block and opened a general store. The business grew rapidly and he soon found it necessary to secure more commodious quarters. He built what is now known as the Opera House block, where he continued his business until January, 1891, when he was forced to make an assignment owing to his inability to collect accounts from farmers who had been financially crippled by drought and insects. In August, 1892, he moved to Tacoma, Washington, and engaged for a few months in the grocery business. Selling out in 1893, he chartered a vessel, loaded it with merchandise and went to Alaska, enduring many hardships, but disposing of his stock at a fair profit and returning in September of the same year. In December, 1893, he came to Sunnyside, put up the first business building in the town and opened a store, which he conducted for seven years in connection with farming. He had much to endure and met with many reverses; many of the settlers left the country in 1895-96 and there was a great scarcity of money and work, but Mr. Cline had his business and forty acres of fruit trees to attend to. He left his family in Tacoma, where school privileges could be enjoyed, and himself remained with his farm and business until the return of prosperity brought to him the reward of endurance and perseverance. Besides attending to his private affairs, he guarded the stock from the shade trees in the streets of Sunnyside, cared for them as best he could, and to his watchfulness is due much of the beauty that is now added to the streets by the presence of these trees. He served as postmaster from 1893 to 1897. Mr. Cline is second in a family of eight children, he having brothers and sisters as follows: Joseph M., Mrs. Viola La Pettit, Mrs. Lizzie Roberts, Mrs. Emma Baughman, James and John, living in Iowa, and Mrs. Etta Gilbert, living in Pendleton, Oregon.

Mr. Cline was married in Iowa, in 1878, to Miss Margaret J. Maddick, a native of England, born in 1856, the daughter of Thomas and Anna (Turner) Maddick, also natives of England. The mother is dead; the father is living in Iowa. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Cline are: Mrs. Emma Jones, wife of the Sunnyside physician; Mrs. Anna Snyder, in Kansas; Mrs. Nellie Jones, in Denver, Colorado; Mrs. Susan Plaine, Mrs. Gertrude Emers, Thomas and Ford, living in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Cline have one daughter, Mrs. Gertrude Young, born in Panora, Iowa, November 20, 1879, now living in Sunnyside. Mrs. Cline is a member of the Episcopal church. Fraternally, Mr. Cline is connected with the Masons. Politically, he is an active and influential Republican. January 1 he was appointed county commissioner to fill a vacancy, the term of service being until the next general elections. He has the largest farm under the big canal and a beautiful home in Sunnyside. He is a representative citizen, highly respected by all who know him.

HARRY W. TURNER, city clerk of Sunnyside, Washington, is also engaged in small fruit farming within the city limits. Mr. Turner is a native of England, born November 4, 1856. He is the son of John and Charlotte (Busby) Turner, natives of England, the father now dead and the mother living in Iowa. The son Harry received his education in his native country, where his youth and early manhood were spent. At the age of fourteen he left school and accepted a clerical position with a business house, continuing so employed by different firms until he was twenty-two years old. At this age he concluded to try his fortune on the western continent and in 1878 embarked for the United States, locating first at Sheffield, Iowa, near which town he engaged in farming for one year. He then removed to Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, where he remained, following farming, for about fifteen years, meeting with fair success. In 1894 he again changed his location, this time going to Utah, but, at the end of one year, he returned to the north, locating in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and making this his headquarters for three years, while he traveled, two years as salesman for a tea and coffee house and one year for a wholesale fruit establishment. At the end of this period he was called home on account of the death of his father and, after a short time spent with his mother, he came to Washington, purchasing ten acres of land within the city limits of Sunnyside, where he has since resided, occupying himself with the culture of small fruits and berries and with the raising of thoroughbred White Plymouth Rock chickens. In these pursuits he has been exceptionally successful and he now has a valuable property of which he has made a comfortable and most desirable home. In his father's family were six children, all of whom are living; the names of his brothers and sisters follow: Mrs. Fannie De Bar, living in Pennsylvania; Mrs. Polly Hubbard, in Iowa; William, in Iowa; Mrs. Alice Clark, wife of the sheriff of Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, and Mrs. Kate Van Lone, also in Iowa.

Mr. Turner was married in Iowa in 1894 to Miss Jennie Olson, who was born in Racine, Wisconsin, December 31, 1871, the daughter of Iver and Christine (Knutson) Olson, natives of Norway, the father long since dead, the mother still living, in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Turner are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Turner is connected with the fraternal orders Modern Woodmen and Knights of Pythias, and is also local secretary of the Modern Brotherhood of America. In political matters he supports the Republican party and always takes an active interest in the campaigns. He is a man of influence in the community, fair and honorable in all his dealings with his fellow men, and enjoys the confidence and respect of all with whom he is associated in a business or social way.

DR. FRANK C. JONES, a practitioner of the school of osteopathy, although comparatively a recent arrival in Sunnyside, Washington, has built up an excellent practice in and around the little city and has come to be recognized as one of its worthy and substantial citizens. He was first scoffed at; now he has converted the scoffers into friends. Dr. Jones is a native of Illinois, born April 13, 1856. He is the son of William and Sarah (Winterbottom) Jones, the father (deceased) a native of Wales, and the mother, still living in Illinois, a native of England. The doctor has one sister living, Mrs. Emma Starr, of San Francisco, California. The son Frank received his early education in the public schools of Illinois. At the age of thirteen he left school and served an apprenticeship in a machine shop, remaining so employed for six years or until his nineteenth year. At this age he entered the Chicago Medical College and, after one year of study in this institution, matriculated in the medical department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, graduating therefrom in 1880 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He is also a graduate of the Chicago Ophthalmic College, and took a post-graduate course in New York Post-Graduate School. After graduation he practiced for a few months in Chicago, then went to Iowa, where he continued in his profession for twenty-two years. In the meanwhile he took up the study of osteopathy at Still College, became satisfied that it constituted a most scientific method of healing disease, and, in 1898, abandoned drugs and devoted his time exclusively to its practice. In 1893 he made a visit to the Puget Sound country and, meeting there his brother-in-law, W. H. Cline, was induced to come to Sunnyside country. There was no town where he purchased a tract of sage-brush land, and where he now makes his home and follows his profession. The land has been transformed into a most valuable farm and an ideal home.

Dr. Jones was married in Iowa in 1882 to Miss Emma Maddick, a native of England and the daughter of Thomas and Anna (Turner) Maddick, English people, the mother now dead and the father still living, in Iowa. Mrs. Jones is one of a family of eight children, all living. The names of her brothers and sisters follow: Mrs. Margaret Cline, wife of W. H. Cline, of Sunnyside; Mrs. Anna Snyder, living in Kansas; Mrs. Nellie Jones, Denver, Colorado; Mrs. Susan Plaine, Mrs. Gertrude Emers, Thomas and Ford Maddick, all residents of Iowa. Dr. and Mrs. Jones have one son, W. Raymond, born in Iowa October 4, 1894, now a student in the University of Puget Sound, at Tacoma, Washington. Dr. and Mrs. Jones are members of the Methodist church. Dr. Jones is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Odd Fellows, and in political matters supports Republican principles. The family home is one of the prettiest and most desirable in Sunnyside, and Dr. and Mrs. Jones are among the most popular and highly esteemed citizens of the thriving little city.

Dr. Jones takes special pride in his work and has demonstrated to the people in this valley that osteopathy is the successful method of healing the sick. He has healed hundreds and hundreds of cases, and the wonderful success that he has is all-convincing. He now has patients coming from all parts of the state. Osteopathy is destined to revolutionize the healing art. Dr. Jones is one of the pioneer osteopaths of the state and is teaching the public that there is better health in keeping the body right than by taking poisonous drugs.

LEONARD C. McDONALD, now serving Sunnyside as councilman, was born in Pierce county, Wisconsin, February 20, 1869, the son of William and Catherine (Miller) McDonald. William McDonald, who followed farming during his life, was born in New York state in 1837; Mrs. McDonald was a native of Ontario, Canada. The subject of this sketch attended school in Wisconsin until he was seventeen years of age, securing a good education. After leaving school, he went on the farm and worked with his father, at the same time learning the carpenter's trade and undertaking independent employment along that line. Wisconsin ceased to be his home in 1894, the family emigrating to Washington and locating in the sparsely inhabited Sunnyside valley. There they purchased land near the town of Sunnyside, but owing to a defective title, lost it. For the first two or three years Leonard C. was engaged in farming; then accepted the position of manager of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company's yard at Toppenish, remaining with the company three years. Since then he has spent considerable time mining in northern Washington and pursuing his trade in the Sunnyside region, always making his home at Sunnyside. Success has smiled upon him, as it does in Washington upon most young men of energy, perseverance and correct principles. Mr. McDonald has four brothers and sisters: Mrs. Vina Bolin, living in Wisconsin; George E., Mrs. Esther Webber and Lucy C., all residents of Sunnyside. He is a member of one fraternal organization, the Modern Woodmen. As a Prohibitionist, he is a strong and aggressive member of that party and never hesitates to champion its platform. As a member of the Methodist church he is also active. Mr. McDonald was placed on the Citizens' ticket at the last city election as one of its candidates for councilman, and was chosen by the people to serve them in that important capacity. As an officer he is making a creditable record. With his brother George, he owns forty acres of raw land a mile and a half from Sunnyside. Mr. McDonald can truthfully be said to be a popular, capable and rising citizen of Yakima county.

CHARLES S. WENNER, the manager of Coffin Brothers' large department store at Sunnyside, is a well-known and popular business man of that section of Yakima county, who has demonstrated his business ability by increasing the size of his establishment, within less than two years, from a two-room affair, employing two men inclusive of himself, to the present store, employing ten people in all. It is a fine record, one of which any man might feel proud; and still the business is gradually increasing. Mr. Wenner was born at Tiffin, Ohio, in 1852, the son of Samuel and Caroline (Dible) Wenner. The father was a machinist by trade. He enlisted in the Union army in 1861 and served throughout the Civil war. Mrs. Wenner is still living, residing in North Yakima. Charles S. grew to young manhood in the town of Tiffin, attending the public schools and taking a course in bookkeeping and business methods. Further equipping himself by the healthful occupations of farming and working with his father in a sawmill and tile and brick yard, he early entered upon the activities of life on his own responsibility. However, his health failed, and in 1883 the young man crossed the continent to Arlington, Oregon, and there entered the general mercantile business. For eight years Arlington was his home, and he became prominently identified with the affairs of that town. He then went to North Yakima and took charge of the Hotel Yakima, placing it upon a paying basis. Two years of hotel life satisfied him. He sold his interest and removed to Chicago, where he engaged in the manufacture of bicycle cements, building up a lucrative business, for which he refused ten thousand dollars. Financial disaster overtook him in Chicago, leading him to once again seek the Yakima country, coming to Sunnyside in 1902 and opening the establishment of which he is manager. Besides a general mercantile business, this store handles hay, grain, stock, etc.

Mr. Wenner and Miss Ina Weatherford were united by the bonds of matrimony in Seattle, May 21, 1889. Mr. Weatherford, who died in 1893, was born in the Willamette valley to pioneers of that state, who crossed the Plains in 1852. He was a physician and druggist, and for many years lived in Portland. Mrs. Ellen (Robinson) Weatherford was a native of Ohio. She came to Oregon when a child one year old, and also died in 1893. Three children survive: Frederick, Mrs. F. A. Snow, both living in Portland, and Mrs. Wenner. She was born in Portland, and received a thorough education in her native state. For two years she was a deputy county clerk in Gilliam county, and also spent a year in the clerk's office of King county, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Wenner have one child, Charles Stanley, a bright, handsome lad of six years. Mr. Wenner has one sister, Anna, the wife of Stanley Coffin, of Coffin Brothers, North Yakima, and a brother, William L., living in Ohio. As a fraternity man, Mr. Wenner is very active and prominent, being affiliated with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Elks. In political affairs, he is also energetic, and is identified with the Republican party. He is a public-spirited man in every sense of the word and takes part in all commendable public movements. At Arlington he was for some time a member of the city council. Socially, Mr. and Mrs. Wenner are well known in the community, and surely no one is more faithfully doing his share in the upbuilding of the Sunnyside region than this successful, respected, progressive citizen and merchant. Mrs. Wenner is doing her share also in making the business a success, having charge of the books.

J. D. CAMPBELL, M. D. Although he cannot properly be called an early pioneer of Yakima county, Doctor Campbell, of Sunnyside, is yet among the men who are engaged in developing the resources of that young community, besides assuming the responsibilities and duties which are his by virtue of the noble profession he practices. He came from his old home in Tennessee to Sunnyside in the spring of 1903, but already he has taken a prominent place among the citizenry of the region as a man of enviable skill in his profession, a good neighbor and a man of strength in public affairs.

Born in Washington county, Tennessee, in the year 1861, he is the scion of two prominent old pioneer families of that state, the Campbells and the Carsons. His father, James, followed the occupation of a farmer until his death in 1865 and was an influential man. The paternal grandfather, Hugh Campbell, was one of the earliest settlers in Washington county. Another son, Brookens, brother of James, was an officer in the Mexican war and was afterward elected to congress. His death occurred in Washington, District of Columbia, while attending to his duties. Susan (Carson) Campbell was born in Tennessee in 1823, the daughter of one of the oldest families in Washington county; she died in February, 1902. The subject of this biography spent his boyhood on the old homestead and attending the district school. In 1886 he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Washington College, Tennessee, the oldest chartered institution of learning in the Mississippi valley. He then studied medicine under a preceptor for fifteen months, following which he attended the University of Nashville and Vanderbilt University and the University of Louisville, finally securing his degree of Doctor of Medicine, and completing a most thorough course of general and technical training. After graduation in 1890, he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession in his native state and was so engaged until 1903, when he came to the Yakima country, deeming it a field of greater opportunities for himself and children.

Miss Louise Truan, a native of Knox county,

Tennessee, became the bride of Doctor Campbell in September, 1893. She is of Swiss descent, being the daughter of A. J. and Eliza (Buffat) Truan, who crossed the Atlantic from their Swiss home in 1848, both families making the journey on the same ship. In America the two children became husband and wife and to this union Louise was born. Four children bless the home of Doctor and Mrs. Campbell: James, Frank, Roe and Lynn, all born in Tennessee. Mr. Campbell has one brother, M. B. Campbell, living upon his farm in Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are consistent members of the Presbyterian church at Sunnyside and are active participants in the social life of the community. Fraternally, he is a member of one order, the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. On national political issues he is in sympathy with the principles of the Democratic party. As showing his faith in the country in a substantial way, it may be stated that Doctor Campbell has purchased a fine ranch lying near Sunnyside, on which he raises hay. He is a man of stability and reliability whose settlement in any community would be hailed with pleasure by its citizens.

OLIVER HIBARGER, contractor and builder of Sunnyside, is a native of Ogle county, Illinois, born February 1, 1863, to Frank and Catharine (Waltermyer) Hibarger. His paternal ancestry is of Dutch, English and French extraction; his maternal ancestry of Dutch, who immigrated to Pennsylvania generations ago. The father was born in Maryland in 1831 and as a man followed the occupation of a brick mason. In 1845 he went to Illinois, becoming an early settler of that state. The mother's birth occurred in 1837, also in Maryland. Oliver Hibarger spent his youth in Ogle county, securing a good education in the common and high schools. Until he was twenty years old he lived on a farm, but at that age he commenced learning the carpenter's trade with an uncle. His first independent work was done in Iowa; then he went to Marshall and Gage counties, Nebraska. Smith county, Kansas, was his next field of work. He then entered the employ of a Kansas City contracting company, and while in its service visited Colorado Springs and Pueblo, assisting in the erection of many large buildings in those cities in 1888 and 1889. Leaving their service, he filed upon a homestead claim in Oklahoma territory, and engaged in work at Kingfisher and Okarche during the succeeding five years. From there he went to Arkansas; then he participated in the opening of the Cherokee Strip and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe countries to settlement. In 1896 he left that section of the United States and settled in Brown county and later in Morrill, Kansas, which was his home until August, 1902, in which month he came to Sunnyside. There he opened a shop and during his residence has constructed many of the best residences in the town, employing from six to nine men most of the time. The new Free Methodist church at Sunnyside was built by Mr. Hibarger. He is acknowledged to be a master workman of unusual ability and one of the leading contractors in the county.

Mr. Hibarger was united in marriage to Miss Anna Pulvermaker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pulvermaker, at Smith's Center, Kansas, August 14, 1888. Her parents were born in Germany and came to Iowa, where she was born. Mr. Hibarger has three brothers, Oscar, Willis and David, and two sisters, Cora and Pearl, besides one sister, Anna, deceased. There are two children in the Hibarger household, Carl and Wanda. Mr. Hibarger is connected with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen fraternities, and, politically, is affiliated with the Democratic party. He is a man highly respected by all who know him, a public spirited citizen who is a factor in his country's progress and a successful business man.

EMORY THOMPSON. One of the most favorably known and best horticulturists of the famed Sunnyside valley in central Yakima county is the citizen whose biography is here-with given. Learning his business under the instruction of an Ohio expert in the art of pruning, grafting and caring for fruit trees, hedges, etc., Mr. Thompson has successfully applied his knowledge in Washington, besides engaging in general farming. He was born August 1, 1865, at Northfield, Ohio, his father and mother being Emory and Sarah A. (Cross) Thompson, also Ohioans by birth, the former born in 1831, the latter in 1833. Both are living on their farm near Kinsman, of that state. Emory junior received his early education in the public schools and in 1886 entered the Grove City College, Pennsylvania, where he studied two years, paying his way by orchard work. At the end of that time he was forced to abandon his college work. Then he followed general farming in Cherry valley, Ohio, for four years, meeting with encouraging results. In the spring of 1894 he came to the Northwest, decided to locate in Yakima county, and purchased ten acres under the Sunnyside canal. He has devoted his untiring energies and skilled attention to improving his farm, which has grown to one of a hundred acres, and upon it he has seven hundred and seventy-five first-class, select fruit trees, besides berries and alfalfa.

He was married to Miss Carrie D. Morse at Williamsfield, Ohio, on Thanksgiving day, November 29, 1888. His bride is a direct descendant of the noted inventor, Samuel F. B. Morse, and is a native daughter of Williamsfield, where she was born September 16, 1865. Her parents, Luke A. and Mary P. Morse, still living in Ohio, where the father is engaged in farming, were born in Connecticut and New York, respectively. Mrs. Thompson has one brother, Grant A., and three sisters, Mrs. Flora Rose, Mrs. Elsie Smith and Ida, all living in Ohio; Mr. Thompson is the fifth of a large family of children, the others being Elbridge, living in Hartford, Ohio; Mrs. Nora E. Ferrell and Mrs. Cora B. Payne, twins, living in Erie and Titusville, Pennsylvania, respectively; Mrs. Alice E. Logan, in Vernon, Ohio; John D., now living in Ohio; Mrs. Blanche M. True, a resident of Belle Valley, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Pearl M. McCormick, also in Pennsylvania; Norman and Ralph, both residing in Ohio. Emory Thompson senior is a self-made man who has, besides rearing a large family, accumulated a comfortable competence. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson (junior) are consistent members of the Congregational communion and well known in the community's social circles. They have three children, Celia M., Howard S. and Elmer E., born in Ohio. Mr. Thompson is affiliated with the Republican party. The one hundred-acre improved farm upon which has been built a comfortable home and two timber claims situated in Kittitas county constitute Mr. Thompson's property interests. Mr. Thompson is one of the solid citizens of the county, of unquestioned integrity and commendable industry.

GEORGE G. MULLER, who is at present the owner and manager of the Hotel Sunnyside at Sunnyside, Washington, is a German-American who has been induced to take up his abode in Yakima county because of the congenial climate and unexcelled opportunities presented home-seekers by that region. Mr. Muller came to Washington in 1883 as a young man of twenty-one years, who had left his birthplace, Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, where he was born April 19, 1862, to seek his fortunes in the far Northwest. The railroad had not long preceded him, and the region, now dotted with cities and towns and farming communities and networked with railroads, was yet in the infancy of its development. His parents, Jost and Marguerite (Swartz) Muller, were of German birth, born in 1821 and 1826, respectively, who crossed the ocean and became pioneers of Wisconsin. The mother is deceased, but the father still lives. The young northwestern pioneer attended the public schools of his native state until the age of eighteen; then for three years was engaged in carpenter work and various other occupations, but ever the purpose to secure a better education ruled his ambitions. A short time after his arrival in Spokane, 1884, he entered the Spokane College, attending to his studies in the winter and teaching school and doing other work summers, besides college janitor work, to enable him to remain in school. While in this school he also taught German to help meet expenses. After finishing his sophomore year, the young student matriculated at the Willamette University in Oregon, and was able by hard work to remain in the university until he had finished his junior year in 1890. Thus equipped he taught school in Spokane county during 1890-91, but in the fall of the latter year entered the Methodist ministry, his first charge being the church at Wilbur. In the order named he had charge of congregations at Davenport, Coeur d'Alene City and Palouse City. However, severe throat trouble finally laid hold on him and in February, 1899, forced him to abandon, at least temporarily, the profession for which he had so well trained himself through many hardships. The insurance business, a short experience at school teaching, and real estate business successively engaged his attention until January, 1903, when he purchased the Sunnyside hotel property, in the management of which he has been very successful.

In August, 1890, Mr. Muller was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Powell, of Medical Lake, a native of Illinois, born January 7, 1867. Miss Powell's parents are Doctor John H. and Martha (Jolly) Powell, also Illinoisans, who are now living at Nez Perce, Idaho. Mrs. Muller has one brother, Wesley, in Eureka, California, and one sister, Mrs. Ella Marknell, a resident of Los Angeles. Mr. Muller's brothers and sisters are: Jacob E., in Illinois; Henry F., in Wisconsin; Mrs. Elizabeth Kresse, in North Dakota; Mrs. Anna Kresse, in Wisconsin; John, in Wisconsin; Mrs. Lena Krohn, in Wisconsin; and Mrs. Mary Miller, also a resident of that state. There are three children in the Muller home, Chester, Walden F. and Harold, the first and last named born in Spokane and Walden F. in Davenport. Mr. Muller is connected with three fraternities, the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. Politically, he is a Republican. In addition to his hotel property, he owns ten acres of land near Sunnyside and farming property in Stevens county. Mr. Muller holds the esteem of all who come in contact with him, and his family's advent into the life of Sunnyside has been most cordially welcomed.

LAFAYETTE PACE (deceased). With the death of this prominent pioneer farmer at his home in Sunnyside, Wednesday night, November 18, 1903, there passed away one of the most generally esteemed and successful men of Sunnyside valley. The cause of his death was diabetes, from which he had been a long-time sufferer. His funeral took place at the Federated church under the direction of Sunnyside lodge, No. 49, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he was a zealous member. He also held a membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Lafayette Pace was born near Fort Wayne, Indiana, October 16, 1852, being the youngest son of Michael and Penelope Pace. His father died about the year 1855, but his mother still survives at the age of seventy-two, at present a resident of Calhoun county, Iowa. At the age of fourteen the deceased removed from his native home to Whiteside county, Illinois, with his mother and stepfather, Silas M. Jones. He remained a resident of Whiteside county for the following fifteen years, but in January, 1881, removed his family to Calhoun county, Iowa, where he remained until the fall of 1887. Thence they went to Leola, McPherson county, South Dakota, and there resided until the latter part of 1890. Mr. Pace then concluded to abandon farming and with his family came to Tacoma, there embarking in the contracting business, which he followed with fair success four years. At the end of that time he reconsidered his decision to farm no more and resolved to resume his old occupation, coming to Sunnyside valley for that purpose in May, 1894. In that section he secured land and met with great success from the beginning of his experience. It had been Mr. Pace's intention to go east with his wife in the fall of 1903 and participate in a grand family reunion at the old home which he had not visited in sixteen years; the journey was to have been commenced on the day of his death. Mr. Pace was a staunch Republican, and for three successive terms had served his district as road supervisor with credit. In the fall of 1902 he was honored by the electors of Yakima county by being chosen county commissioner for a term of four years, and up to his death fearlessly and capably discharged the duties of his office with honor to himself and satisfaction to his constituents.

Mr. Pace and Miss Helen A. Thompson, of Erie, Illinois, were united in marriage, November 30, 1871, in Whiteside county, Illinois. She is the daughter of a well-known family of pioneers, popular in the community where she was reared to womanhood, and highly esteemed in Yakima county by all who know her. She and five children, as follows, survive the devoted husband and father: Roy L. and Clyde W., born in Illinois, January 17, 1874, and December 16, 1877, respectively; Pearl H., born in Calhoun county, Iowa, December 15, 1883, and Jennie M. and Earl J., twins, also born in Iowa, August 24, 1885. One daughter, Mabel B., was born in South Dakota, August 20, 1880, and died four months later. Mr. Pace is also survived by two brothers, Jacob and John; one sister, Mrs. Melinda Woods, residing in the east, and two half-brothers and three half-sisters. In life, Mr. Pace was a kind, loving husband and father, an energetic and capable man of affairs, a generous neighbor and a loyal friend, and a citizen who did not shirk his duties but ever fearlessly assumed his responsibilities and worked for the upbuilding of his community and country. In death, his loss is keenly felt by those around him.

JAMES F. McCONNON. Few men in the Sunnyside district have had a more varied experience in the west than has the subject of this sketch, who was born in Leith, Scotland, May 3, 1864, to Irish parents, James and Mary (Finley) McConnon. The father, now dead, was born in Ireland in 1840; the mother, living in Utica, New York, was born on the same island a year earlier than her husband. When a child of six years, James F. came with his parents to America, the family locating in Utica, New York, where he received his education in the public schools. He remained in school until seventeen years old, then spent a year teaming, following which he joined the great army seeking their fortunes in the west. During the next few years the young man traveled throughout the west, visiting the middle western states, including Nebraska, Minnesota, Montana, the Dakotas, Colorado, Texas, Oregon, Washington and many other states, busying himself at various occupations. Immediately after the great Spokane fire he arrived on the scene and assisted in the work of rebuilding the metropolis of the Inland Empire. In June, 1893, he came to Yakima county, where for two years he was engaged in farming. Then, during a dull season, he settled upon a homestead above the Sunnyside canal, three miles north of the town of Sunnyside. About the same time he gave some attention to mining in the Coeur d'Alene district, working for a short period for the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company. He was fortunate in his experience and with the money thus accumulated he returned to Yakima county in February, 1898, and leased thirty acres of Sunnyside land. The venture proved successful and the following January he purchased thirty acres from the canal company, making one payment. To make the next payment he was compelled to borrow money. The third payment was made with the proceeds of a corn crop and the money that Mr. McConnon had been able to save from his wages. Then he purchased an adjoining ten acres, the final payment for which he made in the fall of 1903. From twenty-five acres of hay harvested that fall the doughty farmer realized one thousand three hundred and two dollars, selling the hay at six dollars a ton. The forty-acre farm, all under cultivation, well equipped with machinery, a comfortable residence and barn, out-buildings, etc., is now all paid for—a very creditable testimony to the energy and ability of its owner. Mr. McConnon has four brothers: Peter, an upholsterer in New York City; Frank, a molder, of Utica, New York; Thomas, also a resident of Utica, and Robert, a butcher, living in Utica; and one sister, Mary, who is the wife of a Texan. Mr. McConnon is a member of the Odd Fellows, is a Republican in political matters and was reared in a Catholic household. During the winter of 1903-4 he visited his old Utica home, which he had not seen for many years.

WILLIAM HITCHCOCK, editor and proprietor of the Sunnyside Sun, is a native of Clayton county, Iowa, born May 31, 1866. He is the son of Morris S. and Catherine H. (Humphry) Hitchcock. Morris S. Hitchcock (deceased) was born in Waterville, Oneida county, New York, in 1828; was a farmer and school teacher, and, for ten years of his life, editor of various publications. The mother of the subject of this biography, now living in Tacoma, Washington, is a native of England, born in Falmouth in 1835. William Hitchcock received his early education in the public schools of Iowa, leaving school at the age of fourteen and entering the office of the National Advocate, published by his father at Independence, Iowa, for the purpose of becoming a practical printer. For six years he labored in this office, becoming proficient in the mechanical department of newspaper work. At the end of this time he went with his parents to Fairbank, Iowa, and there associated himself with his father in the establishment of a paper known as the Fairbank View, which they conducted together successfully until May, 1891, when the father died. The son continued its publication alone until 1894, when he sold out and moved to Le Mars, Iowa. There he established another paper, but published it for a short time only, when he disposed of the plant and again moved, this time to Colfax, Iowa, establishing there the Colfax Tribune, a publication that is still being issued. This business he sold in October, 1900, and shortly afterwards came to Sunnyside, Washington. Purchasing a newspaper plant, he began the publication of the Sunnyside Sun, the first issue appearing May 24, 1901. In this venture he has been exceptionally successful, the list of subscribers now numbering over eight hundred. The office is equipped with a Monona leverless press, gasoline engine, and with other conveniences indispensable to the progressive editor of a successful paper. By tireless devotion to public interests and enterprises, both local and general, Editor Hitchcock has won the confidence of the community, which is giving the Sun the hearty support it deserves as the medium through which knowledge of the city and of the wonderful country by which it is surrounded is conveyed to the general public. Mr. Hitchcock is one of a family of six children.

The names of his brothers and sisters follow: Walter A., Solomon C., Elizabeth, Mary Lillian and Annette, all residents of Tacoma, Washington.

In 1897 William Hitchcock and Miss Lily M. Lacey were united in marriage in Colfax, Iowa. Mrs. Hitchcock was born in Jasper county, Iowa, March 22, 1875, the daughter of William Lacey, who still lives in Iowa. Her mother's maiden name was Elizabeth McCracken. Mrs. Hitchcock has one sister, Myrtle Lacey, living in Sunnyside. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock have one daughter and one son: Dorothy D., born in Colfax, Iowa, in February, 1899, and Morris W., born in Sunnyside, July 5, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Hitchcock's fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Besides his business property, he owns two acres of land where his residence stands, and five acres elsewhere within the city limits. He has a most comfortable and desirable home. Both by nature and education he is eminently fitted for the profession he has chosen, and the Sunnyside Sun has come to be recognized as one of the best edited and most progressive papers in Yakima county. He is a man of strict integrity and correct principles, and is held in high esteem by all with whom he comes in contact, either in a business or social way.

CLINTON R. WEBBER is one of the successful farmers and stock raisers of the Sunnyside district, residing four and one-half miles southeast of Sunnyside, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He is a native of Maine, born July 11, 1873, the son of Wilbur W. and Emily (Record) Webber, the father (deceased) a farmer, born in Limerick, Maine, in 1845, and the mother, now living near Sunnyside, born in Hartford, the same state and in the same year in which her husband was born. When the son Clinton was four years old the parents moved from Maine to South Dakota, and here he received his early education in the public schools of Watertown. In 1890, at the age of seventeen, he left home and came west, locating in Seattle, Washington, and for two years following the occupation of a plasterer; thence going to Salt Lake City, where he remained for one year in the capacity of a street car conductor. In 1893 he came to Yakima county, and, in connection with his father, began the improvement of what is now known as the Webber stock farm, engaging at first in diversified farming and meeting with good success until the death of the father in 1896, which, coupled with the financial distress of the early nineties, rendered farming temporarily unprofitable. In 1898 he associated his brother with him, and together they operated the ranch for four years as a dairy farm, finding the business very profitable. In 1902 he purchased his brother's interests, and February 18, 1903, took into the business as partners F. S. and G. E. Sylvester. The company is now engaged exclusively in the stock business, making a speciality of Poland-China hogs, of which they are raising more than any other company in the county; among their droves now having twenty-five registered hogs of this breed. This is one of the best known stock farms in the county, and is under the management of our subject. Mr. Webber has one brother and one sister, living in Yakima county, Harold and Gladys, the latter now attending high school in North Yakima.

March 13, 1901, Clinton R. Webber and Miss Esther McDonald were united in the bonds of wedlock at North Yakima. Mrs. Webber was born in Wisconsin, December 7, 1875, the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Hill) McDonald; the father is dead, the mother living in Sunnyside. Mrs. Webber has one sister, Mrs. Lavina Boland, living in Wisconsin, and two brothers and one sister, Leonard, George and Catherine, living in Sunnyside. Mr. and Mrs. Webber have one child, Leone A., born January 11, 1902, in their present home in Yakima county. Mr. Webber's fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen and the Yeomen. Politically, he is an independent Republican, supporting the best man for the office in political campaigns, rather than the party. He owns the one-sixth interest in the Webber stock farm, which consists of three hundred and ninety acres, valued at fifty thousand dollars, and on which there are one thousand head of hogs and eighteen dairy cows. He also owns a good residence property in Sunnyside. By perseverance and strict attention to business he has won success where many others have failed. He is known as a man of honor and integrity, fair in all his dealings with others, a man of energy and progressive ideas, and by all who know him he is highly esteemed.

ELMER E. FERSON, for ten years a resident of the Sunnyside district, is now engaged in dairy farming and butter making four miles southeast of Sunnyside, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in Oshkosh October 17, 1860, the son of James S. and Augusta (Willard) Ferson, the father (deceased) a native of Nash, New Hampshire, and the mother, now living with her son, a native of Vermont, of Welsh and American descent. When the son Elmer was nine years old his parents moved to Pine City, Minnesota, and in its public schools he received his early education, later taking a business course in St. Paul, Minnesota. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he engaged for six years in logging during the winter months and in contract work on brick structures in the summer. In 1888 he came to the far west, locating in Seattle and following his former occupations until 1894, when he came to Yakima county. Purchasing a tract of seventy-three acres, where he now resides, he at once began its improvement. Owing to the financial troubles of 1893, he had lost nearly all his accumulations in the Sound country, and was able to make but a small payment on his farm, but, by perseverance, energy and self-denial, he managed to weather the period of financial distress and by the year 1898 began to realize substantial returns from his investment. He combined contracting and building with farming, built the first school house in the Sunnyside district, discovered good brick clay near Sunnyside, manufactured brick and, with T. W. Marble, erected the first brick building in Sunnyside. Mr. Ferson informs us that before prosperity returned to this section money was so scarce that it was next to impossible to discharge even small obligations; the first crop he succeeded in raising was onions, which for a year or two were his only medium of exchange in settling accounts with his neighbors. In 1901 he established a creamery on his farm, which he has named the Mountain View because of the beautiful view that may be had from his place both of Mount Rainier and Mount Adams. The creamery has a capacity of five hundred pounds of butter per day; for the year 1903 Mr. Ferson gathered one hundred thirty-seven thousand four hundred and seventy-four pounds of cream, made thirty-nine thousand three hundred and sixty-seven pounds of butter, which sold for an average of twenty-three cents per pound, and paid to his patrons eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine dollars.

In 1881 Mr. Ferson was married in Pine City, Minnesota, to Miss Nellie R. Record, who was born in Buckfield, Maine, February 3, 1863, the daughter of Stephen E. and Sarah (Irish) Record, the father born in Maine in 1820, now living in South Dakota, the mother born in Maine, died when her daughter was eight years old. Mr. Ferson has one sister, Mrs. Ida Marble, in South Dakota. Mrs. Ferson has three sisters living in Yakima county: Mrs. Alice Adams, Mrs. Emily Webber and Mrs. Bertha Rhoads. She also has a brother, Carrol Record, a retired farmer of Watertown, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Ferson have one son and three daughters: Chester, born in Seattle April 7, 1890; Margery, born in Seattle June 2, 1892; Blanch, born in Sunnyside May 4, 1896, and Lois, born in Sunnyside February 19, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Ferson are Christian Scientists. Fraternally, Mr. Ferson is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with the Modern Woodmen; politically, he is an active Republican. On his farm he has one hundred and three head of cattle, forty of which are milk cows. He has a fourteen-room dwelling, modern in all its appointments and to be lighted later by electricity. He is a man of energy and enterprise, progressive in his ideas, honorable in all his dealings with others, a man of influence in local affairs and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellow men.

JOSEPH LANNIN, justice of the peace at Sunnyside, Washington, and for three years judge of the horticultural department of the Washington state fair association, is a native of Toronto, Canada, born March 28, 1824. He is the son of George and Ann (German) Lannin, of English descent; the father died when Joseph was a child; the mother died in Canada in her eighty-second year. The son Joseph was educated in Toronto, leaving there when twelve years old and going first to London, Canada, and later to Elma, Perth county. In 1848 he came to the United States, settling in Van Buren county, Michigan, where he followed fruit growing for forty-five years. He was an expert authority on peaches, grapes and pears, and was in charge of the Michigan fruit exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. He was for a number of years vice-president of the Michigan State Horticultural Society and was afterwards president for years of the West Michigan Fruit-growers' Association, of which he was one of the organizers. The Washington exhibit of fruit at the World's Fair attracted his attention in 1893, and soon afterwards he sold out his Michigan interests and moved to Yakima county, locating on a twenty-acre farm near Sunnyside in 1894. This land he transformed from its primitive condition to a most productive tract, setting out ten acres to orchard, erecting a neat cottage (the first plastered and papered house in the community), and making of the farm an ideal home. This farm he sold, retiring from the more active labors of life in March, 1902.

Mr. Lannin was first married in Canada, the wife living, however, but a short time. Again, in 1894, he was married in Iowa to Mrs. Genevieve (Hutchins) Stevens, formerly the wife of Dr. J. F. Stevens, of Portland, Me., to whom she was married in 1862, and who was a prominent Republican state legislator of Maine. Mrs. Lannin was born in Vermont, February 20, 1845, the daughter of Levi and Caroline (Fitzgerald) Hutchins, natives of Vermont and New York, respectively. Mrs. Lannin was educated at Fort Edward college, New York, on the Hudson river, being graduated therefrom in her sixteenth year. She is one of a family of six children. The following are her brothers and sisters: Horace W. Hutchins, living in Boston; Major John F., a veteran of the Civil war, of Seattle; Professor Oscar B., for the past thirty years a teacher in the Bryant & Stratton college, in Boston; Doctor Eugene, a prominent physician and surgeon of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Mrs. Endora Russell, of Iowa, two of whose sons are prominent citizens of Chicago, Illinois, one of them being on the Board of Trade. By her former marriage Mrs. Lannin has six children, as follows: Gerald F. Stevens, of the firm of Stevens Brothers, Chicago, Illinois, merchants; Grant E., a member of the same firm; Mrs. Edith M. Clancey, of St. Louis, Missouri; John B., of Sunnyside; Mrs. Stella E. Bates, of Three Rivers, Michigan. One sister, Louisa C., died when three years old. John B. Stevens served in Battery B, Utah volunteers, during the Spanish-American war. Mr. and Mrs. Lannin are among the most public-spirited citizens of Sunnyside, and are always found in the lead when the public welfare is under consideration. The Public Library Association was organized in 1901 by Mrs. Lannin's efforts, and she has by her individual endeavors secured cash and lots in subscriptions, that place the library on a solid financial basis. She organized the first observance of Memorial day in the community, started the movement for the purchase of an organ for the public schools and carried it to a successful issue, and was the leading promoter of the local Sunnyside fair which is held each year after the close of the state fair. The first literary society was organized in October, 1894, with Joseph Lannin as president. In this way Mr. and Mrs. Lannin have always exerted their united efforts and their whole influence for the advancement of the best interests of the general public. Unselfish and untiring in their labors, of most generous impulses, and desiring only the good and the advancement of others, they have gained the esteem of their fellow citizens and are held in high respect by a host of sincere friends. Mr. Lannin is prominent in Masonic and Odd Fellow circles, and has been a lifelong Republican, voting with the party since its organization. He has been a member of the Methodist church for seventy years. Respected and loved by all who know them and possessing so many of those sterling traits of personal character that make life a success in the truest sense of the term, none is more deserving of an honored place in the history of their home county than Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lannin.

DAVID B. EBY. One of the progressive and successful farmers of Yakima county is David B. Eby, who resides two miles east of Sunnyside, on rural free delivery route No. 1. Mr. Eby is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Huntingdon county May 10, 1851, the son of Enoch and Hetty (Howe) Eby, natives of Pennsylvania, the father still living, in Stephenson county, Illinois. His mother was born in Juniata county, Pennsylvania, February 19, 1823. His father was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1828, was a farmer and a minister, but has now retired from the more active duties of life. He became a minister of the Brethren church at the age of nineteen, and was sent in early life as a missionary to Denmark, where he organized the first Brethren church established in that country. He was a pioneer of Illinois and is now one of the oldest ministers in his church, but is still a hale and hearty man. He was the first minister of the Brethren congregation at Sunnyside and vicinity. In the family are three sons and one daughter: John G., a farmer of Marshall county, Kansas; Mrs. Annetta C. Yarger, wife of an Illinois farmer; David, the subject of this article, and Levi H., a missionary living in Fort Wayne, Indiana. When the son David was four years old his parents moved to Illinois, where he received his early education in the public schools, following this course with one year in college in Bourbon, Indiana. He then engaged in farming and was so occupied in Illinois until 1898, when he came to Washington, locating on the farm near Sunnyside which is now his home. This was then a tract of wild land overgrown with sage-brush, but he at once began its improvement and has made of it not only a comfortable home but a most valuable and productive farm on which he has erected good buildings, and where are found the necessary stock and equipage of the modern, progressive farmer. Besides the usual number of horses and dairy cows found on a good farm, he has eighty head of stock cattle, the raising of which he finds very profitable.

December 31, 1874, Mr. Eby was married in Stephenson county, Illinois, to Miss Hannah Studebaker, who was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, February 1, 1849, the daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Wertz) Studebaker, natives of Pennsylvania, the father born May 19, 1813, and the mother in 1817; both parents are dead, the date of the father's death being June 30, 1896. To Mr. and Mrs. Eby have been born eight children, three of whom are dead. Their names follow: Cora (deceased); Jacob A., born December 3, 1877, living in Sunnyside; Harrison R. (deceased), born January 24, 1880; Mary M., born May 5, 1883, at home; David L. (deceased), born April 19, 1886; Orpha E., born March 23, 1889, at home; Enoch L., born January 2, 1891, at home; Verna R., born April 6, 1895; Illinois was the birthplace of all. Mr. and Mrs. Eby belong to the Brethren church. In political matters Mr. Eby is a Republican. Besides his one hundred and twenty-acre farm he has a number of lots in Sunnyside. He is a man of honor and integrity, progressive in his ideas, interested in all movements for the public welfare, of pronounced influence in local affairs, and is respected and highly esteemed by all who know him.

JOHN B. SHELLER, one of the successful farmers and fruit growers of Yakima county, resides two and one-half miles northeast of Sunnyside, on rural free delivery route No. 1.

He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Franklin county, August 6, 1847, the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Butterbaugh) Sheller, also natives of Pennsylvania, both now dead. The subject of this biography is one of a family of seven sons and daughters. The names of his brothers and sisters follow: Mrs. Louisa Zuck, living in Iowa; David B., of Tacoma; Mrs. Mary Blough, in Illinois; George W., in Maine; Mrs. Emma Kimmel, in Iowa, and Benjamin F., in Illinois. When the son John was two years old his parents moved to Illinois and there, in the public schools of Carroll county, he received his early education, leaving school at the age of nineteen and assisting his father on the farm until his twenty-third year. At this age he went to La-mark, Illinois, and entered a printing office, eventually becoming a practical printer and newspaper manager, afterwards taking charge of the Mt. Carroll Gazette and continuing its editor and publisher for four years. He then removed to Iowa and became a hardware merchant, following the business for five years, when he sold out and entered the employ of L. Harbach as traveling salesman for his wholesale furniture house, so occupying himself for fifteen years. At this time, the health of his parents failing, he returned home and cared for them until their deaths, in the meanwhile engaging in the hardware business. In October, 1897, he left Illinois and went to California, but shortly afterwards came to Washington and in 1898 purchased the farm on which he is now residing. He has here sixty acres of land on which he has a comfortable home; twenty acres are planted in fruit trees and the remainder is hay land; it is also well stocked with cattle and horses. In 1902 he raised over seven thousand boxes of apples.

In April, 1877, Mr. Sheller was married in Gowrie, Iowa, to Miss Leafy L. Ustick, who was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, January, 1857, the daughter of Abner and Mariam (Abbott) Ustick, both of whom are living with the daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Sheller have one son, Roscoe A., born in Illinois, April 3, 1889; two daughters, Eva and Merle, born in Iowa, are dead. Mrs. Sheller is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Sheller's fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Modern Woodmen. Politically, he is a Republican, and, although an active worker in the ranks and a man of influence in the councils of the party, he has refused to accept office, preferring to labor for the success of friends. He is highly esteemed as a man of honor and integrity, of progressive ideas and correct principles and is well worthy a place in a work of this character.

JAMES R. HARVEY, M. D., the pioneer physician and surgeon of Sunnyside, Washington, is a native of Indiana, born in Pleasantville, Sullivan county, May 20, 1860, the son of Francis A. and Lydia (Gilkerson) Harvey, natives of the same county and state, the father born in 1825 and the mother in 1827, the mother deceased, the father still living in Pleasantville. They were the parents of four children, including the subject of this biography, whose brothers and one sister are located, as follows: L. Asbury Harvey, a farmer near Pleasantville, Indiana; John F. Harvey, a member of the Indiana Methodist conference, and Mrs. Ella J. Fellows, wife of a real estate dealer of Los Angeles, California.

The son James received his early education in the public schools of his native county in Indiana. At the age of twenty-one he entered the DePauw University at Greencastle, Indiana, remaining a student of this institution for two years. Following this he taught in the common schools of his state for two years. In 1886 he matriculated in the Rush Medical College, graduating therefrom in 1889. During his course of medical study, in order to assist in defraying its expenses, he worked during vacations as a clerk in the offices of a lumber company at Menominee, Michigan. April 1, 1889, he opened an office in Stillman Valley, Illinois, where he practiced his profession until the fall of 1900, with the exception of one and one-half years spent in post-graduate study in Chicago, Illinois. January 13, 1901, he came west, locating in Sunnyside, where he has built up a very large and lucrative practice. The doctor keeps abreast of the times in his profession and his office is one of the most thoroughly equipped in the county, having among other mechanical devices for the treatment of disease, a dynamo for the manufacture of the X-ray and for the electric treatment of various ailments.

March 21, 1889, Doctor Harvey was married in Sullivan, Indiana, to Miss Jessie W. Taylor, who was born in Curden, Iowa, May 24, 1850, the daughter of Judge William E. and Sarah C. (Freeland) Taylor. The daughter Jessie was an only child and her parents died when she was six years old. Dr. and Mrs. Harvey have one son, Francis A., born in Stillman Valley, Illinois, now living in Sunnyside. They are members of the Congregational church, and active church workers. Politically, the doctor is a Prohibitionist, and has always taken a lively interest in the success of his party; he was one of the organizers of the state party in Indiana in 1884. He believes in the future of the Sunnyside country and has invested in a two hundred and forty acre farm near town, also owning a block in the town where he makes his home. He has always shown a commendable public spirit and takes an interest in the general advancement of the community; he was one of a committee of four appointed to draft the constitution and by-laws of the Federated church of Sunnyside and has since been a member of the advisory board. He has gained the confidence and respect of the community in which he resides, is known as one of the most successful practitioners in the county and as one of its most reliable and substantial citizens.

SIDNEY E. JONES, the genial host of the Globe hotel, Sunnyside, is a well known and respected citizen of the famous Sunnyside country and an important man in the community, for upon him devolves the duty and pleasure of entertaining each year a very large number of visitors to and prospective settlers of that region. Successful in his work, he is the means in part of favorably impressing travelers and thus materially aiding in the progress of his home. Mr. Jones is a Pennsylvanian, born in Lawrence county, near the town of Newcastle, in 1860. His father, Erymus Jones, was born in the same state twenty-eight years previously, of Welsh parentage. He served his country faithfully in the Civil war, and in times of peace tilled the soil for a livelihood until his death in 1867. The mother, Mary (Hill) Jones, also of Welsh descent, was born in the Keystone state, and died there. Her father was a soldier of the War of 1812. When only twelve years old, the subject of this chronicle left the Pennsylvania home to join an uncle in Kansas. A year later he plunged boldly into an independent existence, working at various occupations until 1880, when he came west to Umatilla county and two years later settled upon a homestead and timber culture near Heppner. He continued to reside upon this place until 1892, when he sold his property and took up his abode in Yakima county, living at Zillah a year, then opening a blacksmith shop at Yakima City. In 1900 the opportunity presented by the Sunnyside region appealed to him so strongly that he bought the Globe hotel at Sunnyside and removed to that thriving town.

Mr. Jones bade adieu to his bachelor days while a resident of Oregon, his marriage to Miss Dora Morgan taking place in 1882. She is a Missourian by birth, born in 1863. Thomas H. and Elizabeth (Noble) Morgan, now dead, were her parents. They emigrated from Kansas to Oregon in 1880, locating in Umatilla county. Mrs. Jones has one sister, Mrs. Kate Foster, in Washington, two brothers and a sister in Kansas and a brother and a sister in Oregon. Four children—Clarence, Roy, Ralph and Erymus, all at home—have come to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Jones. He is a member of the Sunnyside camp of Modern Woodmen; politically, he is bound to no party, but votes an independent ticket. Mr. Jones has accumulated a valuable holding of property in Yakima county, owning, besides his Sunnyside business and land, property in Yakima City. Mr. Jones has watched at close range a very rapid settlement of the Sunnyside region during the past four years, has taken an active part in that progress, and now as a public spirited citizen of strength among his fellow men is seeking to further advance the interests of his community and county by promoting settlement and introducing improvements along all lines. In Sunnyside, as elsewhere in the Yakima country, "Forward" is the watchword.

EMMETT R. TAYLOR. Prominent among the young men of Yakima county whose talents and energy have been used for the mutual benefit of themselves and the communities in which they live is the man whose name begins this sketch. He came into the Sunnyside country when its plains were just commencing to bear marks of cultivation and money was a rarity among the few settlers; today he is a prosperous ranchman and stockman of the district, ranks as a pioneer of that region, and is well started on the highway of life. Van Buren county, Iowa, is Mr. Taylor's birthplace; July 19, 1879, was his birthday. His parents, C. W. and Mattie P. (Pickins) Taylor, were born in Ohio, the father being of Dutch descent, the mother of Irish. C. W. Taylor served as a member of the Ohio state guard during the Civil war, and subsequently settled in Iowa. In that state Mrs. Taylor died in 1887. After her death the family came to the Pacific coast. Mr. Taylor taking a position as bookkeeper for Franks & Company in Seattle, and later as foreman in the Skookum box factory of that city. In 1893 Mr. Taylor and his sons Emmett and Clarence came to the Sunnyside country in the capacity of contractors and builders. They built W. W. Webber's house at Sunnyside, the first substantial house in the town; also a large number of homes and buildings in the surrounding country, J. B. George's store buildings, and homes for themselves. In order to get to Sunnyside the Taylors borrowed fifty dollars, and for three years after their arrival the family did not see that much in cash, the settlers exchanging farm produce and other articles in place of money. Many became discouraged and left. The pioneers of Sunnyside felt the hard times of the middle nineties if any people in the west did. In the fall of 1894 Mr. Taylor's daughters, Rena and Grace, joined father and brothers at Sunnyside, and the home was re-established. Emmett Taylor established the first harness shop at Sunnyside in 1895, conducted it three years, and sold it to John Cody. He also dealt, and is still dealing quite extensively, in horses, being one of the best judges of horseflesh in the county, those who know him say. After selling the harness shop, he bought ten acres in town, improved the tract, sold it and with the proceeds he and his father erected two houses. Subsequently he traded this property for the fine one hundred and twenty acre ranch, of which he owns forty acres and his father eighty, three miles west of Sunnyside. In March, 1903, he removed to this place, and now makes his home there. He recently bought the interest of his partner in the firm of Taylor & Gochmour, owning one hundred and fifty head of horses, ranging and being fed in the northern part of Yakima county. Among these animals are several blooded stallions of great value. He was married December 30, 1903, in Sunnyside, to Miss Lena M. Peck, daughter of S. D. and Ann Peck, natives of New York, living at Sunnyside. Mrs. Taylor was born in Michigan, February 17, 1881.

Mr. Taylor is a member of the Christian church, and is active in all public matters. He is one of Sunnyside's wide-awake, progressive citizens, respected and capable, and both himself and wife enjoy the esteem of a host of friends and acquaintances, young and old.

LOUIS C. RORABACK, plumber and tinner, is a product of the New England states, who has followed the well-worn western trail leading from the crowded Atlantic coast to the sparsely settled but highly progressive Pacific coast. He is a representative of that army of young men, born, educated and trained in the older eastern states, which each year invades the west and pours its knowledge, energies and enthusiasm into the struggle constantly going on in the development of the west's latent resources. Winstead, Litchfield county, Connecticut, is the birthplace of Louis C., son of James P. and M. Carrie (Dexter) Roraback, the year of his birth being 1878. James P. Roraback, of German descent, was auditor general of the Central New England railroad for many years preceding his death in 1888. Mrs. Roraback is a native of Salisbury, Connecticut, and is now living with her son in Sunnyside. Louis C. attended school until fifteen years old, when he entered railroad work. Subsequently he left this business and learned the trade of a stonemason and worked at electrical engineering, gradually acquiring a substantial knowledge of mechanics. He was in charge of a crew of men for three years before coming west to Sunnyside in 1900. Arriving in Washington, direct from Hartford, Connecticut, Mr. Roraback at once entered the employ of the Hub Mercantile Company as a plumber. He soon discerned a profitable field for that class of work, and opened a shop for himself, and is doing a prosperous business. He commands the respect and business of the community, as a result of which his business is rapidly growing and keeping steady pace with the development of the country. Mr. Roraback is an only child, and with himself and wife lives his widowed mother. He was married at Sunnyside, February 17, 1904, to Miss Rachael M. Whitney, of Sunnyside, daughter of Vinal E. and Deborah (Ricketson) Whitney, both natives of New York, where Mrs. Roraback was also born. He is a member of the Congregational church, and is affiliated with the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. As a believer in the principles of the Republican party, Mr. Roraback is an ardent member of that party, and a strong admirer of President Roosevelt. In truth, it may be said that he is one of Sunnyside's most popular and substantial young citizens.

JOHN D. COUEY conducts a blacksmith shop at Sunnyside and is one of the substantial business men of that thrifty little town. He is a native of the Northwest, born in Lane county, Oregon, November 6, 1869, to the union of James M. and Elizabeth (Ritchie) Couey. These brave pioneers crossed the Plains with their parents in the same train during the early fifties. The father was born in Illinois in Jufe, 1847; the mother, in Iowa, in 1851. The family were in Oregon at the time of the Indian troubles in the later seventies, and for four years were absent from their home in Lane county, subsequently returning. They removed to Goldendale when the subject of our sketch was fourteen years old, taking land near that center. John D. worked with his father on the farm until seventeen years old, when he entered into a three and a half years' apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade. From Goldendale he went to Cleveland, in the eastern part of the county, and there opened a shop, meeting with good success. However, misfortune overtook him in 1896, when the shop was destroyed by fire. Mr. Couey thereupon commenced farming, working in Oregon three years. In 1899, he came to Yakima county and became employed seven miles from North Yakima, working upon that place until March, 1902; at that time he located in the Sunnyside region, working at his old trade. Recently Mr. Couey opened his own shop, where he is receiving excellent support from the community—a testimony to the ability of the smith.

In 1895 he was married, Miss Estella Alexander being his bride. The ceremony took place in Klickitat county. Mrs. Couey is the daughter of John and Viola (Newman) Alexander and was born at Vancouver in 1879. John Alexander crossed the Plains from his native state, Illinois, in an early day and is still living, a prosperous farmer of Yakima county. Mrs. Couey is the oldest of a family of five girls and three boys; Mr. Couey is the oldest of a family of four children. To Mr. and Mrs. Couey have been born three children: James, Kenneth and Hazel, all of whom are living. Mr. Couey is a Prohibitionist. By those who know him he is regarded as one of Sunnyside's reliable, industrious and honest business men and a good citizen.

WILLIAM T. STOBIE, Jr., who has been a resident of Yakima county for eleven years, is a successful Sunnyside contractor and property owner. Born in Ottawa, Kansas, August 22, 1872, he is the son of William and Jennie Stobie, the former of whom resides in the Sunnyside valley. The elder Stobie was born in Scotland in 1847 and came to Canada at the age of eight years. He crossed the line to the United States when a young man and served throughout the Civil war in the First New York light artillery. Mrs. Stobie is living in Texas at the present time. William T., junior, received his first schooling in Denver, Colorado, the family moving to that city when he was about four years old. Ten years later they returned to Kansas and there the youth completed his education, attending school until he was seventeen. After leaving school he engaged in various pursuits in Kansas, finally immigrating to Yakima county in 1893. One of his first investments in the county was to purchase twenty acres of raw land, which he partly developed and then sold at a good profit. During the year ending July 1, 1898, he carried the mails between Mabton and Sunnyside, after which he engaged in his present business of contracting.
